However, the OPP is not charged with the responsibility of national security. This role is fulfilled by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The OPP does not keep files on recognized political parties. The use of the word "political" with respect to groups of concern to the OPP is used in its broadest sense and includes militant, activist and racial groups that consider themselves political in nature, such as the American Indian Movement, the Marxist-Leninists, terrorists both urban and international, the Western Guard, and the Serbo-Croatian conflict.

Mr. Cunningham: How about the YPC?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: They're a pretty activist group, I'll say that for them.

The OPP does not have files on any members or parties in this Legislature. The only persons who can obtain authority for electronic surveillance for national security reasons are the RCMP. They, in turn, must make application to the Solicitor General of Canada. He is the only who may grant this authority. The role of the OPP in security is simply that of preventing a breach of the Criminal Code of Canada.

Mr. Reid: May I ask the Solicitor General if he can give us some figures on the number of OPP who are engaged in security aspects? In his answer yesterday, he didn't give any indication that the ranks of the RCMP were swelled since 1972 for security reasons. He listed four or five areas.

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Reid: Can he give us the figures for the OPP and for the RCMP engaged in security operations in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Speaker, I think we can get the OPP figures later today in estimates. I don't have them readily available but, as you know, immediately following the question period and the other orders of business, we will go into estimates. The OPP estimates are there and we can give them at that time.

There was a supplementary question asked yesterday along the lines of whether or not I had the breakdown of the RCMP figures.

Mr. Wildman: They broke down all right.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I said I did not have the breakdown of them.

Mr. Reid: No reference to security.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The answer came from the RCMP and there is no reference to that. It refers to drug activities, commercial crime, customs and excise, immigration and passport abuse, and organized crime.

Mr. Foulds: May I draw the Solicitor General's attention to the inquiry put on the order paper yesterday with regard to this matter? Could he inform us, in view of his original answer, which groups the OPP considered needed surveillance in the day of protest marches on October 14?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I'm sorry, I didn't get the last part of that question—the reference to October 14.

Mr. Foulds: Which of the groups did the minister mention that the OPP had under surveillance? Which groups did they think they had to survey during the day of protest marches on October 14?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I don't know whether the OPP did any particular surveillance on that day. Again, that's a question I haven't specifically asked them but we can get that for the member later in the morning.

Mr. Reid: Will the Solicitor General check again with the RCMP to see if their numbers in Ontario increased since 1972 for the purpose of national security and surveillance of individuals and political parties?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to try to get that information. I say "try" because there was no difficulty in getting this information that we did get; but when one deals with that subject, they may be a little more careful of what kind of information they give us. But, I will certainly attempt to get that for the member.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: Does the minister have any record of the OPP investigation of the American Indian Movement at Sauble Beach this summer, the practice there this summer? If so, could I have a copy of that report?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Speaker, I have no information in regard to a particular site, and I gather that's what you are asking. As I said, we do keep an eye on the American Indian Movement, but I do not have any record here of where and when that has been done.

Mr. Sargent: If we were involved there, would the minister see if he can get the report for me?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes. Mr. Speaker, we will try to get that information.

TRANSPORTATION OF HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS

Mr. Bradley: A question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications: The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Kerr) has had many questions directed at him about this, but taking into consideration the controversy that has surrounded the use, transportation and disposal of polychlorinated biphenyls in the province of Ontario, is the minister, in conjunction with the Minister of the Environment, prepared to review the present regulations that exist for the transportation of PCBs in the province with a view to making them much more stringent? In this review, is the minister prepared to look at the procedures for unloading and loading, even within the specific industrial yards that exist in the province?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, for the last number of months, my ministry has been working with the federal Minister of Transport, who is developing regulations and legislation dealing with the transportation of hazardous products. I propose to amend our legislation this fall and make provision in the provincial legislation to adopt the federal regulation for the transportation of hazardous products as soon as that regulation is finally completed.

At a recent meeting of all the ministers responsible for the regulation of transportation from the 10 provinces and the federal minister, it was decided that this was the most appropriate way of having a standard across Canada for the protection of the public in the transportation of these products, and that each province should adopt the appropriate federal standards rather than create its own standards, which would not necessarily be the same in each province.

I hope my federal counterpart will get that regulation in place very soon; as I say, I have made provision in my legislation to adopt it.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: Do I take it from the minister's answer that there are at present no special regulations in effect for the transportation of this highly dangerous substance, PCBs? We know some were imported to the Mississauga plant of St. Lawrence Cement in the last two years under the experimental burning. Are there no special regulations relating to the transport of that material?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of all the federal regulations that might apply to it. I do not believe we have any specific regulation in Ontario that would specifically apply to PCBs, no.

Mr. B. Newman: Can the minister inform me, and through me, the House, whether he is informed at all times when PCBs enter Canada from the United States? Does the minister also have a bill of lading so that in case the substances are not PCBs or are contaminated PCBs, he would know?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I am not personally informed of every shipment of product across the border. To my knowledge, the operation of the customs is still the responsibility of the federal government.

Mr. B. Newman: The fact that they are travelling on Ontario highways—that would make it part of the minister's responsibility, would it not?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Every shipper in Ontario does not have to notify me each morning what he is going to ship that day.

Mr. B. Newman: Is the minister not concerned that PCBs are travelling on Ontario highways, being shipped in from other jurisdictions—from the United States?

Mr. S. Smith: No standards as to what type of truck, either.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am very concerned that we have appropriate regulations and legislation to deal with the transportation of hazardous products, not only PCBs but any hazardous products. We have been working very closely with the federal government for some two to three years—I know in the more than two years since I have been in this ministry, in practically every provincial-federal meeting that we have had, the hazardous products matter has been discussed and it's always just coming along. Mr. Lang has a great habit of saying that everything is coming in two weeks' time, but sometimes the two weeks never come.

MINOR HOCKEY PLAYERS

Mr. Foulds: I would like to ask a question of the Attorney General. By what authority does the Ontario Minor Hockey Association flout the provisions of the Ontario Human Rights Code? And does the Attorney General not think that the proposed appeal by the OMHA of the Gail Cummings case is a deliberate attempt to frustrate the Human Rights Code? Further, by what authority does the OMHA suspend coaches such as Barry Webb, whose only fault appears to be to testify before the Human Rights Commission? Does that not simply deny a person the right they have to free speech in this province?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I certainly don't condone for one moment the actions of the Ontario Minor Hockey Association in this matter, but I don't think it would be appropriate for me to comment further. This matter is before the courts. As you know, the Ontario Minor Hockey Association has appealed the decision of the inquiry officer to the divisional court and in view of that I think it would be wrong for me to comment further at this time.

Mr. Foulds: A supplementary: Is there any way the Attorney General can speed up that appeal process?

Secondly, does the minister agree with the comments of one Bill McMurtry with regard to the Gail Cummings case when he was quoted in the Star yesterday as saying, "It would be tough on boys playing against girls. After all, what boy when he sees a cute little girl skating against him wants to flatten her with a check? It's wrong, it creates all sorts of problems"? Does the minister not think that that might be the ultimate solution to the problem of violence in hockey that the same Bill McMurtry wrote about some three years ago? It might clean it up.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: There is more violence between man and woman than between man and man.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I must admit I hadn't heard that statement attributed to my brother. I find it rather surprising, particularly because I would have to say that obviously he hasn't played hockey recently against my own daughters or he wouldn't say that.

Speaking as a parent and not as Attorney General, I think young women should be encouraged to participate in the game of hockey, and I don't think nearly enough has been done to make it possible for them to play this game. I don't think that I have anything further that can be usefully added at this time.

Mr. Reid: Supplementary: Would the Attorney General consider looking into the contracts of the NHL and WHA who are not allowing players under the age of 20 to play in these national teams?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: That's not a supplementary.

Mr. Reid: Don't you think it's time to look into the whole structure of professional sport in the province of Ontario?

Mr. Speaker: That is not supplementary to the original question.

Mr. Deans: Supplementary: Does the minister recall a conversation we had about a year and a half ago with regard to the Ontario Minor Hockey Association, and doesn't he think it is about time that we took a serious look at the scope and jurisdiction of the OMHA, given that they seem to have a propensity to make decisions which, at least on the surface, are not in the best interests of Ontario's youth?

[11:00]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't have any firm view in this respect. I've been concerned in the past about the structure of minor hockey. As a matter of fact, some dozen years or so ago, as a lawyer I represented a group of people who were very concerned and caused the Minister of Labour at that date to order an inquiry into minor hockey in the Metropolitan Toronto area. I think it's something that we should look at from time to time. But I have to say that although I am concerned about some of the actions of people involved in minor hockey, I think at the same time we have to recognize the many dedicated efforts of thousands of people who give of their time to minor hockey.

Mr. Deans: Like the coach who can't coach.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think we have to be cautious about taking the position that government is going to move in in any sort of heavy-handed way. But as for members of the Legislature expressing an indication to take a look at minor hockey in this province, I think it's something we should think about, quite frankly.

I'm awaiting with interest the report that has been worked on in the province of Quebec for the past two years or more. They ordered a commission into minor hockey in that province, a very broad commission, to examine the role of amateur hockey in the whole social structure of that province. I'm told that this report which was originally due out last year will be tabled within the next two or three months. I think we in this province should take a serious look at that report. It might possibly provide some guidance for us as we consider this problem in the future.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I did have a question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications, but I see that he has left the House. I don't know if he's very far away or not. But the question I would like to put to him is the fact that—

Mr. Speaker: You can't ask a question if he's not here.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Can't I? Well, is he aware that the Queen Elizabeth Way was closed off last night at the—

Mr. Speaker: You can't put it if he's not here.

CLOSING OF QEW

Mr. G. I. Miller: Can I ask the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker? I have a question for the Solicitor General.

Is the Solicitor General aware that the Queen Elizabeth Way, the most important and, perhaps, the most heavily travelled highway in the world, was brought almost to a standstill last night? I think the traffic was going along one lane at five miles per hour. At 7:30 at night there was a back-up to Southdown Road and it took an hour to get through that particular area.

Mr. Speaker: Is this a question or a traffic report?

Mr. G. I. Miller: Is the minister aware of this situation?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Speaker, as you know, I was out with you last evening.

Mr. Sargent: I am surprised you look so well.

Mr. S. Smith: In that case you would be aware of nothing.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I was not aware of what was going on along the Queen Elizabeth Way, but I'm sure the members of the OPP were well aware of it.

Mr. Peterson: You two make a very handsome couple.

Mr. Lewis: Jack Stokes and John MacBeth out together for an evening.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Energy has the answer to a question asked previously.

NANTICOKE PLANT

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, on Monday, October 31, in responding to the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. Reed) concerning the cost of repairs to Nanticoke generating units, I neglected to answer concerning the cost of the responsibility for the replacement or repair of hanger rods at Nanticoke generating station.

Babcock Wilcox Canada Limited is carrying out the permanent work, including the design, fabrication and replacement of hanger rods on all units at Nanticoke. Estimated cost of this work is between $6 million and $7 million and Babcock Wilcox have agreed to absorb the cost of these permanent repairs.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education has the answer to a question asked previously.

INCREASE IN EDUCATION ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, a week or so ago the hon. member for London North asked a question of several people in the Legislature concerning the estimates of the Ministry of Education and a figure of $103 million additional which appeared in the Treasurer's quarterly report.

I would just like to explain to him that the $103 million which shows there as an addition to the estimates of the Ministry of Education is there because of the receipt of an actuarial report on the teachers' superannuation fund which was received on July 27. Under regulation 654 of the Pension Benefits Act it is necessary, because of that actuarial valuation, to increase the amounts put into the teachers' superannuation fund this year by about $103 million.

That amount of money will come forward in the supplementary estimates, of course, and be debated in this House at the appropriate time. But I draw to the hon. member's attention that if he reads regulation 654 and the actuarial valuation, we have no option—and having received the valuation report should inform the House that we have no option—but to add $103 million to the amount already voted this year for the teachers' superannuation fund.

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary: I appreciate what the minister has passed on by way of reply, but my understanding is that the work the actuaries did really covers the situation as it existed about one or two years ago and it is really an updating. In the light of that, the question would be, is the ministry planning to change the procedure wherein there is an actuarial valuation, as spelled out by section 5(3) of the Teachers' Superannuation Act, to an annual valuation rather than a valuation approximately every three years?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I don't know that any action is being taken to change it to an annual valuation. It takes, as I understand it, a fair length of time to do the valuation and on the receipt of each valuation, because of a number of factors in the plan and because of regulation 654, it is always necessary to put more money into the plan. I am not sure that doing an annual valuation would save any money and perhaps it might just add to the difficulties of getting the valuation done.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary. The member for London Centre.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary: In view of this $100 million extra which has to be provided out of his budget this year, the next year and the next year, and given the rapid inflation we are facing today and the fact that on average the employers' portion of the pension under teachers' superannuation now is running around 15 per cent annually—and that's on top of the teachers' contribution, which makes something over 20 per cent a year of annual salary going into pensions—and we don't fully know the extent of the unfunded liability until there is a re-evaluation every three years, doesn't the minister feel that it must be done on an annual basis? Failing that—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question has been asked.

Mr. Peterson: —we have absolutely no idea of our liabilities in this province.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think my friend has illustrated one of the real problems that faces all of us here today—

Mr. Peterson: But you are not doing anything about it.

Hon. Mr. Wells:—which is the amount of money that is going into public service pension plans. That is one of the reasons, among others, that we have set up the commission to study pension plans. I think this is one of the matters, along with a whole host of others, that will have to be looked at.

But it seems to me that it will not matter whether the valuation is done three years or every one year; based on conditions today, it will result in more money having to be put into the teachers' superannuation fund and other public funds.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: No, we have had enough supplementaries. I'll take a question from the member for Windsor-Sandwich.

Mr. Peterson: In fairness, Mr. Speaker, we have only had two supplementaries.

CERTIFICATION OF LINEMEN

Mr. Bounsall: A question of the Provincial Secretary for Social Development, Mr. Speaker: She indicated in a letter to me some weeks ago that a decision to certify hydro linemen and power linemen in Ontario would be made shortly. When may we expect that long overdue decision, the original recommendation having been made last February? Is it correct in this regard that the Ministry of Colleges and Universities is planning to take over the Hydro training facilities in Orangeville?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: That was discussed after a meeting with Mr. Vincer representing the union local. I anticipate the decision will be made within the next two weeks.

HEALTH OF SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Sargent: I have a question of the Minister of Health. All across the province today—and I guess in Canada and the States too—each senior citizen in nursing homes and institutions will, I'm told by the authorities, on the average receive from six to nine medications per day, with the known result of complete senility in the majority of patients. If the minister is aware of this and if these figures are correct, and I know that over the years I've been going to these institutions—

Mr. Speaker: I've yet to hear a question.

Mr. Sargent: If he is aware of this, I would urge him to make a full-scale investigation to bring out all the facts: One to the effect that to the authorities most of the illnesses are doctor-induced—

Mr. Speaker: There still has not been a question asked.

Mr. Sargent: My question then is, if he is concerned, will he give us a full-scale investigation?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I really don't think I've heard enough to warrant a full-scale investigation yet.

Mr. Sargent: Then a supplementary. Based on the fact that the Speaker has been allowing four supplementaries, I can give the minister lots of information here now. Forty per cent of the patients—

Mr. Speaker: Order. You still haven't asked the question.

Mr. Sargent: I'm going to ask it again.

Mr. Speaker: A question should begin with when, where, why or how.

Mr. Sargent: Will the Speaker please decrease? I believe that this matter is not a laughing matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sargent: Will the minister tell us why he will not give us a full-scale investigation because the authorities are much concerned, and I've said so.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The hon. member has stood here this morning and rattled off some figures. I don't know their source. I don't know if they've got any semblance of validity. I don't know that they bear any resemblance to fact. On the basis of that he wants me to spend I don't know how many dollars, and expend whatever amount of time on what he calls a full-scale investigation.

I'll look at what he has said. I'll put it to my extended care people to see if there's any validity. I'm in estimates next week and, as in other years, I'm sure we'll have a great discussion.

Mr. Sargent: Well, that's sure as hell a good start anyway.

STUDENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Philip: I have a question of the Minister of Colleges and Universities, when, where, why and how, now that Bill Clarkson, the student awards branch director, has stated to the press that safeguards will be prepared concerning the income tax information of the parents of students applying for grants, will the minister table the details of the safeguards in the House?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: When all of the details of the new assistance plan are confirmed and finalized, we'll be pleased to give the member all of that information, not only here in the House but to him personally.

Mr. Philip: Supplementary: Has the minister yet costed this new information gathering program and will he also be prepared to table that information?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I'm not sure that I'm quite fully aware of the question. Is it the costing of the program of gathering the information on the student assistance program, or on the assurance that there'll be confidentiality in the records relative to income tax?

Mr. Philip: Supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: We have only got about two minutes left.

GUELPH CORRECTIONAL CENTRE

Mr. Worton: I have a two-part question for the Minister of Correctional Services. One is, how did he find things at the Guelph institution? I noticed he had a visit. Secondly, has he had an opportunity to review the contract with the people who are operating the abattoir, and are they meeting all the requirements of that contract, and is the public who is dealing with them protected as well as the government?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I found things very fine, not only at Guelph Correctional Centre, but also—I know it would be of interest to the member—in the Guelph Jail itself. I really haven't looked at that aspect of the Guelph beef centre contract. I will. I would like to point out, though, in connection with the Guelph beef centre, that there has been a question raised that will be of interest to the members, and that revolves around protection. As you know, Mr. Speaker, that is the first project where inmates and civilians work side by side where there is a bargaining relationship. There's a certification by the Ontario Labour Relations Board and a ratified contract.

The question has come up about attendance at union meetings. What we intend to do is to allow the full-fledged members of the union, that is, the ones who have passed the 90-day probationary period, temporary absence passes—

Mr. Reid: Is this a ministerial statement?

Hon. Mr. Drea: —to attend on the outside.

As to the rest of the beef centre contract, I haven't looked into it, but I will. I know there's a $15,000 cheque—

Mr. di Santo: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Drea: —that arrives on my desk once a month, the licensing fee, but I will get back to the hon. member as soon as possible on it.

Mr. Worton: Supplementary: I am aware of the fact that they have got union agreement, and I am pleased that that has been brought about. What I am concerned about is the continuing rumours I hear that things are not going as well as they did before and they're in difficulties. I think that that should be clarified to make sure that it is either operating properly or not.

Mr. Cassidy: Will you allow them to go on strike?

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

NEGLIGENCE AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 94, An Act to amend the Negligence Act.

Motion agreed to.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

On vote 1604, Ontario Provincial Police, management and support services program; item 1, office of the commissioner:

Mr. Chairman: Are there any comments or questions on item 1 of vote 1604?

Shall item 1 carry?

Mr. Stong: I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman, I was just preoccupied with speaking instead of being prepared for these estimates here.

On this particular item, office of the commissioner, I wonder if the Solicitor General can give us a rundown of the number of personnel employed in the office of the commissioner and the duties of each of those people? It seems that there's a tremendous amount of money allocated for this particular office. I'd like to have a breakdown of the almost $700,000 that is designated for that particular office.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I can give you their names, Mr. Chairman.

First of all there is the commissioner himself. Then we have two deputy commissioners, Commissioner Erskine and Commissioner Grice. Then we get into the assistant commissioners. They are the heads of the various branches of the OPP.

You asked for numbers—19 is the number. I can give you the names if you wish.

Mr. Stong: I am not so much interested in the names as job descriptions, because there's so much money allocated for that particular item. There are 19 people employed by that office. I'm just trying to ascertain where the money is going.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Most of them are the senior officers of the staff who are in charge of the various divisions that we'll be dealing with later. Then, of course, there is support staff in the way of secretaries and that type of thing.

I can read to you the description of the office of the commissioner:

"The office of the commissioner provides for the control and management of the force, the overall policy direction and co-ordination of operating programs in the achievement of force objectives. The commissioner's immediate support staff includes two deputy commissioners, J. L. Erskine, in charge of operations, and K. W. Grice, in charge of services.

"Under operations there is the field division, the traffic division and the special services division, each commanded by an assistant commissioner. Under services, there is the management division, the staff services division and the staff development division, each under the command of an assistant commissioner.

"Policy analysis secretariat: The policy analysis secretariat serves the commissioner's office in the development of, or response to, policy initiatives in order to assist in a more effective decision-making process.

"Staff services division: This division provides the technical support function which is essential to the operational efficiency of the force. This is maintained through the technical services provided by the four branches of this division, namely, central records and the communications branch; the quartermaster's stores branch; transport branch; and community services branch.

"Management division: This division is responsible for providing effective and efficient leadership and management of the administrative support services of the force; developing operational policies, procedures and methods to achieve overall objectives of the force; registration of private investigators and security guards, firearms and the management of the accommodation and leasing requirements of the ministry. The four branches under its control are staff inspections, planning and research, properties and registrations."

So there are a good number of people included in that office and I have read to you some of the responsibilities that they look after. It is the senior staff of the force who are included in that vote.

Mr. Stong: I noticed in the public accounts report from last year that there was Management Board approval of over $200,000 over and above the estimate. I'm wondering if there were supplementary estimates before the House, with respect to that $222,600, making a total of 858,600. The amount of money spent in that office last year was over $800,000, and then there's an estimation of $678,000 this year—whether it's realistic or whether there's going to be supplementary estimates. If there are only 19 personnel employed by that particular office, why is the estimate and the allocation so high? I know the job description is there but if the personnel figure is so low—unless I have got the figures wrong here from what you are quoting—why is there so much money allocated to that particular item and that particular office? It seems to be a co-ordinating office.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, the salaries are, in fact, based on actuals. Working them out, we can supply you, if you wish, with the individual salaries involved. In the 1977-78 estimates for regular salaries we have $568,300, and I think that what you are asking for is a breakdown of that figure. Is that right?

Mr. Stong: Is it correct there are only 19 people employed in that office and that the total salaries are $568,000? Am I correct with that?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That's my understanding.

Mr. Stong: I would like a breakdown of those salaries, if I could, please. If you don't have them now I would appreciate it if you would supply them to me.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: All right. We will be glad to do that but they tell me that that works out all right with our figures. There was an increase last year and there will likely be one again this year in connection with salary increases which are picked up later on in the supplementary estimates. But those figures are based on working out the actual salaries.

Mr. Stong: Does the $222,600 represent salary increase in last year's public accounts report? If it does, and the total is $858,600, why are we estimating only $678,000 this year to cover the same people and the same job description, and was there a supplementary estimate presented to this House approving of that increase of $222,600?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I am informed that they were done not by supplementary estimates but by Management Board order.

Mr. Stong: All right, that's one part of my question. Does that represent salary increase, and if it does, why isn't it being included in this year's estimates?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: As I understand, it does represent all salary increases and benefits. I also understand that it is being picked up in this year's estimates. Is that correct? Yes.

Mr. Stong: As I read the estimates, you were asking for $678,700, being estimates for 1977-78. The actual spent last year was 858,600. There is almost $200,000 difference there. I don't know why that discrepancy should exist.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I think it's as simple as this, Mr. Chairman: The increases in salaries this year are not, of course, shown in that estimate figure, so in all likelihood there will be an increase again—maybe not as much this year because we hope that the increases will not be the same as they were last year. But there will be a Management Board order if, as and when increases are given to increase the amount in the estimates that are shown here.

Mr. Stong: I must be missing something. As I read the public accounts committee, there was an actual expenditure of $858,600 which included an increase, because you presumably needed it for salary increases last year. The personnel has not decreased, I assume, but unless the Solicitor General is going to cut those salaries and then ask for increases again, I don't know why he is not starting with an estimate for this year of $858,600 instead of $678,700.

While I am on my feet, I must say I was not aware that Management Board could approve increases. I thought it had to be done by supplementary estimates and approved by the House. In fact, we had almost $223,000 approved by Management Board last year without the matter being presented to the House. I am wondering if that is proper. I understand it is not, but I am open to being corrected. I don't know how we can approve a vote when we don't have all the facts at our disposal.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I must admit I am having a little problem with the matter myself. The estimates are based on 1976-77 salaries. The 1977-78 estimates will have to be increased by the amount of the salary awards in April 1977. But the point I think that the hon. member is getting at is that the figure of $678,700 which we have shown in our estimates for the current year is less than the public accounts show that we spent for salaries last year. Is that the point he is making? Yes. I am sorry I can't give the hon. member an analysis of that right now, but we will have it for him later on in the morning.

Mr. Stong: I understand that the Management Board orders must be published in Ontario Finances, and I am wondering if that was done?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: My information is yes, they are all published, and in this case they were published.

Mr. Stong: Would the minister's staff be good enough to indicate to me when and where, just for my own personal knowledge and assistance?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Probably last March, but we can get specific information on it for the hon. member.

Mr. Stong: Perhaps this could be stacked until we have the figures showing the differences because, unless I am missing something that is very obvious, I am not satisfied with the minister's justification or answer to the discrepancy in the figures I have pointed out. I wonder if perhaps we should stack this until I get a satisfactory answer.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I certainly have no objections to that, Mr. Chairman. The member is entitled to the answer. It is a fair question and he is entitled to a better answer than he has been given.

Mr. Chairman: Does the committee agree that we will defer item 1 until the information is available?

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, I think we should not proceed with item 1. We are dealing with a large amount of money and I think we need more information and a better explanation in relation to how the money is spent. I fully support the suggestion that has been made by the member for York Centre. I think we have to withhold approval of this item until it is fully explained to this committee.

Mr. Stong: I would like to just dwell on this item for a while other than on the figures, because we will get back to the figures.

I would like to know—perhaps I am trying to zero in on the role of the commissioner and his office with respect to the management and control of the OPP. That seems to be one of the highest. We look at other items under this vote and we have higher amounts. But then we would expect higher amounts to be allocated to those other items because there is greater staff and staff development and one thing and another involved.

But the more than half a million dollars that is designated towards the office of the commissioner seems to be a very significant amount of money. I'm wondering if the minister could break down or explain more completely the role of the commissioner in the spending of this money. I'm interested in the actual monthly or daily type of routine that the commissioner is involved in with this office and this item. Could we get some kind of an appreciation of just where this amount of money can possibly be spent?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes, it would be a case of simply dividing the 19 into the sum that we have in order to come out with a figure.

These are the senior officers of the force. I was just dividing $20,000 into the 56 and it comes out to about $28,400, something of that nature. These senior officers are paid greater salaries than that; so, as I've said: we'll give you a list of the senior officers and the salaries that they each receive. I think you'll find that it balances out all right. At least, I hope you find that. I'll want to know if they don't, too.

You wanted to know what the commanding officer of the OPP does on a day-by-day basis. His is an administrative job, coupled with a great deal of travelling about the province. He has, of course, the responsibility for the effectiveness of the force on his shoulders, the responsibility of the complete operation. He has the status of a deputy minister and reports to me, although we have close liaison with my own Deputy Solicitor General, because I am away from the office so much. The commissioner is stationed on Harbour Street, and he and my deputy are really the liaison between the ministry and the work of the OPP.

But he, himself, as I say, has the rank of a deputy minister, and, of course, does report directly to the Solicitor General.

I don't know what I can tell you on his day-to-day operations, any more than I can tell you about the manager of any other business spending the millions of dollars that the OPP spends. These are all his responsibilities. The questions that you were just asking refer to his responsibility, as well, as I say, the policing of a good part of this province.

He does what any other businessman carrying out that type of operation would have to do, as well as the responsibility of command which is over and above the administration end.

Mr. Stong: I referred to the item that's called "services." In the estimates $27,600 is allocated for those services. Could you break that down? Is part of that for entertainment, for instance? I'm thinking, perhaps, of having workshops or things of that nature for visiting dignitaries or visiting police officers or commissioners or chiefs of police. Is that involved in services, and if so, could you break that $27,600 figure down for me?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Under conferences and seminars—$20,000; so there would be some of the money the member was asking about. Photo copy rental—$5,000. Membership fees—$600. That, I assume, is in regard to membership in various police associations. Repair and maintenance: $2,000; that adds up to $27,600.

Mr. Chairman: It was suggested by members of the committee that we still defer this matter. Is the committee agreed?

Agreed.

On item 2, staff inspection:

Mr. Stong: I wonder if the minister could give us an idea of the number of personnel involved in the salaries of $333,000?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Twelve, Mr. Chairman:

Mr. Lupusella: Before carrying this item, I would like to ask a few questions of the Solicitor General in relation to services.

There was no expenditure on the actual cost in 1975-76, and in the estimates for 1977-78 there is $1,000 involved. Can the minister explain the activities taking place in relation to services? What kind of activities are carried out to justify this $1,000?

While the Solicitor General is getting the information, I am most interested in $2,600 for supplies and equipment. Again I want to make the same comment. On the actual cost in 1975-76 there was no expenditure. I would like a breakdown of this cost to justify the use of this money.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The $1,000 is the cost of repairs, and why it wasn't shown earlier is that these items were previously charged to a central account. That applies to the question in regard to supplies and equipment as well.

Under the item of $2,600 that the member asked about, tape recorders accounted for $2,500 and office furniture accounted for $100. I trust that these tape recorders are not of any electronic significance, but are simply for taking dictation and things of that nature.

Mr. Lupusella: On a point of clarification about the supplies and equipment, do I take it, then, that the equipment which is in the office is rented by other companies? Is that what the Solicitor General is trying to tell us?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: No. They were just charged in a different account last year. All of the items of this nature were charged to a central account last year. In the estimates this year we are charging them to the actual office involved.

Item 2 agreed to.

Item 3 agreed to.

On item 4, staff development:

Mr. Stong: On this item of staff development, I assume that this is basically the same item that was used last year. Does it include in-service training, this staff development item?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That is what it does do.

Mr. Stong: Does that in-service training pertain to police officers, cadets, or what is the in-service training that is referred to in this vote?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The expenses involve here deal mostly with the OPP college on Sherbourne Street, where they have their own instruction apart from the college at Aylmer. This is more specialized instruction and limited to OPP personnel. This is one of the establishments which I think it would be well worth while for the opposition critics to visit with me and see just what goes on there.

It's an old building on Sherbourne Street, with a drill hall at the back and a lecture hall. The officers come and stay there for their length of time in Toronto. They come from all over the province and take a variety of courses. And, as I say, this is entirely apart from the Aylmer college.

Mr. Stong: The staff development aspect of salaries and wages would include the teachers or the professors at this college, I assume, and the employee benefits would relate to those teachers. I'm asking these questions so that again I can get an idea of where the money is being spent. I can understand the drastic increase because two votes have been combined; so that settles that aspect of the question for me.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The assumption is correct.

Mr. Stong: For the services we are dealing with, for which there is an estimate of almost $400,000, could the Solicitor General provide a breakdown of those services to give me an idea of where that money is being allocated? And could he tell me why there would be transportation costs, particularly when this is directed towards a college which I assume is in one location.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The details of the services are as follows: Photocopy rentals, $6,000; computer and EDP rentals, $39,600; training and educational services, $188,600; management consulting services, $27,000; advertising, $16,500; medical services, $10,000; psychological services, $22,000; career development, $26,600; university, full-time—some of the people are given opportunities to take university courses—$2,300; management development, $60,000; and that totals $398,600.

There are some 42 people involved in this. They don't do all of their in-service training at Sherbourne Street—they do travel across the province as well—but some of the travel expenses are of course for bringing the officers to the Toronto base and sending them back again, both before and after their courses.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, this may be an appropriate time to get a confirmation from the minister—I am waiting for a confirmation of this as well but I haven't received it yet. I was advised on my way into the House today that there was a radio broadcast this morning wherein it was alleged that there is in fact a quota placed on the police departments with respect to issuing tickets. One broadcast, it was reported to me, even indicated that cadets were advised that they would have to issue something like 25 tickets a week at a minimum, I believe. I don't have confirmation of that; it was reported to me on my way into the House.

I am wondering if the minister is aware of any broadcast or whether in fact that is happening despite our conversation on this the other day.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I have just asked Commissioner Graham whether he has any quota and he assures me the OPP do not have such a thing. I think the member is referring to an article that appeared in the Sun this morning. I will be pleased to send a copy across to the member. It refers to one of the divisions of the Metropolitan Toronto Police and it is suggested there that they have a little bit of a contest on. I'll get further information on that.

From a practical point of view, of course, people talk about these quotas from time to time—and we dealt with it very briefly the other day—but the work of all of the officers in any force is supervised and people naturally are looking at the number of charges that an officer lays, depending on what kind of work he is doing, of course. If he is doing public relations, you wouldn't expect any; but if another officer is laying three times as many charges, I suppose if the supervising officer is doing his job he is going to speak to the two and he may say, "Why are you laying so many and why is somebody else laying so few?" It's the same kind of comparison one makes in the estimates; when you see one figure that is apparently out of line, naturally you ask some questions about it. I think that happens with officers, too. They wonder, "Well, where is he? Is he in the coffee shop or is he out on the beat?"

My understanding from talking to police chiefs across the province is they all shun any kind of quota system, but that they all must admit that when they're appraising an officer's value, all facets of his work are taken into account, and whether he's doing the job is naturally one of those things they consider. But certainly his work is not simply based on the number of tickets he issued. But this concerned me enough to have it clipped this morning and we'll get some information on it.

Mr. Stong: I might say I was advised yesterday of a case, and I'm checking into it, wherein an individual faced some charges arising out of the same set of circumstances. It concerned a car involved in an accident and a subsequent leaving of the scene and an ending up in the ditch. I'm advised that this entire episode was under observation by a police officer who was in pursuit, and that as a result of this incident there was a charge of impaired driving laid, a charge of going over 80 laid, a charge of dangerous driving laid and two counts of failing to remain.

Now to me, that would seem to be an excessive number of charges, if my facts are correct. The officer laid this number of charges, some six charges arising out of the same occurrence, when perhaps an impaired driving or a failing to remain charge would have sufficed.

The failing to remain involved a car that was initially hit in driving over a lawn that was damaged by tire marks. Two failing to remain charges were laid in those circumstances. It was a continuing offence and it took place, I understand, over about a quarter of a mile.

I'm wondering if this, in fact, isn't the way the crime statistics or charges are compiled, or perhaps police officers in their enthusiasm to earn promotions are, in fact, laying six charges where one or two would cover the situation.

I'm not complaining about the impaired driving and the over-80 charges; that's a matter of course, and the courts don't proceed with both, anyway. But to have two failing to remain charges laid under the same circumstances would seem to be perhaps over-charging or unnecessary duplicating which require paper work at one end through the justice of the peace and the administrative offices, a long court list, more statistics being compiled. Maybe it's conducive to plea negotiation, I don't know, but it would appear to me to be the type of thing that is happening all too frequently.

The report that I was advised of on the way to the House this morning would tend to substantiate it, that perhaps overly enthusiastic police officers are trying to obtain promotions by this type of activity, which is not really fair, in my estimation, to the driving public, even though the driving public in this case is at fault. There's a matter of being at fault, but then being over-charged or harassed is another matter. I'm wondering if the minister is aware that that is going on, or, in fact, is going on with such frequency that it should be looked into?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: It's certainly one of the confusing items when it comes to statistics. In other words there could be many offences committed, and if you leave out some of those, are you getting a true picture of the number of people who leave the scene of an accident, for instance? You may say, "Oh, well, we've got him charged with impaired driving or some other charge, we won't worry about the fact that he's left the scene of the accident because we feel we've got all the evidence we need on the other charge." If you don't lay those charges, then your statistics on the number of people who leave the scene of the accident would not be necessarily correct.

But, when you say they have got two charges out of the same incident on the same offence, I certainly don't know why that would be done. As we all know, in many of the Criminal Code charges the more serious offence includes the lesser offences as well, so there would be no need to lay charges for the lesser offences. But certainly, yes there's a great problem in getting statistics of this nature straightened out because of the multiplicity of charges that might be laid stemming from one accident.

I certainly don't condemn the police for doing it. In other words, on many occasions they have very good reasons for doing it. Maybe they're not sure of their own evidence and how that evidence will stand up in court. Perhaps they would like to be able to prove the most drastic offence that has been committed. But maybe the judge, for some reason or another, will feel sympathetic to the person on that basis. He would be quite happy to convict him of some lesser offence, but he won't be obliged to put the same type of penalty on him.

There are a variety of reasons, as we all know, for laying a variety of charges. First, the matter of evidence. Secondly, the matter of the attitude of the judge involved and the record of the person which, of course, the police don't always have before them at the time. I'm not saying that the practice is necessarily a bad one, but certainly when they would appear to lay the same charge twice out of the one offence, I certainly can't account for that.

The policy is something that I'll be pleased to discuss with the Attorney General. It, of course, doesn't only affect the laying of the charges but the entire administration of the law.

I've just been handed a note here that Crown attorneys instruct the police as to what to do in this regard and they are also influenced by the area judge. I think I mentioned that in my earlier remarks that it depends on the attitude of the various judges involved. But the subject is certainly one that we should keep an eye on and I'll be pleased to discuss it with the Attorney General further as to these multiplicity of charges.

Mr. Stong: These charges were not laid by the Ontario Provincial Police. In my relationship with the Ontario Provincial Police I find that police force to be much more reasonable when dealing with the public than some of our regional police forces. But I see no reason whatsoever for laying a dangerous driving charge as a back-up to an impaired driving charge, for instance, or a duplicate failing to remain charge under the same set of circumstances.

Is this how crime statistics—statistics on the increase in crime—are compiled? Is it by the number of charges laid or the number of convictions obtained? I'm not sure and the answer to that is what I've been asking in these estimates right from the beginning.

Mr. Chairman: I'd just like to remind the hon. member that we're on staff development. I feel maybe he's jumped over to the next vote—law enforcement.

Mr. Warner: This is a good question.

Mr. Stong: I'm sorry. I thought we were talking about staff development and training all combined. I'm just trying to ascertain whether in fact this is a policy—

Mr. Warner: They are trained to do the things he's talking about.

Mr. Stong: For instance, I'm aware that the Crown attorney's office is consulted, but not on a routine basis and not on a regular basis. They are consulted only in the event that there is something that the police officers or the staff sergeant or the man in charge of the police station feels he should get advice on. But on highway traffic matters, moving vehicle matters, Crown attorneys are hardly ever consulted except in the case of criminal negligence causing death, for instance, and that type of thing. That's the basis of my question.

Are these charges responsible for the statistical increase we hear about once a year? If it is it would mean that a chief who is looking for an increase in the complement of his staff is going to tell his men, "Lay a multiplicity of charges arising out of the same set of circumstances because it will show on the board over here and show an increase in crime and justify my demand for more staff." I don't know. I'm asking the Solicitor General if he has investigated that situation and if that could be the policy that is employed—not by the OPP necessarily, but by the regional police forces and Metropolitan Toronto police force as well?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I think I mentioned when we first dealt with this that it was a matter our Justice policy field was dealing with—the matter of statistics. You get the statistics people from Ottawa who are concerned with it as well—certainly the various chiefs of police.

As I mentioned to the member, and I'll send this across to him, there is a system at the present time that Statistics Canada has set up. But let me read this into the record:

"Statistics Canada, in co-operation with the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, has developed uniform crime reporting rules for use by police forces throughout Canada. These rules were published in January 1962, full details of which can be seen in the Uniform Crime Reporting Manual. These outline: 1. what to score; 2. when to score—I don't like the use of that word "score,"—and 3. how to score crime statistics.

"Police forces in Ontario follow these rules in reporting crime statistics and there is, therefore, no duplication or inflation of police statistics. Example:

"1. A person charged with more than one type of offence is scored only once and against the more serious offence.

"2. Persons arrested for other police forces are not counted, as they will be counted by the police force concerned.

"3. The general rules of scoring are described in the attached pages."

I don't intend to read those because they're very finely printed, but that's what I'll send across to the member.

"All police forces in Ontario send monthly reports on crime statistics to Statistics Canada, which compiles them into an annual report. The last report, for 1975, was released about two months ago.

"Ottawa Police Force officials offered the following comments on the statements made by some defence counsel in Ottawa on police statistics:

"1. They do not know what statistics the defence counsel use to support their statements;

"2. The statement is based on a lack of understanding in how police and court statistics are reported and compiled; and

"3. The defence counsel did not have the courtesy to seek a clarification on their findings from the Ottawa Police Force." I think those last remarks concern what the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) asked about.

"Statistics are kept on occurrences. Where multiple charges are laid in one instance, it is only counted as one occurrence." I agree that there is some confusion on it; whether we in Ontario can help them get that straightened out or not, I don't know, but, as I say, our Justice policy secretariat has it under study.

Mr. Stong: I appreciate getting that material and I accept the minister's word that only one charge and one registration of an occurrence is a result even though multiple charges may have been laid.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: When the member says he accepts my word, I don't want to stand very strongly behind that word.

Mr. Reid: That's the quote of the year.

Mr. Stong: Going back to this item, we're dealing with what I understand to be the police college, which is here in Toronto and deals with the training of personnel. In the list of figures quoted by the minister there was an amount of $16,500 for advertising; if this is an in-house type of college dealing with police officers, why on earth would there be advertising required? He also mentioned an expenditure of $22,000 for psychological services. I wonder if the minister could go into that. What happens? What is a psychological service? Are police officers subject to examinations if the professor or teacher calls for it? What is that $22,000 expenditure for?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The advertising is for recruitment ads across the province, suggesting that the OPP is not a bad force to join.

Psychological testing continues to be utilized in screening force applicants. Four tests are administered by trained field personnel. These are: one mental ability or IQ test, one written communicative skills test and two personality inventory tests. Completed tests are scored by trained personnel in the career management branch and clinically assessed by a psychologist. That is what that item would cover.

How many psychologists do we employ? Do we know that? Just one psychologist.

Mr. Warner: I want to follow that up. Could the minister tell me for how long those tests have been used, over what period of time and when the ministry first started using them at the college? Secondly have you done any comparative studies? Since the tests have been in place, have you had a decrease in the number of police officers you have had to let go from the force because they haven't been fitting in properly with the way you want things done as opposed to those figures prior to when the tests came in?

If the minister catches the general drift of my question, there have been some concerns about how valid or how important it is to give psychological testing. Do we have any information that backs up the premise that it's a good idea to be doing psychological testing of applicants? Do we have any information that would back up that contention?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: My information is that we have been doing it for some three years—the program obviously began after many of our present senior officers were taken on strength. At the present time we are doing it with recruits. As far as they are concerned, they are weeded at that point. It's not a case of taking them on strength and then letting them go afterwards. They feel that it is working successfully with the recruits and that they are screening out the bad ones.

Mr. Warner: Then I take it also that if you don't have the comparison at this point—and perhaps after three years it is probably a little too soon to be able to tell—you do intend to keep those kinds of figures so that we will have some way of evaluating the worth of the psychological testing. If over a course of years there are fewer officers whom you have to let go as opposed to prior to the institution of the psychological testing, then I would take it that that is a measure of success of your testing program.

Secondly, is it the intention of the ministry to—perhaps "coerce" is too strong a word—make it known to all of the police forces around Ontario that this is what they should be doing, since you are doing it yourself? That the regional forces should be doing that across the province?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes, we do encourage that through the OPC and otherwise. They are all in touch with one another and they know what we are doing. Certainly all the smaller forces don't do this but the major forces do. We encourage them and ask them to do just that. I understand we do keep a record of the numbers of applicants that are rejected because of their failure to pass these tests. Over the course of the years we should be able to prove whether there has been less need to let people out after they have completed their training.

Mr. Lupusella: Carrying on the item about the psychological tests, when the applicant is applying to get into the police force in the event that he won't be hired as a police officer, is that statistical data related to the psychological tests kept by the police force or destroyed?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The question is, when an applicant has failed to pass the test, whether or not we retain a record that applicant X has failed to pass because he failed the psychological test. The answer from the commissioner is, yes, we do.

Mr. Lupusella: For how long do you keep the statistical data? I am really concerned about psychological tests. I don't have any idea how the test is carried out and what the criteria are. Is the department just asking questions of the applicant? Is the applicant supposed to answer questions through a practical format of questions and answers? I really don't understand why a psychological test must be kept by the police force, even though the application has been refused and the applicant has pursued another course. I am unable to see any reason why you are keeping this record.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I suppose just for the reasons that the hon. member for Scarborough-Ellesmere wanted to know what statistics we were compiling as to our success or failure in this case. Certainly, if we retain the man on the force, and he has passed this test and then subsequently for some reason he gets into some deviant behaviour or something that makes us question why we ever took him on in the first place, then we would like to go back in his records and say, "He passed his test and therefore in this case the test was not very effective."

For those who go, I don't imagine we keep them very long. I suppose we keep them in case he should apply again to us in some other—I shouldn't say in some other name, but sometimes he applies again. Rather than go through the whole process we can say, "You applied at such and such a date and didn't pass, and we have a record of it." I don't imagine we keep those very long on the applicants who are not successful. But certainly we have got to keep them for a little while.

Mr. Lupusella: If I can relate an item which is included in the 1976 report. We can relate my argument with the concern which was raised by the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) in relation to the quota system or the number of tickets which police officers are supposed to show to their superiors, or to their peers. The Solicitor General has been stating that the number of tickets is really not of account in showing whether or not the police officer has been performing his duty until he returns to the police station. I can buy the argument to a certain extent. But in human terms I am sure that the superior is watching the number of tickets—or the quota system, which the Solicitor General has been denying previously.

In human terms, I think that that is a regular procedure, unless the Solicitor General can show otherwise, with strong arguments what the criteria are which the police officers are supposed to follow to show their superiors that they are performing their duty regularly on the street—if they are involved with traffic, or if they are carrying on an investigation. In human terms I can't buy such an argument, taking into consideration that the problem might lie in relation to this kind of accountability from the police officers to their superiors when they return to the police station. That's the only evidence they can show that they did perform their regular duties on regular terms.

I hope the Solicitor General will give us a better explanation in relation to the whole situation, and the attitudinal approach of the police officer when he returns to the police station.

The reason I am raising this particular concern is that if this situation does exist, then we can in some way relate the kind of attitude—which I have been describing since the estimates started—the attitude of police officers in relation to the public and the kind of complaints which have been raised by representatives of the public condemning that attitude. Maybe the reason why there is a rash of ticket writing, is that police officers are under stress. They are really concerned that when they go back to the police station, they feel that they must justify what they have been doing with the five or six hours they have been on the street.

The Solicitor General tells me that I'm accusing the police officers. I've been trying to explain, through the course of my arguments, that maybe there is something wrong in relation to the attitudes and the policies of his ministry. I have been blaming the ministry for not providing, or for not undertaking, certain measures which can justify the means of the police officer.

In human terms I think that, maybe, if there is any way in which we can justify the attitude of the police officer when he is approaching the public, it is in the psychological sense. I don't want to sound like a psychiatrist, but the psychological effect on the police officer of going out and trying to perform his duty, going back to the police station, trying to justify to his superiors what he has been doing in the course of his duty—this stress and hypertension affects the officer in some way when he is approaching the public.

It's something which the Solicitor General is supposed to respond to, because I think that that's the main problem. The Solicitor General is trying to convince us that there is no quota system, that the police officer is not supposed to show a number of tickets as accountability to his superiors. I'm not convinced of this. I'm sorry to say that, Mr. Chairman. I think that the Solicitor General should investigate the whole process, especially in Metropolitan Toronto where the public is complaining about the attitude of the police officer when he is approaching the public.

I don't want to carry on with this because I have already touched on several points in my previous statement, but I'd like to have answers to that problem.

Before ending my comments, I refer to the annual report, 1976, and the statistical data on page 48, concerning crimes such as traffic offences cleared by district. Can the Solicitor General explain to members of the committee who is clearing those offences and how are they cleared? Are they cleared by the judicial process or cleared by the police stations or police officers? I would like to have a detailed explanation in relation to the statistical data.

In appendix F, we have criminal offences, not traffic, cleared by district. I don't want to go into the percentage area of the clearance but I would like to have a detailed explanation of who is clearing those offences. Is the clearance coming as a consequence of the judicial process or the police station? Those cases are not presented before the court of law. I would like to have an answer to that.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I understand that when the police refer to an item as cleared it simply means their file on the matter is completed as far as they are concerned. In other words, many police investigations do not get terminated because they do not come up with an answer. A missing person, for instance, may stay missing, or in a crime, if for one reason or another the offender is not caught, that in a sense is not a cleared item.

On the other hand, if the police are satisfied they have brought the perpetrator of the offence to court, whether there is a conviction or whether there is not a conviction is not of great concern to them. If they feel they have brought the proper person to court, then it would be marked as a cleared item, or if a missing person has been located then it would be marked as cleared. A certain amount of judgement goes into it, but it doesn't necessarily mean there has been a conviction, but rather what I refer to as a closed file.

You asked for the criteria of assessment of the work of an officer, the implication being that the only way senior police officials could judge the work of an officer is in the number of tickets he produced. I say nothing can be further from the truth than that statement. The results achieved are the measure of the effectiveness of an officer. Naturally, when an officer is attached to criminal investigation it will be how successful has he been in discovering the perpetrator of the offence. In that case there may be some regard for his ability in getting convictions before court because the conviction depends on how thoroughly he has conducted the case and the kind of evidence that he has brought forward.

If you want to take a smaller community where many of our detachments are situated, I refer to the statements of the member for Parry Sound. It doesn't depend on the number of traffic tickets that have been involved but on the absence of crime in that community, the feeling of goodwill towards the police and the feeling of goodwill toward one another. There are many ways of judging the effectiveness of an officer.

From time to time I get words of commendation that the public have sent to me from municipal forces by reason of action of the Ontario Provincial Police force. The chiefs and the commissions involved, I am sure, get many other types of letters. They are letters of thanks for an officer who stopped when they had run out of gas or had given them some help at a time of sickness. These are the sorts of things that the policeman is judged on. They are personal assessments by his senior officer of his everyday work in the field and in the job that he is doing.

However, let's carry it one step further. The report of the highway traffic safety committee is presently a matter of concern. As you know, there are many recommendations in there. They deal with the matter of speeding. If an officer is sent out to try to catch speeders and a week later there are still as many speeders on that street as there were at the time the complaint was laid, then I would suggest that officer is not very effective. In that case, it may depend on the number of people he stops and the number of summonses that he issues as to how effective he is.

The member for Yorkview will be after me in the next little while to do something about more summonses in regard to the wearing of seatbelts. I have taken the other attitude to date, that this is new legislation. It was rather controversial legislation and I have let the police start with issuing warnings. So far that is good up to a point but there are many people who will not wear seatbelts in this province unless they are compelled to do so. The effectiveness of our seatbelt legislation and effectiveness of the safety on our roads and the saving of life and limb may depend on how many summonses we issue for the non-wearing of seatbelts.

I think that report recommends we should get tougher on this. In police work you just can't be nice to all people all of the time and expect to do the job effectively. As I said the other day, often in society the meeting of people with the police officer is the first time they have ever come into contact in this permissive day and age with anybody that has had to say no to them and say no to them firmly. Many people don't appreciate it when they meet a police officer who gives them a ticket. But if we want our speeding laws obeyed, and if we want our seatbelt laws obeyed, then we do have to issue these tickets. In some cases the effectiveness of our highway traffic work will depend on the number of summonses issued but in no way does that mean that the police officers are judged on the number of summonses that they do issue.

Mr. Lupusella: I would like to make a further comment to that. The Solicitor General is recognizing to a certain point that around the municipal forces in the province of Ontario he notices problems the public is complaining about. At least he is not denying that particular factor that a lot of people are quite dissatisfied about the attitude of certain of those involved with municipal forces. I hope that the Solicitor General is going to do something. He promised me he would send my complaint to the police force to show there are inefficiencies within the system.

In relation to being nice to the public, again we get into different points of view. I think a police officer is supposed to be nice to the public. He is not the judge on the street. We have stated that in a very clear way. He is making sure that the law is enforced, and there is nothing wrong with that. He is supposed to carry on his particular duty but I cannot justify that the police officer is not supposed to be nice to the person with whom he is dealing.

Maybe the Solicitor General has a justification which I don't, but I think the difference which is existing between us is that the Solicitor General sees the police officer as having the discipline involved in this kind of para-military training which he got on the training course. I don't see the police officer in that way. I see a police officer as the agent who is trying to enforce the law but nobody is giving him the right of not being nice when he is approaching the person.

I am not blaming the police officer. He is involved in a particular situation in a particular environment and sometimes is showing a sense of dissatisfaction and a lack of morale to the public. That's a very human and reasonable approach which you might use when a police officer is not satisfied. Maybe that police officer is not taking some time with his peers. When he is going out in the course of his duty he might not project the kind of attitude he has to keep, reflecting the sensible service which the police officer is supposed to provide to the public—"To Serve and Protect."

Again I would like to see this motto changed to "To Educate and To Serve"—that's the emphasis which must be put. I really believe in that, and maybe the new motto should be emphasized on the new cars. I see a particular role of the police officer carrying on this particular task.

There is another concern I would like to raise to the Solicitor General. A lot of people have been talking to me and it occurred to me several times that maybe the summons was completely wrong. On the reverse side of the summons it clearly states that if there is something wrong the person should go to the police station to clarify the situation. Most of the time those people have been told by police officers and at the police station that they are supposed to go to court to clear the summons.

If there is a clear mistake which was committed by the police officer which can be justified by the person summonsed I don't see why the particular complaint shouldn't be cleared at the police station. I would like to have an answer to that. A lot of people are frustrated by that. A lot of people are going to the police station and are emphasizing that there is a clear mistake. Some of those people have been coming to my office to state that there was a clear mistake which could have been easily resolved at the police station. I don't see the reason why those people should be further frustrated.

They have to go to court just to tell the judge, "Your Honour, there is a clear mistake here. I have evidence that the summons is not mine," or maybe the licence number is completely wrong—and then the case is going to be dismissed. It is an increase of work for the judicial system and police officers could play a role in cutting it down if they could be shown a clear mistake which was committed by the police officer.

I don't see why the person should engage himself in such a bureaucratic procedure to go before the court just to justify to the judge that there is a clear mistake on the summons. If this clause is particularly emphasized on the reverse side of the summons, why are the police officers sending those people to the court? Can the Solicitor General respond to that?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I have difficulty in responding to it. At one time we wanted the police to use more discretion. That's what we were talking about earlier. Yet when we get the police officers using that discretion I think my friend earlier in the day said that the police officer shouldn't be both judge and jury.

Police officers do have discretion in this matter and they don't want to be judge and jury. So if they feel the offence warrants something more than a warning, then in the interests of justice they can't be the ones who make these decisions. They have to send them off to the courts, which are, of course, the proper place to make that kind of decision.

So it's the old, difficult role of the police officers. We want them to have discretion. We don't want them to be issuing summonses or bringing people to court on slight charges, and yet they have the difficulty of seeing that the laws are obeyed.

I mentioned earlier the matter of seatbelt enforcement and speeding enforcement.

Generally, the kind of restraint that people will listen to in that case is only the imposition of a fine and, of course, the police officers don't have that power. It has to be the courts. So I don't have any more answers for the hon. member than we've already discussed.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, if I may, maybe the Solicitor General didn't pay attention to my statement. I didn't emphasize through the course of my point that the police officer should be the judge on clearing the ticket. I hope he will understand what I am trying to say, that when on the summons there is a clear mistake, not in relation to the offence, but in relation to the person involved—I gave you an example before, that maybe the licence number is not the licence number of the person who got the summons. I'm not talking about the violation itself. I'm talking about a clear mistake which maybe the police officer committed in issuing the summons in the first place. That's the kind of concern which I have.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I'm not so sure whether the member wants the police officer to cancel that ticket when a mistake has been made. What is it that he's asking the police officer to do or the police to do when a mistake is made?

Mr. Lupusella: As I stated, let's say that I get a ticket and the licence number is not mine. It's a clear mistake that was committed by the police officer, not by me. If I don't have such a licence number, I don't see why I should have to appear before the court to show that I'm not the owner of the licence number.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, what is the hon. member suggesting should be done?

Mr. Lupusella: It's something that maybe can be cleared. I don't have any summonses here with me, Mr. Chairman, but on the reverse of the summons there is a particular clause which states that if there is any particular mistake about the ticket, the person should go to the police station. The police station instead is sending people to the courts, and saying, "Well, go there and justify your own mistake to the court."

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I'd be very much concerned. I know the police officers in charge do have some discretion in this matter when you take something into a station that is obviously wrong. But again, you have to be very careful once a summons of any nature has been issued to be able to account for what happened to that summons. I would be very much concerned if I thought there was a general habit of taking summonses into police stations and have them destroyed there at that time. The summons has been issued and the court is the proper place.

It always amazes me how, when people will almost admit that they have created a fairly serious violation of the law, such as speeding or something of that nature, they can then be so self-righteous when the policeman has made a slight mistake in the time or the address or the writing of the number. I know the technicalities must go in favour of the person accused and I'm not suggesting otherwise, but as I say, it always becomes very amazing to me how self-righteous the person who has made the first and major mistake can be at the minor mistake of the police officer.

I say that because the courts do have a great deal of discretion in allowing the mistake to be corrected when the person appears in court, if it's a minor mistake and the judge is not satisfied that the right person and the right car are involved, he can correct that in the court. I still maintain, Mr. Chairman, that the court is the proper place to have that dealt with.

Mr. Lupusella: I have one last comment. If that's the course which the Solicitor General wants to follow, can he make sure that the clause on the reverse side of the ticket will be completely deleted?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: No, sir.

Mr. Stong: On that question, Mr. Chairman, I must say that I understand what the member for Dovercourt is saying but I also appreciate what the minister is saying. I can't see how the minister can interfere with the course of justice. The situation, as the minister has described it, is accurate. No police officer can change what's on a summons but, likewise, the retort that the person would get going into the police station—that he should take the matter up in the courts—arises out of the fact that the wrong licence number was put on the information.

The wrong licence number does not go to the substantive offence, ordinarily; it's the person who is charged, not the car or the licence number. The fact that the wrong licence number is on it would not be grounds for dismissing the charge in the courts, per se. However, perhaps what the member for Dovercourt is saying, or alluding to, is an issue that I had raised earlier. This is the only comment I'm going to make on this item. It is simply that perhaps there should be better public relations by the officer who is giving information to the member of the public who is complaining.

To go to a police station with the problem on the summons and to be told quite bluntly, "Take the matter to court," is insufficient. Perhaps that is the real issue here, although I must agree with the Solicitor General when he indicated earlier that policemen are not supermen; they are human beings and they have their good days and bad days, as he described earlier; I agree with that. Maybe there should be an extra awareness and consciousness of the fact that the policeman represents the law, represents the government and in that arena is, perhaps, regarded by the public as a superman and maybe should measure up, somewhat, in terms of public relations to that image.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, I would like to clear any illusion that the Solicitor General might have about my not getting along with the judicial process. What I'm trying to say is that if that's the course which we have to follow, I don't see the reason why, on the reverse side of traffic tickets, there are words to the effect that any incorrection should be reported to the police station. Why is that? Can I have an explanation? Let's cancel it and tell the public that they have to appear before the court to justify any mistake which might take place. Let's do that, and I'll go along with it.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: If the mistake that has occurred is by reason of, say, a computer mistake with the licence number, or that the car in question was not there, this type of thing can be dealt with in the station as long as it's not dealing with the nature of the offence itself. But there is an affidavit.

Mr. Lupusella: I didn't even mention the offence.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: All right. There is an affidavit that you can take. For instance, if your car was not anywhere in the area that day you can go to the station and make an affidavit of this nature and the police can correct certain clerical mistakes in that way at that time.

Mr. Lupusella: I agree with that. I didn't mean to talk about the content of the offence in itself, Mr. Chairman. I hope the Solicitor General will understand that.

Item 4 agreed to.

Item 5 agreed to.

On item 6, transport:

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, with respect to item 6, dealing with transport, I noticed two things. It's been changed from a different vote last year to the present vote this year, and the amount has doubled. I wonder if the Solicitor General can give us a reason for the doubling of the amount for transport when I assume it's dealing with the same type of service.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Again it's a case of merging two items previously in two votes into one. I understand that the transport item under vote 1505, criminal and general law enforcement program, and 1506, traffic law enforcement program, which are found in the public accounts for last year, have been combined into vote 1604 this year. In the year ended March 31, 1977, the total for transport under vote 1505 was about $6.4 million, with a similar amount under vote 1506. In this year's estimates they have been combined into one.

Mr. Stong: Other than for the purpose of confusing the opposition when they are trying to prepare for estimates, why was that done? This is being done continually in these estimates, revising things and transferring and eliminating headings. What is the necessity of changing headings and transferring items?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Last year there were two votes, one for criminal and general law enforcement and another for traffic law enforcement. If the member will look at them, he will find that most items were evenly split last year. There were similar items in both of those votes and the figures were pretty much the same in both votes. It got to be an arbitrary decision that was made, because how do you tell how much of a man's time is spent on criminal investigation and how much on traffic work. It was a very arbitrary decision that was made, and generally we took the operational costs of both of them and simply split them down the middle. In the estimates this year, the member will find there's one vote less and we have simply combined the items.

Mr. Lupusella: Under item 6 there is an amount of about $2.5 million for services. What kind of services are involved? Can we have a breakdown of that figure as to how the money is spent, what kind of a service is provided, and what are the criteria and the guidelines, so as to have an idea why this enormous amount of money is spent for that?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I understand the member is looking at the total of $2,509,200. That consists of $3,000 for photocopy rental—I don't know what we would do without the photocopy machine; it keeps coming up in every one of these items—fleet insurance, $414,500; repairs and purchase of automobiles, $1,803,100; helicopter operations, $153,000; aircraft operations, $106,800; engineers' salaries, $28,800; for a total of $2,509,200.

Mr. Lupusella: How many engineers do you have and what are their duties?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I understand it is one engineer who looks after the helicopters.

Mr. Lupusella: Can I have some idea as to why you need an engineer?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: There are two helicopters involved. They are highly skilled people. If we don't have a person of this nature to service the machines they soon become non-operational.

Mr. Lupusella: I am not convinced about that. We realize the importance of this service, but if we have to believe the statement of the Solicitor General I think that in any airport where the public is served as well, we need engineers to look after the equipment. I can't get the argument and the justification for an engineer.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I understand he is not on our staff. It is on a fee-for-service basis, and this is what their fees are. For one person, I admit on that basis it looks like a pretty heavy fee. But with the kind of skill these people have and today's rates, I guess that is what it works out to.

Mr. Lupusella: How much is his salary?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: We don't pay his salary. As I say, it is a fee for operations. This is what we are charged by the company we deal with, which services the two helicopters that we have.

Mr. Lupusella: What is the name of the company, if possible?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Great Lakes. He is not a professional engineer, but he is a highly skilled mechanic.

Mr. Lupusella: Do you have a particular contract with this company and do you renew the contract from one year to the next? Is it a permanent contract or a temporary contract.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: It is a yearly contract.

Item 6 agreed to.

Item 7 agreed to.

On item 8, quartermaster stores:

Mr. Stong: On the quartermaster stores, I am wondering about the possible overlapping between this item and items such as the staff development type of explanation you have given for the work these two items do. For instance, quartermaster stores is making sure uniforms, et cetera, are out among the police forces, and about stock and distribution of all items. There are such things here as Indian police force and issuance of office supplies. Yet up above we have properties, staff development, planning and research, and transport. Is there any overlapping of services performed between this item and the items that have gone on before? There is a $2-million amount here that is fairly high for merely looking after the supplying of goods.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I have been given assurances that there is no overlapping. These are the actual purchase of the uniforms and the various supplies involved.

Mr. Reid: I would like to ask the minister if there is any provision under this vote, under quartermaster stores, for security and surveillance equipment, such as bugging devices, et cetera. If so, what does that come to? Just thought I'd wake Roy up.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I'm sure it must be in here some place, but they tell me it's not in this vote.

Mr. Lupusella: I have a question in relation to uniforms. How do you purchase the uniforms? Who is making the uniforms; what's the name of the company? Is there any particular contract involved?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: It goes out to public tender. It is by a yearly contract and the people who have the contract for this year are the House of Stone.

Mr. Lupusella: Can I ask the Solicitor General,—and maybe he can provide that information to me later on, even after the estimates are over—in the last 10 years, who has been making the uniforms? Could he give me the names of the companies, and for how many years they have been performing this particular task?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: We can certainly get it. We don't have it here now.

Mr. Lupusella: Thank you.

Item 8 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I do have an answer. I don't know whether it will lead to more discussion—probably we haven't got sufficient time. But I was asked for the difference between the 1976-77 public accounts expenditure and the 1977-78 estimates, and the details of the Management Board orders.

The 1976-77 public accounts included 90 per cent of the cost of salaries and benefits for one extra pay period. The pay system requires biweekly payments of salary resulting in 26 pay-days per year. However, once every seven years, an extra pay period or 27th pay-day arises. This was the case in 1976-77. It was decided by government to charge 90 per cent of this pay period to 1976-77. Therefore, the salaries still appearing in the public accounts are higher than would normally be expected.

These costs were authorized in the Management Board order totalling $222,600 and shown in the public accounts. The accounting system has been revised, commencing in 1977-78, so that this situation will not occur again. The 1977-78 estimates are based on the usual 26 pay-day system. So that accounts for some of that money—

Mr. Reid: That's how thorough we are.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Very good, when you're getting down to four per cent. However that's not all of the four per cent. I mentioned $137,600 was for salary increases, together with this extra 90 per cent of the 27th pay period. Then we had four retirements of senior officers last year and they're entitled to a number of benefits when they leave, such as sick pay, et cetera, and that figure amounted to $85,000. So $137,600 and $85,000 made up those figures.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, I do have a comment on that. If you want to deal with item 9 first, I have no observation to make on that, but I would like to go back to item 1 for a minute.

Item 9 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I would ask the member for York Centre, would he be able to do this in a minute or two?

Mr. Stong: Yes, as a matter of fact, it's in the form of a question. It arises out of an issue we got into. I understand the September 30 Ontario Finances shows a spending increase of $9 million for this ministry. I'm wondering if this has been spent and what it has been spent for and how it was authorized?

I'm advised there is no Management Board order that has been published with respect to that increase of $9 million. The one that has been published was for last year. I'm wondering if the minister can give an explanation of that $9 million? It seems to be an increase for which there is no published Management Board order.

An hon. member: They had a retirement party.

[1:00]

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I am informed the bulk of it was for salary and awards that were given on April 1, 1977. In addition there were $1.25 million that we dealt with in this House, or spoke about in the House, for extra services for organized crime. I spoke about it last March and April. Both those figures will be dealt with in a subsequent Management Board order.

Mr. Reid: That is what we are trying to get away from.

Mr. Stong: A subsequent Management Board order? Has that money been spent?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: A good part of it, is the answer. Yes.

Mr. Reid: Is it possible for the government to spend money without having any authority from the House or even from the Lieutenant Governor in Council to expend moneys in this regard? How can you spend money without any authority?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I assume we have not spent money without authority. I assume we have the proper authority to do this. I see the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. Auld) taking an interest in what I am saying, so we had better get exactly how this did go through. But I am sure it was done properly.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier today in the House, the quarterly reports show the latest forecast of expenditures. That salary money has not yet been paid because there is sufficient money in the salary vote to pay up until—I don't know what the monthly payroll is—for instance, the end of February. There will be additional funds required then because of the salary award, because, as he had said in this House many times, we don't anticipate in the estimates what salary awards will be made for obvious reasons. We are negotiating with the OPP association, for instance.

What we did do two years ago was to put a contingency fund in Management Board to deal with part of salary awards. However, as I say, there would be either a supplementary estimate. There would be an authorization for commitment. There would be, depending on when we had the figures, a supplementary estimate for a Management Board order to deal with salary increases for every ministry once we know what they are.

For instance, we don't know what they are going to be for the bargaining unit because we have been in negotiations with them, and as of Wednesday the bargaining unit opted to go for arbitration. I really don't know when the arbitrator will bring down an award.

We do know now what the salary increases will be for the non-bargaining unit, the management classes. That was announced yesterday. That amount is not in the estimates. Part of it may be, but not all of it. So there will have to be supplementary estimates or a Management Board order for that amount when this is figured out.

The reason it is not brought forward in supplementary estimates at the moment is that we don't know what sort of attrition there will be, what sort of reduction in staff there may be, what sort of transfers of staff between a lot of people at one salary range and fewer people at a higher salary range—that kind of thing. So we try to wait until we are close to the end of the year to bring into the House, in one form or another, the estimate of what the additional funds required are.

Mr. Breithaupt: I would expect the Solicitor General may wish to amplify that particular statement or there may be some further questions. It might be that this would be a convenient time to allow this one item to remain, and we would proceed with the other complete vote on Monday.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, may I? I am indebted to my friend for the assistance to me in my question.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I haven't recognized you.

Mrs. Campbell: How can you not? He is the only one on his feet.

On motion by Hon. Mr. MacBeth, the committee of supply reported certain resolutions and asked for leave to sit again.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1977

The House met at 2:05 p.m.

Prayers.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I have a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor signed by her own hand.

Mr. Speaker: By her own hand, Pauline M. McGibbon, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, transmits supplementary estimates of certain additional sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1978, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly, Toronto, November 7, 1977.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Energy, Mr. Speaker, regarding today's Globe and Mail article which indicated that the minister is "unhappy" with certain of the operations of Ontario Hydro and its relationship to the government—does this unhappiness include the fact that there is still no contract with the Lummus company for heavy water plant D? What is the delay in the signing of this contract and would the minister not agree that the ultimatum with regard to the construction of the plant is extremely weak since there is no contract that has been signed which can then be cancelled?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like the Leader of the Opposition to know that I am a joyful man, not an unhappy man.

The answer to the question in connection with the contract is that as matters stand that contract was signed. So I am happy; as a rule, I am a happy fellow. No, to the second part of the question and to the third part of the question, it is my understanding that the contract is signed.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, since the indication from Hydro until just now has been that the contract has not been signed, can the minister indicate to us exactly when the contract was signed, what the reason was for the delay and whether this contract in fact is exactly the same kind of contract that we had so much difficulty with under Bruce B?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I would be delighted to get the date for the Leader of the Opposition in terms of the actual signing of the formalized contract, although he should have a pretty good feel of its terms and the contents, and how it compares with B, in view of his many communications and conversations with the chairman of the board and so on—

Mr. S. Smith: They refuse to give it to me.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I am sure he has all of that information now, but I would be happy to get the signing date.

Mr. S. Smith: May I simply ask two things? One, will the minister please table the contract and, secondly, is he not aware that the information I requested from the chairman of Hydro during the meeting he keeps referring to, has been denied me by the chairman of Hydro pending some authorization from the minister, which authorization has not yet come and will the minister give it?

Mr. Stong: Yes or no.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Again, may I say in direct reply to the Leader of the Opposition that there has been no refusal from me or no permission required by me for the chairman of Hydro to supply information pertaining to the questions on that list.

I said in the past, to the Leader of the Opposition, that the chairman of Ontario Hydro does not require my permission, has not sought my permission. As far as I am concerned, the Leader of the Opposition is entitled to sit down with the chairman to get all the information he wants.

Again, it is my understanding that because of the penetrating and the very wide scope of the information requested, it has taken Hydro some time to put it together. I don't know how many people they have working on it, but I am sure that you would put a lot of people to work in connection with that.

Mr. Nixon: Well, you've got 25,000 jobs over there.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Increasing employment opportunities.

Mr. S. Smith: It's one of my job-creation programs.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: That's your contribution to the unemployment problem in this province, is it?

Mr. S. Smith: That's right.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: As to the matter of the tabling of the contract, the member asked the chairman of Ontario Hydro for a copy of the contract relating to Bruce B; he very joyfully gave him that contract. I don't see why that type of information couldn't be shared in connection with Bruce D.

TORONTO TRANSIT CONSULTANTS

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications: Will the minister explain why it appears to be the policy of his government to prevent Toronto Transit Consultants—that's the consulting arm of the TTC—from doing business? Under what authority would the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) have told Chairman Godfrey that Toronto Transit Consultants are not permitted to do business outside?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would suggest that the hon. member ask the Treasurer that question.

Mr. S. Smith: The Treasurer being absent, Mr. Speaker and by way of supplementary, may I ask the Minister of Transportation and Communications to make a clear statement as to whether it is or is not the policy of this government to prevent Toronto Transit Consultants from doing business on a paid basis outside the city of Toronto and outside the borders of this province and this country? Would he please make a clear statement of this; and could he explain whether in fact this is part of any prohibition of Toronto Transit Consultants from doing this kind of business, and if so is it part of a general policy? As with Gray Coach, is it that the TTC mustn't do anything that's profitable?

Hon. Mr. Snow: As I recall it, this request from Metropolitan Toronto was for an amendment to legislation to allow the setting up of this corporation. It was not a request to my ministry, I did not deal with it; it was a request to the Treasurer and to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs for special legislation.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister has no objection?

Mr. Cunningham: Would the minister not agree that this direction is only a rather blatant attempt to continue to prop up the UTDC with further work that is completely unnecessary and which would further legitimize this wasteful exercise of the UTDC?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't agree with that.

HOSPITAL CUTBACKS

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Minister of Health: In view of the news stories today on the statements by the Ontario Hospital Association, is the Minister of Health willing (a) to indicate publicly that he is not happy with the prospect of 4,000 workers out of jobs in the province of Ontario at this point in time, and will therefore attempt to correct the financial disparity which the association claims exists; and (b) that it is utterly unacceptable to the province of Ontario to have the imposition of a $5 a day deterrent fee placed upon patients in hospitals in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Let me deal with the last part of that question first. I think my leader and my colleague, the Treasurer, have indicated on a number of previous occasions when the question of deterrent fees has come up—and I certainly have, too—that we have no intentions, no plans, to introduce deterrent fees. Certainly, one hears from time to time from a variety of sources, professional and otherwise, that one of the means of beginning to get a handle on health care spending is, in some manner or means, forcibly to draw to the attention of the individual citizen exactly how much the system is costing. I'm sure the member has heard as much as I have about the free health care system, which obviously it isn't.

Mr. Lewis: Entering hospital isn't quite like going to a doctor's office, however.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Not necessarily.

Mr. Deans: You cannot just walk into hospital. The minister knows that.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Dealing with the first part—I haven't read the newspaper articles. The first I heard of it was this morning when somebody from the Star got me out of the shower to ask me about it.

I don't know where the 4,000 figure has come from. In September when the Treasurer was speaking with the PMLC he did at that time, as you know, outline in fairly broad terms the strategy for the next year. He indicated that the social development field—the Ministries of Community and Social Services and Education and my own—would see in 1978 at 5.9 per cent increase overall.

The fine details of that as to how much will go where in the Health ministry's appropriation have not been finalized. I think this is perhaps a little premature, but certainly the allocation to the hospitals will be less than the rate of inflation. I would anticipate and hope that whatever adjustments will undoubtedly have to be made can come about mainly through attrition and probably through the closing of excess or surplus active treatment beds around the province.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary—maybe I can just make two quick supplementaries: None of the Ontario hospitals can, of themselves, introduce a deterrent fee, I take it, in the province of Ontario. That must be a legislative enactment. Therefore, is it fair to assume that the minister's disavowal of that, today, means that $5 a day won't be applied?

Secondly, has he looked at the possibility that the Ontario Hospital Association is using these threats—and some of it is clearly in the category of threat—as a kind of opening bargaining position with their collective bargaining which is just about to begin around the province, and that this is a highly undesirable way for the Hospital Association to start off negotiations?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I haven't thought of those comments quite in that context.

By the way, while I'm on my feet, I should point out that there is a group of students here from Heron Valley Junior High School in the great riding of Don Mills.

Mr. Speaker: That is not permitted.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: And a group of ladies from the Lawrence Park Community Church.

Mr. Lewis: You will all be so pleased to know your MPP showers in the morning.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That's right. There may be something rotten in socialist Denmark, but not in Don Mills.

I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I know that was quite out of order.

I think I have already indicated that as far as the $5 notion is concerned that's right—there is no legislative authority for a hospital do to that. Of course there is what is known as differential income on semi-private and private accommodation, which is well known and a long standing practice.

I do not discount the possibility sometime in the years ahead that a different means of funding health care will have to be found. It will spread the load evenly, but forcibly draw to the attention of the public that this is a very expensive system, that it is not free, that the premiums don't even begin to cover the cost of health care in the province, and that it's something which we all have to bear.

What was the rest of the member's question?

Mr. Lewis: The minister has satisfied me.

Mr. Nixon: Don't you have something else to say while you are on your feet?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I could think of something.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: If 5.9 per cent is the amount of increase the ministry is permitted, and if Mr. Hay is saying that the minister is allowing him four per cent in the hospital sector, can he confirm or deny his figure of four per cent and accordingly, if 4,000 layoffs are not going to occur, how many layoffs does the minister anticipate will occur and what measures is he taking to deal with these particular persons?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, I have already indicated that the 5.9 per cent figure, which was mentioned in the Treasurer's September 16 statement to the PMLC, I believe, covers generally the social development field. I went on to say, in answer to a question from the member for Scarborough West, that it is a little premature at this point to indicate what the exact allocations are going to be within the Ministry of Health. I may say that we in the Ministry of Health, as compared to the other ministries, probably have shared disproportionately in that overall appropriation, looking at the next year.

The four per cent is a little bit of conjecture. They have been told repeatedly over the fall months that the rate of increase will be less than the rate of inflation. They know from the Treasurer's statement that it is 5.9 per cent to the social field within the government. I have heard various rumours from the hospital community; it has been interesting to hear them as I have gone around the province.

It is a little premature. We are working on next year's budget. I would hope to be able in December—early December preferably—to give the hospitals a firm indication of what the percentage will be in the overall hospital appropriation. Obviously the hospital appropriation is a very important one for us, since it is 53 per cent of our budget. And the earlier we can get those figures out so that they can properly plan, the better it will be.

I reiterate that I would anticipate, I would hope, that the bulk of whatever adjustments will be necessary can be carried out through attrition. I don't want to mislead the House; I don't discount the possibility that in some areas it may mean layoffs, but I would hope that the bulk of the adjustments can be through attrition.

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. If the Minister of Health anticipates layoffs, can he confer with his colleague, the Minister of Colleges and Universities, so that we don't take students into the health courses and into the laboratory courses at our community college and have these students spend three years of their lives and all kinds of money and then come out with no jobs? Why don't they have a little better planning over there?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As a matter of fact, if the hon. member will check his facts he'll find, for instance, that the enrolment in nursing courses around the province has been cut—it is off about 40 per cent from a couple of years ago—and that enrolment in the medical schools has been frozen for the last couple of years on a voluntary basis on the part of the faculties of medicine.

The whole area of medical manpower planning is a matter of great concern to me so that we don't lead young people's expectations to unrealistic levels or, for that matter, that we don't saddle ourselves with additional financial burdens which are unnecessary.

ASBESTOS HAZARDS

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Minister of Labour, if I may, Mr. Speaker. Now that Dr. Irving Selikoff has brought his figures on the relationship between industrial disease and the exposure to asbestos, up to January 1, 1977, showing an incidence in the field of cancer of the larynx greater than twice that which would be expected in the population as a whole, can the minister make a public statement that she could well understand cancer of the larynx being designated as an industrial disease in this province and that compensation flow therefrom?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I have today learned of Dr. Selikoff's letter in response to a letter written to him by Dr. McCracken, the executive director of rehabilitation services for the Workmen's Compensation Board, which was sent to Dr. Selikoff on October 11 inquiring as to any further information that Dr. Selikoff might have. Dr. McCracken was attempting to maintain the flow of information between these two bodies because we feel that this is very important.

I can tell the hon. member for Scarborough West that the information which Dr. Selikoff has provided in his letter of October 24 is being received with great interest and is being subjected to the usual examination by a qualified epidemiologist. When that information is available it will be addressed, along with the information which we gather from other equally widely reputed and equally wise and equally renowned occupational health physicians in other parts of the world in order to assess it and to make the decision regarding the relationship between asbestos and carcinoma of the larynx and then to make the decision about whether, indeed, it should be a compensable disease.

Mr. Lewis: Why must we in this province always wait so long to confirm that which we already know? Since it was Dr. Selikoff's data on stomach cancer related to asbestos which caused the implementation of stomach cancer as an industrial disease—is the minister denying that?—since that was the case, and since the incidence of laryngeal cancer now evidenced by Dr. Selikoff is much higher than that for stomach cancer, which we already regard as an industrial disease in Ontario, why does she resist it so bitterly to the painful end? Why can she not do what is just sensible and scientific and do it? What is wrong with the minister?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what I am doing. I am being sensible, rational and scientific and not motivated by political expedience, as the member for Scarborough West is.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege—

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to this question, if that is your wish, sir.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of privilege before the reply, I feel I want to say, if I may, to the minister, that this has absolutely nothing to do with political expedience. This has something to do with a man named Aime Bertrand in Sudbury, who is waiting while he is still alive to see if he can get a pension from the WCB, which Selikoff's figures confirm he deserves. It's as simple as that.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It's not that simple. The decision which is made has to stand for a very long period of time and will be used as an example by all other compensation organizations in North America. We are attempting to do it in the most humane, most expedient and the wisest possible way and that, of course, is to take into consideration the information which was developed by a number of very well renowned specialists in occupational health. Dr. Selikoff is not alone. I do not in any way denigrate Dr. Selikoff's capabilities, but the decision regarding stomach cancer was made on the basis of the epidemiological study of the reports from all of the specialists around the world. It was not directly related to Dr. Selikoff's reports alone.

Mr. Lewis: Come on. Who did Miller visit, if not Selikoff?

Hon. B. Stephenson: In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that there is one very important sentence in Dr. Selikoff's letter of October 24, which the hon. leader of the third party has neglected to state, and that is, and I quote: "However, our data do not provide information concerning what proportion of laryngeal cancers might be associated with asbestos exposure. Your case control study will provide much better information in this regard."

Mr. Lewis: That's right, so what?

Hon. B. Stephenson: That, Mr. Speaker is the operative section of this letter. The study which is being done in Toronto sponsored by the Workmen's Compensation Board will provide all of the other agencies in the world with the kind of information which they don't have at the present. Prospective studies are of much more value in this area than retrospective studies are. Dr. Selikoff's information is valuable because it provides us with an insight and a hint that indeed there may be some problem.

Mr. Lewis: A hint? A hint?

Hon. B. Stephenson: We must ensure that we know the size of the problem, the proportions of the problem and the way in which it can be best dealt with.

That is the course we are following, Mr. Speaker, the responsible course, which will help the Aime Bertrands and all of the others who are working in this field in Canada.

Mr. Lewis: If he lives long enough.

May I ask one final supplementary? Can I ask the minister to consider another operative section of this letter, namely the one that reads: "There was a clear, statistically significant increase in observed deaths from laryngeal cancer compared to those expected," and another operative sentence: "Thus there is useful evidence that asbestos workers suffer an increased risk of laryngeal cancer"? May I ask the minister if she does not understand that those are the central points of the letter? The percentage of total laryngeal cancers attributable to asbestos is not the important point, the point is the relationship between one and the other and that has been established. Doesn't the minister understand that?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I understand it obviously very much better than the member for Scarborough West does. Indeed, there are figures which would suggest that this is so. They have not been corroborated and in any scientifically valid decision they must be corroborated. That is precisely what we are attempting to do.

Mr. Mackenzie: Arrogance personified.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It is not arrogance, it is rational.

Mr. Lewis: It is called benefit of the doubt. Remember that phrase?

Mr. McKessock: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, but before I put it, it would be unfair not to treat everybody in the gallery the same, so I would like to welcome 110 students and their teachers from the Georgian Bay Secondary School in Meaford.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. Two wrongs do not make a right. The hon. member for Don Mills was obviously out of order. The decision not to welcome daily visitors was made on the basis of a recommendation from the Morrow committee and I've already got a letter of apology from the hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Nixon: After he made his announcement.

Mr. Speaker: He didn't make the announcement in full. Any announcement like that is clearly out of order, based on a select committee report that was accepted and adopted by this Legislature. I would ask members to respect that recommendation.

Mr. McKessock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry for being out of order.

FINANCIAL PROTECTION FOR FARMERS

Mr. McKessock: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. In view of the minister's announcement on Friday morning pertaining to the deferring of the junior farmer mortgage payments in the light of the poor returns to farmers this year, did he say he was deferring the principal portion of the mortgage payment only? Yes or no?

Hon. W. Newman: I'm saying that we could work it out several ways. There will be a special committee set up within my ministry—

Mr. McKessock: Yes or no?

Hon. W. Newman: —to deal with it on an individual basis, and maybe refinance it over a longer period of time, so that the farmers can adjust to it, depending on their individual circumstances.

Mr. McKessock: Supplementary: Did the minister say it would be the principal payments only?

Hon. W. Newman: Principal and interest could be refinanced together, depending on the circumstances.

Mr. Mancini: Straightforward answer, Bill. Straightforward answer.

Mr. McKessock: Supplementary: In view of the fact that on a $5,000 amortized mortgage payment the principal might only be a tenth of the payment, or $500, and the remaining portion, $4,500, could be interest, does the minister not think that this would be a token portion if he were only to give the interest? I certainly want to see the minister give consideration to interest and principal, which I believe he indicates he will do right now. Is that true?

Hon. W. Newman: I don't know what the hon. member is talking about when he talks about $4,500 or $5,000, five-year amortized. It could be in interest. I don't know how he does his calculations, but as far as I'm concerned, we want to do the best we can to help the farmers through a difficult situation. That's exactly what we'll be doing with our committee.

Don't forget we have crop insurance that covers most of the crops in the province of Ontario—not all, but most of them. One of the reasons for doing this is to help those farmers who have problems in specific areas. It will be dealt with on a specific basis, with the individuals being counselled by our financial people to try and help them over a very difficult time.

JOB CREATION

Mr. Deans: I have a question for the Minister of Labour in her capacity as manpower minister: I wonder if the Minister of Labour has had an opportunity to look at the projections for unemployment in the construction industry during this coming winter, and if she's been able to determine the effect that this 60 per cent increase which is being projected will have on the steel industry; what the cutbacks in the production of steel will have in the extractive industry and in cutbacks in the extraction of ore; and what all this will do to the consumer purchasing power of the people of Ontario? And I wonder if she can give us an indication of what recommendations she might be making with regard to this drastic reduction both in employment and in purchasing power?

Hon. B. Stephenson: The projected decrease in construction this winter is somewhat disturbing. There is no doubt about that. I don't have any magic figures which tell me precisely what the spinoff effect is going to be in all of the areas which the hon. member has mentioned, but I would mention at least one or two areas in which we have made some recommendations.

One of them, of course, I think, was obviously being followed by the Ontario Municipal Board when it decided to proceed with its Toronto hearings, apparently against the advice of some of the friends of the hon. member, who feel that those hearings should be delayed for yet another two months.

Mr. Deans: What are you talking about?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It is hoped that indeed some of the stimulation which is occasioned by the concern of the province for construction in Toronto might develop into some stimulus for other builders to begin some kind of contracts and construction within that area. It is a little easier, I suppose, for that to happen within the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto than it is in some smaller regions, but indeed the projected figures for unemployment in construction are greater in Toronto and the Toronto-Hamilton area than they are for any other part of the province.

Mr. Deans: That is because more construction goes on there.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Of course. That is a matter of very real concern and one over which we do not have total control, but it is one about which we can express our concern and attempt to provide some encouragement in specific industries in order to try to alleviate the problem.

Mr. Deans: Supplementary: I am not interested in the minister's concern. What I am interested in is knowing whether as manpower minister she has made any recommendations of any kind with regard to specific proposals of this government to deal with what is projected to be a 60 per cent decrease in employment opportunities in the construction industry; and what effect that will have on related industries in the province of Ontario?

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Deans: Surely as manpower minister she has something to offer? She has done nothing for the last three years.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I'm sorry the hon. member is not interested in my concern about this.

Mr. Deans: I don't care about your concern.

Hon. B. Stephenson: But in answer to his question I would say, yes, we have made some specific recommendations.

Mr. Deans: Supplementary: Has the minister then met with the Treasurer or with the Minister of Government Services (Mr. McCague) to discuss the possibility of increasing the amounts of revenue to be made available for construction directly related to government in the province of Ontario in an effort to offset the 60 per cent increase that is projected?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, I have not met with those two individuals specifically—

Mr. Deans: Whom do you talk to?

Hon. B. Stephenson: But I certainly have met with the Premier (Mr. Davis).

INCLUSION OF HYDRO WORKERS IN PROVINCE-WIDE BARGAINING

Mr. O'Neil: I have a question of the Minister of Labour and I know she will be sensible, rational and scientific in her answer. In view of the announcement that Mr. S. R. Ellis was appointed as industrial inquiry commissioner on October 31 to inquire into the possible inclusion of Ontario Hydro construction workers in province-wide, single-trade bargaining, can the minister assure the House that he will hold public hearings on this matter, hearings which will have some effect on the Hydro bills paid by everyone in Ontario?

Hon. B. Stephenson: As a result of my commitment at the time of the clause-by-clause examination of Bill 22, I did suggest that this was the route that we would follow. I have appointed Mr. Ellis as the sole commissioner in this area. He has committed himself to providing a report on the subject within the time-frame which was suggested which was three months. Whether that gives him sufficient time to hold wide-ranging public hearings or not, I am not aware.

Mr. Ellis is going to have to work that timetable out for himself. But he will be drawing upon the expertise of both management and labour in the construction field in order to develop background information and probably to assist him in making a decision about whether public hearings would be widely held or whether they will be held only in one or two locations.

Mr. O'Neil: Supplementary: May I ask then that the minister keep the Legislature up to date on the form that these hearings will take and whether or not there will be public hearings?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes, I shall.

FLOODING AT NURSING HOME

Mr. Cooke: I have a question of the Minister of Health. I would like to ask the minister if he would look into a situation at the Greater Windsor Nursing Home in my home riding. Specifically, could the minister investigate as to why residents in this home had to sleep this past Saturday night in rooms flooded with six inches of raw sewage and why this recurring flooding problem has not been repaired?

Also could the minister find out why it took 24 hours to get plumbers at the home to repair the problem? Further, could the minister investigate how this home has been able to deteriorate to the filthy state it is presently in, when there had been a pre-sale inspection in February and regular inspections since, the last one of which took place on September 12? I would like the minister to make some kind of a report back to the House when he can gather the information.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The latter part of the hon. member's statement—I don't know if it was a question—anticipates what I will do. The first we heard of the problem was this morning. We have dispatched a nursing inspector and an environmental inspector to Windsor, to that particular home.

The preliminary information I saw about the home indicated it was sold early this year, preceded, as the member says, by a pre-sale inspection. As per the terms of the revised Act, there was a list of things prepared, which was provided to the then prospective purchasers, that would have to be carried out.

In early October the plans were filed with the ministry for the renovations to bring it into compliance with the revised Nursing Homes Act. Once thorough inspections are carried out by the nursing inspector and the environmental inspector I will certainly try to answer all of the member's questions.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Mr. Reid: I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications which might aid the cause of national unity in the country. Will the minister consider renaming the Trans-Canada Highway in Ontario as Highway 1, thus doing away with the hodge-podge of numbers that we have across the province and going along with the action taken by six other provinces of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I hadn't considered that suggestion, but I will. I don't know how you could do it—we have two different highways which are a part of the Trans-Canada system and I don't think we can call them both Highway 1, but I'll certainly be prepared to look at it.

Mr. S. Smith: Name them 1A and 1B.

Mr. Reid: Is the minister aware that all the western provinces, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland have designated it this way? Does he not think that it might bring the country a little together if we had one highway from coast to coast?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that renumbering the highway would make the distance any shorter from the Quebec border to the Manitoba border—

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: One Canada, one highway.

Hon. Mr. Snow: —so, consequently I don't know whether it would bring the country any closer together or not in that sense. I will look into the possibility of the numbering as it relates to the other highways.

Mr. Lewis: You could call it the Robarts-Pepin Trail.

WINTARIO GRANTS PERSONNEL

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, my question is of the Minister of Culture and Recreation. Is it true that his ministry is planning to phase out the contract personnel working on Wintario grants, based on a consultant's report which in essence recommended that the personnel on contract be phased out and in their place, on a full-time basis, people be placed who have university degrees? Is that a fact or not?

Mr. MacDonald: Darcy will veto that. That is adding to the social service.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The answer generally speaking is yes, but not necessarily for the reasons quoted in the report of the consultant. We have been advertising for consultants and even attempting to regularize that particular function within the ministry and the qualifications have been widely advertised.

I think in general terms the answer is yes, but not necessarily for all the reasons that the hon. member recited. Is that fair enough?

Mr. Grande: A supplementary: Would the minister be able to table that consultant's report in the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I'd like to take a look at it.

Mr. MacDonald: Why?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Let me take a look at it and I'd be glad to respond more definitely after I've seen the report. There may be other parts of the report that haven't been acted on, that's why I'd like to see it first.

Mr. MacDonald: If it's prepared by public money and it's a basis of public policy, then it should be tabled.

Mr. S. Smith: Do you mean that you only table it after you've acted on it?

ONTARIO SECURITIES COMMISSION

Mr. Breithaupt: I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations with respect to the correspondence that we've all received from Malartic Hygrade Gold Mines (Canada) Limited. Can the minister advise us as to the situation with respect to these various claims and particularly with his response to such phrases as "improper activities," "illegal embargo," "censorship" and "conspiracy," that each of the three letters, of which I presume all members have received copies, refers to? Just what is the situation and what are these claims and these problems that are being scattered about, apparently quite openly, as to the operation of the Ontario Securities Commission?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: A series of communications has been flowing for some time now. As each set of allegations comes in they are dealt with by the people who are specifically alleged to have committed the offences as set out in the communications. I can only assure the House that, at this time, the allegations are watched as they come in.

Mr. Lewis: That's what you call dispassionate.

Mr. McClellan: You believe in impartial judges.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —a careful analysis is made of the allegations contained therein and we are up to date in our awareness of the problem and our intentions to deal with them. There is nothing there that we feel has warranted any action other than the action we have taken so far. The letters are not ignored. They are read carefully, dealt with carefully and analysed by the people who are affected.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: Surely, analysis by the people affected is hardly sufficient if, in fact, there are claims which have been made public—charges of illegal matters, conspiracy and other very serious allegations. Surely, the minister is not content that only those persons who have been referred to are dealing with the letters. Does he have nothing to enlighten the House as to whether further action is being taken, or to explain this whole involvement which appears to be, at least on the surface, a series of very serious allegations?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am sorry, when I indicated that the people named in the letters had dealt with the accusations what I was saying was that in each case the letters are referred to the people about whom the accusations are made. They are asked to provide explanations and responses which are well developed. The fact is that it has been dealt with by the ministry in detail; an explanation is there.

We are satisfied that our course of action to the present time is appropriate, that it doesn't warrant any further action at this time. As the letters come in, they are not just slammed into a file but are taken up with the people involved who then report back and update us as regards the accuracy or inaccuracy of those specific charges.

In simple terms, the allegations are dealt with as they are made. We have, obviously, found no substance in those allegations to warrant any action that the writer of the letters thinks might be in order.

Mr. Breithaupt: Is the minister content that this matter is entirely groundless and that things are at an end or can we expect to continue receiving further letters?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can't comment as to whether the member can expect to receive further letters. I can simply tell him that on the basis of what we have at the present time, no further action is going to be taken. That depends of course upon what we may glean from the latest correspondence or the correspondence yet to come.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: I am as mystified as anyone else about this series of correspondence. It keeps coming across my desk. If, in fact, the minister is correct that these accusations are without substance, does the minister not agree that there might be grounds for a slander suit or a libel suit by various persons referred to and by the Ontario Securities Commission referred to, since these accusations of improper activities, illegal embargo and so on are pretty serious accusations?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The specific people about whom the allegations have been made are well aware of their rights, the member can be sure. They have, obviously, chosen not to take action for slander or any of the other remedies they may feel they have. My responsibility is only to determine whether there is any substance to the allegations made and if there is, to take appropriate action.

Mr. S. Smith: Just a quick supplementary. There is in the letter of October 21, this sentence: "I wish to present further proof of improper activities of the Ontario Securities Commission." Would the minister not agree that the Ontario Securities Commission is not an individual who has to know his rights and take action? It is, in one way or another, an arm of the people of Ontario or the government of Ontario and, surely, it's the minister's responsibility to decide whether to take action.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the Ontario Securities Commission or the Residential Premises Rent Review Board, just to name two, took slander action against people every time they say they are doing something wrong or inaccurate or unfair or illegal, then we would spend double the provincial budget just taking these people to court. In fact, we could spend most of our time dealing with what a couple of members of the NDP say about the rent board. No, the answer is we don't sue every time someone says something nasty about one of my boards.

NORTH BAY HOSPITAL

Mr. Dukszta: A question to the Minister of Health: Is the minister aware that the Ontario Hospital in North Bay is presently receiving goods from a strikebound wholesale distributor called Sam Butti Wholesale Limited? If the minister is aware, would he be prepared to order the hospital administrator to cease receiving goods from this strikebound company and to look for other distributors in the area?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No.

Mr. Dukszta: Supplementary: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If I recall it correctly, this is based on a tender on lowest price for certain goods for the psychiatric hospital. I don't think we should get involved through that hospital in a dispute between a supplier and his employees.

Mr. Dukszta: Is the minister aware that he is involving himself in strikebreaking?

DISPLAY OF DAIRY PRODUCTS

Mr. Blundy: To the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations: Is the minister aware that food retailers in Metro Toronto are still displaying dairy products under high intensity lights, even though researchers reported at least two years ago that fluorescent lights can impair the flavour and nutritional value of milk and butter? What plans does the ministry have to correct this matter?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will be pleased to receive details from the member with regard to any precise locations he has in which we may go and take the appropriate action. The answer is, where we know it is going to happen and where we know it is happening, we take action. Would the member be kind enough to send me over the list and we will look into it right away?

Mr. Blundy: I think almost every supermarket in the area, and certainly in my riding, is displaying milk in this way.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Send the details over.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I will send him a list tomorrow.

Mr. O'Neil: Supplementary: I wonder if I could ask the minister whether he has taken any action against any of these outlets to this point?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I don't have the information with me but I'll be pleased to get it.

BRIBERY CASE

Mr. di Santo: I have a question for the Attorney General. Could the Attorney General inform the House why in the case of Melvin Kurtz, the Crown attorney chose not to prosecute the bribers or the briber?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't know the details of that case. Was it Mr. Kurtz? If the member would give me a few more details outside after the question period in order to assist me to identify the case, perhaps I could respond to his question.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary: In view of the fact that as a result of the probe of Judge Waisberg on crime in the construction industry, Mr. Melvin Kurtz was prosecuted for bribery, my question is why did the Attorney General's office choose not to prosecute the bribers in this case?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Again, I am not familiar with the details of this prosecution, but I will attempt to respond to the member's question.

Mr. di Santo: A further brief supplementary: Can the Attorney General then report to the House on this particular case and also how many prosecutions were laid as a result of that inquiry and, if so, when?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I assume that information will not be difficult to come by. If we can ascertain it, we will so advise the House.

PIPE PRODUCTION

Mr. Kerrio: I have a question of the Premier. Is he aware of the fact that the US legislature and the federal government have passed the legislation now for the joint pipeline on the Alaska Highway and is he aware of the fact that we can produce the steel in Ontario and that we have the plant in Welland to produce the pipe? The concern I have relates to the question that was asked about the last pipeline, where the only guarantee is that there will be a general competitive term in the contract. Is the Premier aware that there is no real commitment and that on such a basis the last large order of pipe was delivered from Japan?

Mr. MacDonald: That's the order of Jack Horner, that good Liberal.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The member should tell his federal colleagues.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It's the feds—not Queen's Park.

Mr. S. Smith: What are you doing about it?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You're sitting on your butt.

Mr. S. Smith: I don't smoke.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You ought to try it—something to calm you down.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, you're going to ask for somebody else to deace before I get my answer out.

In answer to the hon. member's question, I do understand that the United States Congress—not "the legislature"—has more or less approved this. Of course we're quite interested in having as much as possible of the pipe and other material produced in the province of Ontario. As I believe I said in answer to a question asked by one of the hon. member's colleagues last week, certainly from our standpoint we will be making every effort to see that as much as possible of the pipe and other material is purchased in Canada and in particular, of course, the province of Ontario.

As the hon. member well knows, it is not always simple for a provincial jurisdiction to carry on these international negotiations, in spite of the attempts by some. None the less we will, without question, make our points of view known.

Mr. Mancini: What did you go to Japan for?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We went to Japan just in case the government of Canada wasn't totally looking after Ontario's interests, the same as we do with everything else.

As a result of our involvement over the years, the economy of this province has done relatively well and will continue to do so. We will continue to look after the interests of the people in this province, which means we will make our very best efforts to see that pipe for the pipeline and other material is purchased in this province, although it is not within our jurisdiction. But certainly we will make every effort.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: In view of the fact that there is no real commitment in the contract and because of the great number of jobs that we should be looking to in the future, would the Premier take it on himself in his high office, and possibly with the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett), to see if we can't get the federal government to make such a commitment, which is not in the contract? I would ask the Premier to take that first step.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am certainly one of those who is prepared to deal with issues that aren't always totally spelled out in a contract, unlike some members of the member's party. I also must say to him, I can't table any contract because it's not available to us. But we will be making, as I said—and I really am repeating myself—every effort to see that Canadian producers, and particularly Ontario producers, get as much of this contract as is possible.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary: Is the Premier prepared to table in this House all the correspondence which will be involved in his representations to other levels of government?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I might table all mine if the member will table all his—

Mr. Makarchuk: It's a deal.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Being suspicious of some of his correspondence, I'm not sure I really should have made that offer. I would only say that I certainly would give very careful consideration to tabling any correspondence I have on this matter.

It's also quite obvious that while the member may be dependent totally on correspondence in the mails, I can't table for him any telephone conversations I might have or any conversations the minister may have or any personal discussions.

Mr. Breaugh: Just give us the tapes.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In answer to the member's question, to the extent that any correspondence might be relevant, certainly I would be delighted to share it with the hon. members of the House. But please don't preclude me from doing my best by means other than correspondence.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: New question. The hon. member for Welland-Thorold with a new question.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, in fairness, there have been only two supplementaries.

Mr. Speaker: Three.

Mr. Peterson: Two—one here and one over there.

An hon. member: It's a very important question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peterson: It deserves a little more attention in view of the fuzzy answers that were given here. I beg your indulgence, Mr. Speaker.

I would ask the Premier this: In view of the very serious way in which we regard these negotiations, understanding the limitations that are placed upon him, I would ask the Premier to make a statement to this House, either himself or through the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett), as to what has transpired so far, and what he is planning to do in these negotiations, because they could be very critical to the industrial future of the province.

[3:00]

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Peterson: Would the Premier do that in the very near future?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would be delighted to share as much as I can with the member for London Centre. I know of his very genuine interest in this subject and I would be delighted to share it with him.

I would also point out to him that really, I think, to describe them as negotiations is perhaps not the proper terminology as it relates to the province of Ontario. It's a question of stating to the government of Canada, the minister involved and his ministry, that we are very anxious to have as much material for the pipeline purchased in our province as possible. I really think, so that there will be no one operating under any thoughts other than those that are accurate, the member really ought not to describe it as negotiations.

MINOR HOCKEY PLAYERS

Mr. Swart: A question of the Attorney General: He is aware, is he not, that a student at the hockey school at the Bill Burgoyne arena last Saturday was removed from the ice simply because she was a girl, a seven-year-old girl, after having been admitted as a boy? Does he not think this situation is getting out of hand? Is he prepared to make a statement, so he can single-handedly see that the Human Rights Code is observed as he did to remove violence from the hockey on ice?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As I indicated on Friday, I harbour certain prejudices as a father of three daughters. Some of these personal prejudices involve the lack of opportunity for our young women to participate more actively in organized sport. I feel very strongly about that. But so far as this matter is concerned, it is a matter that I assume is within the purview of the Human Rights Code. As the member knows, this is not administered by the Ministry of the Attorney General.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: Would the minister consider sending a general directive to the recreational groups and sports groups outlining the necessity of conforming with the Human Rights Code? Would he suggest to the Minister of Culture and Recreation that perhaps the awarding of Wintario grants could be determined on the basis of conformity with the Human Rights Code?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. minister has already indicated that the Human Rights Code is not within his jurisdiction.

Mr. Swart: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The only thing that is out of order is the member.

Mr. Swart: Is the second part of my question not in order as a supplementary? It is unanswered.

Mr. Speaker: New question.

PROVINCIAL GRANTS

Mr. B. Newman: I have a question of the Premier. As the Treasurer has admitted that the provincial grants system is unfair, and as Windsor has suffered more than any other municipality in the province of Ontario because of the inaccurate equalization factor, what action is the Premier going to take to right a long-time wrong from which Windsor has suffered where it has lost approximately $20 million in grants, which it would have rightly received had a proper equalization factor been used?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member for Windsor-Walkerville is well aware of the complexities, and to a certain extent the inequities, of the assessments that exist in the province. I guess what I hear him saying is that he and his party would, of course, support—

Mr. S. Smith: No, that is not what he said.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —the introduction of the solution to the problem.

Mr. S. Smith: He asked for fair play. Fair play is what he asked for.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh no, of course not, you guys just don't have the intestinal fortitude.

I would only say to the member for Windsor-Walkerville—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Will the members for Rainy River (Mr. Reid) and Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) please be quiet while the Premier answers a legitimate question from the member for Windsor-Walkerville?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I really think on that point of order you should, in fairness, ask those two members to cease, as you recently asked some of the rest of us. I really wouldn't wish that on either of them—well, there's the odd day, but not too often.

Mr. Mackenzie: When is Mr. Speaker going to bring the Premier to order?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am doing my best to answer this very difficult question.

Mr. Warner: You are wasting the time of the people.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can't answer it if the members are not prepared to listen; if they will listen I will try to answer it. I would say to the member for Windsor-Walkerville that the government recognizes that there are certain inequities, Windsor being one of them; I think Sarnia may be another. The member for Sarnia is pointing vigorously at Hansard to note that. It may be that even Brampton is not getting its fair share, I'm not sure.

We're working at finding solutions to these problems. I think the Treasurer met with some members from Windsor just a few days ago and we will continue to find solutions to this very difficult and complicated matter.

Mr. S. Smith: What about fair play?

Mr. B. Newman: Is the Premier aware that each year delayed costs the city of Windsor's taxpayers another $8.5 million? Is he prepared to make an unconditional grant to the municipality in lieu of that loss?

Hon. Mr. Davis: So that it will save the House a little time—the other members from Windsor are anxious to be on the record too, I sense—I say to the member for Windsor-Walkerville and to the other members from Windsor, that we're aware of the difficulty. Are we prepared to make an unconditional grant? The answer to that would have to be no.

An hon. member: At this time?

Hon. Mr. Davis: At this time. I thought I answered it for you.

Mr. Cooke: I would like to ask the Premier if I understood his first answer correctly. Is he saying that the government is committed to working out a solution with the city of Windsor for the year 1978 and will there be a solution with some equity built into it for 1978? Or is he going to continue to put off the problem?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm sure the hon. member is well aware that working out a solution for Windsor also involves many other municipalities and taxpayers across the province of Ontario. In that there are many other members in this House who do not come from Sarnia or Windsor, who I'm sure have an interest in this, and knowing that whatever is given or altered in one area may mean a slight diminution in other areas and that we want total equity in whatever we do, to say that we will solve this problem in 1978, might be a shade premature.

MINIMUM DRINKING AGE

Mr. Peterson: I beg leave to table a petition with this House from 343 members of First St. Andrew's United Church in London, Ontario, Canada. If I may just read what it involves: "In view of the increasing number of accidents caused by young drivers under the influence of alcohol, we the undersigned members of First St. Andrew's United Church of London, Ontario, hereby ask you to urge the government of Ontario to bring legislation to 1. raise the minimum drinking age from 18 to 20; and 2. curtail the advertising of alcoholic beverages, especially on television."

MOTIONS

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the supplementary estimates for the Ministry of Community and Social Services presented today be referred to the standing committee on social development to be considered in the time allocated to the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, just a brief comment on the motion if you'll permit it, particularly while the Chairman of Management Board is here. I understand that those supplementary estimates are supposed to reconcile a statement made by the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton).

Mr. Breithaupt: That comes next, Robert. There's a four-page statement coming up.

Mr. Nixon: How the heck do I know there's a four-page statement coming up?

I want to know if we can be assured by the government that there is a reconciliation with the amounts that have been put in the former estimates.

Mr. Speaker: It is my understanding that is indeed the case.

Mr. Nixon: Good.

Motion agreed to.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. Auld moved that the following amounts in the votes and items of the 1977-78 estimates of the Ministries of the Attorney General, Correctional Services and Health, being the amounts made available to the Ministry of Community and Social Services in connection with the children's services program, be referred to the standing committee considering the estimates of the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

Hon. Mr. Auld: If the hon. members would agree, I'll simply read the total. It is set out, and I understand that copies of this have gone to the other parties and caucuses.

Total for the Ministry of the Attorney General, $2,722,000; total for the Ministry of Correctional Services, $35,619,100; total for the Ministry of Health, $62,085,800; a grand total of $100,426,900.

I have a statement of explanation to go with it.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, we're prepared to dispense with the reading of the figures so long as they appear in detail in the votes and proceedings so that we'll have a record for the benefit of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed? They will be. It's a statement more than a motion, I suppose.

The Chairman of Management Board has an explanation.

Mrs. Campbell: Yes, I am aware of it, but you are putting the motion. I would ask that we have the explanation for discussion before the motion is put.

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order, is there a motion, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: There is a motion, all right, but as outlined in the one I read.

Mr. Nixon: That has already been accepted.

Mr. Speaker: No, there are two separate motions. One was with regard to time, and the other motion is that on the debate of the children's services program in conjunction with the 1977-78 estimates, they be referred to the standing committee considering the estimates of the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Breithaupt: That was put and carried.

Mr. Speaker: No, it has yet to be carried. The Chairman of Management Board has an explanation.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As a result of the number of questions that were raised in the Legislature last week concerning the debate of the estimates of the Ministry of Community and Social Services, I would like to submit the following information and proposed solutions:

Bill 23, which received third reading on July 11, 1977, transferred the responsibility of services related to children from the Attorney General, the Minister of Correctional Services and the Minister of Health, to the Minister of Community and Social Services, effective July 1, 1977. The related funding for these transferred services appeared in the 1977-78 estimates for the three ministries which were tabled prior to the transfers taking place.

Although Bill 23 provided the transfer of all powers and duties that could be transferred, there was no vehicle available to transfer the funds. The Supply Act, 1977, will provide the authority for the transfer of the funds for children's services for the three ministries to the Minister of Community and Social Services. But of course, the Supply Act cannot be passed until all the estimates have been voted. As well, there is no available means to revoke the amounts placed in the other three ministries' estimates.

The administrative procedure involved in the transfer of the funds will be authorized by way of Management Board certificate in accordance with the Supply Act, as in previous practice.

Therefore, in order that the estimates of the Ministry of Community and Social Services can be continued, including the estimates for the children's services program, I am introducing a motion that will allow the various amounts included in the estimates of the Ministries of the Attorney General, Correctional Services, and Health related to the transfer of responsibilities of children's services, to be referred to the standing committee considering the estimates of the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

This will allow for a full discussion on the children's services program during the debate of the estimates of the Ministry of Community and Social Services. The respective funds would not be voted as part of the estimates of the Ministry of Community and Social Services but would be voted as part of the estimates of the three individual ministries. As previously stated, the funds would subsequently be transferred legally to the Ministry of Community and Social Services by way of the Supply Act, 1977.

In addition, I introduced a supplementary estimate earlier today, on the message of Her Honour, the Lieutenant Governor in Council, in the amount of $3,665,500 to provide for the additional amount of funds required by the Ministry of Community and Social Services to administer and operate the total combined functions associated with the children's services program.

A supplementary estimate, by definition, increases an original appropriation or establishes a new appropriation, but does not reduce or transfer appropriations. Therefore, this means could not be used to transfer the related funds from the three ministries to the Ministry of Community and Social Services. Only the additional requirements of the ministry, over and above the amounts provided by the other three ministries, are included in the supplementary estimates.

These proposed actions have been discussed with and concurred in by the senior legislative counsel and the assistant clerk of this Legislature. I also understand that the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) will provide the standing committee with a complete reconciliation of the amounts provided for the children's services program so that the debate on his estimates can be continued in a complete and orderly way.

I trust that this will clear up and will resolve the issues raised by hon. members recently in the Legislature, and in committee, concerning the 1977-78 estimates of the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

Mrs. Campbell: In responding to the motion, I must confess I have great difficulty. I have been trying to understand the procedures in this particular situation and I have sought all the advice that I could in the time allowed to me. What does bother me is this: As I understand it, when the estimates are tabled they are accompanied by a message from the Lieutenant Governor and they do not, in any way, relate to amounts. They are simply estimates in estimate books.

According to the information which I have had, and as I understand it, the estimates are subject to review and/or amendment prior to going to the committees providing those amendments are before the House.

The difficulty with this situation—and I'm not going to belabour it because I think that I probably stand alone in my concerns, but I feel they should be on record—is that we now have a procedure established by which we will be discussing—not, I understand, today, but at some future time—the estimates of the Ministry of Community and Social Services or the supplementaries, subject to receiving from the minister at some time the reconciliations which I understood we would have before the meeting was to commence today. We don't have them yet.

As I understand it, Management Board cannot transfer of its own initiative. I have just been handed a copy of an earlier Supply Act and I haven't had the opportunity to discuss it, but do I understand then that by motion at the time of the introduction of the supply bill at the conclusion of the estimates, at that point we may vary and transfer, when we can't do any of these things before the committee? This is what is causing me concern.

The function has been transferred to Community and Social Services. The votes will be in the other three ministries, save and except for those which were already in Community and Social Services. By what procedure do we then ensure the transfer out, because according to my information Management Board cannot delete, the committee can't delete, the transfer can't be done? I really want only to be sure that we can do what is being proposed, as I see it quite irregularly, so that we can be clear that these moneys will, indeed, be available to that function in that ministry?

How do we accomplish that if no one in the intervening period is able to effect a transfer or is able, in fact, to delete a vote? I still don't understand it. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, if I am being dull in this, but I do want to understand it before I proceed to deal with these estimates.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I regard the solution that is being put forward today by the Chairman of the Management Board as an acceptable solution. I think it does set straight what I can only characterize as incomparable bungling in the management of the organizational transfer but it seems at last, in my view, to be set straight and it's a procedure that I am comfortable to live with.

As I understand it, the moneys in each of the three ministries other than Community and Social Services will be voted on in each of the estimates of the other three ministries. We will vote in committee on the supplementary estimates. We will discuss all of the items in social development with respect to Community and Social Services. There will be a Management Board certificate issued under the Supply Act to legitimize and authorize the transfer of funds from the three old ministries to the Ministry of Community and Social Services once supply has been voted, and I think that that deals with the inadequacies of the previous procedures and that we can proceed.

I want to make it clear, however, that I am not willing to resume the debates on Community and Social Services until we are provided with a complete reconciliation statement which deals with the transfers from the Attorney General's ministry, Correctional Services and Health on a program and line basis, because, as I indicated on Friday, we have received four different sets of figures from the Ministry of Correctional Services, discrepancies as between the estimates book figures and the Community and Social Services resource and program book summaries.

As recently as a quarter to three, I was provided with another set of figures with respect to the actual amounts of the supplementaries. I simply want to have a clear and coherent reconciliation statement in plenty of time in advance of the next sitting of the committee so that we don't have to waste the committee's remaining four and a half hours on trying to figure out where the dollars are but can, in fact, address the real substantial issues of children's program and children's policy.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would like to assure the hon. members opposite that the complete reconciliation statement will be available to them. It may in fact be here now. I have not personally received it yet but it was prepared and was in the process of being reproduced for the members of the committee. I expected it to arrive here by 3 o'clock this afternoon. I can certainly assure members, since I understand it is the decision of the committee not to sit until tomorrow afternoon, that it will be delivered to them this afternoon as soon as it is received by me. Should they have any questions in the intervening period between now and the sitting tomorrow, I will make my staff available to explain any further questions they might have.

Mr. Breithaupt: I wanted to confirm the comments of the hon. minister with respect to sittings of the committee this afternoon. We had agreed that if this information was here in sufficient time and if the reconciliation had been satisfactorily explained, particularly to the two critics involved, the member for St. George and the member for Bellwoods, that this could then be proceeded with, probably tomorrow afternoon.

The one point I wanted to raise in the statement of the Chairman of Management Board follows along on the sequence of events the member for Bellwoods had proceeded through; that point was one which he did not raise, but which I understand is also included in the sequence, to the effect that in effect the moneys which are being transferred under the responsibility of the Ministry of Community and Social Services are in fact blocked to the use of the other ministries from which they are being transferred. We will, therefore, vote those moneys technically in the estimates of the other three ministries, Attorney General, Correctional Services and Health, but in fact the responsibility and the control of those funds becomes a function of Community and Social Services, and will be discussed all at one time once proper reconciliation is received to the satisfaction of the two opposition critics.

I think if the Chairman of Management Board can confirm that sequence, then probably we have resolved the matter.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is correct, and in fact that has been the case since the passage of Bill 23 in July. That bill, now an Act, transferred the responsibility for and the authorization for spending funds for certain activities. Consequently, even if we hadn't proceeded any further today, the ministers of the three ministries from which the funds are being transferred have not had the authority to spend, nor have they I assume spent, any money on those functions.

What has happened, for the benefit of all members of the House, is that since the passage of that bill the Minister of Community and Social Services has had the responsibility and has carried it out and has charged back by journal entry those expenses, because the only ministry that currently can pay them is the old one, but the only ministry that can do it is the new one. In the normal course of events, we would have had our estimates completed and the relevant clause in the Supply Act, as it has been in the Acts that are passed each year. This is from 1975 but it is the same as this one will be. I will just quote it for the information of all members and so that it is in Hansard:

"Section 1(2): Where in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1976"—in this case—"powers and duties are assigned and transferred from one minister of the Crown to another minister of the Crown, the appropriate sums in the votes and items of the estimates upon which the schedule is based"—I wish we could put a few more commas in these—"that are approved to defray the charges and expenses of the public service in the exercise and performance of such powers and duties may be assigned and transferred from time to time as required by certificate of the Management Board of Cabinet to the ministry administered by the ministry to whom the powers and duties are so assigned and transferred."

In the normal course of events when we have transferred, as we do every year it seems to me, some responsibilities from one place to another, it has been after we have had supply. In this case, it's quite a distance before and the responsibility has been carried out quite properly. We have now quite properly, by supplementary estimates, put forward the total sum. This is because the supplementary estimates cover the additional money for the children's services which is not found in any of those three ministries.

The motion permits the committee to hear the discussion of those amounts, even though they aren't in the estimates. When supply is given, then the certificate of Management Board will be issued.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

ASSESSMENT AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Leluk moved first reading of Bill 95, An Act to amend the Assessment Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Leluk: Mr. Speaker, the bill provides an exemption from municipal taxation for additions and improvements to real property that are designed to aid persons who are physically handicapped.

CONDOMINIUM PROPERTY MANAGEMENT FIRMS ACT

Mr. Leluk moved first reading of Bill 96, An Act to register Condominium Property Management Firms.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Leluk: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the registration, bonding and inspection of condominium property management firms.

VISITOR

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I'd like very briefly to introduce to you and members of the House a young gentleman in the Speaker's gallery, Mr. George Allain, who is 18 years of age. The reason he is in the gallery is that the International Optimists' Club every year has designated National Youth Appreciation Week, and this happens to be the week, starting today.

Traditionally they have designated an honorary prime minister and governor general. The Ontario district of Optimists' International has this year, in an effort to recognize that there are other levels of government, designated an honorary premier of the day. This young man has been given that designation and is here in that official or unofficial capacity.

It's also very coincidental that the young man who is assuming this responsibility—and there is the odd day I wouldn't mind him doing it, not many though—also, by coincidence, happens to be a student at a certain high school in a certain community that is well known to the Premier of this province that happens to be in the city of Brampton. I would hope that someday, and who knows—well I was going to get political.

Our guest, or your guest, is an honour student. He is a very excellent athlete; is very involved in community activities, particularly in the recreational field. My first experience with him was during a period of slight tension with the school situation in Peel some few months ago.

It's an honour for me, Mr. Speaker, to introduce him to the members of the House and on behalf of all of us, I am sure, say thank you to Optimists' International for its belief and confidence in our young people, that it is prepared to set aside this week and give it the kind of focus that I think is important.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

(concluded)

House in committee of supply.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, just before we resume these estimates and for the sake of understanding, I thought that perhaps with only two hours and some minutes to go it would be reasonable to assume that these estimates could be completed by 6 o'clock so that we can have the Attorney General on hand and ready to start promptly at 8 o'clock with his estimates?

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, I think it is a reasonable assumption that we should be finished by 6 o'clock. There is only one vote left to go, although there are two very important items in that vote to which we will address ourselves. But I think it is fair to assume two and a half hours will do it.

Mr. Warner: That's fine.

Mr. Chairman: Is that agreeable to the committee?

Agreed.

On vote 1604 Ontario Provincial Police, management and support services program; item 1, office of the commissioner:

Mr. Stong: All of the other items in vote 1604 have been dealt with and approved, except item 1. Upon our conclusion last Friday, I had raised a question with respect to the $9 million that was included in the estimates. I referred to the September 30 financial report. The minister indicated that the money had been spent, but contrary to that the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. Auld) indicated that the money had not been spent. As I understood it, it formed the basis of a contingency fund and was subject to an authorization of commitment and, in fact, would be subject to a Management Board order at the end of February. The Chairman of Management Board indicated February as the example, I am wondering if there is sufficient money in these estimates to cover those situations that will develop until the end of February and whether the $9 million amount of which I speak, and which was reported, is designated for the month of March, being from March until the end of the fiscal year for the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, we have just heard the Chairman of Management Board deal with this matter in the House, and we had some discussion at that time. I must admit that I am probably not as clear as I should be in the matter of how these votes are handled when additional funds are required. I do, however, have a statement in regard to the question that the hon. member for York Centre raised at the end of our sittings on Friday morning.

Mr. Stong asked the question regarding a spending increase of $9 million for this ministry during 1977-78. He asked if this had, in fact, been spent and what it has been spent on and how it was authorized.

The actual total is $9,891,600 and the request has been for Management Board commitment only. The Management Board order has not been approved to date. The breakdown of the request is attached. Part of the money has been spent from present appropriations. This is normal practice until a Management Board order has been approved.

I understand Management Board orders are approved quarterly and that we are operating from other sums in our votes, and that as long as we are operating within those sums and get the permission of the House to spend this before we need this $9 million that we are covered. In other words there's a bulk sum there, and as long as we don't need this there's a certain flexibility among the others. But at the same time, the procedure, I think, has been explained to the House earlier this afternoon by the Chairman of Management Board, and I'm afraid I can't very well enlarge on what he has said.

Mr. Stong: I wonder if the minister could give me an idea, dealing with this specific ministry, how much of that $9,800,000 sum has been spent up to now? Although I assume it forms part of a contingency fund, how much has been spent prior to Management Board approval? Could the minister give me a breakdown of that figure?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, my information is that it's a continuing process of money being spent and that we don't have the breakdown as of this time.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Solicitor General could undertake to give me that breakdown before the end of these estimates?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I don't think I can, Mr. Chairman, before the end of the estimates, unless we go on somewhat after the full 6 o'clock time. I imagine there's a fair amount of bookkeeping involved in trying to take a particular date and figure out how much has been spent on this vote to date—say as of 4 o'clock or any particular time. I think we can do it, but I think it would take a little time to do that.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, I would be satisfied then to have that as soon as convenient to the minister.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased if the Solicitor General would send the breakdown information about the total amount of money which is involved, so that I may get along with this proposal.

Item 1 agreed to.

Vote 1604 agreed to.

On vote 1605, Ontario Provincial Police, operations program; item 1, special services:

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, through you to the minister, I am concerned with several aspects of the first item, special services, as outlined in the supporting material. I'd like to direct a few questions to the minister if I may on some of the headlined activities of the special services branch. I understand it's under the assistant commissioner. It deals with such things as the anti-rackets branch.

I'm wondering if the minister could give the House some indication what personnel are involved in anti-rackets, dealing with white-collar crime, and more specifically the more sophisticated fraud schemes arising out of business. What is the ministry doing with respect to keeping on top of these sophisticated fraud schemes?

For instance how many accountants are employed by the ministry and on what basis? How many engineers, if there's a fraudulent scheme involving an engineering enterprise? How many types of professional, and what categories of professional individuals are involved in white-collar crime? I would also like to have some idea of the involvement of this ministry with bank management personnel in solving this type of crime.

Likewise I direct the minister's attention to the criminal investigation branch under this item, which is dealing, again, with expertise in investigation of major crimes. What is the ministry doing and what types of major crimes are involved or envisaged? Is it simply fraud or what other type of crime is involved?

I'm also concerned, under the intelligence branch heading, about what the ministry is involved with in regard to organized crime in Ontario? What is being done? How many personnel are employed in studying organized crime? What kind of hours are spent and what efforts are made in detection and follow-up in this area by this particular intelligence branch?

I am concerned about the type of personnel that is employed under this heading and what efforts are being made by them to control this situation.

Under the special investigations branch heading is included the matter of drugs and drug control. Does this particular area of item 1 include the employment of RCMP personnel? Are there any RCMP officers on the payroll of the Ontario government with respect to drug law enforcement; that is, drug detection and dealing? Could the Solicitor General give us a breakdown on that area? Or are the police forces of Ontario alone involved in drug detection and control? If so, how much of the police force is directed towards that particular area of special investigation?

I'd like to begin with those questions, if I might.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Those questions cover a great deal of the operations of the force—and important operations. I have a great deal of information here but I will try to shorten it and make it as concise as I can.

The anti-rackets branch is responsible for the investigation of white-collar crime, including diversified rackets and fraudulent schemes, and of the manufacture and distribution in Ontario of counterfeit and forged instruments such as payroll cheques, money orders, bonds, credit cards and currency.

Files on questionable companies and schemes are continually reviewed to correlate the volume of information coming to our attention, to watch the involvement of province-wide schemes and to investigate and prosecute when there is sufficient evidence to show a pattern of fraudulent activity.

Similarly, records are compiled to show the frequency and volume of counterfeit uttering in the various regions of the province.

The present complement is 30, consisting of one staff superintendent, one chief inspector, 15 detective sergeants, seven acting detective sergeants, two sergeants, one corporal, one secretary, one clerk-stenographer category 3 and one clerk-stenographer category 2.

The member asked specifically about the training of some of these people. My information is that quite frequently in these matters they require outside help in connection with the services of accountants and people of that nature; when they need that kind of service, for the most part it is contracted out. But at the same time there are some pretty knowledgeable people by reason of experience in the force itself.

Ninety-seven assignments were brought forward into 1976, 494 new investigations were commenced, and 170 carried into 1977. Some investigations were very complex and time-consuming. In a large number of investigations where there was insufficient evidence to prove criminal intent, adjustments were effected to the satisfaction of the complainants amounting to more than $1 million. In other words, they may not have had enough evidence to make convictions and yet a service was still performed as far as the public was concerned under the heading of adjustments.

Cases involving 96 persons charged in previous years with 693 charges were disposed of this year. A further 896 charges against 291 persons were preferred this year. These charges covered a total of 64,131 actual offences. We're getting into the matter of statistics again when I name the number of persons charged and the number of offences committed.

The total loss to victims in the cases investigated during the year was $5 million in round figures. One hundred and five persons were convicted on 763 charges; 263 persons are still before the courts on 694 charges; 49 persons were sentenced to jail; 20 were given suspended sentence; 28 were fined a total of $578,000; and eight received absolute discharges. Restitution of $80,798 was ordered by the courts. There were 112 dismissals and 221 withdrawals. A total of 331 search warrants were executed.

I don't expect the hon. members to follow all of those figures, but it does show there has been considerable activity in this field. We go on with the amount of paper that is seized in these cases, and in the investigation of these cases there are problems of time in reviewing all the documents that are in-involved, even to the matter of storing and getting them ready for trial.

The total amount of counterfeit currency—passing to counterfeit now—currency other than seized, throughout Ontario was again very high, being $253,280.50—I don't know how they get the 50 cents in there unless they're into counterfeiting a few coins—for the 12-month period. I can give the member a lot of this information if he wants it in detail. Counterfeit money seized and uttered in Canada is composed of about 97 per cent American currency, with the remainder being Canadian. In all probability, this is due to the new multi-colour Canadian currency, which to date has not been duplicated. There is a lot of interesting information in here which I'll be glad to share with my friend if he wishes it.

Prosecutions in the branch during the year again covered a great variety of criminal offences and included charges of conspiracy to defraud, attempted fraud, fraud, defraud the public, theft, false pretences, obstruct justice, perjury, make false declarations, possession of valuable securities obtained by fraud, uttering forged documents, impersonation, make counterfeit money, possession of counterfeit money, uttering counterfeit, theft from mails, possession of instruments of forgery, arson and false affidavits. So that covers a wide gamut of offences.

We dealt, of course, with some of the OHIP matters of the Ministry of Health, and that is continuing, as I understand it; some matters of Ontario Place Corporation for our own government. Then you passed to criminal investigations. The Ontario Provincial Police force is required by statute to maintain a criminal investigation branch for the purpose of assisting municipal police forces. This branch, which has been in existence since the inception of the force, provides investigative expertise in the investigation of major crimes to all police throughout the province.

Functions include: investigation of major crimes, such as murder, kidnapping, robbery et cetera within the jurisdiction of the force; assist municipal police in the investigation of major crimes in the province; assist Ontario government ministries in the investigation of criminal matters within their ministries; assistance to the office of the chief coroner in the investigation of questionable deaths; maintain liaison and render assistance to the RCMP, Quebec police force, FBI and other border forces regarding serious criminal matters; provide expertise in the area of hostage/kidnap situations and extradition proceedings; maintain files on all investigations and inquiries made by the criminal investigation branch.

The criminal investigation branch complement is composed of the following: One director, 27 detective inspectors and three clerical staff. They haven't given me what category the clerical staff fall into there. During 1976, members of the criminal investigation branch were detailed to a total of 373 assignments, including 38 murder investigations. Then we go on and say a little bit about the kind of training these people receive and where, and then some other mentions of some matters that they had been involved in.

I think you passed then to the matter of the special investigation branch, and it is my understanding that there are no RCMP officers on the payroll of our force. There is, of course, much liaison work done by way of joint force operations but they are not attached to our force in any way, nor do we pay for them. They may be working in the same office together, or out of the same premises, but the members of the force involved are each paid by their respective forces, so I understand there are no RCMP staff on our payroll.

The special investigations branch is comprised of three sections which, although they have separate areas of responsibility, all have a relationship in that they deal with an area of mortality, drugs, gambling and liquor. The complement of the branch is comprised of one branch director, 10 supervisors, 46 provincial constables, one secretary and one clerk-stenographer.

I have a list of some of the training they go through and where they take it. The drug enforcement section with a complement of one inspector, two detective sergeants, two corporals and 31 provincial constables, was established to administer the forces' drug enforcement program and to provide assistance in investigations requiring expertise. The 31 constables in the section are deployed at various locations throughout the province in joint force operations with the RCMP, which may also periodically involve local municipal police departments. In Metropolitan Toronto they work together very closely.

In 1976, members of the section were involved in 3,508 investigations which resulted in 1,247 charges being preferred. These figures do not include RCMP figures as there were many investigations by the RCMP which did not involve section personnel. I have a list of some of the matters with which they were involved and I'll be glad to share this information with the member if he so wishes.

Mr. Stong: I wonder if the minister could give me an idea of how the $6.5 million is being apportioned in this particular vote, special services. Could he give me a breakdown under each heading, such as anti-rackets, the auto theft branch, the criminal investigations branch and the intelligence branch, as well as the security and special investigations? Could he give me an idea of how much is allocated to each of those branches?

I understand there is difficulty getting charges laid and enforcement made under the Business Practices Act. It's been on the books now for some two years and there's very little activity with respect to enforcement of that Act. I wonder if you could give me some idea of the difficulty surrounding the enforcement of that Act and why there have not been more charges laid with respect to practices under that Act. I wonder if you would direct your attention to it and inform the House with respect to the number of personnel involved in watching and detecting organized crime in Ontario and what the success has been in that area.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: On the administration to special services, I do have a breakdown here but I think you'll probably be satisfied with the totals. If not, we can share this information. There is $113,000 for the administration end; for anti-rackets, $871,000; auto theft, $213,000; special services criminal investigation, $957,000; special services intelligence, $880,000; and special services special investigation, $1,508,000.

You asked about the number of personnel that we have specifically dealing with organized crime. There are about 125. When we give you that figure, I think there is some problem in saying they deal exclusively with that, because there's a certain flexibility in the movement of personnel. The figure the commissioner gives me is 125.

Under the Business Practices Act, as my hon. friend knows it's the responsibility of Consumer and Commercial Relations. That doesn't help him, though, in giving him an answer to his question.

I was not aware there was any problem between the police and the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I suppose if there is it is a matter of getting the necessary evidence. I think we do our best to support them any time they call upon our services.

I wonder if I could clarify that for my friend. Is he suggesting that Consumer and Commercial Relations has said that we were not co-operative? Just exactly what is the question, because I'm not aware of any problem, and evidently we are not aware of it either?

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, through you, I was given to understand this was the case by a sergeant, whose name I have forgotten, who was in court last week and I happened to meet him as he was trying to get the proper wording of a charge under the Business Practices Act. I understand that it's a situation that has developed in Hamilton. It's a landmark case, they're waiting for the decision on this particular case.

I was given to understand that there were only two or three officers who were charged with the responsibility of investigating under that Act and preferring charges, and that although the Act has been in force for three years now, since 1974 I think it was, there have not been very many charges laid or prosecuted. I'm just wondering: Is it because of the lack of personnel or lack of expertise, lack of court facilities or lack of know-how in how to interpret and enforce that Act on the part of the police departments that there have not been more charges laid? Perhaps you could give us some assistance.

I might say that I'm not suggesting a lack of co-operation; I think it may be the lack of personnel, if in fact there is a problem; and I was given to understand there was a problem in enforcing that Act.

I'm wondering what is being done by way of training personnel. I would imagine it is a very sophisticated and technical Act to enforce and requires expertise and know-how in the different aspects of the business world. I'm wondering what the police department is doing in acquiring such personnel to enforce this Act.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations does, of course, have its own investigators. It does much of the investigation, which as you have said is highly technical in itself.

The note that has been passed to me is along the line that if it was drawn to our attention it was probably because of some breach of the Criminal Code, in which case we would take it from there and carry on. But as far as the examining of a prospectus and things of that nature, that work is done in the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I don't know of any complaint reaching my ears where we have not given them the assistance to lay charges for any breach of the Criminal Code, but I believe they would lay their own charges under a breach of their own Businesses Practices Act or the Securities Act or things of that nature.

Mr. Lupusella: In this particular vote, 1605, we are really dealing with an astronomical amount of money. As a reference, I would like to suggest to the Solicitor General that in the next estimates we should have background information as to how this amount of money is spent.

In his opening statement, he spoke about organized crime. That's the area in which I'd like to get more information, because it seems that the Solicitor General and this government are quite happy about how the issue of organized crime is dealt with in the province of Ontario. I'm not happy about the word that organized crime is under control. We now find out under this vote that we are dealing with this total amount of money. I would like to ask the Solicitor General whether, on top of this money, he is also taking into account the 726 RCMP officers who are presently operating, just in Metro Toronto. I am not sure whether or not the Solicitor General has the information on how many RCMP officers are involved around the province of Ontario in fighting organized crime.

We are dealing with this enormous amount of money just to keep control of the situation. Also, we see that the federal government is employing 726 RCMP officers just in Metro Toronto, not considering other officers around the province of Ontario. Yet the word is that organized crime is under control.

First of all, I never have received an answer from the Solicitor General—and I think my colleague, the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh), was trying to dig out this particular information last year during the estimates—as to what organized crime means in the province of Ontario. How do you define organized crime?

If I recall correctly, on November 3, 1977, my colleague the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) asked that particular question of the Solicitor General in relation to the RCMP officers involved in Metro Toronto and around the province of Ontario. From the answer which was given by the Solicitor General to Mr. Lewis's question, it seems that the total number, just in Toronto, is 609 plus a support staff of 117, being a total of 726. The Solicitor General explained that those officers were needed in Metro Toronto because of the increase in drug activity, commercial crime, customs and excise infractions, immigration and passport abuses and organized crime. That is a completely different world, far different to other activities in which the officers are involved.

So first of all, I would like to ask the Solicitor General what he means by the words organized crime. How is organized crime eradicated here in the province of Ontario; and in particular in Metro Toronto? Also, I would like to ask the Solicitor General what kind of leadership he has given, not in relation to organized crime but in relation to the police force, the OPP and the RCMP, to find out what is going on in this field.

Actually, if the Solicitor General and other representatives of the police force have been opposing the issue, then a royal commission inquiry should be called in to investigate organized crime. I am inclined to ask the Solicitor General whether or not he would present briefing material to the Legislature to find out how the government is fighting organized crime. Of course we are not interested in names, but at least we would have an idea how organized crime is operating in the province of Ontario in order that the Legislature might estimate whether or not organized crime in Metro Toronto is really under control, or if it is something this government should take a look at.

At the moment, despite all the information which has been given by the media and by the CBC, I do not, personally speaking, have any knowledge whether or not this organized crime is under control. I am sure the Solicitor General is in touch with the OPP, the police force and the RCMP to have an up-dated report about what is going on in relation to this particular item. We are dealing with a lot of money.

In his official opening statement, quoting from page 7, he said: "The only thing which the Solicitor General has been saying is that as part of our responsibility my ministry has been continually alert to the problem of organized crime in Ontario and has directed effective efforts to contain this type of activity."

Perhaps he's alert, but there was the question which my leader raised on November 3, 1977, about the enormous increase of RCMP officers here in Metro Toronto and around the province of Ontario. I am just talking in hypothetical terms but I have to think that maybe organized crime is under control because of the federal government. I don't know with whom the provincial government has been getting in touch, as a result of the question of extra help from the RCMP. Maybe in that respect organized crime is under control.

We are dealing with an enormous amount of money which can be very well utilized. If there is a problem, I think that organized crime exists and we don't know how organized crime is operating here in the province of Ontario.

The only thing which the Solicitor General has been giving to us is statistical data. It seems when I went through the estimates last year, and when my colleague the member for Oshawa was requesting an answer to the particular question what is organized crime, the Solicitor General was reluctant to give a particular answer to that.

I would like to know what organized crime is, how it is operating, by which branch of our society it is being eradicated and what the police force is doing to counteract the proliferation of organized crime.

There is no sense in the Solicitor General just providing statistical data. We want the statistical data to have an idea of what the OPP and the police force are doing in the province of Ontario, but organized crime, as I stated previously, is something which is completely different from the activities in which the police force and the OPP are involved.

As to it being under control, the fact that the federal Solicitor General, Mr. Fox, came to Toronto and stated that the province of Ontario didn't do enough to fight organized crime is something which is raising suspicions in my mind about the whole activities of this government to take into great consideration this particular aspect of our society.

I am sure the Solicitor General has all the information about it and I think he's supposed to spell out to this Legislature through briefing material on organized crime what is going on and what the police force and the OPP, in co-operation with the RCMP, are doing in relation to this particular problem which is affecting our society.

I continue quoting from the Solicitor General's statement: "An excellent example is joint force operations where two or more police forces aid each other in a concerted effort to deal with the particular organized crime problem that has been identified. The success of the RCMP, the OPP and the local police forces, through joint forces operations with continuing assistance from the Ontario Police Commission, demonstrates the ability of the various police units to co-operate."

When I made my opening statement in relation to comments Mr. Fox made here in Metro Toronto that the province of Ontario didn't do enough to control organized crime, the Solicitor General simply told me: "Why don't you ask him? For us the phenomenon is under control."

I don't know why he made such a statement. The Solicitor General should be deeply involved in that situation. He should provide some kind of leadership to fight back at organized crime if it exists in the province of Ontario. It seems officials of this government are not inclined to call a royal commission inquiry; members of the Legislature should have some background information to analyse and evaluate the seriousness of this problem affecting our society in the province of Ontario.

Of course the total amount of money spent, is spent for a good cause. But we also want to know how the money is spent and what we have achieved by the financial expenditure which has taken place in the last few years to fight organized crime.

I don't think the public has the assurance organized crime is really under control, despite statements made in the past few months by officials of the police force. I thought the Solicitor General would have provided more information after making such a statement, that organized crime is really under control. I don't have the statistical data; I don't have the information. I don't know what organized crime means or what the police force is doing in relation to this particular factor. I think the Solicitor General is supposed to expose, little by little, this particular problem, because the public is affected by the whole matter.

We need more sense of leadership. It is easy to find the total amount of money which we are talking about in these estimates, because there is a course on how to spend the money. We would like an assurance from this government that organized crime is under control and indication of the branches of our society from which organized crime has been really eradicated. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have an answer on this matter from the Solicitor General.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I expect there will be more questions on this, and I am particularly looking at the member for Rainy River (Mr. Reid), I would be disappointed if he didn't have a few words to say about organized crime. My friend from Dovercourt has not asked a specific question, other than what we were doing about putting organized crime under control; since that is a pretty broad subject, I think, Mr. Chairman, it might be wise to wait until all those who wish to speak on organized crime deal with it. Then I will try to deal with it.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I don't see an item specifically labelled organized crime in the vote before us. However, I do want to say something associated, I suppose, with the control of crime under vote 1605, and I will be brief. It involves the OPP detachment presently headquartered on Colborne Street in Brantford, Ontario, which has responsibility for a large rural area around Brantford.

The minister may know their detachment headquarters is a refurbished home, and the facilities are considered to be inadequate by everyone who has to use them. I won't bother listing the inadequacies, because the minister must surely have a report in that connection; but on behalf of the citizens in the area, and particularly of the fine detachment which uses those facilities, I wanted to be sure that the minister was aware that the local member—myself—also feels they are inadequate.

I understand, of course, that the Ministry of Government Services provides these facilities, but surely it does so only when the minister makes a recommendation in that connection. I did not want to allow these lengthy estimates to go by without being sure that the minister was aware of that need.

I know his mind is concerned with organized crime, but fortunately we don't feel that we are plagued with that kind of an emanation in our area. It may be because of the efficiency of this very detachment that I'm talking about. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that the minister has the prime responsibility to see that the facilities are kept up to date and this is one area where I would urge that he take some immediate action.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, since the matter has been raised by my colleague from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, I would take that opportunity as well to refer to the facilities which the OPP uses in the city of Kitchener. I would suggest, even though I have not seen this Brantford detachment office, that whatever it's like, it must be two or three times better than the facilities that the detachment has to use to service my community.

It becomes, I realize, a matter of great concern to the Solicitor General that the Ontario Provincial Police are not housed and served no doubt as well as he and his officials would prefer. I recognize that it is a serious commitment of funds to upgrade facilities, but I do draw to the attention of the minister—indeed I'm sure he is aware of it—the difficulties which our particular communities of Kitchener and Waterloo face in attempting to have the Ontario Provincial Police deal with their responsibilities out of the facilities in our community.

Waterloo region and the area of Brant, I certainly trust, are at the top of the list of facilities that are needed. I recognize that there has been construction of various police installations, particularly along and in connection with the highways as a more convenient operations point since much of the work deals with highway traffic matters, but I would not want this opportunity as well to pass, now that the matter has been raised by my colleague from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, then to remind the Solicitor General again of the circumstances and the surroundings in which the detachment in Kitchener has to work.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, if I understand correctly, we're on vote 1605, item 1, and while the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk may not note that organized crime is involved in this vote, I note by the information provided by the ministry that the intelligence branch is indeed funded under special services. The stated objective of the intelligence branch is the investigation of organized crime subjects and their associates, and those investigations are made in relation to the activities of other groups actively engaged in major criminal activity in the province, and such investigations are conducted in conjunction with other law enforcement agencies on a provincial, national and international level.

The branch gathers, analyses and exchanges intelligence information through a network in which it has established itself as a vital link. So I put to the minister what I would say is a very clear question from my colleague from Dovercourt: From your description and the amount of money that you're spending on it, it sounds as though you must have some idea as to what kind of organized crime it is that we're talking about.

What kind of organized crime exists, for example, in Metropolitan Toronto area? How deeply rooted is it in our community? Can you, for example, clear up for me how big a holding organized crime has in apartment buildings in Metro Toronto? Is that the kind of information which the intelligence branch is collecting? I don't know the answer to that. I assume that the Solicitor General does.

We hear rumours all the time. We have people come and talk to us. I get the impression that organized crime, as it applies to Metro Toronto, is heavily involved in the owning of apartment buildings, laundries, and bakeries. But we never get those answers.

Perhaps the minister would go over the reasons for not having a public inquiry into all of this, because what we get is just a series of questions and they become more anxious with time.

We don't know how deeply rooted organized crime is in our community. We don't know how serious a problem it is. We would like to know if we have reached a point in time where it is serious enough that we should drag it out into the open and do something with it—put it to rest once and for all.

We don't know whether as the Solicitor General has indicated in the paper, through connections with other police forces, both national and international, our police have all of this under control. That is why we are asking the questions. We would like to know specifically what kind of involvement organized crime has in Ontario. Is it gambling? Is it drugs? Is it apartment buildings? Is it bakeries? What is it? How deep is it?

Why on earth, finally, can't we get this out in the open? Other jurisdictions have gone into open public hearings and they seem to be starting to put some of these people away. Heaven only knows, there isn't a member in this House who wouldn't support some good strong action to put away those people who are involved in organized crime in our community.

We can't grope around in the dark forever. We have to have some answers from the government as to how deeply involved this business is and what it is going to do about it. I don't think it is good enough for us to have estimates every year where we get the same answers back to us when we ask these questions, and just be told: "That's fine. Just sit there. Organized crime is well under hand." We need some facts to back up that statement.

If the Solicitor General tells us that it is well under hand, that he's got it under control and so on, let him give us some facts to back that up. And let him give us some substantive reason as to why we shouldn't have a full public inquiry into this business and get it out into the open.

Perhaps the minister could address himself to some of those specific questions that I have asked as to the extent—at least in Metro Toronto if he doesn't know of other jurisdictions; but at least in Metro Toronto—how deeply involved is organized crime in our city? And what kinds of businesses are they into? Does he know that they have strong connections or that they own apartment buildings, as I suspect they do, bakeries and laundries and other businesses?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to see that members on both sides of the House have similar thoughts in regard to organized crime. I would like to ask the minister some specific questions as well. I realize the difficulty that the minister has in dealing with this topic. I appreciate the fact that there has to be a certain amount of secrecy, I suppose, for want of a better word, in regard to the OPP's intelligence unit in connection with the surveillance of organized crime.

The problem I have as a member of this House, however, is that for two or three years I have been talking about this matter, I have been pushed off with the response: "We have it under control. We know who the people are involved. It's not as great a problem as you think. We can't really give you any details because we don't want to blow the investigations that are currently under way."

That's been going on for some time and, as my colleague has pointed out, we really don't have any concept, at least as individual members of this House and certainly the public at large, as to just how deep the tentacles of organized crime go in the community of the province of Ontario.

I trust we won't get into any argument about the definition of organized crime. The Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) in his statement of February 1, 1977, defined it as continuing illegal activity.

I understand there was a significant move a year or two ago, or perhaps even longer, when the motorcycle gangs took a large part of the drug trade away from other sections of organized crime which had been dealing with that particular business. We realize that when we talk about organized crime it's not something as well organized in a sense of saying the government of Ontario and so on; but there are various branches, various levels. As a matter of fact if they did operate like the government of Ontario we wouldn't have organized crime, because they'd be out of business, there wouldn't be any profit. Their own incompetence would do away with them.

About a year ago my secretary, knowing of my interest in this matter, gave me a book called the Canadian Connection which dealt primarily with the organized drug trade, mostly in the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal. But in that book there were many references to connections with Toronto, Hamilton and southern Ontario, by people involved in that particular aspect of organized crime.

As well there has been a well-researched article in Quest magazine. I happened to speak to some of the people who were involved with that and they indicated that the problem was much deeper and much larger than in fact the article indicated. We had the CBC, exposé I suppose is the word to use, in which there was apparently a lot of innuendo. Many people were smeared with guilt by association. But there seemed to be a steady pattern in all these books and articles and television documentaries that indicates that this problem is severe and that it reaches into almost every facet of life in the province.

My colleague was asking whether these people were involved in the ownership of apartment blocks or bakeries or pizza places, or in the trade labour unions. We had Justice Waisberg's report some time ago, which seemed to indicate organized crime was involved with some of the labour unions. I think it's really time we dealt with these matters and made the public aware.

This may be naive, but it's naiveté based on ignorance because of lack of answers forthcoming from the government and those responsible for this particular responsibility.

The police are always complaining they don't get enough support from the public at large. Here's a case where the public doesn't know what to do about it. If they have some information or some knowledge they might be prepared to come forward at a public hearing; on the other hand, of course, they may not.

I recall, we can't say exactly "the disclosures," that the former member from High Park (Mr. Shulman) made in the Legislature. With his usual unerring accuracy he was wrong on two or three occasions, which seemed, as usual, to wipe out any credibility he might have had on the things he was in fact right on; but there seemed to be enough there to indicate a very severe problem. I asked in January, through our research office, if any statistics were available on the number of convictions that were registered in the courts in the province of Ontario relating to organized crime.

As I understand this information was to be obtained from the Solicitor General and the Attorney General, and we were told at that time that neither the Attorney General nor the Solicitor General's office kept track of convictions under the heading of being related to organized crime. However, on February 1, again of 1977, in the Attorney General's statement, the gist of which was that there was no need this time for a public inquiry, he says, and I quote: "The senior police officials also stated that they had no difficulty in identifying major crime figures, but the problem was the gathering of sufficient evidence to arrest and convict such individuals. However, they also pointed out that the efforts of the task force had led to the arrest and conviction of at least 16 known members of organized crime in the Toronto area alone."

There's a number of questions related to this and I'll make them specific.

Number one is, does the minister have specific statistics as to the number of convictions related to organized crime in the province of Ontario? Can he indicate the extent and in what particular areas organized crime is deeply involved?

In light of his statements and answers to me in the last year or so, and the Attorney General's statement that they in fact know who are the people involved in organized crime but the problem is in gathering evidence, in this day and age, Mr. Chairman—I hate to suggest this—but do perhaps the OPP and the RCMP require new or modified laws in order to give them the ability to gather the evidence to convict people involved in the organized crime field?

Those are three or four specifics, Mr. Chairman, but I would just like to add a further one along the lines that have been laid out. Why have the Solicitor General and the Attorney General not seen fit to hold a public inquiry into this matter? Mr. Cohen, I believe, is the name of the counsel for the crime commission in Quebec. He was quoted in some of the local newspapers back in January, stating that Ontario should in fact also hold such an inquiry; that it would be beneficial.

The only real answer we've had is that the senior law official's advice to both yourself and the Attorney General is that it would serve no purpose at this stage. I would be more inclined to accept that advice if I really knew the extent to which we were speaking.

I'd like to ask the Solicitor General one further question. In his estimate, and the estimate of the intelligence unit of the OPP, has in fact organized crime at all levels grown in the province of Ontario in the last five to 10 years, and has it grown significantly?

Mr. Samis: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be rather brief. Following quite logically, actually, those of the member for Rainy River, I recall a mayor of a city in Canada who made a very brazen public statement: "Organized crime does not exist in this city." He was totally opposed to the idea of a crime inquiry.

But that crime inquiry was set up in the city of Montreal, and it did study organized crime in the city of Montreal.

Some people would say, "Well, what did it accomplish?" Some people would say, "Nothing"; others would say look at the record. Certain people did end up in prison, not for the actual crime that they were allegedly charged with committing, but people like Cotroni were brought to public light; along with Dasti, the Bronfmans. And some of the loan-sharking going on in Montreal, some of the gambling operations, some of the prostitution operations, some of the drug operations were exposed. Somebody might argue, "Well the police knew about that anyway, that was nothing new."

I think it's extremely important in the field of organized crime that the public have some idea of what's going on and not have to rely totally on magazines and the odd enterprising journalist like Jean-Pierre Charbonneau and his book.

I would suggest that the minister consider what the crime inquiry in Quebec has done in terms of public knowledge, public information, and a sense of public participation. You may say to a certain extent that when it was televised the way it was done it became dramatic and theatrical, and probably even somewhat of a circus.

The fact is that the people of Quebec did find out who were the chief perpetrators, organizers and master minds of organized crime. I recall some of the newspapers in Quebec, for example, had charts galore of the interlocking relationships between the businesses, the investments, the families and the gangs in Montreal. I think there's a very worthwhile purpose if public knowledge and public perception is increased and the public demand to government, to the police force is that much greater. I would really love to hear the Solicitor General answer the direct questions put to him by my colleagues from Scarborough-Ellesmere and from Rainy River; I would love to hear him make the same declaration as the mayor of Montreal and then challenge him to have the same inquiry that disputed and disproved everything that the mayor of Montreal said. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stong: This particular item was opened up to my colleague from Kitchener and my colleague from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk—the matter of facilities. I would like to address the minister's attention to two items: First, I was advised that the facilities for the OPP in Whitney were in worse condition than those described by my friend from Kitchener. I was given to understand that Whitney is serviced by four police officers on three shifts, which gives one police officer a shift off, or a day off; that the nearest police station is about 200 miles away and the communication is so lacking and so inadequate that the police officer has to leave the building to use the radio in his car to summon help. I wonder if you could confirm that situation. It would seem that in Whitney not only is a police officer required to patrol the highways but also the OPP in that area is charged with the responsibility of criminal investigation as well, thereby jeopardizing the safety of the officers as well as creating inadequate supervision or service for the people in that area. I'm wondering if you could perhaps assist the House with respect to the situation as it exists in that area. Likewise, on the organized crime questions, I had asked earlier on this item with respect to the number of police officers involved in the detection and policing of organized crime from the OPP standpoint. I was advised there is a variable of 125 police officers, which I accept.

I'm also wondering—and I asked at that time and I have no answer for it, although it follows along with what other members have spoken on, particularly the member for Rainy River. I appreciate that many of the matters of which we speak are confidential and ought not to be disclosed to the public for the reasons of security. However, because there is a variable figure of 125 police officers involved in organized crime, I wonder if the Solicitor General could give us statistics about what type of investigations those 125 officers have been involved in, and what kind of charges have been laid. I'm thinking also in terms of prostitution, and what segments of our business community have been scrutinized by this force of 125 police officers. I wonder if you could incorporate answers to those questions in the answers to the questions more specifically asked by other members.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: First of all to deal with the matter of accommodation. There are many detachments across the province for whom we would like to provide better accommodation. Part of this has been caused in that over the last three or four years, contrary to this year, we have had increased numbers of police officers serving throughout these various detachments. I know one up in Muskoka area, Huntsville, where I visited the other day; certainly they're on shift work as far as using the lockers and things of this nature is concerned. We could go across the province and point out many places which are not as we would wish them. We put our requests in. The Ministry of Government Services is responsible for completing those requests. They supply the funds and give us the various buildings. As you know, they have some constraints on at the present time.

There may be one or two incidents where police services are suffering because of a lack of adequate housing and even facilities, as you mentioned—perhaps in Whitney where you indicate, although I don't know that that the radio communication is not what it should be. Certainly, the force itself is putting the pressure on me and I, in turn, am putting the pressure on the Minister of Government Services (Mr. McCague) to give us what I consider very important—that is, a supply of better accommodation.

Specifically, my information in regard to Brantford and Kitchener—Kitchener, of course, has a regional police force and the OPP there are simply doing highway patrol—is that the need in Brantford far outweighs the need in Kitchener. So I'm sorry that it's not the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk who has heard that reply rather than the member for Kitchener. You were having a slight argument with him about who has the highest priority; I'm afraid the member for Kitchener loses that argument.

Mr. Breithaupt: I'll accept being second, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: All right, that's fair enough. I don't want to get anybody's hopes too high but my note is that we are negotiating for land in Brantford today. I don't think that necessarily means we'll be negotiating in Kitchener tomorrow.

At any rate, we are aware of the Brantford situation and we do evidently have some funds for acquiring the land. Subsequently, of course, we have to get approval for building the buildings. However, I've made note of Kitchener-Waterloo region and Whitney as well.

That comes around to this whole matter of organized crime. I did give a talk—it was a hurried talk—in the budget debate last April when I announced that we were receiving some additional $1¼ million to deal with this matter. I went into many of the matters that have been asked about today by many of the members. Not that I expect my speeches to go on record or be reviewed by the member for Dovercourt or any of these other places as great historical documents, but you say that I haven't dealt with them; I certainly did mention many of the things and gave some of the answers that you've asked for today. I gave them at that time.

I'm not indicating to you that I am satisfied with the condition or the control of organized crime in this province. As I've said on many occasions, if any crime exists, whether it's so-called organized crime, robbery or assaults of any nature, then the police are not satisfied with it nor am I satisfied with it. As long as we have any kind of crime I don't think we as members of this House or the police can say it is under control. The fighting of crime of all sorts, organized or otherwise, is a continuing battle and I expect it will be a continuing battle. I don't want to leave the impression that I am complacent about it and say that organized crime is under control.

You ask, how deep do the tentacles of organized crime go? I ask you, how long is a piece of string? If we knew how deep they went I suppose we would have all the evidence we needed to get all the convictions we would like to get. But I would also ask you how deep do they go in the province of Quebec or how deep do they go in any of the states in the United States where they may have had the kind of inquiry that some members urge this government to institute here.

I suggest that other than to parade a list of people whom we know and whom are already known in the other jurisdictions, little can or would be accomplished by this other than some kind of spectacle—and I don't want to be critical of Quebec but as one of the members admitted here today, the way it turned out to be in Quebec it was a bit of a circus.

As I've said many times, we have many people in this province whom we suspect of organized crime. You have asked for a definition of organized crime. I gave that definition last April. In my own words it is, "continuing activity of one or more people to commit breaches of the Criminal Code." It's much broader than some people would consider. I'm not singling out any one race or nationality because it affects all races—it doesn't depend on the matter of race. All people, all nationalities in part engage in this matter of organized crime.

Mr. Reid: That's a very democratic outfit.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: It's true. We could point to people or groups who, some suspect, are more involved than others, but that just isn't the case. You even get Scottish people dealing in organized crime occasionally. I'm not going to tack it down in that way but will keep to the broader definition of organized crime.

Some of you are already taking offence at that reference. I see my deputy sitting back when I say that.

In any event, I don't know how deep the tentacles of organized crime go. We're flushing it out wherever we can, wherever we have any evidence or any indication that it exists. I'm suggesting to you organized crime in this province is not one, two, three the way it was in Quebec where they had a host of unsolved murders obviously connected with gangland slayings of one sort.

Mr. Samis: You're drawing lots of parallels.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: We don't have that situation here. I'm not waiting for murders to bring it forth.

Mr. Samis: Just bomb incidents.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes, we've had some bombings we've suspected are attached to organized crime and they are being investigated.

I would remind you again, a few convictions came out of the Quebec inquiries but those convictions were obtained through the Ontario courts and from evidence we had obtained prior to the inquiries. Out of the Quebec inquiry, all you had were a few convictions for contempt of court, and as I said before, that's not the way I like to see justice done. I like justice to be done by good police work, by gathering evidence and laying formal charges. We have had some success in bringing to justice some of those people the papers and others would recognize as being attached to organized crime. There are many more we feel are operating here and whom we have under surveillance.

You ask what more could be done. The changes in electronic surveillance the Criminal Code permitted a while back have been a help. However, that can be a very costly and time-consuming way of gathering evidence and the more police do it that way, the more they realize nothing can substitute for the good old fact-finding kind of evidence, getting out there where the crime exists and getting factual evidence as opposed to recorded evidence of some sort or another. The amount of recording they do sometimes to get one little piece of evidence is pretty enormous and it's very costly and time-consuming.

I don't know whether we should be making any representations, but on the matter of what can be done, relating it to the situation in Ottawa at the present time, when warrants are obtained for a search, a search may be conducted without the knowledge of the person involved but, as you know, you must report that afterwards. I think that's right and proper. The risk to do otherwise would probably be too great. But once you have reported the person upon whom the warrant has been issued, the case is blown and you can't carry on the same investigation. In other words, you get a warrant to search, but you don't find what you're looking for. The fact you are making the search is then brought to light and that ends the operation at that time.

The risk in allowing these searches to go on without disclosure is too great, but that is the kind of delicate path we have to travel when we're considering what can or cannot be done in the interests of bringing some of these people to justice, at the same time, protecting the rights all of us want to continue to enjoy, and in fact should enjoy.

Let me be a little more specific. The force occupies approximately 90 per cent of the buildings—No, that was not what I was looking for, that was accommodation. I will give you that, too, if you want it.

Mr. Breagh: That is almost as bad as his giving his speech to the wrong audience.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I will give you the speech because you were asking about it. Maybe you would like it, but it has to do with the matter of accommodation and where some of our problems were. But I think in the interest of brevity, I will move over to what I wanted, organized crime.

When we speak of organized crime, we do not refer to the Mafia or the Cosa Nostra type of families which exist in 28 major cities in the United States. Organized crime, in our terms, refers to all aspects of major organized criminals; in other words, crime that is organized. The main concerns of crime in Ontario today, according to the Ontario Provincial Police intelligence and other major police force intelligence agencies, are the following. By the way, you were asking me to list some of them and I listed these in my chat back in April.

Loan sharking—I think is one of the most serious—along with gambling, fraud, drugs, infiltration of legitimate businesses and pornography. The order in which the aforementioned appear does not reflect the order of importance.

Loan sharking—we all acknowledge that loan sharking is one of the major money-making schemes of the criminal element. Spinoff crimes from loan sharking have been, and still are, responsible for many other crimes, such as bombings, beatings, business take-overs, bankruptcies, thefts, drugs, murders and so on.

Gambling—this source of revenue for criminals is quite prevalent in the Toronto, Ottawa and Niagara Falls area. I am using the words "quite prevalent" so that I am in no way being complacent about it. The OPP and major police forces are continually bringing in people before the courts on charges relating to book-making, et cetera. One may rest assured that organized crime is behind all major gambling within the province.

Frauds—many types of frauds have been exposed recently. This could include welfare, unemployment insurance, OHIP, large scale real estate and so on. Frauds on elderly people, whether it be the so-called bank inspector fraud or the aluminum siding fraud, are of main concern to this branch. A fraud pertaining to OHIP was recently uncovered. This involved people visiting Italy, returning to Canada with large amounts of medical bills supposedly paid by them while in Italy and submitted to OHIP.

Drugs—the drug situation in Ontario is no different than in other areas in Canada. Ontario, like the rest of Canada, could be considered a victim country for hard drugs, such as heroin, cocaine, et cetera. These are being brought through Canada for distribution to the United States. Controlled drugs such as methamphetamine, or speed, are unfortunately mostly manufactured in Ontario and distributed throughout North America. The largest percentage of this drug imported into the United States is manufactured in Ontario. Several clandestine labs have been discovered in Ontario during the last year, which indicates a multi-million dollar business. We find members of outlaw motorcycle clubs involved in almost all cases.

Infiltration of legitimate business—organized crime involved in legitimate business in Canada is considerable, and Ontario is no exception. These businesses could include hotels, motels, night clubs, restaurants, bakeries, garbage companies, manufacturing companies, distributor outlets and many more.

What happens in most, if not all cases, is that after penetrating a legitimate enterprise, it is operated in an illegal manner. Competitors are intimidated. Stolen merchandise is purchased at cut-rate prices for resale. Employees are paid less than union wages, and so on. Organized crime subjects involved in this area keep themselves well insulated from the law. The legitimate business interests impart respectability and social standing within the community. Investment in legitimate businesses offers the best area to convert "dirty" money into "clean" money.

Pornography—the distribution of pornographic materials, such as books, films, et cetera, is forever on the increase. This is probably due to the permissive society we live in whereby everything from advertising to movies at the local theatre is sex-oriented. Most of this material is manufactured in the United States and smuggled into Ontario.

This is by no stretch of the imagination a complete description of organized crime activities in Ontario and Canada, but perhaps it is sufficient to point out the seriousness of the problem.

It has been said that organized crime is the most sinister form of crime. Some of those involved have become rich and powerful by encouraging the needy to gamble; by luring the troubled and misguided to destroy themselves with drugs; by extorting the profits of honest business people; by collecting usury from those in financial difficulties; by injuring, or even murdering, those who oppose them; by bribing those who are sworn to destroy them.

Organized crime is not merely a few preying upon a few. In a very real sense it is capable of subverting not only Canadian institutions, but the very decency and integrity that are the most cherished attributes of a free society. I think when I read that to you, you can't say that either I or the police take organized crime lightly.

I have said on two or three occasions in this House, and certainly outside the House, that if the police of this province advised the Attorney General or myself, or both of us, that a public investigation would help them in their inquiries—would help them to produce the evidence that they cannot get otherwise—then we will certainly take it under serious consideration. My concern would be that it would be a kind of Star Chamber court which I think most of us here would have great trepidation in entering. But I think if the situation was so bad that the police were recommending it, then there might be reason for taking that extreme measure.

I don't feel that we are at that at this point, nor do the police who are advising me; and that is not just the commissioner of the OPP but also the major metropolitan forces as well as the local commissioner of the RCMP. All of them at the present time advise against an inquiry.

Any recommendations for an inquiry have come from newspaper writers and people of that nature. I recognize their legitimate concern in wanting the public to know what is involved in organized crime. At the same time I think some of them have a motive to bring undue publicity to this matter, in that it will make a few great headlines for the length of time this inquiry lasts. It might be nice to oblige them in that respect, but our concern, and the concern of the police, is that this would do more harm to the quiet and successful work the police of this province have been doing, than the benefit we would gain by such an inquiry.

Mr. Reid: I appreciate the remarks the Solicitor General has made, but I wonder if he could specifically answer a couple of questions. First, is there any evidence or do you have any information as to organized crime being involved in labour racketeering? Second, would you answer the question that I asked you before—in the opinion of the OPP intelligence unit, has organized crime been on the increase in the province of Ontario? By that I mean: One, are there more people involved in it? Two, are they into more areas of concern than they were before? And three, has the sheer volume of dollars that they are milking the public of gone up substantially in the last few years?

I am not trying to be provocative about this, but there is something that I have read about when Robert Kennedy was the Attorney General in the United States. He built his reputation to some extent on attacking or getting at organized crime. He built his reputation somewhat as the Attorney General in the province of Ontario has built his, in making headlines but not really doing much of substance.

In one of the statements of the former US Attorney General, he said that organized crime could not flourish in any community without the active knowledge of corrupt politicians and/or corrupt police. That's a very provocative statement. I appreciate it has a lot of potential for attacks on people, on our politicians—which we, of course, in this chamber are—and on our various police forces. But it was an interesting comment and it is one that sticks in my mind.

I wonder if the Solicitor General could also comment on that—if he feels that organized crime in fact can exist in an atmosphere, not necessarily where the police or the politicians are winking at it, but where the public at large seems to look upon it, particularly some aspects, such as gambling which the minister mentioned as an example. A lot of people do not really look upon the numbers games or betting two bucks on the horses, or whatever, as organized crime. In fact, they tend to look upon these people as providing a much-needed social service.

I would be interested in the Solicitor General's remarks about the ability of organized crime to flourish under the circumstances of corrupt politicians and corrupt policemen.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I am sorry, I didn't make proper note of all of the questions the member for Rainy River asked me.

First of all, to deal with the matter of the quotation by Robert Kennedy, I think he had three factors: Corrupt politicians; corrupt police; and corrupt courts. I am pleased to make my affirmation that we have none of those here in Ontario.

Having admitted that we have organized crime, you may suggest then that there is some inconsistency with the statement of Kennedy and myself when I say that we have none of those factors here. I think the word may be "flourish"—that organized crime flourishes under those situations. I honestly don't believe that organized crime is flourishing in this province. It is certainly doing its best because where there is easy money involved that is where they come in. I talked about pornography and loan sharking and prostitution and that is where there is easy money. And that is certainly where they are ready to pounce.

But because our police have made it difficult for them, I suggest to you that organized crime does not flourish in our provincial setting, but we must be always vigilant to make sure that it doesn't. Certainly if we have corrupt politicians or corrupt police or corrupt courts that is exactly what they are looking for and it too would be a sad day for this province if that happens.

Labour racketeering—the Waisberg inquiry went into the possibility of organized crime in labour and could not come up with any conclusive evidence. Then the answer is probably the answer that the commissioner gave to me—that it is difficult to say whether—no, that is the next matter, the increase of crime. All I have to say in regard to labour organization is that it may be there but the Waisberg inquiry could not come up with any kind of evidence. That is an example of an inquiry that really sort of suggested things, but didn't produce the evidence that was necessary to get convictions. It didn't come up with enough evidence in the way of organized crime to get any convictions from it.

In the matter of whether organized crime is increasing or not, the commissioner tells me that it is difficult to measure this, to say, "Yes, we are," or, "No, we aren't." In my mind, and I am just speaking my own personal thoughts here, perhaps organized crime is a little more intense than it was five years ago, but I think probably not as bad as it might have been one or two years ago. That is because we are putting more emphasis on it. We have joint force operations now—we have always had them, but we have more of them now, and they are better manned. We may be critical of the RCMP putting more people into the province, but drugs is very much involved and drugs as I have related is an international matter. I know you are concerned with the traffic back and forth across the river at that point in the Rainy River area. So I am pleased to have the help of the RCMP when it comes to organized crime and the matter of drugs.

We have had more concentration on organized crime in the last two or three years, not only by the OPP, but by the Metropolitan Toronto force and by other municipal forces and of course by the RCMP as well.

Because of the emphasis in the last two or three years, organized crime is less in existence today than it was two or three years ago. Yet, when I ask the commissioner in a whisper for his comments on it, he says it's difficult to say because there is no good measurement. That must be my official answer—difficult to say because there is no good measurement.

Mr. Reid: I wonder if I could ask—

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: You have another question. That may be the one I haven't gotten down to.

Mr. Reid: I just have one question which would wrap up my thoughts on the subject. The logical conclusion is that the estimate is up by $1 million; my question is this: Do you feel that you have enough money by way of funds, and therefore personnel, to deal with this problem which, while we can't seem to quantify it, seems to be a major problem in Ontario? I want to assure the Solicitor General that if, in fact, he needs more money and more personnel, I for one will be ready and willing to vote more funds for this particular vote to see that this matter is taken care of.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: That's an embarrassing question to ask me in front of all the senior police personnel here today. My answer is I would like more funds to look after the OPP of this province and other policing commitments.

We talked about the need for better accommodation. I have a very expensive updating of our communications system that I would like to put before the cabinet and eventually get approval for. We know we talked in this House about the possibility of letting certain staff go. Thank goodness, we decided against that. We have some restrictions on our recruiting of new officers. Many of the municipal forces across the province would like more. I'd like to be able to do more for the Indian constables, and recruit more of them. Certainly the northern detachments would like more personnel. But I'm a part of the government and, as a part of the government, I realize our overall commitment to trying to balance our budget. Sometimes, as Provincial Secretary for Justice, naturally I would like to see more money spent in the justice field.

The Justice field, if you look at the overall expenditures of this government, takes a very small proportion. I think about four per cent of the expenditures of the government are spent in the Justice field. So, we in Justice did not get the rapid expansion of our budgets a few years ago, as Social Services did. Now, when there are restraints applied on an across-the-board basis we feel that maybe we are hit a little harder than some of the other fields.

But, those of you in the House who are looking at the Social Services field, I don't think would say that we should cut back in what we're doing in the Social Services field for hospitalization or for retarded children or whatever it may be, so that the police can have more money.

Representing the Justice field and representing the Solicitor General, I am saying that I am not satisfied with the funds we are getting. But when I look at the problems of the government in balancing our budget, I say I think we've got our fair proportion.

Mr. Lupusella: A royal commission inquiry into organized crime is out of the question unless the Solicitor General receives future information from the police force that indicates that such a royal commission inquiry is required. As I asked in my previous speech, is there any way that the Solicitor General can undertake that particular task by requesting from the police force that a preliminary report into organized crime be prepared in order that in six, seven, or eight months' time this preliminary report will be tabled in the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I'm getting reports on a weekly basis. When I say that I don't mean any formalized reports, but every time I speak to the commissioner, and that's quite frequently, or any of the other heads of police forces across the province, we talk about these things. You ask if I'm going to get any specific reports; I say I am getting reports on an almost weekly basis from somebody in regard to the state of organized crime in the province.

I don't know what I can tell you about anything more, other than to mention names of people charged and convictions that have been obtained. I have certainly not minimized the effect of organized crime here in the province. I don't know what they know about organized crime in Quebec where they had an inquiry that we don't know here.

Mr. Samis: The public in Quebec know a lot more than we do.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I am not so sure they do. All they have is a list of people who are suspected in dealing in underworld activities of one sort or another. I don't know whether that has made Quebec any less healthy for organized crime and any safer for the good citizens; this is the question. I say the convictions for organized crime have been obtained here in this province, not in the province of Quebec where the inquiry was held. The evidence was gathered here and the courts here obtained the convictions.

I don't know what we can tell you that you don't already know about it. You ask if I will give you a report in six months' time. I am always happy to tell what I can to the House, but short of giving you a rundown on the evidence that is presently being obtained and the investigations that are under way—which I am sure you don't want me to do nor would it be in the interests of what we are all seeking—I don't know what more I can do.

Mr. Lupusella: We are not interested in the names. We are not interested in the evidence. What I am requesting of the Solicitor General is an overall review of the activities of organized crime in the province of Ontario, especially in relation to any particular sector in which organized crime is eradicated and the percentage of people who have been charged with particular crimes committed in that field.

What I am requesting is a preliminary report on the overall situation of organized crime—organized crime in capital letters, not just about robberies or other things, which, of course, the Solicitor General might give us from time to time.

Organized crime is something which is there. I am sure that the Solicitor General and the different branches of his ministry are trying to discover really what is going on in the underground world of organized crime. Of course, we don't have the information and the Solicitor General, in a very thoughtful way, is coming out with this overall situation report about organized crime. By his tabling a report in the Legislature in six or seven months, then I am sure the members will be able to gain a general assessment of how serious the problem is in the province of Ontario and in Metropolitan Toronto. Then the public, at least, is going to find out what is really going on in their community.

Of course, the Solicitor General is getting weekly information from the police force related to organized crime. Actually we hear something about organized crime either from the newspaper, or at the end of the fiscal year when we are dealing with the estimates. But I am talking about a general, overall review of organized crime, with a full report about those particular activities taking place in different sectors of our society; it is something which we require in order that members of the Legislature can assess the seriousness of the problem in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: My friend is again being general and he wants me to be specific. If he will tell me, first of all what kind of crimes he wants reported, if he will give me a summary of the kind of information he wants rather than just sit back there and say "give me a report on organized crime in the province," then I will try and do just that. But first of all he's got to tell me what kind of crimes he wants included in this; a list of what kind of convictions. If I knew certain people were engaged in organized crime then the police would know about it and they would be following that up with that kind of evidence.

I tell you it's very dangerous to try to give you names. I could give you a list of names where charges have been laid and some convictions have been obtained. But some of those are presently under appeal. If you will give me a guideline as to what you want, then I will study that guideline and try to get those reports from the police.

But remember this. Prostitution, for example is one of the serious things that organized crime is engaged in, but not every conviction for prostitution is organized crime. That goes all the way through the statistics that I might give you. If you will give me the guidelines as to what you want instead of talking in generalized terms as you've done throughout these estimates, and tell me specifically, "this is the kind of information I want, this is the definition of organized crime that I want to include," if you'll be helpful to me in that way, I'll try to be helpful in return and give you the kind of report you're suggesting.

Mr. Lupusella: If I had the guidelines I would not request that information from the Solicitor General. One point I want to emphasize is that I felt really disturbed about the CBC program on organized crime. I think the public felt disturbed as well to know there are certain activities going on in the province of Ontario and around Canada in relation to organized crime.

Of course I'm not interested in names. That is something which the court of law and the Attorney General and the Solicitor General and the police force are supposed to be interested in. There is this kind of general sense that organized crime is going on in the province of Ontario.

I gave the example of the CBC program. I was shocked about that program. I think the public was shocked as well. We don't know what is going on and it is this kind of assessment for the province of Ontario, that will be beneficial to the public and it will be beneficial to the members of this Legislature to assess the seriousness of the problem.

Mr. Stong: There are three questions that I'd like to ask the minister as a result of statements he has made.

Firstly, with respect to the CBC program, did that program bring any new information to the police, the OPP or the Metropolitan Toronto police that they were unaware of prior to watching it on television? Have any specific investigations been initiated or conducted as a result of information that was brought to the attention of the public arising out of that program?

I wonder if the minister can also advise the House—you've indicated or designated certain areas where organized crime is being investigated, such as bookmaking, fraud, and other areas like that—how many investigations have been frustrated, or charges not laid or how many court cases were lost because of the refusal of witnesses to testify or to co-operate with the police out of fear of retaliation of some sort?

I'm wondering as well if he could advise with respect to the administration of justice and the amount of money that's ploughed into the administration of justice, what percentage of the fines that are levied in the province of Ontario are returned into, or ploughed into, the financing of the administration of justice?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: My information with regard to the CBC—and the commissioner was just confirming it on a little broader basis—was that no, there were no new names brought forward in the CBC program that we here in the Ontario jurisdiction didn't know were operating, or allegedly operating, in Ontario. The additional information the commissioner has given me is as a member of the Canadian police chiefs' association and in talking with other chiefs, it appears the program brought forth no names new to them either.

That is maybe the kind of publicity the member for Dovercourt would like me to give to this matter of organized crime. But that program, although it may have stirred up a fair amount of interest among the public, accomplished little. It dealt with this matter of innuendoes about which we've got to be very careful and it made some innuendoes. I understand there were no names brought forward and no additional investigations carried on, by reason of that program.

Mr. Stong: Did that program interfere with any of the investigations being conducted?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The commissioner tells me no, it was mostly past history, so I can't say it did any damage other than perhaps to the characters of some people who may or may not be involved.

I have no figures on the number frustrated because of refusal of the witnesses to testify. I don't know whether that would be easy to compile or not. I'll make some inquiries in connection with it. I think it's a good question, particularly when we're dealing with organized crime. I understand one of the reasons they have trouble getting the evidence they need is the fear of reprisals. The commissioner doesn't know of those figures being presently available, but I will try to get them because I think they could be very useful to us.

Mr. Stong: I wonder if you would share them with me as well.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I would be glad to.

Mr. Stong: Thank you. With respect to the amount of money levied by fines in Ontario, how much is ploughed back into the administration of justice? Perhaps we should increase the fines if there is a fair amount.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: They go back, as I understand it, to the consolidated revenue fund through the Attorney General and I don't have that information. The Attorney General's estimates are coming up, as you know, maybe later this evening if you're through with me, and that's a question he may be able to answer for you.

The Treasurer, I guess, is really the person who would have that information because I don't think they go to the Attorney General's ministry as such, but back into the consolidated revenue fund. But he may have a pretty good idea, since it's administration of the courts.

Mr. Kerrio: Help Darcy balance the budget.

Mr. Stong: I take it then, that the minister is not in a position to advise me as to what percentage of that goes back into the administration of justice at this time. Is there any way that he could find out?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I don't think any of it goes back. Some of the municipalities get fines for speeding and that sort of thing—breaches of their municipal bylaws which go back into their coffers. On a provincial basis all you would have to do is take any particular part of the administration of justice, see what the revenue from fines is and get your percentages that way. But we don't look at it in that sense.

Mr. Warner: In an effort to be finished with the minister, as he puts it, I'd like to state, before I begin, that I have found this minister to be one of the most co-operative ministers in the Legislature.

(Applause.)

Mr. Warner: And the Minister of Revenue should applaud. He is one of the most sincere and well-meaning people, who tries to run the affairs over there in a very straightforward way.

Mr. Stong: Having said that.

Mr. Warner: But I'll tell you, Mr. Chairman, I am very disturbed with the answers I got to my questions. For a long time this whole business of organized crime and the questions related to it as raised by opposition members has been somehow sacrosanct. It's always appeared we should trust what the government has to say about the issue because everyone knows all of us are trying to eradicate crime of all sorts, whether it's organized or not. Raising questions suddenly clouds the whole thing. Suddenly it casts a shadow upon the opposition members. I find that very disturbing.

[5:30]

For a long time we were told to trust that there wasn't any organized crime in Ontario; it just didn't exist. That was a government line for a long time: "It doesn't exist. It's not there." We move on a bit and the government finally admits, "Yes, it is there but trust that we have it under control." Today I'm told: "Yes, it's in those sort of broad areas but trust that if I gave you any more details on it, it would hamper our work."

I submit that it is a responsibility of the government of the day to inform the citizens as to what they can expect in terms of peace and security and what they can expect in terms of their daily lives. The Solicitor General used the example of prostitution. He said some of the convictions in prostitution were related to organized crime while others weren't. Very simply, perhaps he could indictate how extensive it is. Are we talking in terms that out of every five convictions the police are assured that one, two or three of them are connected with organized crime; that a portion of the money which those women are receiving is going back to organized crime? We want to know the extent of it.

When I ask the question about the control of apartment buildings in Metro Toronto, I'm not asking the Solicitor General to name those particular buildings but simply to indicate the police estimate that out of X units in Metro Toronto, a percentage of them are controlled or partially controlled by organized crime; that the police estimate that out of X bakeries in the city, so many of them are controlled; that we have some idea of what kind of money we're talking about that finds its way into the hands of organized crime.

Surely by raising those questions we are doing nothing more than trying to assist the public by trying to give the public the kind of information which surely they deserve. I take those questions to be nothing more than that. The government surely has to move away from this position of implying some sort of shadow over all of us that we're not dealing with things in good faith or that we're seeking headlines or whatever. It simply isn't fair. We need some of those answers.

The public surely is entitled to know the extent of organized crime in our community and the amount of money we're spending on it. The public now knows how much money the police are spending; that's what these estimates are all about. We're spending millions and millions of dollars and not knowing what we're getting back. We don't know what we're getting back for that expenditure. We don't know how many members of organized crime are being locked up, how many are under surveillance or how extensive their business is.

Finally, I would like a little more definition from the minister. I cannot quite so blithely dismiss, as he does, although I wish to believe it, the business that was raised by the member for Rainy River. Obviously every one of us would like to believe there is no corruption whatsoever throughout our entire political system, our courts and our police. But how can anyone just blithely toss that out without giving us any sort of definition, without indicating whether or not those three avenues are under any sort of surveillance? How do we know that the police are not given to any corruption? How do we know that there's no corruption in our court system?

The CBC program would indicate to us that organized crime is flourishing better now than it ever did. If so, there must be a reason for it. But the Solicitor General is telling us, whatever the reason is, that it is not embodied in either the court system, the police system or the political system. If that's the statement he's going to make, I think he should have some hard evidence to back that up, instead of just making a statement, which again we're all being asked to trust, that we should trust the statement that's thrown out. Well, that's not good enough.

It's not because of any doubt in your integrity; not in the least. It's simply a concern that we have to have all of the facts, not just a few statements, because we've gone along for far too long trusting. We trusted for ages that there was no organized crime in Ontario, only to discover that that wasn't so. Now we discover, through the CBC, thank goodness, and a few other places, that organized crime is not only alive but it's doing quite well in Ontario and seems to be flourishing all the more. If you're going to fight it with the millions of dollars we grant then, please, tell us how the money is being used.

I think the member for Dovercourt had an excellent suggestion of coming in with a report a few months from now with some real details as to what percentage of the apartment market is controlled and how much money that's loaned out through agencies to individuals is actually organized crime money—all of those details which we desperately need and the people of Ontario are entitled to.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: How could I give those details? If the police had them we'd be glad to give them, but you want to know how much money is lent out. Think of how practical that suggestion is. How in the world will we know how much money is lent out in organized crime unless we have convicted everybody who is engaged in organized crime in this province and have an examination of their books, so we can say, "Yes, we have convicted all the people who are engaged in organized crime. We know everybody who's there. Here's a list, here's their books and here's how much money?"

That is the kind of statistics you want me to produce. You can't produce statistics on suspicion or on incomplete knowledge. As I say, we can give you statistics on the number of convictions in any kind of crime that you want, pretty well—those statistics have been brought under question—but you're asking me for facts on things that aren't necessarily all known. That's why I said to the member for Dovercourt—and I want to be co-operative—if he can give me the kind of report that he wants, as one of the opposition critics, I'll be glad to try to give him that information, but to just make statements in the air, as you've just made, that we should know what percentage of dollars is involved in such and such—if we knew that information they'd all be in jail.

It's like asking me to tell you how many murders are going to take place in Toronto tomorrow. We don't know those figures, and we can't tell you that until after convictions have been registered. You say I'm putting the opposition under a shadow, maybe you're putting the Solicitor General and the government under a shadow in suggesting all of these things.

If you will give me the kind of details you want—you've just made one suggestion and I hope your other suggestions would be a little more practical—we'll try and give you that information. Remember, I can't do it on the basis of suspicion. Simply because we've got 10 people under surveillance on suspicion of being involved in organized crime, I can do very little about that until we get convictions. If we knew what apartment building or what bakeries or anything else were actively in this business then I would hope that we would have moved in on them by that time and that they would be statistics of convictions rather than statistics of suspicions.

Dealing with the matter of courts, politicians and police, I said that those conditions did not exist which would allow organized crime to flourish. I'm not saying that we don't have the odd bad politician or the odd bad police officer or the odd bad judge who gets into difficulty from time to time, but generally speaking, the police, the politicians and the courts of this land are not a part of organized crime. We have, as I say, the odd isolated incident, but the conditions don't exist in those three bodies that in any way allow organized crime to flourish or even happen in this province.

Ms. Bryden: I'd like to ask the minister if he has studied the report which was prepared by some Toronto aldermen on the places of amusement and the adult entertainment industry in the city of Toronto, particularly the problems with the so-called sin strip on Yonge Street?

I understand the writers of this report felt there probably was a connection between organized crime and what was going on in the sin-strip but they did not have the powers or the opportunity within their terms of reference to establish whether there was a connection and, therefore, they asked for a royal commission on organized crime as the only way of finding this out. This is a very serious problem in the biggest city in the province. When that city in a report which was adopted by council asks for a royal commission, it should carry a good deal of weight with the government.

The other thing the report recommended very strongly is enabling legislation from the province to permit them to cope with the situation on Yonge Street in a much better way. I wonder if the minister has studied that report as to the kind of enabling legislation they would like and whether he is prepared to support the introduction of enabling legislation which would come, I understand, through the Attorney General's ministry.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: In reply to the last question first; yes, if there's anything that the provincial government can do to make it easier for the police of Metropolitan Toronto to control the situation on Yonge Street, I'll be glad to support it. However, as you know and as I know, morality is a matter of the criminal law. We always come back to this point. When we suggest some changes that may be made to the criminal law, such as loitering charges, then we run afoul of the civil liberties people.

I'm prepared to support whatever we can do within our own field to help to clean up Yonge Street. The majority of the problems there deal with the criminal law and we've been running afoul, in suggesting changes there, with some of the other principles that we're all concerned about.

When you talk of the Sparrow report, I saw it and read it. At that time they were asking for changes, again at the provincial level, when as subsequent events showed they had all the power they needed to clean up Yonge Street. They've done a pretty good job, since that tragic incident, of cleaning up Yonge Street. In Metro they have one of the best, if not necessarily the best, police forces in North America. It needs public support and it needs the support of the politicians to do some of this cleanup. But when the Metro police were instructed to go to work on Yonge Street they did. It was public opinion that allowed them to make the changes and do what they have done.

I don't know if there's anything very much in the Sparrow report where we can help at the present time, but if there is I'd be certainly glad to support it

Ms. Bryden: The minister said the city of Toronto had discovered they had sufficient legislation to clean up Yonge Street. They have since found they cannot control the location of the sex shops which were previously there until they get enabling legislation because of the non-conforming use under the zoning laws.

The neighbourhoods committee last week asked the Minister of Housing (Mr. Rhodes) to bring in such an amendment. I understand the Minister of Housing has written them and said that until the province produced a white paper on the problem he would not consider enabling legislation. There's one area where enabling legislation is needed and where the province appears to be dragging its feet. We've had no word as to when this white paper may come out.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I think there's more involved than that would suggest, Mr. Chairman.

Item 1 agreed to.

On item 2, law enforcement—uniform:

Mr. G. E. Smith: I'd like to speak on this item and ask the Solicitor General one or two questions. This deals with uniformed law enforcement, as I understand. I would like to say from personal experience that I know about the efficiency of the officers in the Muskoka area and also in the Barrie detachment.

I would like to ask the Solicitor General a question as to summer patrols on the water and traffic patrols on highways. I note that the vote is up almost $1 million. I would hope that some of the extra funding would provide additional staff to deal, at least on a seasonal basis, with traffic patrol and, more particularly, water traffic patrol. As the minister is aware, the RCMP has been gradually phasing out of the water patrol and this has been turned over to the Ontario Provincial Police.

I have mentioned this before in previous estimates when they have been debated, recommending that there should be more money spent for equipment. I am aware that there have been additional boats and equipment purchased, it is available, and I would hope that you, Mr. Minister, could give me and the members of the Legislature and the people in the area that I represent some assurance that additional personnel will be made available.

As the minister is no doubt aware, the boat traffic has increased, not only the pleasure boat traffic but more and more there are people buying large cruisers and using them as their summer homes rather than cottages. The lake traffic is increasing, not only from transient tourists, American tourists coming through, but also the local people, the residents of Canada and the residents of Ontario are using the waterways, the Trent-Severn in particular, and Georgian Bay. I am wondering if you could give us some assurance that this extra money will be made available for some additional staff to complement the existing staff in the area?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I regret to say that we don't have any of our additional money planned to go into that marine surveillance. I do, however, hope to have a chat with the commissioner of the RCMP shortly on some of our overlapping responsibilities. I regret that the RCMP has vacated as much as it has the problem of looking after our waterways. I used to consider that that was one of theirs, but they seem to be happy to leave that one to us.

At the present time we do have 12 launches and 61 skiffs. During 1976 we logged 9,369 hours and had 219 trained personnel man these watercraft during the boating season. So we do have an extensive water service being carried on by the OPP. Regretfully, we cannot catch all of those who speed on the rivers and lakes. I think we have a reasonable coverage for safety reasons. If there are any of those kinds of emergencies, I think we are there in most places fairly quickly, but it leaves something to be desired. When we get a little more money I hope we will be able to put more into it, but in the meantime I hope to get the RCMP doing a little more in that field.

Mr. G. E. Smith: Mr. Minister, I am pleased that you are going to co-ordinate with the RCMP. Again, may I say that my criticism is not as to the work that the water patrol are doing; the officers who are manning the physical units are doing an excellent job, it is just that we don't have enough of them on the waters.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could refer to one particular matter with respect to this item. I regret that the time is quite brief, because it seems really unfortunate that we should not have the opportunity to talk at length about the involvement that we have in the Ontario Provincial Police, which I believe, in the uniformed law enforcement area, is probably one of the finest forces in the world.

There is one point, though, that was raised by a constituent of mine, particularly with respect to enforcement, that I would like to share with the Solicitor General. The matter that he raised dealt with the general dealing with motor vehicles, particularly large trucks, that appear to be able to exceed the speed limits, perhaps as a result of their CB radios and also, of course, as a result of the difficulty of having all of the highways fully patrolled all at the same time.

This gentleman suggested to me one particular item which may be of interest to the Solicitor General, and that is the use of unmanned television cameras on various overpasses, which might be a useful factor in controlling traffic flow. I realize this might be considered by some to be perhaps an invasion of their privacy, and it might be, of course, objectionable for that reason. However, I do bring this particular point to the attention of the Solicitor General because it would appear that this would be a form of deterrent.

These portable units, which perhaps could be affixed in some manner in a secure way to various highway overpasses, might have some effect in slowing down some of the exceptional traffic which causes difficulties. There have been problems with respect to some of the heavier transport trucks. This might be something which would be of use to bring down overall costs, that is in effect to have a form of patrol which would be of use and of assistance to the uniformed personnel.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I know that speeding trucks and speeders of all kinds continue to be a concern to the police. Recently we lowered the speed limits, some 10 miles-per-hour generally speaking, and I understand the public have come to adopt about five miles of the 10-mile reduction. In other words, instead of travelling 10 miles slower, the average speed now is only five miles slower; it requires more enforcement, there is no question on that. Yet this past year, or since the speeds have been lowered, we have issued some 50 per cent, or thereabouts, more speeding tickets than were issued in previous years. We have 50 per cent more tickets issued, or thereabouts, and the speeders have come down some five per cent.

Large trucks continue to be a problem to us, for various reasons. I know there are some very sophisticated equipment to take pictures of traffic movements and even show the licence plate. However, you know our problem. We have to stop the driver and identify the driver, we can't just do it on the plate alone; but maybe the existence of a few cameras of that nature might have a good effect, so I will take it up further with the commissioners.

Item 2 agreed to.

Items 3 and 4 agreed to.

On item 5, registration:

Mr. Stong: On this particular item dealing with private investigators and security guards, I understand that the private investigators and security guards were in to see the minister recently with respect to their recommendations on the legislation that's involved in this. I am wondering if he agrees with them and their observations and what they would like to see incorporated into that area of the law? They had some good suggestions. I am wondering how many of those the minister is prepared to incorporate into the Act?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: We have had rather a continuing discussion with them. They were in to see me some time ago and some individuals have been in as well. I understand just recently they spoke to Mr. Ritchie, who is our legal counsel in the ministry. I haven't had a report from Mr. Ritchie as to what they may have discussed with him at that time.

Generally speaking, I know that many of the suggestions they have made, both to me and to Mr. Ritchie on previous occasions, are already in our draft legislation which will come forward when we have an opportunity to introduce it; but I don't know how much of their recent suggestions are incorporated.

Mr. Stong: Having spoken with one of the spokesmen of that group, I was given to understand their most recent meeting with the ministry, which was last week, probably was not too fruitful and was not really what they had expected. I am not sure they didn't get a good hearing but they felt their suggestions were not being received. I suppose that's the report you are not familiar with, and I wonder if you would familiarize yourself with that? It seems to me, without going into the specifics in these estimates, that they do have some very good suggestions and they are very concerned about it. I would like to have some undertaking that they at least will be consulted on a regular basis before the legislation is amended or introduced.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to give that undertaking.

Item 5 agreed to.

On item 6, Ontario Provincial Police auxiliary:

Mr. Breithaupt: I recognize we just have a few moments left, but I certainly feel that some comment should be made with respect to the operation of the OPP auxiliary. The estimates of this ministry are almost $147 million, and I think we should recognize that in this particular sub-vote we are spending less than one out of every $1,000 in your ministry in an area where I believe you are getting the best value for any money which your entire ministry spends.

I think the operation of these various auxiliary units, particularly I might say in my own Kitchener-Waterloo area, has been an exceptional credit to this program. These volunteers have been of great use in assisting police forces, not only the OPP but also on occasion the municipal forces with respect to various public events. They are active, involved men and women, and I think that they should be given the credit they deserve and certainly the support of the members of this House.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I thank the member for those kind words. I endorse everything he has said. The auxiliary force is an excellent force. It does give good service and certainly it is a volunteer service, as we know.

The only complaint I have received is a complaint about the operations in the Kitchener operation.

Item 6 agreed to.

On item 7, community services:

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, on this particular item there is one area that I am concerned with; and I find it to be one of the most important aspects of police work. I referred to public relations in my opening address and we also discussed it earlier. This branch is very important as far as I am concerned and I am wondering how many personnel are employed in this branch since it does involve itself with the public relations.

If I may make a suggestion, through you Mr. Chairman, to the minister, an excellent area where Ontario Provincial Police officers could be employed during the summer is in our provincial parks disseminating information and perhaps showing movies; perhaps putting on demonstrations for holidayers, particularly the children, the young people. Children just love to see a police car, see the red light on and hear the siren. This is an excellent area in which to foster that type of public relations that is so sorely needed.

I am just wondering if this area is part of your program, and how many of personnel are employed in this undertaking.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Chairman, I understand there is no concentration in the parks as such, but the safety programs and attendance of the vehicles and personnel is spread across the whole province during the whole year. The suggestion that the member has made of some specific activities in the parks, particularly ones where young people tend to gather, I think is a good one.

You asked for complement; this provides a complement in 1977-78, of 16; which is only an increase of three, three over 13 is a pretty fair percentage.

When you rose in your place to say that you regarded this a pretty important part of the OPP work, I overheard the commissioner to say, "So do I."

Item 7 agreed to.

Vote 1605 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This concludes the estimates of the Solicitor General. It now being 6 o'clock, I will leave the chair to return at 8 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Thank you all for your co-operation.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1977

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

House in committee of supply.

Mr. Chairman: Before calling the votes, I presume the Attorney General will have an opening statement, as well as the opposition critics.

Mr. Stong: Oh no, dispense.

Mr. Roy: No, let's hear it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, being a very modest individual—

Mr. Breithaupt: You have a lot to be modest about.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —last year I refrained from an opening statement, thinking that the members of the justice committee in particular would be most anxious to get to the votes, and received some degree of criticism for not making an opening statement. So I trust that members opposite in particular—

Mr. Lawlor: We'd like to hear from you.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —will want to hear from the Attorney General this evening.

I am certainly very delighted to be back under the spotlight, as it were, this evening, to outline the work of the Ministry of the Attorney General over the past year.

Before we start on the detailed consideration of estimates, however, I should like to highlight a number of issues with which I have been particularly concerned over the past year.

As most of you appreciate, the Ministry of the Attorney General is in many ways a unique ministry within the Ontario government. Unique here and now in that all three parties in the Legislature share a commitment to the strengthening of the administration of justice. That commitment in the past has usually raised our work above the hurly-burly considerations of mere party politics. In this context, I want to thank the justice critics and the other members of the justice committee in the two opposition parties for their co-operation and many helpful suggestions over the past year. Though we do sit on opposite sides of the House, I feel we do share a common concern for justice.

Mr. Chairman, my ministry is also unique in that the people of Ontario justifiably demand access to justice as a right. The law must be available, and we of course have an obligation to provide services wherever required. The demands of the system are not of our making, but I do again, of course, have a constitutional and sworn responsibility to meet them.

While I am concerned to ensure the maximum efficiency for all our operations, neither the rate of criminal prosecutions nor the rate of civil actions is particularly responsive to my government's desire for restraint.

Lastly, we are unusual within the provincial government in a number of ways. Members will note the considerable revenue we earn in comparison with our expenditures. Secondly as a result of the nature of our services and the fact that they are provided in every part of Ontario, my ministry is one of the most labour intensive in the government. These facts should be borne in mind when we get down to the individual votes.

While the times and the economic climate demand constraint in government budgets and programs, I always considered that the administration of justice should be one of any government's highest priorities. When I look across Canada and learn that only three per cent of total public expenditures in this country is spent on all justice services, I can only marvel that we have managed to make so many improvements in services and to cope as well as we have with the vast expansion in case-loads.

While all of us recognize that there has been a veritable explosion on court case-loads, the sheer size of the increase may sometimes be overlooked. In our provincial courts, criminal division, the number of criminal code cases disposed of has tripled over the last nine years since my ministry took over the administration of these courts. Nor are the pressures confined to the provincial courts, criminal division; between 1973 and 1977 disposition rate of criminal cases in our country and district courts increased by 45 per cent; summary conviction appeals increased by over 60 per cent.

On the civil side, we find that the disposition rate of civil cases in the county and district courts rose, between 1973 and 1977, by 48 per cent; appeals to the court of appeal are up by 40 per cent during that same period.

These increases are placing real strains on our courts which are becoming difficult to meet. We, therefore, cannot be at all complacent when we confront the case-load crisis. The problems are real and serious, and as I have recognized in the past they do have the potential to undermine the quality of justice in Ontario.

While the system is responding as it can and marked efficiencies have been achieved, the productivity of both judges and court personnel has been limited by the lack of an effective approach to case-load management. The crisis comes to us as a legacy of many factors of modern life: population growth, the prevalence of the automobile and the inevitable resulting accidents, the intricacy and interdependence of modern business operations, the growing stress on individual rights, the considerable expansion of the government's role in regulating activities, and the decline of traditional standards.

Mr. Lawlor: You know your deputy, when he wrote this, didn't repeat the whole text. He left off where it was getting interesting.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Legal aid has led to an increase in the number of criminal cases tried and in the length of the trial process. Increasing police activity and effectiveness, growth in crime rates, and litigation, have all contributed to the crisis. To meet this crisis effectively significant reforms will be needed.

Following on from the Ontario Law Reform Commission's project on the administration of Ontario courts, we produced last year a white paper on courts administration, which has focused attention on the issue's possible solutions. We have had a series of very productive meetings with senior members of the judiciary over the past year to discuss the allocation of responsibility for court administration. A number of members of the bench and bar have expressed concern that proposed reforms might result in an increased administrative role for senior judges that could so occupy their time that they would cease to be actively sitting judges. While I remain totally committed to a reorganization of court operations, this reorganization must respect at all times the historic independence of our judiciary, and as far as possible ensure that the reservoir of talent and experience of the bench is not drained by day-to-day administrative responsibilities.

As a result of these concerns, we have been working on a new proposal which would ensure that while senior judges have the closest advisory role, they are not unduly burdened with administrative responsibilities. Over the summer I discussed the situation with the former Chief Justice of Ontario, Chief Justice Estey. His co-operation was very important. When we had achieved agreement in principle, we were moving to phase in part of the reforms with his assistance. However, a few weeks ago, as most of you know, the federal government appointed Chief Justice Estey to the Supreme Court of Canada, which I indicated last week—

Mr. Conway: Excellent.

Mr. Lawlor: It is called a meteoric rise.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry:—which I indicated last week showed a remarkable insensitivity, or lack of familiarity, with the problems of the administration of justice in Ontario, notwithstanding our recognition that he will indeed be very important, and as I termed it last week an adornment, to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Nevertheless, I welcome the appointment of Mr. Justice William Howland as the new Chief Justice of Ontario. Mr. Justice Howland is a very distinguished jurist and I look forward to working as closely and productively with the new chief justice, as I did with the former, towards a new model for an efficient court system.

Within the coming year, I will be bringing forward new proposals for organizational changes to carry out effective case-load management. A number of other initiatives have also been made to tackle the problem of delay. Six months ago, guidelines for disclosure in criminal cases came into force. This new disclosure system is intended to reduce the length of preliminary hearings while safeguarding the basic rights of the accused and the Crown.

We are reviewing the Summary Convictions Act to bring forward a comprehensive new provincial offences statute. We have asked the Williston committee to review the rules of practice in the supreme court, and this work will result in many changes directly affecting court effectiveness. I think we are making progress on a broad front to provide better and more efficient services, and I would be delighted to expand on these themes as we proceed through these estimates.

Of course the administration of justice must not merely be efficient, it must be understandable and accessible to citizens across Ontario. A major aim of the ministry is to make the court system more comprehensible to and more convenient for the general public. This is reflected in much of the legislation I have—

Mr. Reid: Does that include native people?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Including, of course, the native people.

This is reflected in much of the legislation I've already brought and will be bringing to the Legislature, including the changes to the small claims court legislation and our proposed provincial offences Act.

For example, the basic thrust of our proposal on provincial offences is decriminalization. This flows from the recognition that the person who breaches an Ontario law need not be treated as if he or she were a dangerous criminal. Under these reforms, there would be less emphasis on formal court appearances, and less emphasis on technical and adversarial procedures and ceremonial trappings. The unnecessary and often hidden procedural baggage would be stripped from the system without diminishing the existing rights of accused persons to defend themselves and to have their views considered by those who judge them. The proposal should bolster the ability of citizens to effectively meet charges laid against them by making the assertion of a defence, of explanation, more convenient, speedier, less expensive and less intertwined with legal technicalities.

While much of our recent legislative reform is towards this end, we have applied the same aim of promoting understanding and easier access to the ministry's role in administering the courts. We have, for example, decentralized the provincial, criminal and family courts from downtown Toronto to the boroughs. The major purpose in this was to move the courts closer to the people to increase efficiency.

On the basis of the success of our development project, the North York traffic tribunal, we are expanding this concept. The tribunal enables people charged with driving offences to drop in for a hearing at their convenience and to enter pleas of guilty with an explanation. This approach is designed, right down to the layout of the hearing rooms, to be informal and less intimidating, to enable the motorist to better understand the consequences of the offence and to improve his driving habits through a classroom course.

The tribunal system has been widely hailed by the people involved and by other jurisdictions which have examined it. My ministry is now expanding it to the boroughs of Etobicoke, Scarborough and York and we hope to develop it further in other areas of the province in the future.

We are also committed to making justice more accessible in areas of the province where the needs of the population require special initiatives. A few weeks after I became Attorney General in 1975 I committed my ministry to developing a program for the use of the French language in Ontario courts. In the summer of 1976 we began a developmental project towards this end in the provincial court, criminal division in Sudbury. This level of the court system was chosen because it is the level with which the public has most contact. In fact, more than 98 per cent of all criminal and quasi-criminal matters before the courts are at this level.

Sudbury was chosen because it had the personnel in the court and in the legal community to test the program, as well as a sizable francophone population that could make use of the service.

We laid the foundations of this program carefully, because we wanted the program to work well from the beginning, we wanted it to endure.

Building on our experience in Sudbury, we expanded the program on June 6, 1977, to two more areas, the judicial district of Carleton and Ottawa and the united counties of Prescott, Russell and L'Orignal. Further expansion took place on October 3, 1977, in the judicial district of Cochrane, and five communities; Kapuskasing, Hearst, Smooth Rock Falls, Hornepayne and Cochrane.

The development of this program has enabled us, in the space of little more than a year, to provide French-language court services to about 66 per cent of those Ontario citizens who speak French only, citizens, of course, whose individual needs in this regard are the greatest.

While we are planning further expansion of this service in the provincial court, criminal division, we are also developing it in the provincial court, family division, and I expect to announce in a day or two the start of the service.

My ministry is also pursuing this issue on a number of other fronts. I have appointed a committee to examine issues relating to the provision of French-language services in the county and district courts as well as in the Supreme Court of Ontario. This committee, chaired by the Deputy Attorney General, has representatives from the ministry as well as members from the Ontario and Quebec legal professions.

Some months ago I asked the federal government to amend the Criminal Code of Canada to permit French-language jury trials in Ontario. The federal government indicated, in a Speech from the Throne a few weeks ago, that it intended to do this and the federal justice minister indicated he would consult us on the form of the amendment. We are now awaiting that consultation.

In the meantime, as the Premier (Mr. Davis) indicated in a statement at the start of this session, the government intends to bring in amendments to the Judicature Act and the Juries Act to facilitate the further expansion of this service.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to mention a recent and important case that has clarified the constitutional position of the Attorney General. The historic office of the Attorney General is vitally important in ensuring that justice is fairly and impartially administered and that proper accountability is preserved.

At the end of July this year, the judicial committee of the House of Lords, the highest British appeal court, gave judgement in the case of Gouriet versus the Union of Post Office Workers. The case concerned a private citizen who sought an injunction against a postal union because of its intended ban on the handling of mail to South Africa. The significant part of the case is that the British Attorney General had refused to consent to the action. The court had to face the important constitutional question of whether or not the courts can compel the Attorney General to give reasons for exercising his discretionary powers, with a view to determining whether the court should override the Attorney General's decision in particular cases.

The House of Lords' decision was unanimous, sweeping and very significant. They said, in effect, that the private citizen cannot under any circumstances, invoke the aid of the civil courts to prevent a threatened breach of the criminal law, other than to protect his personal rights. If the criminal law is actually breached, every citizen retains the residual constitutional right to bring a private prosecution against the offender. But the Attorney General is the only person recognized by the public law as being entitled to represent the public interest in a court of justice; the civil courts may declare public rights only at his insistence. Public rights are constitutionally vested in the Crown, and the Attorney General enforces them as chief law officer of the Crown.

Those are very sweeping statements, but I think they're justified when one examines the role of the Attorney General in maintaining the delicate relationship between the executive, legislature and judiciary.

The Attorney General does have many powers, duties and responsibilities. Any prosecution on indictment may be stopped by him by staying proceedings. He merely signs a piece of paper saying that he does not wish the prosecution to continue. He need not give any reasons. In the exercise of all his prerogative powers, he is not subject to direction by his ministerial colleagues in cabinet, nor to the control and supervision of the courts.

The disgruntled citizen who launched the action in the Gouriet case is reported to have commented as follows: "It now seems that law is no longer above the Attorney General. Recollecting the powerful words of Thomas Fuller 300 years ago, 'Be you ever so high, the law is above you'; the Attorney General has now, by this judgement, been confirmed as being unanswerable to the courts and has taken upon himself a certain divinity."

Mr. Lawlor: We can see it just above your head, like a little cloud.

Mr. Conway: Like the Attorney General.

Mr. Reid: And 300 years later those words don't apply.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: But Lord Fraser, in his judgement, pointed out that the statement just referred to does, indeed, misconceive the Attorney General's role.

Mr. Reid: What does the present Attorney General think?

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I quote this with approval:

"If the Attorney General were to commit a serious error of judgement in the exercise of his inherent powers and duties, the remedy must lie in the political field by enforcing his responsibility to Parliament and not in the legal field through the courts. That is appropriate because his error would not be an error in law, but would be one of political judgement; using the expression, of course, not in a party sense"—

Mr. Reid: You have never been accused of errors in political judgement.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry:—"but in a sense of weighing the relative importance of different aspects of the public interest. Such matters are not appropriate for decisions in the courts."

I mention this to emphasize the importance of this legislative assembly in relation to the role of the Attorney General, because some of them might have to be reminded of the extent of their responsibilities from day to day.

Mr. Conway: Tell us you are a real democrat.

Mr. Reid: You haven't disavowed Fuller.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am exclusively and politically accountable before the bar of this House for the exercise of my discretionary powers. This chamber is where my actions can be questioned and debated in public.

Mr. Conway: So we heard last summer.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Professor Edwards of the University of Toronto added an important rider to this statement when he reminded us that, and I quote from his well-known work on the law officers of the Crown: "The exercise of his discretionary authority by the Attorney General must be challenged and probed vigorously, but members of Parliament, of every party, must understand that in adjudicating on what has happened they, too, are being scrutinized to see if they are having regard to the protection of the impartial administration of justice, or whether, as so often is feared, they are contributing to a degrading of the higher ideals in the favour of more transitory political advantage."

I think we shall see the very considerable effect of the judgement in the Gouriet case over the next few years. Certainly it has brought home to me, once again, the importance of the responsibilities vested in my office; responsibilities which go beyond the mere application of law and the preservation of order, responsibilities which must include guarantees of justice, fairness and due process.

As the chief law officer of the Crown, I am sworn to preserve a delicate balance between the zeal of the law and the demands of justice. My friend the member for Lakeshore is accustomed to enlighten and entertain us with sometimes apt quotations from the ancient masters.

Perhaps I can anticipate him this evening by closing on a quotation from Dr. Leon Radzinowicz, the famous Cambridge criminologist, which encapsulates my concern that a fair balance be struck between the rights of individuals and the rights of society. He said and I quote:

"For all its imperfections, the criminal law is designed not merely as a buttress for the privileges of the powerful, but as a shield for the elemental human liberties of the poor and weak against the assaults of the strong and the treacherous. In that context, the rigour of the law must be seen as an expression of social concern. There is a place for severity of sentence in response to deliberate and callous crime, but that does not mean that we must also accept, let alone collude in, the erosion of criminal justice or deliberate inhumanity in dealing with offenders. To do so is as unlikely as any other approach to bring about a lasting reduction.

It would simply heap other evils on top of the evils of crime."

Mr. Roy: I must admit that I enjoyed the statement by the Attorney General. My colleague the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) will agree with me that we have listened and heard many of these statements in the past. They go on ad infinitum to tell us what is wrong and what they are doing. We have heard a repetition of these statements over the years without really seeing meaningful improvement in our judicial apparatus or in our case flow system within the administration of justice.

I thought it interesting that the Attorney General dealt with the problems that we have underlined, and repeated time and again so many, many times in this Legislature, about the deficiencies in our courts and the case flow, and how our courts are really being burdened, delayed and so on. I was pleased to see the Attorney General deal with some of that; but what was interesting is that he dealt with that and then with the French courts and spent the last part of his statement to tell us how powerful he is. I think it's fitting, therefore, that I should deal with some of the things that he said as "all powerful" and as the "chief law officer for the Crown" in this province.

May I say, Mr. Chairman, I think I should put on the record my congratulations on the appointment of the new Deputy Attorney General.

Mr. Stong: He taught me in law school. [8:30]

Mr. Roy: It is hoped, Mr. Chairman, that by the appointment of Mr. Leal, one who has devoted so much of his life to teaching and to law reform, we'll be in a position—

Mr. Reid: He is now teaching the Attorney General.

Mr. Roy: Not only teaching the Attorney General, but possibly having a close hand on all those reports he chaired and that we saw come across our desks over the years. These reports, which would probably fill the table in front of you, by and large have remained just that, recommendations and reports.

I hope there is some meaning to the fact that this honourable gentleman was appointed Deputy Attorney General, and that his appointment is a signal that something is going to change in our system of justice in this province. I do want to wish him well.

I must say to the Attorney General, as likeable a fellow as he is, that he's been Attorney General since 1975. In the early period during which he was Attorney General, he appeared to be hell-bent on becoming the highest profile member of that cabinet. Certainly he has managed to do that in a very short period of time, to a point where I think many of his colleagues within the cabinet were, if not jealous, certainly expressing some envy at how he was able to seize all those red headlines in the Toronto Star.

Mr. Conway: Now he's got "fruit juice" Frank as competition.

Mr. Roy: My colleague the member for Renfrew North makes a good point, the appointment of the new Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) is going to give you some competition. In fact I thoroughly enjoyed a press conference I saw on a news clip that was aired across the province, where the Attorney General was sitting at the same table with that hon. member and he wasn't saying very much. Frank had the floor, and I tell you he was talking about how the administration of justice was going to be changed. That's not within his field, but he has used your trick, in fact. The biggest headlines you have been able to obtain were by getting noticed in the Provincial Secretary for Justice and the Solicitor General fields; now Frank is doing the same thing to you when he talks about how he is going to make these people work light sentences and all that. It is going to be very interesting to watch these characters work together in the next while.

Mr. Conway: I wonder, is he going to be elected to the supreme court?

Mr. Roy: I don't know if that is a piece of advice that the Attorney General wants to accept, but I do want to say this to my colleague, the Attorney General, in the last while there have been fewer of those headlines in the press and there has been more dedication to the real problems in the courts.

I should review a few of them, because some have been pretty good. Apart from dealing with violence in the courts, which even got you an interview on Hockey Night in Canada—my God, you had Joe Clark shaking in his boots following that particular interview; but there have been lots of those, and I might point out that as far as violence in hockey is concerned your record shows the courts don't seem to agree with you. I don't know if there have been any convictions—

Mr. Reid: The courts have never agreed with him; take the AIB, hospitals—

Mr. Chairman: Order. The member for Rainy River will be able to speak when we go to the individual votes.

Mr. Roy: I don't really want to be that harsh—but I should touch on it, in view of the fact that we have had some time spent on the power of the Attorney General, that's what concerns me about this. As the chief law officer for the Crown you certainly are a powerful individual within this province and have all sorts of discretion, which as you pointed out cannot be challenged; so it is somewhat disconcerting to us to see these comments made here and there. Some of these I should just review.

Just recently, on June 24, the Attorney General reported that he was going to have a crackdown on pornography and that there were going to be tough measures undertaken.

I want to ask, Mr. Chairman, what steps have we seen emanating from the ministry to follow up on that particular statement? On the question of pornography—and that in fact goes on to the question of Yonge Street, I suppose I should mix those two things, because what was concerning us about some of the statements made on that was the statement made by the Attorney General on August 12, 1977. He said he was going to bring in something that he called a padlock law. I think the statement was something to this effect, that they were going to make the owners of the premises responsible for all the activities that went on in those premises.

Then he went on to say that he was going to amend the Municipal Act which would give police authority to padlock the premises where repeated violations occurred. Again, looking at the all-powerful office of the Attorney General, one has to be concerned that we're using that type of bulldozing tactic. In fact when a problem exists, whether it's Yonge Street or pornography or whatever else, there are Criminal Code provisions.

As far as Yonge Street was concerned, had there been proper enforcement of the law, proper investigation by police authorities and so on, this situation would not have progressed to a point where everybody called it a cesspool.

I've got to say, Mr. Chairman, when it comes to something of this nature, when I hear all these municipal politicians and then the Attorney General and then the Premier and everybody get together and say: "a mess Yonge Street is, we've got to clean this up"; I just say to them: "What have you fellows been doing? If you were that concerned why didn't you ask your law enforcement authorities to take the appropriate steps?"

The thing that concerns me, is that all at once there appears to be public pressure. There was a young lad, unfortunately, who was involved in a very sordid type of murder, and of course then politicians were tripping over themselves to make comments about how we were going to do this and how we were going to do that.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that there were laws in place. Had we enforced the laws that existed, we did not have to proceed with such harsh measures. It reminded me of the Duplessis era when he suggested that we have padlock laws. That type of comment is something that is of concern to me as the critic for the justice area in this party.

The Attorney General also expressed some concern about male prostitution at the same time, that was back in August. He said: "I think the Criminal Code is adequate, but the amendments to it deleted parts relating to vagrancy." He wants to bring back the vagrancy sections of the Criminal Code of a few years ago.

"Some of the police forces feel that it has hindered them in fighting prostitutes. I'm considering discussing this with the government."

Under the Criminal Code there now exists section 195, which states: "Every person who solicits any person in a public place for purposes of prostitution is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction." How much clearer a law do we want than that particular law, rather than have the old vagrancy section which said: "Someone found in a public place who cannot give a good account of herself"—it used to just read "herself" at the time?

Basically it was a good law for the police when they saw some characters hanging around to say: "Give us an explanation of what you are doing in this place?" To me, that was not a step forward.

I must tell you, Mr. Chairman, and my colleagues here, I find it interesting that the Attorney General would be concerned and make comments about male prostitution. I can recall, back in 1970, I happened to be defending a prostitute charged under the vagrancy section. The vagrancy section at that time read, "cannot give a good account of herself."

I made a motion in provincial court which was subsequently appealed to high court saying that this law was discriminatory, was against the provisions of the Bill of Rights in that it discriminated against women. In other words, only women prostitutes, female prostitutes could be picked up under this law and not male prostitutes. At that very time, this was back in 1970, the officers of the Attorney General's department were arguing that there wasn't such a thing as a male prostitute, that you couldn't take judicial notice of the fact that there were any male prostitutes.

Mr. Reid: I could make a comment there but I don't think I'd better.

Mrs. Campbell: So could the Attorney General.

Mr. Roy: I find it interesting now that the Attorney General should comment that he is concerned about male prostitution.

Mr. Reid: He recognizes it.

Mr. Roy: I say that one must be careful, if he is occupying the office of the chief law officer of the Crown, about making such statements. The chief law officer of the Crown should not get caught up in the hubbub of political pressure or whatever and start making what I consider to be rash statements. He should look at the laws that exist, and if there is a problem with the enforcement then take appropriate steps, but certainly not make comments about bringing forward such harsh measures.

Mr. Conway: Better the hubbub than the rub-rub.

Mr. Roy: I can recall the Attorney General making comment of late—this wasn't so late—

Mr. Reid: He makes a lot of comments, he doesn't do very much.

Mr. Roy: —when he spoke not too long ago, in the spring, he said to high school students in eastern Ontario something to the effect—

Mr. Conway: Oh tell us about that one.

Mr. Roy: —that he favoured the legalization of marijuana. You recall what happened. As I recall, at that time the Attorney General said he favoured this. Then he went on to say that these drugs should be sold, I think he said over the counter just like in the liquor stores. I can just see the Tory members, the caucus members and the cabinet ministers, sitting on that side and saying, "What's McMurtry done now? He's going to get us in deep trouble." They were working on the basis of an election in the spring and the Attorney General goes out and makes these statements.

It was only the following day when, out of caucus and out of cabinet, the Attorney General sort of backtracked from the statement and said that he really hadn't said that and that he didn't really mean it about selling marijuana or whatever.

I mention some of these comments because this Attorney General has learned that one must be careful if he is the chief law officer of the Crown not to go on a vendetta and not to get caught up in the emotion of a particular situation. As the chief law officer one must reflect on the long term, and when occupying such a position one must be extremely careful.

Looking at the Attorney General's statement here, he started off by saying we share a common concern, and we do. I think the people in the opposition are concerned about the efficiency of the courts and things of this nature. That is something that we certainly share with the Attorney General. The difference is that over a succession of Attorneys General we have talked about this and we've pleaded with them that they are in a position to do something about it and we are not.

If there is procrastination, if effective measures are not brought forward, if you are not getting support from your cabinet colleagues about spending more money for the administration of justice, it is certainly not our fault. In the past I have said repeatedly that the administration of justice is something that is too important to be unnecessarily impeded or curbed by budgets.

We share a common concern, but you are in a position to do something about it and we are not. We will continue to bring that point forward. You should be in the position, with the help and support of your colleagues, to bring forward meaningful measures, and we'll support you.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Have you agreed with your neighbour behind you as to who should administer the legal aid program?

Mr. Roy: We are always in agreement on this. We have never impeded progress whatsoever.

Mr. Stong: That's private enterprise.

Mr. Roy: In his statement the Attorney General went on to say there were improvements and there were marked efficiencies within the administration of justice. If there are, they're not all that apparent. There's a perception out there by the public—

Mr. Conway: I hear you appointed a new barber in Ottawa.

Mr. Roy: I should mention, Mr. Chairman, that those are statements which provoke me, even though they are coming from the same side of the House I am on; I mean when he keeps talking about the new barber.

It's going to be difficult, Mr. Chairman, for the administration of justice or the Attorney General to retain credibility about improvements within the court systems when the government starts appointing Claude Bennett's campaign manager as sheriff in Ottawa-Carleton and you appoint his barber as a small claims court clerk. You know the cynicism on the part of the public, and I know you don't like me saying this, as these are picayune little things—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'll tell you what I was concerned about; I was provoked that—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: May I ask the Attorney General please not to interrupt.

Mr. Stong: Let's have a little law and order over there.

Mr. Roy: I say to my good friend and dear colleague, the Attorney General, Claude Bennett is a wheeler-dealer in Ottawa, but don't let him make your appointments within the court process, because we've got enough problems in Ottawa with the administration of justice without him meddling.

Mr. Eaton: That's for sure, with the federal government.

Mr. Roy: I say to my colleague the Attorney General if the only improvement you can make is to appoint his barber a court clerk, if you don't have more imagination than that, you've got problems.

Mr. Conway: Are there vacancies on the police commission?

Mr. Roy: The Attorney General talked about some of the improvements within the system, and certainly one of the processes instituted in Ottawa, disclosure, was a good one. We call it the pro forma proceeding whereby Crown counsel, defence counsel, the accused and the investigating officer sit together and disclose the evidence and you can eliminate witnesses.

But that is not going to work by itself; in fact some defence lawyers right now are abusing this pro forma. If you speak to some of your provincial judges and your Crown attorneys in Ottawa, you are going to find out some lawyers are using this as a further delay tactic. Delays and postponements and adjournments sometimes are the main weapon of the defence counsel.

Mr. Stong: Sometimes the only one.

Mr. Roy: As my colleague says, sometimes the only one.

So I say to the Attorney General, that system will not work unless you get together with your colleagues at the federal level and say look, I think the preliminary inquiry should be looked at, we should look at the preliminary inquiry mixed in with this pro forma so that we don't just add another procedure to the whole process. If the accused comes in and gets two or three adjournments and then goes pro forma—some don't abuse pro forma to a point, but they don't admit anything, they get the adjournments, the pro forma, the preliminary inquiry and then the trial; in Ottawa, the way things are going, he can put this thing back two years before he even reaches his trial.

Mr. Eaton: Would any lawyer do that?

Mr. Roy: I am asked, Mr. Chairman, would any lawyer do that? I want to say something to my colleague across the way, I want to talk about the question of lawyers and what happens when you get too many lawyers within the system, which is fast happening now.

Mr. Eaton: That would cut down your income, eh Albert?

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, I wouldn't want to get carried away on that appointment; in fact it's not within his ministry, the police commission. On the appointment of my good colleague, the former member for Armourdale, Mr. Givens, I'm sure you had nothing to do with that; we won't go into that.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Was it a good appointment?

Mr. Roy: Was it a good appointment?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, was it a good appointment?

Mr. Roy: Once this is all finished you and I will go outside and discuss it, okay?

Mr. Conway: Tell us about the ones you didn't make.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General talked about some of the improvements in the French language capacity of our courts in this province. I want to say to the Attorney General, sure, since you've been Attorney General there have been more improvements within that field than there had been under your four or five predecessors and that is something for which you should take credit; but I'm just wondering to whom I should give the credit, this government or Rene Levesque for winning the election back on November 15 in Quebec.

Mr. Conway: The latter, the latter.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It started the year before.

Mr. Roy: Yes, you started, but I tell you, you weren't moving very fast when I was talking about the Judicature Act and the impediment in having French language trials, with delays and that sort of thing; and after November 15 those of us that believe in the unity of this country, and I look at my colleague, Mr. Brunelle from the north—you don't mind if I don't use the riding names, Mr. Chairman, I could never get that down.

Mr. Conway: It is Moonbeam.

Mr. Roy: Yes, the member for Moonbeam. You know, of course, I visited his fair riding just before the election; we had this tremendous candidate—

Mr. Eaton: It didn't help you a bit, did it?

Mr. Roy: You only got about 65 per cent of the vote; I think we brought that down.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Come into my riding next time!

Mr. Roy: I think we brought it down.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Roy: We were going to give them a fight in that riding.

Mr. Eaton: He is going to get his rebate, is he?

Mr. Roy: There was only one problem; he promised me he would retire, but he double-crossed us.

I want to say that, sure some of the enthusiasm on the part of this government is due to the pressure that is going on now in Quebec, because it is an embarrassment. It really is an embarrassment in this province, when some of us are fighting for the rights of the anglophone minority in that province, and we see certain bills like Bill 101 which in fact restricts, or in fact encroaches or takes away certain rights which have been accepted since Confederation for the English-speaking minority in that province.

How can I, as a minority in this province, go and tell the majority of Quebecers: "Say look, what are you doing to your minorities?" And they would say: "Well that is funny, the mayor of Hull, just across the river from Ottawa, came into Ottawa and tried to have a trial in French and was thrown in jail because he insisted on having a trial in French." That was embarrassing, that was truly embarrassing.

Mr. Samis: Shameful!

Mr. Warner: Shameful government policy, shameful!

Mr. Roy: The fact is that that is the type of pressure, unfortunately, that is needed to get things going.

So we have a few things here that we have to correct. If this province, this government, and the Premier of this province, intend to go into the province of Quebec and argue against that, argue on the referendum and tell the people how French Canadians are welcome in his province, and then be faced with the embarrassing fact that in the area of education, health, justice and so on there are impediments; that in fact the anglophone minority in the province of Quebec has rights which are legislated, and has rights which we francophones in this province never even dreamt of having. That is why I am saying to the Attorney General, "Until you change some of your laws . . ."—and I am pleased to see, for instance this fall, apparently, you are going to bring forward amendments to the Judicature Act, because you could not be taken seriously about providing French-language services in the courts when you said to the French: "Yes, you can have your trial in French but don't you dare appeal; if you appeal you cannot go any further. You can only have it at this lower level; and don't you try to have a civil case in French because we won't hear you, there is no jurisdiction." So I say to you, these are some of the things, the amendment to the Judicature Act and the Jury Act.

I was pleased to see that in the Throne Speech the federal government finally is going to make some amendments to the selection of juries and other relevant amendments that are going to be in fact proposed. It is interesting that in 1968, when John Turner was Minister of Justice—and went around to get acceptance of the Official Languages Act, that unfortunately he did not receive unanimous consent from the provinces; this province did not show the enthusiasm it should have. Possibly if we had who knows, we might not be facing the problem we are right now with the unity of this country. So I thought I would mention this—

Mr. Warner: Ten years of oppression.

Mr. Roy: —and say to the Attorney General, "Yes, you will get our full support, but let's get on with it, really."

I understand that there are problems. My God, there are problems. I discussed with your deputy what it required even just to translate the laws, that was going to be a problem. But given the will, there is a way. This just started over a short period of time, having trials in French in Ottawa.

Maybe I should recount this; it was an interesting experience, my first trial in French in the courts in Ottawa.

The accused was charged with leaving the scene of an accident. Of course under the Criminal Code he has to leave the scene of the accident with intent to escape civil and criminal liability. My defence was that he didn't intend to escape civil or criminal liability. The fellow with whom he got in the accident wanted to beat him up. He was afraid and that's why he left the scene of the accident.

Mr. Lawlor: Section 17.

Mr. Roy: Yes, that's right. I don't know if it's section 17, I'm not that learned. In fact since they've changed all the numbering on those sections I've forgotten them.

In any event, it was a terrific defence. My main witness was a taxi driver who happened to be there to witness this. I got it all organized. I had this taxi driver as a witness. On the day of the court if he doesn't come in just bombed out of his mind. I knew right then I was finished; there was my key witness, my main witness, who could hardly talk.

The only word you could say in French in this situation, Mr. Chairman, is "caulice". I knew I was going to have a problem, so what I did—"we had a few minutes—" I hauled him upstairs to the police station, poured some coffee into him and I said to him: "Just answer the questions for God's sake." I knew I was going to have to limit the number of questions and all of this.

Finally, the case was called half an hour later, after four or five cups of coffee. I called him up on the stand. Things were going pretty well. He was pretty well behaved and so on. I could see the judge was sort of looking at him sideways and wondering if this guy was okay or if there was a problem with him.

It was all okay; the examination-in-chief, the cross-examination. Things were going just right, until the examination was just over and the judge said, "You may leave now." As he was walking from the dock as a witness he said something to the effect—using the proper expressions of course, with a few "caulices" thrown in—"If I had been the accused I would have smashed his face in." Having said that he fell off the witness stand.

Then there was the matter of asking for a quick adjournment, apologizing and things of this nature and sending this fellow on his way. I thought it was typical of some of these experiences we have sometimes in Vanier and lower town with our good Franco-Ontarians.

Anyway, it worked out quite well.

Mr. Lawlor: What happened, what was the verdict?

Mr. Roy: The judge, being one of your better and good appointments in Ottawa—we have some good appointments in Ottawa—did not let the conduct of the witness and his composure and his expression hamper the case and exercised reasonable doubt in favour of Simphorien; the name of my client was Simphorien.

It was very interesting. If some of you watch Channel 10 there's a fellow on that channel by the name of Simphorien with a little moustache who is always getting into trouble. This guy looked just like him. I think that saved me with the judge. He looked at the same program and said, "This man could not possibly have intent to escape civil and criminal liability."

Mr. Chairman, if I may just mention this to the Attorney General, we appreciate, on this side, the problems he is facing in getting some efficiency, in getting the case flow and dealing with this huge burden of cases at all levels in our courts. We appreciate, as well, the fact of the sanctity and independence of the judiciary from the executive and legislative arm of government; but that doesn't take away from the fact that leadership must come from the government on this; it has got to come. I'm sure that given leadership, and given proper resources by the government, that the chief justice, or the chief judges, and now the associate chief judges—we have associates now—all of these people can be perceived as the ones taking leadership in that field.

We must deal with it. I'm looking at some of the things that judges have said. In the county court system we have judges who say the system is breaking down; county courts appeal for more court rooms in Toronto here. Then they go on to say that the growth of the court loads fulfils predictions.

[9:00]

This is not something new; this is something that we have perceived coming forward for the past five or 10 years. We even had views from the Chief Justice of the province, Mr. Justice Estey, who said at one point that the courts are strained by unnecessary legislation, both from the federal government and from the provincial government. How right he is. From 1971 until now, how many pieces of legislation have we passed, just in this place alone, where we always refer things to the courts? As the judge said, "The federal government and the provinces are straining the courts by passing a lot of unnecessary legislation. Willard Estey, sworn in as Chief Justice of Ontario, used the ceremony at Queen's Park to raise the issue."

Mr. Stong: The new Chief Justice of Canada.

Mr. Roy: This was just back in February. He was just sworn in during February 1977.

Mr. Warner: It is your fault. You are to blame.

Mr. Roy: He went on to say that legislatures have been hyperactive. How true that is. Governments at both levels, trying to fulfil promises or to stay in power or whatever, are cranking out all kinds of legislation whether they need it or not. That's something that has got to be looked at. We have got to accept some of that responsibility right here.

Mr. Eaton: You would have us do 10 times as much legislation if you had your way.

Mr. Roy: He went on to criticize the proposal by federal Justice Minister Basford to introduce a code of evidence for Canada, a move that had been recommended by the Canadian Law Reform Commission.

I have got to say that we perceived some time ago in this province, and even at the federal level, that there would be problems in our courts and that we had to bring our laws into the 20th century. That's why law reform commissions were established both at the provincial level and at the federal level. How many volumes have these people cranked out at both levels, but at this level especially? And of all these recommendations, how many have been brought forward?

I am glad to see, for instance, in the area of family law—certainly that was needed, and the minister got the support of the members of this House.

Mr. Lawlor: They're all needed. Name one that wasn't needed.

Mr. Roy: No, but this is not creating extra work for the courts. In fact, we hope we are taking away work from the courts with that type of legislation. In some of the legislation we are creating work for the lawyers, though; and I don't know whether we should be doing that—

Mr. Eaton: You just finished saying there were too many.

An hon. member: Don't knock it, Albert.

Mr. Roy: Some of my friends say, "Don't knock it," and I suppose—

Mr. Conway: They're too rich as it is.

Mr. Roy: Too rich? My God.

The then Chief Judge of the High Court said something interesting when he was sworn in as well. He said something to this effect: "They will run the damned machinery"—and he's talking about the courts—"to a halt if things don't change." That's what the Chief Judge said. We have had the comments of the Chief Justice and the Chief Judge of the High Court.

"He exclaims impatiently: 'For the past few years judges from every level of court in Ontario have been clamouring about their mounting case-loads, and now Gregory Evans is adding his voice to the outcry.'

"Standing in the legislative chamber at Queen's Park during the swearing in, the Chief Justice made only a mild passing reference to the issue, saying: "Perhaps our Legislature should consider whether they are placing matters before the courts for resolution that could be better settled elsewhere."

He doesn't mince words, however. He talks with a reporter at Osgoode Hall: "Politicians don't move unless they are pushed—" My God you know, how true it is. "Politicians don't move unless they are pushed, he says, enumerating a list of items that politicians at Queen's Park and Ottawa should be pushed on." That's what we are doing here. I suspect the minister is looking forward to pressure and that he is saying as much to his cabinet colleagues when he says in his statement: "Only three per cent"—I think he said—of the budget is spent on the administration—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Across Canada.

Mr. Roy:—"across Canada." In this province the hon. member, since he has been Attorney General, has been losing ground. I believe he used to have five per cent of the provincial budget for the administration of justice; now I think he has only got four per cent. Here's what the Attorney General said on November 11, 1975: "McMurtry"—I don't want to get carried away and use that expression "McHeadline"—"McMurtry says the administration of justice has been given a bloody low priority by all levels of government over the past few years." I just see you shaking your finger saying that.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I was speaking of both sides of the House.

Mr. Roy: "Promising to fight for new attitudes and more money, he said, 'It's a message I've got to get through to my own colleagues.'" He went on to say—and here's a good line: "They are really out of touch."

Back on November 11, 1975, that's what he said. I recall the Henderson report—you recall that kind and good man—the Henderson report said that in 1975 five per cent of the provincial budget was in the Justice field; and now we have gone down to about four per cent, you are losing ground. You are not getting through to these fellows, as you would call them, they are really out of touch.

I am pleased to see there are four or five of them here this evening so that possibly they can relay the message to their caucus or to the cabinet.

Mr. Eaton: We have got twice as many here as you have.

Mr. Roy: I'd love to have the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) sit in on some of these things. I expect that the Treasurer of this province says, "Look, don't bother me about court houses and money for judges; the public will ignore that. Let me build a new wing on a hospital, a bridge or a road or something." That's what he probably says to him. I know you can sit there and say you are doing your best, I am sure you are. Unfortunately, you are part of an administration that's been around for 35 years and you are following a succession of Attorneys General who really didn't try. They didn't particularly care as long as the OPP was paid and they got enough money to name judges and made statements occasionally. In fact they weren't in office long enough to make more than a couple of statements on their way to something else.

Mr. Conway: Fred Cass made a few.

Mr. Roy: Yes, he made a few. I say to the Attorney General you have got to get through to them. We will continue harping and will continue to complain about this because you're not getting across. Possibly you could answer this: Did you not, last year, overspend something like $800,000? Didn't you have to get a Management Board order for something like $800,000? Am I right on that?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There was the dinner for the lawyers in the Legislature, but I didn't think it was that expensive.

Mr. Roy: I hope not, because I heard somewhere along the way that the administration of justice, the Ministry of the Attorney General, had run out of money. I'd like to know, in all seriousness, from the Attorney General, did we in fact run out of money from the estimates of last year? Did you require $800,000 which was spent and which we didn't have a chance to discuss here? These Management Board orders are something that your government is using with a regularity that is somewhat disconcerting. You are spending all this money without us having a chance to look at it. Where did the money come from? Is it part of what they call net cash requirement of the province or the deficit, if you want to use layman's language. Where did the money come from? How was it spent? In fact, are you going to run out of money?

I notice in your present estimates that they're going to be reduced by $2.722 million, due to a transfer of observation and detention homes to the Ministry of Community and Social Services effective April 1, 1977. There you go. I say to my colleague the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell), "We found ourselves $2 million." How much were you short in your estimates? About $100 million?

The Attorney General's ministry is suffering from the whole administration of this government. In the good years — and I recall the good years — but what couldn't you do with $500 million now, eh? What couldn't you do with that kind of money? Where were you when Darcy, before the 1975 election, said: "We'll reduce the sales tax from seven to five per cent. We'll give out these rebates on the sale of cars and stuff like this"?

Mr. Conway: He was getting clobbered in St. George.

Mr. Roy: No, it was 1973 that that happened. I say, in the good years, when I see all the money that was wasted, all that money that was used to buy land all over the place. Remember John White? Every second day he'd say, "Poof; a new city." Claude Bennett would come in here and say, "I've just been appointed to take charge of an industrial park some place."

You know, I'm surprised; I'm surprised the member for Ottawa South (Mr. Bennett) didn't leap on that the other day when he said—I can remember at the time they were buying land down there and somebody had asked—"Hey, is that going to be an industrial park?" And he said something to the effect they've got to have rocks in their heads if they think they're going to have an industrial park there. That's quoting the member for Ottawa South. It was about a month later, Mr. Chairman, that he was appointed chairman of that whole industrial park. As it turned out he was right, they had rocks in their heads because now they're going to use it—what, to grow trees? Is that what; grow trees?

As much as I sympathize with you and your predicament in getting money, I say that you people have been in power a long time. You've wasted a lot of money, and if you had that money now, what couldn't you do in the administration of justice.

Mr. Conway: They could buy the Holiday Inn.

Mr. Roy: That's right, buy the Holiday Inn. I could go on and talk about the problems in the supreme court and county court and provincial court. We'll get a chance to do this, hopefully, as the estimates proceed along.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Have you fellows talked about legal aid recently?

Mr. Roy: Let's talk about legal aid; my colleague is here. What have you done about the recommendations of the Osler report?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: You two guys can't agree.

Mr. Roy: No; we agree, we agree.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Justice Osler was right.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order, please. May I ask the Attorney General and the member for York Centre to please not interrupt the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Roy: I say to the Attorney General, we're going to have to look at this system of legal aid. I want to say to the member for York Centre—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: York Centre? His name is Alf Stong.

Mr. Roy: I want to say to my colleagues there are some changes that we're proposing. We're not talking about the fact that you're going to take it away from the law society. Don't we agree on that?

Mr. Eaton: What is your position on it? Let's hear your position, Albert. Let's hear your position, then we'll see whether it is the same or not. I don't think you know what his position is, Albert.

Mr. Roy: The point that is of concern to you, is that you're afraid to bring forward these increases. They're going to have to be brought forward; we won't in fact be able to tolerate the situation much longer.

For instance, the problem with legal aid is complicated by the fact that there are too many lawyers coming within the system and we're going to see abuses there; that combined with legal aid. In fact legal aid is the area where if you start having too many lawyers it's like having too many doctors. You start abusing the system at public expense.

So, I'm pleased to see some changes; for instance the fact that you have regular duty counsels, I think, in the remand courts in Toronto. I think that we're going to have to look at something to that effect, but I want to say to the Attorney General, we're going to have to look as well at the number of lawyers in this province.

Within a private enterprise system, if it was all legal aid, then we'd have to look at the system, just like your colleague behind you in Health has to look at the number of doctors in the province knowing that every time there's one more doctor in the province it's going to cost the system something like $250,000. You can't do that now with legal aid, because legal aid is a small percentage of the practice. But certainly if there are too many lawyers then there's a tendency to stretch out the cases on legal aid.

In fact I was reading something in the Toronto Star in August which said: "Desperate Lawyers Are Stealing Clients to Get Aid Fees"; or something like that. I could see it starting to happen in some areas. I'd like to have the Attorney General's comments.

Do we just keep cranking out lawyers to go into the system, as we have in the past, and just leave the law schools to regulate the numbers? They only regulate the numbers by the number of seats available, and of course they want to fill every seat there because they are getting more money from this government.

It's a vicious circle this thing. We're getting into a situation over the number of lawyers in this province; just speak to the judges at all levels, in the civil process for instance. I appreciate that we're mending the rules, and hopefully we will be mending the rules with Williston, but there are more motions going on. In some cases it would appear that the lawyers are avoiding fighting the issue in court, instead they're fighting the procedure along the whole process. When we speak to senior judges in certain urban areas of the province we find weekly court days are filled up with cases. We find there are more motions brought on more things, and of course we're not serving the public if we're avoiding the issue of the case.

If lawyers in fact are making their money by abusing the rules of practice, I think we're going to have to look at that. I think these are some of the things we in the administration of justice are going to have to learn. I think that contributes in some measure to the backlog of court cases, to the frequency of litigants within the court process.

If you take a particular case and you bring five or six motions along the way, some of these motions are complex enough to take as much time as a trial or the time it will take to litigate the issues of the case.

I really wonder do we have a system here in this province where we just crank out all these lawyers and say the market will be the system whereby we're going to control the numbers, when in fact the only way you can control the numbers is through the universities. And universities, of course, want the greatest number possible because they're getting more money depending on how many students they have, especially post-graduate students. These are some of the things we're going to have to look at.

Mr. Conway: The member for York East (Mr. Elgie) agrees.

Mr. Warner: Just plead them all guilty and get your court time paid.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Roy: I really think it is the other way around. If there is going to be an abuse, if you are short of clients, you will go the other way. You are not going to plead guilty, you're going to stretch out the process. But possibly the member and I can discuss later how in fact the abuse takes place.

Mr. Eaton: You seem to know how it's done.

Mr. Roy: You see as a critic I don't live in a vacuum and in a cocoon like other people do, I watch the process. I want to contribute to the process. If you want some enlightenment, I don't want to take the time of this House but you and I maybe can talk afterwards as well.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say something, finally, about the court situation in Ottawa, and I've talked about it in the House before. I suppose the situation in Ottawa reflects in some measure the general situation; and it's a question of degree, but it is possibly worse in Ottawa than it is in any place else. We've been promised new court facilities for the last 10 years and we're not going to get them.

We have a system complicated by the fact that we appear to have less judges now, in 1977, than we had in 1970; yet the number of cases has increased possibly 200 per cent.

Then there's the other situation in Ottawa, that is a problem of two judges.

I want to talk about the situation in Ottawa just briefly and to tell the Attorney General it is not a good situation at all. First of all, we have the problem of facilities. You have had discussions with some of the barristers down there about facilities which are not adequate. There is some talk you are going to take those courts and put them out in the west end some place. Of course the bar association is against that, and there is some measure of merit to what they are saying. Why should we decentralize this? Why shouldn't we try to keep the whole court process within the core of the city where it is easier to reach by public transportation? It is easier for the whole process to be more effective when it is all working within a particular area. That is what we have here in Toronto and in most major urban centres.

Basically, you have that in downtown Toronto; and I don't know too many major urban centres where you have decentralization as we have it in Ottawa, with the provincial courts in the west end and the family courts in Bronson and the supreme court on Bailey, and some other courts in a Holiday Inn on Dalhousie. I want to say to the Attorney General that what they are concerned about, of course, is if they accept that they are going to be caught permanently and they will never get their court house.

So I make this suggestion to you, and somebody suggested it to me the other day; The federal government is building what is called the Rideau Centre in downtown Ottawa. There are going to be stores in it and it is right downtown, near Sussex and Rideau.

Mr. Conway: In Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: Well sure it is in Ottawa East. The only buildings I can get in Ottawa East are federal buildings, I have not been too successful on the provincial side.

So I want to say to the Attorney General, there is a federal building going up there. Why couldn't the province rent facilities from them? They have not yet started building. They could tailor-make the facilities so they would be adequate for court facilities.

In fact I was in court today and you had better hang on. There will be a rough grand jury report coming out—not a grand jury, but the people who replaced the grand jury and who tour the facilities now. I was in court today when they walked in—they were up at Rideau Trust trying to find an accused who was hiding behind a pillar, that's the way it is in the Rideau Trust building. But seriously, let's look at that. Why couldn't there be some agreement worked out with the province and the federal government pertaining to the Rideau Centre which is going to go up shortly?

In the meantime we have a couple of court rooms to tide us over up until we get the Rideau Centre built. It is an improvement. A new judge has also been announced, a new judge will be appointed; that certainly will be an improvement.

But you see we are in a situation, with these two judges, where, every second day there is great competition between the Ottawa Journal and the Ottawa Citizen to see who will come out with the roughest story about what is going on. You know there is now a thing about the judges mixed up with prostitutes; and apparently there was a book out involving certain VIPs and certain senior police officials. You get a headline every second day. Apparently there is also a mixture of prostitution and young people under 16 years of age and homosexuals, and they are relating this to the famous homosexual ring they had last year if you recall. There was an inquiry by the Ontario Provincial Police about some of the activities of the police.

So we are left with a situation, what with these judges and improper facilities, where the atmosphere is not good. I want to tell you, we are going to have to look seriously at the whole process under that Provincial Courts Act and the judicial council.

I certainly have no political points to make by speaking in this fashion on this issue, but let's say the judges involved had been innocent, their effectiveness, their credibility as judges, would even so have been totally and completely impaired. For weeks on end you have headlines saying, "Judges Before Judicial Council." The public assumed as the public often will when the story involves people of authority, people in high places, "Ah ha, they are mixed up in something!"

We are going to have to look at this question of whether publicity, pre-investigation publicity, should be allowed. The whole thing really breaks down when the judicial council makes a recommendation, for instance against Judge Williams, and says he should be for all intents and purposes, fired.

Some legal authorities maintain that under the Provincial Courts Act they didn't have the power to make that recommendation. Their only power was to recommend that there be a public inquiry. That was further complicated by the fact that you said you agreed with them. So the judge read in the press that the judicial council made that recommendation.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Just a second.

Mr. Roy: Didn't you make that statement?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Just on a point of order, that's a serious misstatement of fact, Mr. Chairman. I know it wasn't deliberate, but that is an error.

Mr. Roy: Did you not say that you agreed with the recommendation of the judicial council?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, I certainly did not.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, it's a very serious matter, Mr. Chairman, that's why I want to make the record clear on that. I said no such thing.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Attorney General, that is not a valid point of order. You can correct the record when it is your turn to speak. Would the member for Ottawa East please continue, and the Attorney General will reply when it's his turn?

Mr. Roy: I want to say to the Attorney General, I don't want to get involved in attributing any comments here that you did not make, but you had better check the press. You had better check the press, because you've been quoted in some press stories as saying that you agreed, or some words to that effect, with the recommendations of the judicial council.

I would ask your officials to check the press around that period of time, because I've read reports in the Ottawa paper, and I think in the Toronto papers, about such comments. I don't happen to have them here, but I think you should check that.

Aside from that, the situation goes on. A public inquiry was called for. Mr. Justice Robins was appointed. Counsel was appointed for this judicial inquiry and it's going to be set up. What did we get last week in Ottawa? The terms of reference of this public inquiry came out and the terms of reference included the name of the so-called prostitute. So the next day in the press we had headlines all over the place, where the press got to the prostitute and now she is saying that she had some important people. She said, "If I had known that he was a judge I wouldn't have had his name in my book."

What are we having inquiries for if we're getting into a situation where the press is getting to the witnesses before they get a chance to testify before the inquiry? I really wonder, in looking at this whole procedure of the council, if we shouldn't tighten something up. I don't know if you agree with me that it's a very unsatisfactory situation. The people in Ottawa and in the Ottawa area have been treated every second day since August, to a new headline in one or two of the local papers saying this has happened, or there are VIPs involved, or senior police officials involved.

Last week, as I say, there was a whole story on this girl and how she got involved with the judge. This is before the inquiry takes place. I really think the whole process of this thing has been most unsatisfactory. We're going to have to look at it. It's been unsatisfactory for the whole administration of justice, and I think it's been unfair to that man. I don't want to deal with it at too much length, because I know there's an inquiry.

Mr. Stong: Justice has been side-stepped.

Mr. Roy: Yes, really it has. There's a time when we seriously have to look at some of these things and what is going on.

So if I may end on that note, Mr. Chairman, the situation in Ottawa is not good. I think this inquiry which was set up to look into the investigation by the police is going to be important. As you said, it was based more on innuendo than anything else, but there is competition by the press in Ottawa and they're hell-bent on finding out who those VIPs are. Every second day you hear that the inquiry is going to be stopped because those VIPs don't want their names brought out as being in the book of that so-called prostitute.

Mr. Stong: They're hell-bent on selling papers.

Mr. Roy: Yes. I tell you, the whole administration of justice in Ottawa is getting a black eye. And as I say that's complicated by the fact that there have been delays in our courts and so forth. So I think we've got some work to do and we've got some convincing to do.

If you don't get sufficient funds from your colleague to your right for the administration of justice, it's not because of us on this side. We have repeated these things. You have our full support. It's up to you to be heard by members of your own caucus and members of your own cabinet. You will get our support to do these things. I think it is incumbent on us, because the administration of justice in this province continues to lose credibility and continues to deteriorate. It is not only reflected in the courts, that people are not getting justice within the courts; in fact the courts are becoming an impediment to justice. The whole process suffers along the way, the police enforcement and so on.

I think it's important that we deal with these problems and you have our support to do that. We will keep badgering you, and we will keep harping on these things. You know it is very difficult, because somehow we can't get through to the public on this. If we can't get through to the public in these tough times, we are not going to get through to the Premier, because if there's one who's politically sensitive about what's going on, it's him, and if he sees there's to be mileage in that issue, he'll jump on it.

Mr. Conway: Like the story about the candy and Darcy. If Darcy went "chomp, chomp," I wonder what Roy would do.

Mr. Roy: This party is dedicated to judicial reform and to efficiency in the administration of justice. That's where we see meaningful things.

We saw some of the bills that came forward on small claims and on provincial courts. We, on this side, would have brought something more meaningful to deal basically. I can't understand that the judges, who are critical of some of the things going on in the courts, would not give full support to improvement in some of these areas. So that's the approach we want to take and, hopefully, as we proceed through these estimates, we will have a chance to have a full discussion on them.

Mr. Lawlor: First of all, I would like to welcome Allan Leal in the chamber in his—you can't call it a baptism of fire, he has already been through that several times. I am sure he has been cleansed, that is in another capacity. He may use Irish Spring soap, as does the deputy. Without taking a thing away from Frank Callaghan, the paper that was read tonight had a kind of swing and rhetorical flavour, and what not, which at least I trust, in part, I can attribute to the new deputy minister in this area.

Also I see his hand working through recent legislation that has been brought to us and, by and large, minatory as it may be, it's all to the good as things stand. Recently I took occasion to visit the offices where the Attorney General sits in his eyrie, looking down. It's a fairly noiseless place and, on that ground, I suppose there's something very well to be said about it—

Mr. Conway: Tell us what you were looking for. Was this before the election?

Mr. Lawlor: I was looking for industry and discernment. I found a good deal of the first and a little less of the second. The offices are not exactly sumptuous. As a matter of fact—

Mr. Roy: They are not like the Ombudsman's, eh?

Mr. Lawlor: Well, some of the cubby holes reminded me of the offices that we occupied in the old days.

Mr. Conway: That bad?

Mr. Lawlor: The corridors are lined. The secretaries are exposed to the winds of the open windows. You get a sense of congestion and what not. I just wanted to mention that, I don't suppose with your constraints that much can be done about it. The Attorney General's office itself has one very commendable feature—not commendable in any disparaging way, but commendable in the sense that egotism is not his central virtue; that's very strange in Attorneys General and politicians generally—he had none of his own paintings on the wall. Quite remarkable. He does, however, keep figurines of all kinds, mostly to do with judges. The possibilities there are enormous. We have to keep that in mind whenever he needs a gift. When he departs office one would know no better gift on that occasion. But there may even be occasions in between where a rather colourful and bulbous judge, an extra figure, would repose in his office generally.

The chief article for discussion this year is going to have to be the case load situation. I didn't hear from my colleague any great nostrums as to how this would be handled, nor do I suspect will you hear a great deal from me in a positive way. I think we can mull it over and discuss it.

Before I get into the mulling, I did write your office about two and a half weeks ago asking you to produce a statistical table showing what the case load situation really was, for the purposes of these estimates, as I have done in previous years and received it with fair alacrity. But on this occasion I have to confess I am somewhat disappointed in standing here tonight without that document. I would ask you to do your best in the next few days to get one both to me and to the official critic for the loyal opposition so that it gives us a sense of really what is happening in this particular area. I don't know how we can handle this crucial issue without some figures before us. You have provided a few in your red book, for which again I thank you, and which has some measure of value and which was delivered to us last Friday.

On case load situations, I want to point out that if we did the same thing that I am going to read to you now, we would have equally horrendous results. I am looking at a publication called Current History: World Affairs, June, 1976, which talks about the criminal justice system in the United States federal courts. It points out that in the US district courts, they take their base year as 1960 and the year of determination as 1975. The number of criminal cases in that span of time went up 54 per cent in those courts. But habeas corpus applications under state prisoners went up 799 per cent. The figures all down the page here are remarkable. Criminal cases going to the US Court of Appeals in that span of 15 years went up 572 per cent. Habeas corpus state prisoners to the Court of Appeals went up 685 per cent. I could go on with figures of this kind.

By the way, that's the kind of thing that is peculiar and endemic to the American system, where the prisoner tried in a state court appeals to a federal court and gets himself outside state jurisdiction by advertising to the constitution and calling upon certiorari with habeas corpus in aid. It's a procedural thing; I don't think we use habeas corpus in the same sense or in the same way at all. It's an interesting formal device that they use in those particular courts.

What I am after, though, are these monumental figures of 799 per cent and 572 per cent. For instance, in the United States Court of Appeals the total criminal and civil cases went up 466 per cent. In the appellate docket of the United States Supreme Court, it went up 106 per cent, and in the miscellaneous docket 88 per cent.

Part of the point that I'm seeking to raise in this is that it is not specifically because of Legal Aid by any means that we are experiencing a similar difficulty here. There are a diversity of instances. The press too often and some kinds of statements made by the practising bar—I saw a couple of them in the last few days—I think do a great disservice indeed to the Legal Aid system of this province. If these individuals really want a public defender system they'll get it by withdrawing senior counsel and the highly equipped and perhaps best members of the criminal bar, by pulling themselves out and boycotting the operation.

What is the extent and depth of their social sense and responsibility in supporting this scheme? They slough it off, as I see they're doing, for a little publicity I suppose, and denigrate the operations of the scheme itself in the process. If they want to pull out, so be it. If they think they can make more money somewhere else, that's up to them. But to pillory the rest of the bar and the scheme itself—and this is what wins the newspaper advertisement, not the highly meritorious and equitable work that Legal Aid is designed to do and which it does do—is a grave disservice that they're doing there.

I have with me a text called "Justice Denied: A Case for Reform of the Courts." It's a Penguin publication. It was published back in 1971. It makes some fairly searching comments. True, it's within the American jurisdiction again and, therefore, peculiar to them in many ways and not applicable to us, but in many instances, nevertheless, it is applicable and valuable. I commend the book, if he is not already cognizant of it, to the deputy, to the people responsible in his projects and planning areas and to the Attorney General himself.

I'll just read you a piece which I'm sure has no remote application to us here. "Former Chief Justice Earl Warren of the United States Supreme Court once told a group of judges and lawyers about a study made of a crowded trial court in a large east coast city. The clerk's office was particularly chaotic and backward in its operation. Observers had noticed that one deputy clerk whose desk was next to the wall frequently left the room for short periods in response to a loud knocking from the other side of the wall.

"In due course, the reason for the mysterious conduct was disclosed," Warren said. "On the other side of the wall was the probation office which had a telephone while there was no telephone in the clerk's office. Consequently, knowledgeable lawyers who needed to telephone the clerk would call the probation officer who would knock on the wall so the clerk would come and answer the phone.

"This strange practice arose," Warren explained, "because the clerk did not permit a telephone in his office. He said he was opposed to the telephone on principle." The incident was not from the dark ages. It happened as recently as 1958."

I think you may find here not precisely perhaps the telephone, although that's conceivable too, but very analogous instances of backwardness, of being opposed to some aspects of case flow management, say, of not finding the IBM company wholly compatible within some little demesne down towards Halton and any number of obstructions in the path.

You might even find it at the central office down here, if you look very hard. The smooth-flowing—the use of computer techniques rather than longhand, and the quill if possible, as the best instrument with which to record for posterity everything that happens over the counter. The quick retrieval that occurs when the documents have been lost in somebody's desk in the back office. The numerous instances that one runs into in the process of dealing with the courts.

So you come after a time, and most reluctantly, to think that a certain bone-headedness is operating within the system. I quote from page 139:

"Despite large increases in work loads, the pace of the courts remains traditionally slow. Judges usually do not ascend to their benches before 10 a.m. or stay past 4 p.m. 'You could shoot a cannon off in the courthouse at 4:30 and not hit anyone,' observed a judge in Washington, D.C.

"Lunch hours and recesses are long and the judges take days off in the middle of the week when they want to. Summer often brings an almost complete halt to all but emergency business, as most judges take their vacation for a month or two at the same time. No one in the courthouse supervises judges' working hours or schedules their comings and goings. As one clerk said, no matter how late it is when a judge gets on the bench in the morning, that's when it's 10 o'clock."

There's some horse sense in the little book.

Mr. Stong: Thank goodness that doesn't apply here.

Mr. Lawlor: "Every month in Los Angeles, the backlog of untried civil and criminal cases rose by at least 200, and it is now nearing a staggering 50,000 pending cases."

Last year when you presented your list to me, I was staggered by the 100,000 and some odd pending cases in provincial offences alone in the provincial criminal courts of this province.

"In New York City, about 10,000 defendants are waiting behind bars to be tried, 2,000 of them for periods longer than six months."

One would like to get figures as to how many people are sitting in jail, the Don Jail and the other jails of this province, in proportion to population figures, simply because of the log jam in the courts. That is the most pitiful and the most questionable of all.

"They refuse to admit that the primary cause of congestion and delay in American courts"—in Ontario courts, if I may substitute—"is what it has always been—the base inefficiency and unresponsiveness of the courts themselves and the indifference of a citizenry that refuses both to attack the courts' lethargy and to pay for the increased personnel and modern machinery needed."

That's where the fault lies. What has the Attorney General of this province done about it? Working with the Law Reform Commission, which started its studies in 1970 and completed and submitted its studies in 1973 as to what streamlining and benefits could be brought about, the Attorney General has had a monumental struggle uphill ever since with a vast diversity of obfuscation all the way along the line.

I guess the Law Reform Commission did the best they knew how. They submitted a divided jurisdiction, that the judges judge and the administration administrate. That imported that the Attorney General of this province directly administer the courts. That was one solution. They've tried that. I don't know if it was found wanting or not in the full sense of that word "wanting." Anyhow it has cascaded and fallen and pragmatically has been jettisoned in the last little while out of the central west project.

I've never been quite clear about it. I suppose it's not the kind of subject you can talk about too vocally. It found that the full cooperation of the judiciary wasn't available. It may have gone beyond that. It may be that the court clerk system also has subverted the possibility of getting the court administrator function properly operating.

The concept of the divided jurisdiction meant that you move in in a full way and say that the court administrator will run the courts and shape the courts and the case load will go as dictated and that the judge's job is to be on that bench and to adjudicate, to make decisions and not to set up anything else. That seems to me a perfectly legitimate function which did not in essence impinge upon the role of the judiciary. That was a possibility. But you have to take human sentiment and all the tergiversations of the judicial and other minds into consideration.

Either you take it or they take it. You've gone the second way. I can't take exception to that. I suppose you're going to have to do something, because if you don't get the cooperation one way, you're going to have to another way. You don't extract it, you initiate it. You bring it about through subtlety and by an end run, so to speak. That's what you're doing now. You're saying, "I'm going to set up a council of judges." Then in the last few days you felt that they weren't populous enough, as there were only about six or seven of the poor devils who are going to cover this whole vast spectrum of the courts and their internal operation, et cetera, so you gave them all an associate.

I really question the associate, at least on some levels of the court. At the Supreme Court level I question the associate and maybe even for the county, but not for the other levels. You're adding another judicial officer who is not acting as a judge and you're appointing a man with special competence and expertise in an area where that expertise is not going to be fully utilized. It is very costly to do that. I would have gone slow on that. But there they are. I guess if you start out with a parallel and with an intent of pure logic, you set up all these associate justices to try working through the judicial council with its advisory body the magic of their intercession with the judges themselves.

I suppose again you say it's empirical and that you have to work it slowly to test it because in your white paper on courts administration you make admission and make no commission to rectify the openness of the individual judge acting in resistance to this, which we have no doubt in our minds you're going to encounter in fairly numerous instances.

You think you can sugarcoat the pill and that other senior judges will be able to bring their weight to bear. Lord knows I trust that this will take place because, if it's anything else, the courts are going to go into a very rabid condition indeed. All the faults will accumulate and accumulatively come down on your head in the next two or three years with respect to this business of case flow management.

The other thing I want to mention here is that case flow management is only a very small part, albeit the critical part, because of resistances. But the various other objectives, apparently, have flowed through very well, developing standards for the provincial and family courts.

General management of the court offices by the management team develops out of more effective techniques for allocating the work of court reporters and the preparation of transcripts. We'll come to that, but it's certainly needed. The management team worked on this and apparently came up with commendable solutions and was able to take out a lot of the underbrush and clear the path.

Indeed, development of statistical analyses, methods and techniques is very valuable indeed. That could be extended in the Legal Aid area to determine what lawyers are taking overloads of cases in those particular courts. Their names will come up on the computer analysis of this. If they're taking an overload, of course it simply means they're going to adjourn their case, and if they're going to adjourn their case, they're going to throw the court system out of whack, with interminable delays and the piling up of cases, et cetera.

Also there is the development of evaluative criteria and standards. For years, you couldn't extract what kind of cases and what particular dispositions and how far they got—a hundred other things which are valuable to know if you're going to have proper case flow management have never been able to be extracted from all those musty old files that are interred somewhere, I believe somewhere in my riding, as the court empties itself from time to time.

So what you've come down to is one final matter of these seven or eight points in case flow management. In the course of the debate, we'll come back to what case flow management qua, as such, means, and why they run into trouble in this particular area.

The Attorney General, it surprises me, gives an added turn to the screw in this, saying it is better to delegate to his judicial council the control over courts administration directly, precisely because of his position as Attorney General. He says as a chief prosecuting officer and chief party before the courts, it is better for him not to be directly or immediately involved in many instances when a conflict of interest ensues. It is curious that that argument, which has become paramount now, wasn't that of the Law Reform Commission when they worked it over. Did it not occur to them? It's a great shame we're in this chamber having to debate. You know what an exchange we could have if we were down in our little abode below and one could see the colour of the eyes of the deputy, and your eyes too. But I know the colour of your eyes. I haven't quite looked into his yet.

There was something curious. I wonder what the answer to that particular problem is.

All right, for the nonce. In these estimates at least, and in no others, because the Attorney General is a transcendent figure, raised above mere phrase and petty politics and never seeking a political advantage in the press or in any other way so far as I can discern, I always like to wander off on that tangent which is peculiarly my own and talk about jurisprudential things and things which have no conceivable relevance to anything under the sun, except that, benighted as I am, I think that they are the most important things you could talk about and the closest to reality.

The use of the term reality, incidentally—pace, pace Oshawa—ah Centre. There are layers and layers of that commodity. It may descend to infinity, but in any event there are layers and layers in it. Secondly, it's perspectival. In other words, it depends upon the way you approach it.

It shifts you know; it's a kind of malleable stuffed, reality. When I hear you calling for us, in the family law stuff, as to what the nature of reality is, nothing is more metaphysically abhorrent to me. It should be recognized that a great deal of colour enters even waking light and shapes it.

I want to spend a few minutes talking about the overall budget. I'm going to give a little lecture. When I leave here and I'm finally disburdened of all the enormous chores of the Ontario Legislature, I want to write a book on jurisprudence. The book—at least one of them, there's two of them. The first one has to do with the relations between love and law, a subject of infinite merit and infinite intrigue. It's never talked about in the books of jurisprudence, never. Simon doesn't mention it; Austin wouldn't dream of mentioning it, it's way beyond Austin.

Mr. Cunningham: It would be a great movie.

Mr. Lawlor: Diaz doesn't mention it—and we all love Diaz nowadays, that Australian genius who comes and writes a half decent book on the theory of law. Hartt makes a passing reference to it; Longfuller, close. But none of them really writes about it. This is a taboo subject among lawyers. It might weaken their fibre if they found the milk flowing, so to speak, so they drink either a bourbon or a very wicked gin.

Mr. Van Horne: It's a mother's ruin.

Mr. Lawlor: But you know, I mixed my mother's milk with vodka and it makes all the difference.

I just want to mention that the one guy who does deal with it is a theologian, and this fellow conditioned me. It's the theologians who do all the thinking in the modern world and no one ever listens to them.

A fellow by the name of Paul Tillich, author of "Love, Power and Justice," works out the theme and the inter-relationship. I'll just say one word on it. It's a very curious thing that with Emil Brunner, the Protestant theologian in Switzerland, and in the particular old tradition he represents, these things were thought antagonistic; that justice was a cruel, rigorous, blind, impersonal thing that ran directly contrary to, and was exclusive of, friendship or love.

Societies exist for one purpose and that is to bring men into friendship. Our society, and this is its greatest fault—well it's not its greatest fault, but it permeates it and damns it—our society is inimical, it's basically inimical to human friendships.

The law has a function to play in healing wounds, in uniting—which is the definition of love—and bringing people together. And not by way of antagonisms, by way of adversary systems, by way of espousing and cementing conflicts and tearing them apart. The whole economic system, of course, is this particular way. The businessman deals as a stranger, his flanks would be exposed otherwise. That may not be, and as we evolve, as we move into the new century this, if anywhere, will be the direction of the society; and if it isn't the direction of society, then cataclysm awaits, because the sheer weight of individuals pressing against one another, unless they can find this principle of amity and the law, and the law brings it about and consolidates it and gives it direction, the thing will fall of its own weight, the centre will not hold.

That's one piece of writing. That's too much for tonight.

The other text which I shall never write, but about which therefore I shall talk instead, has to do with the ends of law, which really means the ends of the state; which means, more than that, the ends of society.

Various societies are dedicated to different ends, and at different times in history our society has been dedicated to different ends. The first end that our society has been dedicated to, within the last 100 years or so, is freedom. It was a liberal philosophy—that was what the law was about—to enfranchise freedom, to make people free; and to the extent that it imposed upon them and made them that free, it was invalid law or at least questionable and not to be passed. It went too far, of course; it went into laissez-faire things where people were able to victimize others because the weight was lifted.

A curious thing—and I won't spend a good deal of time about this—a curious thing about freedom is that it has two different definitions which are mutually exclusive. One is the liberal definition that you do what you like; that's John Stuart Mill. The other definition comes from Hegel largely; Spinoza worked on it but in political terms it comes largely from Hegel. It says that freedom is the ability to do what you ought to do. The one leads into totalitarianism, because the imposition of authority tells you what you ought to do. But if the "ought" comes from you—the Roman Catholic position is closer to the second than the first, incidentally. They call the first licentiousness—licence, chaos, anarchy.

Mr. Conway: You know how we Catholics are, though, Patrick.

Mr. Lawlor: The next theory—there are five of them—is the utilitarian theory with the greatest general happiness. Happiness in the utilitarian theory is identified with pleasure; in Bentham it was identified with a very material and sensuous pleasure. I mean, you really sucked the apple.

Mr. Conway: Tell us about the hedonistic calculus.

Mr. Lawlor: With Mill, that angelic creature, it became more rarefied and pleasures became full of qualities, et cetera, so they no longer resembled pleasures at all. But he was able, therefore, to keep the theory going. The maximization of pleasure is the end of society and the end of the law. That's all utilitarian theory, which ruled very largely through the 19th century.

The third theory has to do with justice; that's the socialist theory basically. It has to do with equality. The law is designed to make human beings equal. Everyone concedes that human beings, all of us, are in some ultimate and fundamental way, which is very difficult to describe, equal. We have peculiar talents. These are gifts given to us—quite different gifts given all the way around. They're nothing we have particularly earned, you know; they're inborn. You can develop them; if you don't develop them, then you are in trouble—you are wretched. So it's the process of development that counts if you want to be given any particular benefits by it by way of justice, et cetera.

It also has to do with equality and with the doctrine—and Allan Leal will appreciate this—of fairness. An American professor called John Rawls is working on a theory of justice along those lines which we will, if we persist in future years, spend a half hour on. I shall send you the text. You can spend an evening or two reading it and we will go back downstairs where it's possible to talk about these things in a decent way and get these estimates off to a decent start.

The fourth theory has to do with the common good. Common good is natural law theory and it's under some sort of a cloud at the present time. It is usually identified with one great figure, Aquinas, because he was a superb spokesman in some respects of the theory. What he said was that men as distinguished from animals and plants—and Locke can go blow his horn, because he took natural law as pervading the universe—that men have natures; that there are certain orientations, activities and states of mind that we all share in common; and that human development does take place along, not predetermined but predictable, or more or less variably predictable, paths. The law would be designed precisely to aid in that particular form of development, for men to come to maturity; which most people never do, of course, it's a very difficult task.

Mrs. Campbell: Especially men.

Mr. Lawlor: The second process is in terms of sociability. I always spend a lot of time with this. You can read my book, if it gets published.

I say that human nature is different from what Aquinas said. He had a very static notion of rationality, of what was reasonable and what was not. I think that human nature can be learned mostly from Karl Marx, the young Marx before he became quite rabid and thought he had the class struggle under control. The young Marx was a man who argued about the unlimited nature of human beings; that we are incomplete, that we complete ourselves in the future, and that the whole human condition is one of development and constant dynamism. He did this in societal terms.

The second guy, of course, was Freud; not holus-bolus but in the fact that he recognized dimensions in us which we don't recognize ourselves—the whole operation of repression, instincts, et cetera, and the unconscious which have tremendously powerful influence. If you take that wider ambit of human beings having intrinsic to their quality these various factors pointed out by these two very great men, then you begin to have a theory of human nature which would be a natural law theory; then the theory of the common good, on development of that, would become palatable, quasi-scientific to a point and what not.

The last area I want to mention is the positive. The end of law is order. That implies a master-slave relationship, a business of law being a command or being an imperative, a sense that obedience is the chief virtue of a citizen. Not critique, not looking at things developing on their own hook; that was the theory of law down to our own day, and it still presides in our law schools. Because we teach very little or no jurisprudence in the law schools, it continues to prevail. They all take the law as it is; that's what the law is. The theory that was taught here by Austin and is to this day taught by the leading jurisprudential man in the world; H. A. L. Hartt, is precisely that.

They go off in some ozone, some kind of abstract theory. One guy always talked about commands, the law being an order backed by a threat. It is called the gunman theory of law, that is what a gunman does. While it was rejected by Hartt at Oxford, at the same time he went off on the theory of rules, where the law is a particular mixture of primary and secondary rules, of obligation, secondary recognition, adjudication, et cetera.

We won't go into all that rigmarole, but you can see how abstract it gets. It has nothing to do with content, it's highly formalistic; what this positivist theory does is rule most of sociology, rule most of the human sciences, and it has penetrated into law.

It does so under the guise of science. Science is not concerned with values, it doesn't seek to say what the ends of human action are, or to weigh them and say one is better than another or anything of that kind at all. It simply deals with what is and analyses it just as it appears. You don't go beyond that or you don't go behind that. That approach to law means that if you get a fair number of lawyers practising who have no sense of the valuational structure inherent in the law itself, even in terms of the ethics of the profession this is highly deleterious because they think that law is a neutral mechanism and therefore whatever utilization they make of it is equally neutral. Quite wrong, and we suffer the consequences.

These theories, however theoretical, may have immediate practical impact on our lives. I thought I would take a few moments off on that.

To come back to—not reality, I was with reality—to come back to a diminished form of reality, namely this place and our estimates tonight, there are a wide number of things we could bring up. You've done a fair amount of work on the racist stuff that's happening all around us. Certainly your heart is in the right place. There's not much that you can do, really; it's the Criminal Code, and the criminal law and the people in Ottawa are going to have to move in by amendments to that Code, I think, with respect to this racial business.

But in terms of the application of the law, that recent rather thick report with yellow covers came out the other day; it was circulated among the members of the House, I think,—at least I got one. It makes a severe critique of the police and their operation, but it goes rather lightly on the courts, as a matter of fact only one page about it. The reason the man who wrote the report gives for thinking that way is because of the obtuseness of the police and their obstruction in many of these cases where people have been assaulted, had their property damaged, and suffered brigandage, and an almost criminal libel; the police take no action, they slough it off. The reason, he says, that it probably hasn't affected you all that much in a direct way is because it never gets to the courts.

They give an instance of a judge, I think in Kitchener, who overstepped the line by some incendiary remarks with racial undertones, but that's as far as it goes in that particular report.

Nevertheless, Wally Pittman will be issuing his report very soon too; and the Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto has written quite a good report also, working through a former member of the Human Rights Commission.

I would just simply say that you, in your consultations which you have in this little committee, can bring greater weight to bear on the Solicitor General (Mr. MacBeth) with respect to racial instances, to have the police lay the charges themselves, or through the Crown attorney.

They very often send off the individual, because—we know why, the overload of the courts. The relatively petty assault, and not assault occasioning bodily harm, is sent off. They are told: "You go personally and lay a personal, private complaint with the justice of the peace." Maybe in racial instances this ought not to be done. It should be laid by the police through the Crown attorney and handled by them in a direct way in the court to give particular emphasis to this particular kind of thing.

The other way is what's happening at the present time and that's a mistake. Perhaps if you could—you do send out your directives from time to time, always very cloaked and secretive, but they do come into our hands, what little directions that you give to your Crown attorneys; they should be public documents. In this instance I would commend one to you, namely this particular one.

Just two further areas: The vandalism, of which you are aware and which you've made public statements on, is a matter, again, that is going to require particularly cognizant and strong measures by the courts themselves.

You mentioned, tonight, decriminalization. Of course that normally means crimes without victims and that many of these crimes should be removed from the statute books, et cetera. There are a number of ways in which the court congestion can be relieved and one of them is, of course, the vast number of highway traffic cases that are tried.

I think I mentioned this on a previous occasion. Some thought is going to have to be given to setting up some kind of tribunal apart from the courts to try cases, at least those under a certain monetary figure. It's all highly mechanical now and highly repetitious, and it could be done out there in a way that would relieve the courts. If you did that alone, the number of cases that are being tried arising out of highway negligence would drop. This would be resisted mightily by those people who are employed in this particular area, but I think they would do well enough in the kind of tribunal I have in mind in this particular area.

Mr. Roy: You are not suggesting that we nationalize the whole insurance plan, though?

Mr. Lawlor: I think you will get a report of a select committee of this Legislature fairly soon in which unanimously they will agree to do so.

Mr. Roy: Unanimously; I look forward to that.

Mr. Lawlor: Unanimously; once Vern Singer left it became unanimous. Vern was so opposed to it he wouldn't even let the committee go and visit the western provinces.

Mr. Roy: That would be contrary to some earlier statements made by yourself where you said you were against it.

Mr. Conway: Oh to have the former member for Wilson Heights with us.

Mr. Lawlor: You mistake jocularity for intent, I can tell you that.

Mr. Conway: The question is what is in the speech?

Mr. Lawlor: So do most other people, so we have to live with these things; in paradise we will be able to say what we like.

Mrs. Campbell: In what words?

Mr. Lawlor: I think I mentioned that in Switzerland this particular area was interesting, because the Swiss law was changed so that you sued not the other party in an action but the insurance company of the other party, you sued them direct. Immediately upon that being done, the case-load fell somewhat monumentally and settlement ensued. They only had two cases in their courts at all levels of tort negligence in automobile accident claims in Switzerland the year we were there.

Mr. Roy: What did they do, Pat?

Mr. Lawlor: You sue the insurance company direct and you don't sue the other party.

Mr. Roy: Especially if you've got the jury system, no less.

Mr. Lawlor: The insurance people were so exposed to all these writs and suits, et cetera, and in order to avoid same they settled. They wouldn't get themselves into the position—

Mr. Roy: It's not a bad idea.

Mr. Lawlor: There's some psychological—maybe they are tougher fibre over here, but I don't think there is anything tougher than a Swiss insurance agent.

I take it all back. Anyhow, maybe they are willing to expose themselves to that more.

Mr. Roy: Especially if you get the jury system.

Mr. Lawlor: Of course if you had a full theory of no fault insurance too, there would no longer be the necessity and your whole problem would be solved overnight.

Mr. Conway: Have you and Renwick made your minds up on that yet?

Mr. Roy: Methinks he lacks enthusiasm.

Mr. Lawlor: Complete no fault, that's what I said.

Mr. Lupusella: The legal profession would be going bankrupt.

Mr. Roy: It's not that at all, we are defending the right of the individual.

Mr. Lawlor: Just before I sit down, Williston is acting on the rules, and it was interesting to me what the member for Ottawa East said about motions, et cetera. We all know the business about being motioned to death, where there are lawyers who will drive you right down the well into the shale with motions. He raises a motion a week and he beats you to a pulp and you throw in the towel—well you don't, really, but you bloody well consider it.

Something has to be done with them. One of the things that might be done, while I concede what you say about some of them being more important or taking longer than the trial itself, is that the motions should be all tried at one time. If he wants to motion, he's got all six of them so he can string the thing out and make himself some extra fees and pretend that he is doing something when he is doing very little. Those motions should be tried all at once. You bring all your motions together at once and then you go to trial. You don't string them out week after week and tie up everything in that particular way.

Then you would see what efficacy the motion really had; whether it was serious or non-serious, whether he was pulling them out of clean air in order to play games or not. That would be possibly a beneficial move in this area.

As I say I hope that Mr. Williston is considering this sort of thing, because nothing adds more to the costs of litigation than that particular practice. I think the practice in many instances is unwarranted. It's a way of tying up the courts, tying up the judicial personnel.

Mr. Roy: We should have four rules.

Mr. Lawlor: All right, I guess we can get started.

Mr. Chairman: Would this be an appropriate time to—

Mrs. Campbell: Are you going to reply?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, I think it is unlikely, at this late hour, or even if it were the beginning of the day I doubt I could rise to such dizzying, intellectual and rhetorical heights.

On motion by Hon. Mr. McMurtry, the committee of supply reported certain resolutions and asked for leave to sit again.

Mr. Lawlor: On a point of order, when does the committee meet again?

Mr. Roy: That is a good point.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. Lawlor: I'm not clear as to when this committee meets again; I would very much like to know.

Mr. Breithaupt: I believe that the committee is meant to meet on Wednesday afternoon, when the House will be sitting; unless, as I understand it, there might be a motion of no confidence, which the member for Lakeshore's party may bring. I don't know whether that is the case or not, but should that not be the case I presume that in fact the committee will deal with the estimates of the Attorney General on Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, just one word, if there isn't a motion for no confidence already, then I damn well will see that there will be one, because we agreed not to sit on Wednesday.

Mr. Roy: I don't mind. I will be here Wednesday. I want to put it on the record that I will be prepared to sit on Wednesday.

On motion by Hon. Mr. McMurtry the House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1977

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, today at the appropriate time I will be presenting to the House for first reading a bill that will provide the basis for municipal elections in Ontario.

This bill replaces Bill 49, respecting municipal elections, which will not be called for further reading. We came to the conclusion, following the very useful exchange of views after Bill 49 was circulated, that the best approach was to prepare a completely new bill. This bill embodies the further recommendations of the joint election committee of the Association of Municipalities of Ontario and the Association of Municipal Clerks and Treasurers of Ontario for amendments to municipal election procedures, as well as the recommendations of more than 200 municipalities responding to Bill 49 over the summer and into the fall.

Many changes and new proposals have been incorporated in the new bill. The most significant is the change in the municipal election date to the second Monday in November, with a December 1 commencement date for municipal councils. With the assistance of the joint election committee, we have been able to adapt the election process to the earlier date without any deleterious effect on essential procedures. At this time we believe this change is the earliest possible within the constraints posed by these procedures.

Two innovations in the bill include an amendment to dispose of the use of a poll book at municipal elections—a less time-consuming process has been devised which will be particularly beneficial where vote recorders or voting machines are used; secondly, the requirement that the preliminary lists be posted in each polling subdivision has been replaced by the provision that at least two copies of the complete preliminary list will be posted in conspicuous public places in the municipality.

A further amendment I would like to mention deals with handicapped electors. The legislation has been amended to permit any handicapped elector to have a friend assist him in voting. Also, the language of these sections has been modernized.

Several other changes are procedural adjustments designed to complement the change in the election date. The remaining changes depart from proposals in Bill 49 and return to the existing provisions of the Municipal Elections Act. The latter reflect strong municipal opinion favouring some of the existing procedures regarding such matters as the polling hours, advance polls and recount procedures.

I am confident that the bill now before the Legislature represents, to the greatest possible extent, a consensus on appropriate and workable municipal election procedures.

In closing, I would only like to reiterate my earlier comment to the Legislature when introducing Bill 49, that it is important that this legislation be considered and finalized this fall to allow sufficient time for all those affected by the Act to become familiar with its provisions prior to the 1978 elections.

INCOME TAX DISCOUNTS

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of each year, income tax discounters open for business in major Ontario centres. In makeshift store-front offices they offer consumers an instant cash rebate for the purchase of income tax and similar refunds.

For providing this service, these operators charge heavily—often up to 50 per cent of the face value of the refund. For example, if a taxpayer receives 60 cents on the dollar from the discounter this would be in effect an interest rate of 800 per cent per annum, assuming the refund from National Revenue is issued in a month.

Five other provinces have enacted legislation to force this type of operation out of business, or to reduce excessive profits by limiting the amount of the discount. Because they find it difficult to survive in other provinces, these operators are moving into Ontario where there is currently no legislation.

The federal government's proposed Borrowers and Depositors Protection Act would have included tax discounting as a lending transaction and would have limited the amount of the discount. However, at this time it seems unlikely that this Act will come into effect in time to protect those who, because of urgent financial need, become prey to this form of exploitation.

Therefore, because this government sees the necessity for an immediate and effective solution to this recurring problem, I will introduce, later today, the Income Tax Discounters Act, 1977. This Act will limit the amount of the discount to five per cent. In other words, the discounter must pay to the taxpayer at least 95 per cent of the anticipated refund. If the refund is greater than the amount calculated on the return, the excess must go to the taxpayer.

In keeping with my desire to provide consumer redress wherever possible, the Act will authorize provincial court judges to order restitution when tax discounters are convicted. For the purposes of enforcement, the order may be registered with the appropriate court. In addition, fines of up to $5,000 may be levied on convicted parties. We had considered the alternative of registering and licensing these discounters. However, this route creates another expensive level of bureaucracy. More important, the mere registration of such operations would not provide any direct consumer protection or means of redress.

I hope that all the members of the House will share my concerns in this matter—

Mr. Lewis: Your concerns? It is the member for Hamilton Centre (Mr. Davison) who fought this battle; he fought this battle.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —and will appreciate the urgency required. I look forward to their co-operation. We would like to have our legislation in place for the upcoming tax season.

ORAL QUESTIONS

GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the provincial Treasurer in regard to some positions he has taken, notably in his speech of October 25 to a joint meeting of the engineering and managerial organizations operating in Ontario.

Can the Treasurer explain why it is he seems to feel that freer trade is absolutely inevitable as a result of the negotiations to take place in Geneva, and why he feels that Ontario's only response to this has to be basically to stop what he calls our wishful thinking and simply get ready to accept it? Why does he feel that it is so inevitable? Does he not recognize the very serious deleterious effect this could have on employment, particularly on the manufacturing sector in this province.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I don't say this in any way critically, but I don't think the Leader of the Opposition, if he would take the time to ask, would find any responsible political or business leader, or perhaps even labour leader in this country, who does not feel that the Geneva talks will lead to a lower level of tariffs world-wide.

I think that has been inevitable since the great success of the Kennedy round some 15 years ago, and I think it has been apparent for the last year or two years that there is a determination on the part of our principal trading partner, the United States, and our second and third trading partners, the European Economic Community and Japan, to see some lowering of tariffs, particularly in the industrialized world.

President Carter moved very decisively after his election a year ago to appoint Mr. Strauss, a very leading figure both on the American political scene and within his party, who had been engaged previously in the GATT negotiations. I think it is generally accepted that he was given a strong mandate to push ahead.

I would be glad to debate that point with the member but, as I say, I think there are few responsible people who do not feel that GATT will produce lower barriers.

What is completely uncertain, I suppose, is how good a deal or otherwise our negotiators at Geneva will secure. Obviously, we have to have continued access, to the United States in particular, and to the European Economic Community, for some of the things which we export and on which our success as a country has been built. It will be important for us to hold onto those advantages if they're there, and if possible improve those advantages. There are a number of areas where we would like to see lower tariffs on Canadian-processed or Canadian-manufactured goods going into the European Economic Community, the United States and Japan.

If we are to achieve that, then I think our negotiators would tell us that we are going to have to give to get, if I can put it that way. I think it is inevitable there will be reductions on tariffs of some things coming into this country. On the surface at least, if not deeper, this is going to make life more difficult for present Canadian manufacturers operating in domestic markets or attempting to replace imports, or for that matter attempting to export.

Frankly, I think that to look at it any other way is to be putting one's head in the sand; and that's not something which I would suggest to the Leader of the Opposition even on a Tuesday afternoon.

What we have been attempting to say and to point out is that the recent devaluation of the Canadian dollar to the tune of 12 or 13 per cent has given Canadian exporters and Canadian import replacers a competitive advantage in the short and medium run which is probably greater than the tariff cuts most of them can expect on certain lines.

I think it's very important that Canadian national policy and provincial policy work to maximize the advantage which has been obtained in devaluation. I think it's terribly important that governments commit themselves to freeing up capital and human resources to our manufacturing industries particularly. I think it's terribly important that we create the climate in this province and in this country in which those manufacturers and processors can operate with some certainty and some degree of knowledge of certainty for the future.

I think it is important that we continue, in this province at least, and in the country, to maintain a balanced and equitable tax structure which is competitive, and which in our view is as good if not better than that of our major competition in New York, Michigan, Ohio and neighbouring states in particular. By capitalizing on our advantages and not simply going about saying "Freer tariffs are not inevitable," and putting one's head in the sand, we have great opportunities.

Mr. S. Smith: I have a supplementary. Since the Treasurer did accept in the earlier part of his lengthy statement that the negotiators on behalf of Canada might exert some influence on the ultimate results from Geneva, and since Canada's chief negotiator is rather well identified as a man who favours freer trade, would the Treasurer not consider, on behalf of Ontario, publicly raising our voice—both as the Legislature of Ontario and as the government of Ontario—to encourage the Canadian government to take more of a protectionist stand at Geneva than its negotiator might be inclined to do?

Mr. Lewis: I can't keep up with this. It's too much.

Mr. S. Smith: Shouldn't we go on record in this regard, given the fact that we stand to lose so many jobs at a very difficult time in our history?

Mr. Lewis: Grit protectionist and Tory free-trader. What's the world coming to? I can't cope. Help!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, there is no evidence to suggest that the ultimate advantages of freer trade to Ontario and to Canada will not be beneficial both in terms of jobs and in terms of a better standard of living. Where we have moved—and we have seen that since the original GATT negotiations—we have achieved some success. Certainly my colleague will be pointing out to Ottawa areas of potential weakness, areas where tariff reductions should not perhaps be considered, areas where tariff reductions may be possible if they are phased, areas which will require transitional assistance from the senior governments; and that is the very business that we are all about. It is the business which my colleague and myself and others are very much engaged in; and indeed which the Canadian Manufacturer's Association, among others, have engaged in, I would think, for two or three years, making those very points to Ottawa. Ottawa is in the process of attempting to sort those out, I assume, before they give their final instructions to their negotiators at Geneva when they get down to the serious business, probably next January.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that neither the Treasurer nor the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett) have given any clear indication of which industries Ontario would wish to see favoured in the tariff cuts and which industries it wants to see thrown to the wolves, will Ontario have a representative or an observer with the negotiating team in Geneva in order to communicate this non-policy?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, we have not been so asked by Ottawa. We can only make our best input, which we will continue to do, and be available for consultation with Ottawa as the negotiations proceed. However, I think the decisions will be made relatively quickly. I would only point out to the hon. member that I can't think of anything dumber than for me to stand in my place, or for the Minister of Industry and Tourism to stand in his place, and say this is an industry which you should protect and this is the one that you shouldn't protect. You just don't negotiate those sorts of things in public. I can't really imagine a dumber suggestion than that which I have just heard from the hon. member.

Mr. Cassidy: How about having a policy?

Mr. Peterson: I'll see if I can go one better.

An hon. member: You will, Dave; you will.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary, to the Treasurer, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that the Treasurer is seen in all of the speeches that he is making lately as the champion of free trade, and in view of the considerable amount of correspondence both he and I have had from small independent manufacturers who—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: One letter.

An hon. member: Is that all you got?

Mr. Peterson:—see him as their enemy, would he not agree that he is part of the crisis of confidence in the investment community and in the small manufacturing sector in this province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: David, I didn't think you would, but you did.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I suppose, there was a day when as a young man, I would like to have been characterized as a proponent of free trade. I don't think even my critics at this moment, other than the member who has just put his foot in it again, would describe me as a proponent of free trade. A proponent of freer trade, yes—and one who is doing his best to say that we can't just sit back and put our head in the sand and think that the world is going to look after us. That may be the policy of the Liberal Party, but it is not our policy.

Mr. Davidson: Mr. Speaker, if I may ask a supplementary: Given that Mr. William Berry, a director of the Canadian Textile Institute, totally disagrees with the policy the Treasurer has, and suggests that 200,000 Canadian jobs would be lost in the textile industry alone as a result of his proposal—a good number of those in the province of Ontario—can he tell us what job programs he has to replace the people who are going to be thrown out of work by the type of program he is proposing?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen those views, and at first blush I would not agree with them. The Minister of Industry and Tourism has, along with his colleagues from Quebec, been successful in negotiating a quota system for textiles. I think that does give us an opportunity in that area. I was interested to see this morning a copy of a letter which was addressed to the Premier, with copies to the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett) and myself—from another Canadian industry not unrelated to textiles—saying: "We are six pretty strong manufacturers of a certain item; we've come together in effect to form a consortium, to rationalize. We think we can meet the competition. We don't know that we can meet all the competition from the Third World, but we can certainly meet the competition from the EEC, from the developed world, from the United States. We recognize that it's inevitable, we may need some help; will you give us a hand?"

That's the kind of attitude I want to see out there, and that's the kind of attitude we are seeing out there. Canadian people can compete in world markets and they'll do a darn good job of it. But they won't do it with the carping that's coming from over there.

Mr. Sweeney: Given the fact that slightly in excess of 50 per cent of all the manufacturing in Canada is done in this province, would the Treasurer not agree that Ontario has a greater stake in these negotiations than any other single province in Canada? Would that not give him a legitimate position to go to the federal government and say that Ontario particularly wants to have a voice in these negotiations?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what we've done. We've been making representations. Of course what the members don't understand over there is that when we make a point of view, we make it public; we release our papers, we make speeches public and we tell the people what we're up to. If I just kept my mouth shut there'd never be a question on this subject because the members opposite haven't got the brains to figure it all out.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This isn't an orderly way to carry on the question period. Does the member for Armourdale have a supplementary?

Mr. McCaffrey: It's a new question.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: That's enough supplementaries from that side on this subject.

CANSAVE FUNDS FOR INDIAN CHILDREN

Mr. S. Smith: A question of the Premier, Mr. Speaker: Is the Premier aware that money for lunches for the Indian children on Whitedog and Grassy Narrows reserves is being supplied by Cansave on the same basis which it funds Third World countries? Does the Premier not agree that things have reached a pretty sorry state in Ontario's treatment of native peoples when an organization like Cansave, which is mostly devoted to the Third World, finds it necessary to fund lunches for Indian children at Grassy Narrows and Whitedog?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of this—

An hon. member: The province of opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'd be quite prepared to look into it for the hon. member and have some information for him just as soon as I get it.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, is there not in the Premier's cabinet a chairman of all the matters dealing with Indians—I believe the member for Cochrane North (Mr. Brunelle)? Might the Premier not at some point consult with him to find out why in this province today it's necessary to have lunches funded by an organization supposedly designed to take care of the Third World and underdeveloped nations? Isn't it about time Ontario took its responsibility in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member didn't understand my answer so I will repeat it. I will be quite prepared to get all the information I can for him on this subject. I won't bother to remind him that it is a federal reserve, as I understand it.

Mr. S. Smith: This government was ready with the freezers and with the other gimmicks.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, that's true. We try to solve as many problems as we can. Sometimes we solve problems that really aren't ours; we make an effort to do so.

Mr. S. Smith: That's right, this one is.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Before the hon. member's blood pressure rises to too high a level, perhaps he would be polite enough to accept the fact that I don't know, but I am quite prepared to look into it and come back with information for him.

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE REVIEW BOARD HEARING

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I address the first question I have to the Minister of Community and Social Services: Why did a senior legal counsel of his ministry, Mr. Dillon, accompanied by the director of his rehabilitation branch, Mr. Crichton, this morning attempt to prevent the attendance—at a hearing of the Social Assistance Review Board on a child with a learning disability—of my colleague, the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner), when the minister knows that members of the Legislature have regularly sat in on such hearings and participated, and when he knows that it forced the chairman of the hearing to overrule both the director of the branch and the legal counsel of the ministry? What is afoot in that ministry now?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I am not fully familiar with that situation, although before coming into the House it was briefly brought to my attention. It is my understanding that the board of review, as a matter of policy, has in the case of witnesses only—not members of the Legislature who are not there as witnesses—but in the case of witnesses has made a practice, as is done often in the courts and elsewhere where a series of witnesses is to be heard, of excluding those witnesses who have not been heard until such time as they are heard, after which they may remain for the balance of the proceedings.

I'm more familiar with it in the courts than in this particular forum, but the reason for that is generally understood—and I think the hon. member opposite would agree—to be that there are circumstances in which that is a desirable policy to follow. Certainly there is no policy which would preclude the attendance of members of the Legislature in any capacity at such a hearing—as an advocate, for example, or in any other capacity—except perhaps in the situation where they had indicated they are in attendance as a witness, which I understand was the situation this morning.

The legislation, I am advised, provides that the board does have the authority, at its discretion, to establish such a policy when hearing a series of witnesses.

I'm not sure whether that was the hon. member's understanding, but that was my understanding at this point in time.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary—my colleague may wish to come in—surely the minister realizes that the questions of whether or not even expert witnesses are excluded is one that is open to many interpretations before that board, because some of us have sat through hearings where witnesses remained throughout? Surely it is a new precedent for this ministry to move legal counsel into a situation, admittedly highly charged, to exclude a member of the Legislature whose constituent is involved from attendance at and eventual modest observation on the case being heard? Can he suggest to the director of the rehab branch and the legal counsel that this is unacceptable in the future?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that legal counsel for the ministry was sought only on the point of advice as to whether, in fact, the legislation read as it was thought that it did.

Mr. Lewis: No, they fought it unpleasantly.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I wasn't present, so I don't know whether there were unpleasant tones or not. I'm not sure that the hon. member putting the question was present either to know whether that was the case, but certainly it is my understanding at this point, and subject to further investigations by myself, that what was presented to the board this morning was a matter of a practice that has been followed previously by the board in the case of witnesses, not necessarily members of the Legislature—

Mr. Lewis: Not all the time.

Hon. Mr. Norton:—and if there has been any departure from the usual practice and policy I will investigate the matter further. I can assure the hon. member that there is certainly no intention to preclude members of the Legislature from attending at such hearings, and in fact, as he knows, they often do—perhaps not always, though, in the capacity of a witness, which I understand was the case this morning.

Mr. Warner: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister know that the distinctions which he drew in an earlier answer were distinctions that were drawn to the attention of his director, Mr. Crichton, who still insisted that it was not my responsibility as a member of this assembly to attend a matter involving a constituent of mine?

Secondly, does the minister not think that whether a member of this assembly is attending as either a witness to a particular portion or an observer on behalf of a constituent, the member of this assembly has a responsibility to that constituent, and those responsibilities should not be interfered with by the Crown?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I would never suggest that a member of the Legislature should not be entitled to be present at such hearings. I'm not sure of the distinction that the hon. member is referring to. If it is the distinction between a member attending in the capacity of an advocate, or as an observer, or in support of a constituent, that is one thing—

Mr. Lewis: It doesn't really matter.

Mr. Warner: It doesn't matter.

Hon. Mr. Norton:—but surely if there is any validity to the principle of excluding witnesses—

Mr. Lewis: We're not experts in this House on such matters.

Hon. Mr. Norton:—nor do members always attend as witnesses. I understand the distinction that was made this morning was between witnesses, and in this particular instance a member of the Legislature who appeared and indicated that he was there as a witness.

Mr. S. Smith: Why exclude witnesses from this sort of thing anyway? It is not a trial.

Mr. Martel: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Surely if a constituent asks a member of this Legislature to attend such a hearing with him, the constituent makes that determination and the ministry shouldn't try to infringe on that request by the constituent?

Mr. Lewis: Exactly. They were fighting it this morning. The ministry was fighting it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: No, Mr. Speaker. I would concur with what the member for Sudbury East says, but I also think that in many instances the constituent would appear perhaps with a number of persons who were there at the request of the constituent or someone who was representing the constituent. Surely the hon. member would understand, though, that it may be the opinion of the board—and it would be open, presumably, to a party to make this proposal to the board—that to provide for a fair hearing of the evidence, it would be desirable to have the witnesses excluded until their evidence was heard.

I would reiterate, in this particular case it was my understanding that the member of the Legislature who was present had indicated that he was present in the capacity of a witness. It was only on that basis that the issue arose, as far as I'm aware.

Mr. Speaker: We'll have one final supplementary. The hon. member for Kitchener-Wilmot. The questioning seems to be circuitous. We're not getting anywhere.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to the minister's second answer. I've been present at these hearings and I've never seen ministry officials bring in a lawyer; and given the fact that the children involved have clearly been defined by the Supreme Court in this matter, why are they bringing lawyers into these hearings?

Hon. Mr. Norton: As I said earlier, it was my understanding—and I have indicated that I have not had an opportunity to investigate this matter fully—it was my understanding at the time legal counsel was consulted that it related to a question of the content of the legislation and the authority the board had with respect to making a determination with regard to the exclusion of witnesses. It was on that point and that point only that legal advice was sought.

Mr. McClellan: It was your director who wanted a lawyer, not the board.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Provincial Secretary for Social Development, since we appear to be reaching a new low, virtually, in dealing with these very difficult cases, where we now have legal battles before the review board over the attendance of members, is it not possible for her to rationalize the views of her ministers within the secretariat and get us a statement on what will be done with children in this field to avoid this kind of confrontation which emerged this morning?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I am sure the hon. member is fully aware of the great difficulty in coming to a policy decision on children with learning disabilities.

Mr. McClellan: That's not what you said last spring.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: There have been so many differing viewpoints from very well educated people in that particular field, it has been very difficult to come to some kind of consensus on what is best in the interests of these children with these very difficult learning disabilities.

I think we have reached the point where we are about to make an announcement very shortly. I hope when the announcement is made that the hon. member will realize that it has taken a great deal of time and involvement with many groups of people who are interested in this particular subject and that we will have his understanding that it is impossible to please everyone.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask, by way of supplementary, if that announcement is truly coming very shortly, can we suspend the almost inevitable weekly confrontations which are now taking place before that board until the ministry makes the announcement, if we can assume it is, say within the next week or 10 days? Can the minister give that undertaking?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I am not prepared to give that undertaking at the moment but I will discuss it with the ministers who are involved.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: I would say to the minister, so that there be no misunderstanding, we don't want the hearings suspended in any way, but only that the concept that has been expressed by her colleague the Minister of Community and Social Services, that there is this legalistic approach to the hearing of witnesses imposed on a kind of hearing which should be as far away from that approach as possible, that this be avoided, since everybody there is concerned for the welfare of the young person whose education is at stake.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: That is what I intended to discuss with my colleagues.

Mr. MacDonald: Get rid of the bureaucratic, legalistic approach.

Mr. McClellan: By way of supplementary: Since the minister promised us a program for the learning disabled in place by September in her estimates last spring, and since the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) promised a policy statement in September, may I ask her is the policy statement ready and when precisely is it going to be available?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I have already indicated that there have been a tremendous number of problems involved in coming together on a statement that we thought would meet the needs of children with learning disabilities. That statement will be available soon. I am not prepared to state, definitely, the date.

Mr. Sweeney: Is the minister not aware of the fact that at the present time the only branch within the entire government that looks after children with serious learning disabilities is the rehabilitation branch and that it is already incredibly complex for parents to get through there? Surely the last thing we want is to make it even more complicated by bringing in legal counsel? Does the minister not realize that?

PRAXIS INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: On November 1 the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong) asked me questions about an investigation regarding Praxis Corporation and specifically about the terms of reference related to this investigation.

Mr. Speaker, on June 24 of this year I received a letter from the federal Solicitor General, Francis Fox, passing on to my office information he had received from one Frank Oberle, the Member of Parliament for Prince George-Peace River. The letter stated Mr. Oberle had told Mr. Fox that a number of persons whose names were listed in the letter "could have information" relating to the matter. I want to stress that no allegations were being made by either Mr. Oberle or Mr. Fox. The letter was merely passing on information.

The same day I received this letter, I forwarded it to the chairman of the Ontario Police Commission asking for an investigation into the matter "in so far as it may affect any members of any police force in Ontario." I asked for a report "as soon as possible."

Shortly thereafter, following consultation involving the chairman of the Ontario Police Commission and senior officials in my ministry, it was decided that there should be an investigation by the Ontario Police Commission pursuant to section 56 of the Police Act, and in addition there should be a full police investigation by senior criminal investigators to determine whether there were any breaches of the Criminal Code to be prosecuted.

As the members of this House are well aware, the Criminal Code includes the indictable offences of break, enter and theft, or break and enter with intent to commit an indictable offence, and also includes the offence of unlawful possession of property knowing the same to have been obtained by the commission of an indictable offence.

Two senior and highly qualified criminal investigators from the special services division of the Ontario Provincial Police were appointed by the Ontario Provincial Police at my request and they have been working in conjunction with an investigator from the Ontario Police Commission. The three investigators have also had the opportunity, during the course of their work, to consult with a senior Crown prosecutor in my ministry and they will be reviewing their findings with him when their work is completed.

Upon conclusion of this investigation and receipt of the report, I will be able to advise the members of this House further.

Mr. Stong: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker, through you to the minister: I wonder if the Attorney General would co-operate with the solicitors for Praxis, who have often requested the name of the person from whom the Metropolitan Toronto police received the stolen documents? All they have to do is provide the name of the RCMP officer from whom they received the stolen documents. They have requested that often and until now their efforts have been thwarted.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned, my responsibility in this matter is to determine whether or not there was any breach of the Criminal Code by any police officers in this province, or indeed by anyone else. In so far as assisting the solicitors for Praxis, as far as I am concerned this comes well outside my ambit of responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: The estimates of the Attorney General are before the House at the present time. I will allow one more supplementary.

Mr. Stong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that a private citizen can lay a complaint and ultimately a criminal charge, will the Attorney General not co-operate with the private citizen in this respect in his investigation, since the Metropolitan police will not lay a charge based on the fact that the documents were stolen and known to be stolen?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I haven't anything further to add to my previous answer.

ASSESSMENT DATA

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to the question raised by the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp) regarding the release of assessment data to the municipalities.

General assessment information, as he may know, is available to each taxing jurisdiction in the province. In the case of market value assessment information, assessment data were released to the municipalities commencing in August 1976 by the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs. Earlier, my ministry had supplied magnetic tapes, which included the pertinent assessment data, to the Treasury officials for their analysis. Treasury then assembled and released the data by property class, including both the old and new valuations.

I think it made sense that Treasury release this data in the reformed version, since it best suited the needs of the municipalities and since that ministry had resources available to assist municipalities in their analysis. [2:45]

I wish to say at this time that the region of Waterloo and its constituent municipalities and certain school boards received this data on September 1, 1976. It is my understanding that the data were released to each municipality in this province by property class in order that the municipalities and school boards could properly measure the impact of the tax reform proposals upon their tax bases while preparing submissions to the Blair commission.

I must point out that it was necessary to supply each municipality with not only its own data but also with the data of each of the municipalities with which it shared costs for particular programs, such as schools, regional governments, counties, et cetera. For instance, each municipality in Simcoe county received its own data plus the data for the 35 other participating municipalities.

While each municipality received a massive amount of data, I believe it was appropriate to provide the necessary information for a complete and meaningful analysis of the new tax base and the reform proposals. Further, each municipality received the appropriate technical advice to enable it to use the data to its best advantage.

Mr. Epp: I have a supplementary question for the minister. I want to thank her for the answer, but to be honest, I don't think she has answered my question. In view of the fact that the ministry has this information available on a block-by-block basis, in view of the fact that the city of Toronto had to send a person down to the ministry to copy it out, which they felt was significant information for them, and in view of the fact that not every municipality can send representatives from all over the province to Toronto to copy it out by hand, would the ministry make this information available to the municipalities—all 835 of them—in the very near future?

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: We have responded to requests for special information from various municipalities and boards of education as they have come through.

Mr. Cassidy: No, you haven't. You have delayed consistently.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: In the case of the city of Toronto—and I am aware of this request—the city of Toronto asked to have made available to it the information which was made available to the Blair commission during its studies. That information is now over a year old and quite frankly I think it is obsolete.

I think also the member doesn't appreciate the very difficult proposal he makes, inasmuch as these computer printouts are very big, very bulky and cumbersome, and if you haven't got a computer with which to run through and refine the information, it is just a hopeless morass of detail.

Mr. Sargent: Will the minister advise if she has received the $2 million in tax from Ronto yet?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A final supplementary.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: Wouldn't the minister agree that the information which she has supplied to municipalities or which has been supplied by TEIGA is largely meaningless when the government hasn't decided at what percentage of market value it is going to assess, and hasn't told the municipalities how it will affect the grants that they receive?

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: It's a fact that when we released the information a year ago, we did provide the technical advice to the municipalities to help them to interpret that information. To take simply a computer print-out of block-by-block information, yes, I agree there is very little value in that.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE INSTRUCTION

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education. Is he aware that a large and growing number of secondary schools in Ontario do not offer French in grade 13 and a substantial number no longer offer it in grade 12, and that the number of English-speaking students taking French in grade 13 has dropped by 40 per cent since 1971? If he is aware of this, and I trust that he is, what steps are being taken to reverse this very serious trend?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, we are of course encouraging schools to encourage students to take French. It is not our intention to make French a mandatory subject in the secondary schools of this province.

I think that only the vocational schools, basically, in this province are not offering French—that's the special vocational schools; every other secondary school has French available, except a few. There are schools, of course, that do not offer it in grade 13. We are currently in discussion with the universities as a result of the Interface study and the universities' intention, perhaps at some time in the near future, to make French a mandatory requirement for admission. If that comes about, that will have a special effect on what happens in the secondary schools.

In order that meaningful programs can be available, all of us have to feel that the thrust we must take is to encourage young people to take it, but forcing them to take it is not going to help the situation at all. I think where we have to put our emphasis is in the elementary schools, encourage more immersion programs in school jurisdictions across this province and encourage more meaningful French programs in all the elementary schools. As I think I pointed out on one occasion in the past, there are very few elementary schools in this province that don't have some type of French program.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Would the minister agree that the real figure of concern is the rate of decrease in French-language instruction to students in all grades, particularly the 40 per cent decrease in grade 13? If he has such a commitment, which I'm sure we all share, to offer instruction to people at the elementary level, why doesn't the school that we as a Legislature provide for our pages teach French? I asked them on the way in and they're not given French here. Why not?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would be happy to discuss that with you, Mr. Speaker, and the committee of the Legislature that has authority over things that happen in this building.

Mr. Lewis: You have had the authority for a long time.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I understand it's a special committee, made up of all parties, that has input as to what goes on in this Legislature. I'm sure that that committee could pass its advice on to the Speaker. Certainly they'd have my full support if the Speaker wishes to ask the teacher here to introduce French. I think the member should ask the pages also.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Does the minister recall the recommendations made by Mr. Gillin in his excellent report that was tabled here, I believe two years ago? Would he not consider those the basis of a program whereby we could reverse the very sad trend in the schools of this province, which means that the French language is heading in the same direction as the teaching of Latin and, far from being jammed down anybody's throats, which is often the complaint we get, is soon going to disappear from the school system, which I think would be unfortunate, except for the immersion courses that the minister is talking about at the elementary level?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think my friend is off on the wrong track. We have in fact put into place the program that Mr. Gillin suggested.

Mr. Nixon: The whole program is not in place.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The French program is in place. The only difference is that it's up to the school boards to take up the program. We've put in a program for teaching French as a second language with financial incentives to do the same, based upon the principle that Gillin suggested. Indeed he helped develop the program that we introduced here in this House not so very long ago. That program is now being picked up by many school boards across this province. I think my friend will find that, given another year and an opportunity to develop a little more fully with a little more time, many elementary school programs of the nature that Gillin suggested will be in place and that this will occur.

Mr. Samis: Supplementary: Following the concerns of my colleague from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, in view of the fact that the voluntary incentive approach doesn't seem to be working, especially at the secondary level, why is the minister reluctant and opposed to the idea of making it a mandatory subject in Ontario schools?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I thought I'd answered that. The point of making French a mandatory subject at the present time would not serve any particularly useful purpose. The point is that French should be available. I would be very concerned if a school was not offering French, that is, if one of the regular secondary schools was not offering French. I believe the quality of the program will increase, and the chance of the student getting a more meaningful experience from that program will occur, if that student chooses to take the program, rather than by forcing all students in secondary schools, who now represent about 80 per cent of the young people in the secondary-school age bracket, regardless of their desire, to take that language at the present time.

Mr. Samis: You make them take math.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. McCaffrey: A question to the Treasurer: Earlier today the national unemployment figures for the month of October were released and I believe they showed 8.3 per cent unemployed. In view of the fact this now represents, I think, five consecutive months in which the national unemployment figures have been at, or in excess of, eight per cent, does the Treasurer have any comment to make?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Why didn't the members opposite ask that question?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We haven't got the breakdown but there are some rather interesting figures.

Mr. Sargent: Why don't you table them?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In terms of actual unemployment in Ontario, which fell from 6.5 per cent to six per cent from September to October, it is rather interesting that since October of a year ago, year over year, employment has risen by some 137,000. From January, the beginning of the year, until now, employment has risen on an actual basis by some 233,000. On a seasonably adjusted basis, unemployment in Ontario has fallen from September to October from 7.3 per cent to 6.8 per cent. Year over year, employment has grown—

Mr. MacDonald: This is a setup.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —by 134,000, and since the beginning of the year employment has grown by 111,000, which means that the Bramalea charter has been met.

Mr. MacDonald: Speak on the budget debate.

An hon. member: It's a ministerial statement. It's loaded.

Mr. Speaker: Would you like a 10-minute recess?

FRENCH-LANGUAGE INSTRUCTION

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education. Can he inform the House, in view of the commitment he just made on the teaching of French, why it is that the ministry, after careful deliberation, is not prepared to make French obligatory in French-speaking high schools in the province, except on the condition that those pupils take four obligatory credits more than are required of English-speaking pupils?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, that matter is still under discussion with the Franco-Ontarian trustees' and teachers' associations. I might just ask my friend a rhetorical question: Is he prepared to vote for rescinding that section of the Education Act which says that French shall be taken for each of the four years in the secondary program in the French-language secondary schools and that English shall be taken? That is now part of the Act; and it is the law of this province.

I draw his attention to this fact. No other mandatory subject in secondary school is enshrined in the Education Act, but the teaching of anglais as a course in French-language secondary schools is part of the Education Act of this province. It would require an Act of this Legislature to take that particular requirement away from those schools. I suggest that would not be the proper thing to do at this point in time.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I am prepared to say we should give equal treatment to French-speaking pupils as well as English-speaking pupils and, therefore, that requirement of the Act should be changed. I think it is wrong for the minister to say that. My supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is that the minister is, in fact, misleading the House because it is not correct—

Mr. Speaker: That is not parliamentary language. Just withdraw it.

Mr. Cassidy: I withdraw it, Mr. Speaker. Is it not correct that the choice given in consultations with French-speaking associations is either to retain the status quo, in which case French would not be an obligatory course in French-speaking high schools, or add four additional credits by making both French and English obligatory, which is not the case in the English-speaking high schools?
[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, that's one of the options, and I indicated to my friend exactly why that option has been placed forward. I don't feel at this point in time that I would want to come into the House with an amendment to the Education Act to take out that section making anglais a mandatory course in French-language schools.

I've offered to make français, or French, a mandatory subject if they so desire on that basis. That isn't acceptable at the present time, although some students in the schools have told me it would be quite adequate because, in fact, while taking anglais, as required under the Act, 96 to 98 per cent of the students are also taking français. We'd be quite happy to make it a mandatory subject if they wish. But I cannot see removing anglais as a required subject in French-language schools at this point.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

Mr. Reed: Mr. Speaker I have a question for the Minister of Energy. Is the Ministry of Energy still carrying on with the liaison program, much publicized by his predecessor, in which the Ministry of Energy advises other ministries on the best ways to accomplish conservation and efficiency-raising measures?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Yes.

Mr. Reed: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell us why the senior citizen home in Aylmer, which is partially solar heated, is being supplemented with demand electric heat which is the worst possible use of this high-grade energy form?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, is the member asking me or telling me? I would suggest that one requires a backup system in any solar system for space heating today. It may be the member's view that electricity is not the most economic, but people may have differences of opinion.

Mr. Reed: Is the kind of liaison which would recommend the use of demand electric heat in projects of this nature indicative of the quality of information and recommendations that are going to these ministries?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I think the hon. member should look into this a little further. One has to have a heating system or some backup type of heat if one expects to heat the premises with solar heating alone. Our technology in this country doesn't attain the point where we can be solely dependent on solar heating for space heating. It's a question of what type of backup system is most economic or most efficient in terms of cost and energy. If the member looks very closely at what has gone into that building, I think he'll conclude, as have the architects and engineers of that building, that the best system has been employed.

OHC LAND SALES

Mr. Breough: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Housing. Would he give the House a report on how much money his ministry has made through land speculation so far this year?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, that's absolutely impossible. We're not speculating in land.

Mr. Breough: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister care to tell us how much money his ministry has taken in through the sale or disposal—or whatever term he would care to use—of property that he acquired for residential purposes some time ago and is now divesting himself of? How much money has he made?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I'll be pleased to get that information and make it available to the hon. member.

KOMOKA PROVINCIAL PARK

Mr. Van Horne: A question to the Minister of Natural Resources: Can the minister tell this House what moral commitment he or his ministry had to the owners of a 65-acre site in the proposed Komoka Provincial Park?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I've been to no specific site. There were a number of statements made in terms of the acquisition of land for Komoka Park in three phases. The ministry, without question, had stated it wished to buy the land in that area and I'm sure that people have guided themselves accordingly. Within the last few weeks we have taken action to live up to our commitment on one particular piece. I'm told there currently is no other piece of land upon which a firm commitment has been made. I have promised that before too long I would be stating whether I wanted to go ahead with Komoka Park as originally planned or not.

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In the light of the conflicting dollar amounts reportedly having been spent, would the minister give this House a complete accounting of the moneys that have been spent on this proposed park site?

Hon. F. S. Miller: That I'd be pleased to do, Mr. Speaker. The latest acquisition is going to the Land Compensation Board, so all I could state is the amount of money we paid on closing, not the total amount that may be levied after an assessment of the properties made by the board.

MAPLE PARK SITE

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier. I understand a petition was presented on October 26 to the Lieutenant Governor in Council by the Maple Ratepayers' Association and an organization called A Sane Approach to Vaughan's Environment, asking for an environmental assessment of the proposal by a private company called Family Leisure Centres to locate a mammoth amusement park—

Mr. Speaker: I don't hear a question.

Ms. Bryden: —at the intersection of Highway 400 and Major Mackenzie Drive. I would like to ask the Premier if, in view of the fact that this project will bring up to 10,000 extra cars into the area, will use up prime agricultural land and so on—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: And 9,000 jobs.

Some hon. members: Question. Question.

Ms. Bryden: —and will likely require the outlay of taxpayers' money on widening Highway 401, will he tell us if he has replied to this petition, and if so, has he agreed to have an environmental assessment designation made for this project?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I understand the matter is before the Ontario Municipal Board. I get the impression from the hon. member that she, I guess, along with her party, is opposed to a concept of this nature. I find that interesting and I won't pursue it any further—

Mr. Breough: We have been opposed to Mickey Mouse operations for some time.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —in light of the fact that we are seeking more tourist attractions, we're looking for more jobs and more economic growth. I take it as the policy of the New Democratic Party that they're not enthused about that sort of thing.

I can't tell the hon. member whether there has been a specific reply to the petition. A petition to cabinet really only emerges in terms of an appeal, if there is an appeal, from the Ontario Municipal Board. I will check out and see whether there has been any specific reply, but I understand it is before the board.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Premier, does he not think the Environmental Assessment Act should apply to projects of this size, which may affect the quality of life of the whole province? It may be just that the location of Vaughan—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure I heard all of the question.

Mr. Swart: You will only give half an answer anyway.

Hon. Mr. Davis: As I say, I will try to sense what the question was: Do you think a project of this kind is—

Mr. Speaker: The question was, should the Environmental Assessment Act apply.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if I can answer that as briefly as I can, I believe it's a matter of zoning at this precise moment. The hon. member may find that from an environmental standpoint a leisure park such as Disney World or Disneyland is not in the best interests of the people of this province. But knowing some of her colleagues across the House who have attended both of those institutions, sometimes with their own families, I would think that she maybe should argue with them.

Mr. Lewis: I loved every minute of it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Certainly. Your leader loved every minute of it. In fact, I think he enjoyed it more than his children.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

JUDICATURE AMENDMENT ACT

House in committee of the whole on Bill 77, An Act to amend the Judicature Act.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. Lawlor: Having to do with prime rates of interest as applicable to family law and family court problems, there is a notation supplied to us through the Attorney General's background material to this particular legislation. On page 27 under Policy No. 13, they say:

"It would appear inappropriate to award pre-judgement interest in the provincial court family division. The type of money judgements made in this court are with respect to maintenance under The Deserted Wives and Children's Maintenance Act. Similar principles would apply to the new support legislation." It goes on in that particular vein.

What I want to ask of the Attorney General is where in this legislation, or is it somewhere in the family court legislation, that specific exclusion of the prime rate of interest, or any rate of interest for that matter is awarded with respect to pre-judgement interest, and generally, with respect to damages? Is there an explicit exclusion of the family court setup?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, there is not a specific exclusion, Mr. Chairman, and I would think that section 3(v) would not apply to family. First of all, it doesn't apply to family courts unless specifically incorporated by the family court legislation, so no sections of the Judicature Act would require any specific exemption unless the Act were incorporated in its entirety.

I don't have a copy of the family law reform legislation immediately at hand, but I don't recall anything in that legislation that refers specifically to the Judicature Act. I could be mistaken, but I don't recall anything. I am advised by my senior advisers that my recollection is correct.

Mr. Lawlor: In other words, the Attorney General and his senior advisers are satisfied that the necessary exclusion to which he advertises in his notes has been made as this legislation passes through.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That's correct.

Mr. Lawlor: I have to bow to far more Delphic oracles than I have at my immediate disposal.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 3 carry?

Mr. Lawlor: No. There are quite a number of things in section 3, if I may. We will go over special damages; a great deal could be said about them and the interest and how it is calculated in this particular area—all contained in page 16 of the notes.

Let us jump down to subsection 5, where it says: "Interest under this section shall not be awarded" in a number of instances, all of which make very good sense; clause (d) has to do with "pecuniary loss arising after the date of the judgement and that is identified by a finding of the court." Would the Attorney General care to decipher, à la Delphic oracle, the meaning of that particular clause?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am just trying to think of part of a judgement that would deal with pecuniary loss arising after the date of the judgement, inasmuch as that section says "identified by a finding of the court." Perhaps again the oracles that are available will be able to assist me as to a judgement where that would have some specific practical application. I am having a little difficulty in thinking of where a judgement would refer to and identify a pecuniary loss that would arise after the date of the judgement.

Mr. Lawlor: Does it mean pain and suffering or loss of economic expectation?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It could apply to future loss of wages. For example, some judgements break down—and, of course, there is a large degree of discretion as to how a judgement is broken down. One trial judge may give an award for general damages which may include pain and suffering, future loss of wages, future medical expenses, et cetera, just as a lump sum. Certainly for many years the practice, as I recall and as the member for Lakeshore may recall too, was to lump under general damages anything to deal with pain and suffering or future pecuniary loss.

In recent years it has been my experience that trial judges in damages actions will specify a certain figure as representing an estimate of future loss of earnings; and interest would not run on such an award. I think that would be the most common example of where such interest would not accrue on an award that is broken down and which includes a lump sum for estimated future loss of earnings.

Mr. Lawlor: In other words, what the Attorney General seems to be saying is, rather than a lump sum by way of an omnibus damage award, general and special, on which interest would then run, after this legislation comes into being counsel would certainly insist upon that second situation. It would become almost a rule of the court, I would take it, that the future economic loss would be designated and set forth as a separate item and would exclude interest. Would you think that would be the practice that would ensue?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes. In a large damage award there might be a very substantial sum awarded for future nursing care or hospital care. The recommendation is that where that type of specific loss is identified in relation to a pecuniary loss, as opposed to general damages, interest not be awarded under this section.

Mr. Lawlor: Just one other comment and that's all I have on this bill, section 5(f) does mention "where interest is payable by a right other than under this section." It's interesting for whoever consults the records of this House as to what was intended by that particular clause to mention that pre-judgement interest is now payable as of right in Ontario where it is provided by a contract or where a statute provides for the payment of interest, for instance, the Landlord and Tenant Act. Those are about the only two instances and these are specifically set out in the notes, where that particular section would become operative in the law.

Section 3 agreed to.

Sections 4 to 7, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 8:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. McMurtry moves that section 8(2) be amended by striking out clause (fa) and inserting in lieu thereof: "prescribing motions that need not be heard in open court."

Mr. Lawlor: What is the difference, pray, between "in private" and "not in open court?"

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Apparently the rules committee was unhappy with our wording and has suggested this amendment which is not, as the explanatory note states, a change in substance. The effect of it, as the member for Lakeshore knows, is generally to eliminate this rather annoying confusion that is often caused by worrying about whether or not you had to bring an application in chambers or in court.

What the rules committee wants to accomplish is all motions, say, in the Supreme Court, that are not heard or cannot be heard by the master, to be court motions. There are certain motions that the rules committee wants to designate as motions that need not be heard in open court. These rules have yet to be developed. One that comes to mind involves an application to declare somebody mentally incompetent, where it can be suggested that it is in the interest of the litigants not to require that the matter be heard in open court.

[3:30]

The motion would still be returnable as a court motion, generally speaking, but there would be a discretion on the trial judge to hear it not in open court or in private or in chambers. It's really, to some extent, a question of semantics. It's not a change in substance but is the effect of what the rules committee have recommended. I think that's as much of an explanation as I can give at this time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lawlor: That is a commendable, rational and almost adequate explanation, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MacDonald: Isn't that overwhelming? Motion agreed to.

Section 8, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 9 to 11, inclusive agreed to.

On sections 12 to 15:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. McMurtry moves that the bill be amended by renumbering sections 13, 14, and 15 as sections 14, 15 and 16, and by deleting section 12 and substituting therefor the following:

"12. The said Act is amended by adding thereto the following section: 1(14)(a): Notwithstanding the provisions of this or any other Act or regulation all motions and applications shall be heard in open court except as provided by the rules.

"13. Section 123 of the said Act is amended by inserting after 82 in the fourth line, '1(4)(a).'"

Motion agreed to.

Sections 12 to 16, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 77, as amended, reported.

SMALL CLAIMS COURTS AMENDMENT ACT

House in committee on Bill 81, An Act to amend the Small Claims Courts Act.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. Lawlor: Up until now, we have been acting fairly informally and off the cuff with respect to referees. These are gentlemen who seek to act as a conciliation court with respect to claims and debts owing by people, particularly individuals who owe numerous creditors. The business of trying to stretch a tiny bit of money over a large number of debts hardly warrants, in many cases, sending these individuals to bankruptcy although there is a bankruptcy federal court, bankruptcy being a federal matter, down on University Avenue to assist impecunious people and people who are hung up on large indebtedness. But it would be a shame to utilize their services if the debts are really, even in aggregate, quite small and simply have to be spread out. So the formal recognition and conferring of powers upon a referee is an advancement.

This Small Claims Courts Act is quite a thick document and requires a fair degree of searching, overall, in depth. And this particular legislation doesn't do it. But in this area, it's a move in the right direction.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, I'd just like to indicate my appreciation to the hon. member for Lakeshore for his appreciation of this office. It has served very well the citizens of this community. I certainly agree with him that the citizens of other communities should be given the benefit of this office, for the reasons outlined by the member for Lakeshore.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4:

Ms. Bryden: This section raises the monetary jurisdiction from $400 to $1,000, which is certainly long overdue. I cannot understand how the government took so long to bring in this amendment. We all know what inflation has done to economic matters, and this $400 has become completely unrealistic in the last four or five years. All sorts of people who had legitimate claims beyond the $400 were not able to get them adjudicated because of this limitation. I would like to ask the minister if he's given any consideration to putting some sort of an escalation clause into this, so that this monetary jurisdiction would go up as the cost of living goes up and there would therefore be more justice provided under this Act.

I have a second question of the minister. In view of the raising of the monetary jurisdiction there probably will be a great many more cases coming into the court. Has he made sufficient plans to increase the number of judges who will be handling these cases? I understand that particularly in the Metro and York areas there is tremendous congestion in these courts—even with the $400 limitation—and people have to wait three and four months to have their case heard. As we know, justice delayed is justice denied, so I think this is something the minister should be looking at.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: So far as an escalation clause is concerned, it's my view that any change should be by way of an amendment to the Act. I think because of the importance of this figure, and the importance to all of the citizens in this province who may be affected by the jurisdiction of the small claims court, anything to change its jurisdiction should be done in this Legislature. Certainly one of our problems is going to be—and in this respect I recognize my own personal responsibility—to ensure that all of the citizens of this province, to the best of my ability, have knowledge of the increase from $400 to $1,000 so they will benefit by it. I would think to change that jurisdiction by any course other than in this chamber would be unwise.

With respect to the numbers of judges that will be required, I agree with the hon. member that there will be additional judges required, certainly in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. We are entertaining applications at the present time for such appointments. In most other areas of the province it is felt that as the county court judges already handle the small claims matter, it may not have the same sort of impact. But I can assure the members opposite that this is something to watch very carefully. I agree that the issue of accessibility to the courts at a reasonable cost is a fundamental right that should be accorded all citizens.

Ms. Bryden: With regard to whether the change in the monetary jurisdiction should be brought to this House or be automatically escalated, I think we have to recognize that in these days of legislative logjams, it appears to take six or seven years to get any consideration of a bill of this sort. I don't think, if the present inflation keeps on, that we can wait for six or seven years for another escalation if this $1,000 becomes unrealistic in the next year or two. I just wonder if in view of the fact that we escalate or index income tax, and we index civil service pensions, why the litigants in small claims court should not also benefit from such adjustments which would bring them more fairness and justice in their pursuit of their litigation.

Just one other small point regarding the costs to the litigants: I notice that just this fall the ministry, by regulation, has raised the fees. Small claims court, as we all know, is intended to be for the person with very limited means with small claims against other people. The raise is $1 per each level of the schedule and the schedule depends on the amount of the claim. So at the lowest level it amounts to a 50 per cent increase and at the higher level to an increase from $11 to $12. I wonder whether that is a legitimate way to raise fees and if the minister could explain why it was done in this way?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, dealing with the first part of the member's comments, I feel that it would be very much against the interest of the citizens of this province to change the jurisdiction of any court by means of some escalation clause. I can't think of anything that would be less in the interests of people who wish to have access to this court.

In relation to the increase in the small claims fees, certainly it's been our experience that the small claims clerks across the province have had very grave difficulty functioning under the present fee structure. As a matter of fact, some of them have got themselves into serious financial difficulty. These small claims clerks are citizens who are, of course, not lawyers. They're for the most part what you would refer to as the ordinary person, little people from an economic standpoint who have had a great struggle to carry on under the present fee structure. I think the increase in the fees at the very least represents a minimal fairness to them. Certainly their economic return is very modest. I still think that the fee structure does provide access to the courts by the citizens of this province for a very modest and reasonable cost.

Mr. Sterling: My point is a fairly small one but perhaps it should be considered in any amendments to the Small Claims Courts Act in the future. Perhaps the Attorney General could entertain an amendment at this point to this particular section.

I believe that this Act should be written so that it would be understood by the general public and should not be written for lawyers alone. In this particular section there is one particular part, clause (b) to which I object; that is, an action of replevin is referred to in that clause.

In my legal experience, I have had the opportunity of bringing an action of replevin and, in consulting the other local members of the bar in the city of Ottawa, I found that many of them did not know what I was talking about when I consulted them about this particular type of action. I wonder if it would not be advisable to add after "any action of replevin"—and I leave this entirely up to the Attorney General, because I have not spoken to him directly about this—"or action to recover a chattel or goods" and then continue on where the value of the property distrained, taken or detained . . ."

The other thing I object to is that this section probably will be referred to by the public on many occasions because it outlines the jurisdiction of the court; I wonder whether or not the public refer to bringing a lawsuit for an action and whether or not, in fact, that would create some kind of confusion also. I would suggest that the Attorney General also consider, where the bill refers to "any action," especially in clause (a), putting in "any action or lawsuit" as an alternative interpretation of what "action" means to the general public.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The concern expressed by the hon. member is a very understandable and justifiable one, namely that this being the people's court, we should make this legislation as understandable as possible.

What I'd like to do at this point in time, not just in relation to this section but to all sections, is give him my assurance that we are developing a handbook on the small claims court which will be published very shortly and in which we will attempt to assist the people who might have resort to this court to make it as understandable as possible, with full explanations of all this terminology. We would prefer to deal with it in that way for the present time, but certainly we would be quite happy to take into consideration the advisability of actually changing the legislation.

I don't agree with what has been said earlier, that this legislation cannot be changed in an expeditious fashion, in a matter of days, if it's the consensus of the majority of the members of this chamber. I'm obliged to have the member's views; they certainly will be reflected in the handbook that we are preparing and we will certainly consider them seriously with respect to any further amendments.

Mr. Lawlor: That was the most energy-laden piece of effrontery. "In days" did he say? I don't think I have to say any more. Just try to get some legislation through this House, even in several years now. I won't even refer to the particular legislation of which I'm thinking.

Section 4 agreed to.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. Lawlor: It's interesting that this has to do with that practice by major marketing organizations—companies like the T. Eaton Company et cetera—who write into their contracts in excess of $100 a clause saying that the place of payment will be the place at which action may be commenced. If they're selling goods elsewhere than in Toronto, nevertheless they invariably put in the contract that Toronto will be the place of trial.

One can see the enormous inconvenience. Many people, even if they had a legitimate defence, would throw in the towel at that particular point because of the inconvenience and expense of having to come to Toronto to have the case heard, whereas the goods were delivered and the contract was really consummated elsewhere. That section has existed in this law for well over 50 years now. It is one of the features, one of those not just pinpricks but quite irritating things—we will come to another in a few minutes—that have existed in this archaic legislation for an awful long time, largely arrogated to the benefit of large commercial enterprises. After 50 years the consumer and the purchaser, I trust, are going to get a bit of a break.

Section 6 agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. Lawlor: Anyone who is acquainted with the courts at all is cognizant of the enormous panoply and intricacy of rules of evidence, of how hearsay rules operate and of the diversity of strictures as to what may be admitted and what is not admissible. It is a study and a lore all by itself, a lore which lawyers peculiarly preen themselves upon. A lot of the rules are irrational, their applications are arbitrary and they come down by way of an historical body.

The lawyer will tell you they all have their justification in the bosom of Abraham, but Abraham has been dead for a little while and even Sarah followed him.

With this in mind, in this particular, again at the people's court, one doesn't want to be hamstrung by all these asinine rules. We will one of these days in the fullness of time have an evidence Act brought before us. It is being worked at in a very elaborate way with the Law Reform Commission of Canada and we have a Law Reform Commission report. It is being looked at, sniffed at, left in a corner and once in a while taken home in a briefcase, but it will come to pass; I don't suppose it will help things a great deal. But this kind of thing does help things a great deal. It simply moves on into that whole area.

Just let me read the notes on it. "The rule that would become section 96(a) of the Act would be that any oral testimony, document or other thing, whether or not proven under oath, which is relevant to the issues being determined may be admitted by a judge. It is then for the judge to determine the weight to be given to the evidence. This is proving most useful in the determination of residential tenancy disputes under part IV of the Landlord and Tenant Act as amended in 1975."

There is no reason why people should be hung up under that particular kind of thing in that area. When they leave the courtroom and have not given certain evidence which they think is above the board and is perhaps crucial to their case, it leaves them with a bad taste in their mouth and even more than that. My basic feeling about rules of evidence is they ought by and large to be left to the discretion of judges who are competent to gauge the weight of testimony in these cases and in context to advise the jury as to what weight he thinks should be accorded to them.

Section 7 agreed to.

Sections 8 to 11, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 12:

Mr. Lawlor: The last part of 2(a) under section 12 says "but a judge may order." It talks about the rate of interest under a writ of execution, that is, a writ arising out of a judgement issued out of the Supreme Court. It says: "but a judge may order that no interest is payable in respect of money owing under a consolidation order which is not in default." A consolidation order is where a number of debts are brought together under a particular order and allocation made for those debts. In many cases, particularly in dealing with finance companies and their debts, and with the increase in the interest rate that's going to take place under this legislation and under the Judicature Act, certainly before judgement they should come to issuance of the writ.

The poor devils can never get out of the slough of despond because the interest is so cumulative that regardless of whatever moneys they have at their disposal, the interest runs well ahead of them. The debt gets larger and larger and they pay and pay and pay. It's what is ruining the country of India in terms of their money lenders. It has been very often the ruin of the poor in this province and country also.

It says here that when you get to the point of a consolidation order, as long as you are paying, the interest will not further accrue. That's a great move forward and should be extended in principle.

On section 16:

Mr. Lawlor: If the Attorney General of this province has an extra member of ministry personnel—I won't recommend Larry McLaughlin, he's too nice a fellow—but somebody who didn't have anything to do this afternoon, could he just run out to the front lawn of the building here and run up the flag far higher than half mast—say, seven-eighths mast or something—because this section deserves it and there should be some external sign of our internal condition?

It's like a sacrament. Up until this time in history, one of the most iniquitous procedures embodied in that particular piece of legislation, which is nowhere else in the law, it is unheard of, is that you can go and garnishee a man's salary or you can garnishee his bank account or you can seize any money that you happen to know the whereabouts of, even if it's under the bed, without issuing a writ, without having made an adjudication of the legitimacy of the debt itself as to the merits of it, whether it is really owing, whether there's a defence, whether it is only partially owing or what not. You get hit right between the eyes and do they ever take advantage of it.

The legislation being brought before us is saying, "That piece of iniquity is going to be knocked out. If you want your garnishments, you are going to get them after you have legitimized them, after you have proven that the money is really owing."

Why the old legislation has existed so long I don't know. Certainly the complaint has been raised a number of times in this House and very often comes into our constituency office. A man very often loses his job because of it.

I think I have said enough. If there were only this one section being passed this afternoon, the alleviation it would give to a lot of people out there would be very great indeed. This would make the whole thing worthwhile.

On section 19:

Mr. Lawlor: We have been doing this in legislation over the past couple of years, this business of having affidavits signed in the same law firm. Now that we are passing the legislation, you question yourself as to why it was the other way.

I want to ask the Attorney General: Was it felt that in a firm of solicitors, somehow or other there was a laxity? If you had your partners swear your affidavit, you didn't have to be quite so truthful? Was something like that operative? Why was there this ban against the swearing? You had to take the affidavit down the hall to the competitive firm, which you didn't wish even to speak to, in order to have your affidavit sworn. But now this is being obviated.

[4:00]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That's quite an interesting observation by the member for Lakeshore. It certainly was a bit of an aggravation at the best of times.

I suppose the reason for the law as it previously existed was the thought that the swearing of an affidavit was something that should be done by someone who was impartial, someone who had no association with the litigation, and, therefore, somebody outside the law firm. I think that fact—plus the fact that an affidavit being sworn outside the office would, to a greater extent, bring home to the deponent the importance of the swearing of the affidavit—justified the law to some extent as it existed until the present time. But I think we are finally recognizing in this legislation that people who administer oaths, so far as the taking of affidavits is concerned, really are officers of the court. Because they are within a particular law firm, doesn't mean that carriage of this legislation should in any way affect their responsibility in this respect.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

House in committee on Bill 40, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Ashe moves that the bill be amended by adding thereto the following new section:

"2. Said Act is amended by adding thereto the following section: 47(1). In the event that the council of any municipality or a local board thereof is unable for a period of two months to hold a meeting of the council or of the local board because of failure to obtain a quorum, the minister may by order declare the seats of the members of the council or local board to be vacant, and a new election shall be held in accordance with the provisions of the Municipal Elections Act, 1977.

"(2) In the event that the seats of a majority of the members of a council or of a local board are for any reason declared vacant, the minister may by order provide for the fulfilling of the duties and obligations of the council or local board until such time as a new election is held in accordance with the Municipal Elections Act, 1977, and the members so elected have taken office."

And that the sections of the bill that follow shall be renumbered accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

Section 2, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 3 to 5, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Ashe moves that section 6 be amended to read as follows:

"Section 388 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"388(1): The council of a municipality may pass bylaws,

"(a) for paying the members of council for attendance at meetings of council or of its committees such per diem rate as the council may determine;

"(b) for paying the members of council such per diem rate as council may determine for attendance when such attendance is authorized by resolution of council at meetings or at any place, whether held or located within or outside the boundaries of the municipality, other than meetings of any body in respect of which the members of council are paid remuneration pursuant to clause (a) or pursuant to any other provisions of this Act or any other general or special Act.

"1. A bylaw passed pursuant to this clause may define a class or classes of meetings or attendances at a place in respect of which a per diem rate may be paid and may authorize payment of a per diem rate, only in respect of such class or classes of meetings or attendances.

"2. For the purpose of this clause 'attendance at meetings' includes attendance by a member of council at any place to meet with one or more other persons for the purpose of pursuing any matter in the interests of the municipality; and 'attendance at any place' means attendance by a member of council at a place for the purpose of pursuing any matter in the interests of the municipality, whether or not any other person is present at such place.

"(2) Where a member of a council is paid remuneration under sections 205, 211 or 389, such member is not entitled to payment under this section for attendance at meetings or at a place referred to in clauses (a) or (b) of subsection 1.

"(3) In the case of a council of a county or a township, a bylaw passed pursuant to clause (a) or (b) of subsection 1 may provide for the payment of such amount as is determined by council for each mile necessarily travelled in attending such meetings or at such place.

"(4) The head of the council of a municipality may be paid for his services as a member of any public utility commission the same per diem rate as is determined by the council under clause (d) of subsection 1.

Motion agreed to.

Section 6, as amended, agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 7 be amended by deleting the following words in the sixth line of the amendment to subsection 1 of section 455; "for any period not exceeding five years," so that the subsection will read:

"455(1) "The council of every municipality may pass bylaws for purchasing, conditionally or otherwise, or for renting for a term of years or otherwise, machinery and appliances for the purposes of the corporation and for borrowing money for the purpose of paying the purchase price; and for issuing debentures for the money so borrowed; or for issuing to the vendor debentures in payment of the purchase money."

Mr. Swart further moves that subsection 2 of 455 as it appears in section 7 be deleted; and that the figure "1" after the number "455" be deleted.

Mr. Swart: Section 455 of the present Municipal Act does two things. First of all, it permits purchase or rental of machinery and appliances by a municipality, and borrowing the money to pay for them. Secondly, it limits the period of repayment to five years—and that is all that section 455 does.

The amendment which we have before us in Bill 40—and I'll read the explanatory notes attached thereto—states that the effect of the re-enactment is to extend from five years to 10 years the period over which moneys borrowed for the purpose of road making machinery may be repaid.

What that leaves in the bill is that subsection 1 of the bill now makes it permissive for a municipality to purchase appliances for their use but the term of repayment must be not longer than five years. For road machinery the period of repayment may be 10 years. I want to make it clear this is permissive legislation for the purchase of the appliances and the machinery.

My amendment to section 7 does two things: One, it removes the five-year limitation on repayment for appliances; second, it removes subsection 2 which is redundant because it is covered in another section of the Act which I will mention a little more fully in a minute.

I don't say this is the most important piece of municipal legislation to come before this House, but to me, there is at least one rather important principle involved. And that principle is we are telling municipalities, by Bill 40, which we have before us, how long they may debenture for appliances. In this age of sophistication, I suggest first of all, it is unrealistic to set a limit of five years on the repayment and, second, it is a very paternal attitude towards the municipalities.

As I mentioned in second reading of this bill, many municipalities now have comprehensive, composite, money bylaws where they purchase a large number of different types of things including appliances and then issue debentures to cover those accumulated purchases. If some relatively small appliance is attached to a debenture for some large expenditure then there is probably good reason for that debenture to be more than five years. In fact, it makes them issue two debentures or perhaps three or four debentures, when one would be good enough. But more than that, I suggest to the parliamentary assistant and to the Treasurer, other sections of the Act very adequately cover this protection, if you wish to call it that, so a municipality doesn't go out on a limb, go too far in debt and spread payments for small items over too long a period of time. Subsection 2 is almost exactly identical to part of section 288 of the Act and therefore I say it is redundant and should not be left in.

I want to say with regard to section 288 of the Act and the comments made by the parliamentary assistant in second reading that he is wrong in saying there is a fundamental difference between section 288 and section 7 of this bill.

I would like to read back what he said at the time of second reading on November 1. He says, "I find it somewhat inconsistent, and the hon. member for Welland-Thorold agrees. Specifically identifying a period of time, as in section 288, of 10 years, is somewhat inconsistent and then saying, under section 455, there should be no time period referred to at all, is somewhat inconsistent."

I want to say that there is a time period referred to under section 288.

The member for Durham West continued: "We think there should be some relevance and some fiscal and some financial responsibility that is identified in that particular section. On the actual differences in the sections, albeit they are referring to road-making equipment and appliances, section 455 also deals with lease purchase arrangements which are not dealt with in section 288."—I suggest that that statement is wrong; 288 covers any type of debt and I will read it in just a moment—"So, although they do refer to road-making equipment in its broadest sense, section 455 goes into an area that is not referred to in section 288. Therefore, the point made by the hon. member for Welland-Thorold that section 288 would in fact apply in the reference of 10 years, we do not feel that that is so. Hence, we feel that the proposal for the amendment to section 455 as proposed should be, and hopefully will be, passed by this august body."

The only difference between section 288 and section 455 if you read them is that 455 provides permissive authority to councils to buy this equipment. But if you're dealing with the period of repayment it is identical with section 288. It covers identically the same things as section 288. I would like to read section 288 which is already in the Act and not proposed to change.

It starts off by saying, "A money bylaw." Now let me give you the definition of a money bylaw. A money bylaw under the new definition means "a bylaw for contracting a debt or obligation or for borrowing money other than a bylaw passed under section 332." As you know, section 332 just deals with current borrowing; it doesn't deal with debentures or long-term debts. So that definition of a money bylaw certainly covers any agreement for rental.

Section 288: "A money bylaw shall provide the whole debt and the debentures, if any, to be issued therefor, shall be made payable within the respective periods hereinafter mentioned at furthest from the time the debentures are issued. If a debt is for railways, harbour works or improvements, gas or water-works or purchase of improvement of parks, or erection of secondary or public schools, houses, public hospitals and the buying of land therefor, or for electric light, heat or power works or water privileges or land use in connection therewith, or for acquiring land for a drill shed or armoury, in 30 years." That may be the maximum.

Then clause (d): "if a debt is for the establishment of a system of public scavenging or the collection and disposal of ashes, refuse and garbage, in 20 years maximum. If the debt is for the purposes of road-making machinery and appliances, in 10 years." That covers section 7 of this Act, in limiting the length of term of the debentures to cover road-making machinery.

Then the final clause there: "if the debt is for any other purpose in such term of years as the Municipal Board may approve." The whole purpose of the Municipal Board is for protection that municipalities do not go too far in debt or do not spread debenture payments over too long a term, if it's only for a small thing.

But then we come along in this section and are saying to the municipalities, "For the purchases of appliances we're only going to permit you to issue debentures for five years." Surely that overall section of the Act is adequate and we don't have to write in here that we're only going to permit them five years. And surely section 2 of the Act, which deals with the length of term of debentures or borrowing for road machinery and appliances, is adequately covered in section 288 of the Act.

I just say to the member for Durham West—and I think correctly so—that my amendment on behalf of my party will still authorize municipalities to make expenditures for those things for which they have been able to make expenditures. It will limit the debenture term for road machinery to 10 years and the other appliances which a municipality may buy will be subject to the terms as the Municipal Board may approve. I suggest to you that is adequate and, if we have any faith in municipalities at all, we shouldn't be putting a five-year limit in this bill.

Mr. Ashe: I appreciate responding to the comments of the hon. member for Welland-Thorold. I don't agree with all the conclusions he has reached. Some of them can be challenged and can be argued back and forth, particularly when he speaks of paternalism. I would think the fact that this particular amendment is before this committee is paternalism in itself. The amendments in Bill 40 received circulation to all municipalities and municipal organizations. Not one, Mr. Chairman, I point out to you, responded that it had any negative reaction to this particular section in the amending bill.

If they are so competent, and I agree they are, and if they can think for themselves, and I agree most of them can, then I would suggest that the hon. member for Welland-

Thorold isn't giving them that credit of being able to think for themselves. I point out again not one of them suggested this particular amendment. They obviously were not turned off by the guidelines—and they are that; maximum periods of time—that are suggested in this particular section.

I also disagree that there is an exact duplication between section 288 and section 455. If you carry along this paternalism bit, I feel it very difficult to come up with the conclusion of why, when section 288 was amended a year or so ago, it received approval. At that time, there was a change in the maximum period for a debenture, recognizing the increased cost for road-making equipment and so on, from five to 10 years. At that time, it's my understanding that amendment passed with no problem at all and no particular adverse comments from that side of the House.

Again I find some inconsistency there. More importantly, there is reference in section 288, as pointed out by the hon. member, that the Municipal Board can determine an appropriate period of time for all other periods of borrowing that are not particularly and specifically referred to in that section. We all talk about in many ways and in many forums that we are trying to take away some of the time-consuming problems and more minor items that sometimes have to be arbitrated by the OMB. I would suggest that what is being talked about here and recommended by the hon. member for Welland-Thorold is exactly putting more implications and more decision-making, albeit of a minor nature, on the Ontario Municipal Board.

Mr. Swart: Maybe that's why places like Georgina township have bypassed the Municipal Board.

Mr. Ashe: I don't think that that's a particularly valid suggestion, albeit it is referred to in section 288. Also the interpretation that we have of conditional sales, option sales and so on are more adequately referred to in section 455 because they are not referred to at all in section 288, although I suppose you can argue, as the hon. member for Welland-Thorold has, that the particular description of a money bylaw adequately covers it. We suggest again why leave it at having to hunt around in various sections? Why not say something specifically? I don't think there's any problem in repeating once again in section 2 the reference to road-making machinery or appliances.

I don't think it's a very valid argument to suggest that municipalities put together many small items and issue one debenture. That's a common statement of fact that I'm not challenging in itself, but the particular reference is that many appliances can be very small and of nominal value. I agree they can, but if you're talking of hundreds or even thousands of dollars, I would suggest that municipalities wouldn't even be contemplating the accumulation of these small items and putting them together with other borrowing situations because they're going to pay for them in their cash flow in that particular current fiscal year or they're going to have other reserve funds for replacement of that kind of equipment. I don't think that's a valid argument.

I would hope that the committee will see fit to leave the particular section as it is proposed. There is a rationale behind it. There is, more importantly, consistency behind it. If in another section of this same bill, we're making a reference to 10 years, I feel section 455 should be consistent with that and not leave it to someone's devices to have to refer back to another section. Many municipal people could look at section 455 as it is being proposed and conclude, very rightly, that other than certain appliances, the sky is the limit, and forget that there is even a section 288 in that same Act.

With those various points in mind, I hope that the committee will defeat this proposed amendment and go with section 7 as it is proposed in the bill.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, it's our feeling that this section should stay the way it is. Taking into consideration the remarks that the member for Welland-Thorold has made, that there's a basic principle at stake here with respect to limiting it to five years, it's my feeling that if we are going to deal with principle here, we should deal with both section 455(1) and section 455(2), because if we're not going to limit the one then we shouldn't limit the other one. We feel that we should be consistent with what's gone on in the past with the wishes of the municipalities in this matter and leave the section intact.

TOPSOIL PRESERVATION ACT

Mr. McNeil, in the absence of Hon. W. Newman, moved second reading of Bill 72.

Mr. Speaker: Does the parliamentary assistant have a statement?

Mr. Nixon: Okay, Ronnie, this is it.

An hon. member: Sock it to him, Ron.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. McNeil: Mr. Speaker, the general purpose and intent of the bill is to provide enabling legislation to permit municipalities to pass laws regulating and prohibiting the removal of topsoil.

I would like to briefly deal with the kind of powers this bill provides. It is permissive, so a municipality may choose the provisions which it sees fit, and provides flexibility for the municipality to draft bylaws to meet local conditions.

The powers provided are for a general power to regulate or prohibit the removal of topsoil which may be authorized by the entire municipality or a defined area of the municipality. It gives municipalities power to provide for the issuing and renewing of permits for the removal of topsoil and a corresponding power to provide for refusal to issue and to renew such permits; and the grounds for any of these actions may be spelled out in the bylaw.

It also provides a general power to prohibit the removal of topsoil without a permit and a general power to require the rehabilitation of lands from which the topsoil has been removed.

Powers are also included to prescribe the standards and the procedures for rehabilitation that must be followed. There is a general power included to exempt lands or persons from the bylaw. There are a number of exemptions in the bill, such as normal agricultural practices which are exempted in any bylaw. This particularly includes topsoil removal when it is an incidental part of such agricultural activities as sod farming, greenhouse operations and nurseries.

Drainage operations under the Drainage Act or The Tile Drainage Act are exempted, as is the removal of topsoil in connection with operations authorized under the Pits and Quarries Control Act. In the same fashion, operations under the Mining Act are excluded in that they could be controlled under the present conditions of issuing permits under these acts.

The removal of topsoil by Crown agencies and Ontario Hydro is exempt. The clause also prevents a bylaw of a local municipality from interfering with topsoil removal by a county or a regional municipality.

Operations under the Ontario Energy Board Act, as well as underground services, for example Bell Telephone, Hydro and water are exempted. In the case of the latter three, the exemption is conditional on the topsoil being removed and then held for subsequent replacement. It also provides a provision that any minor operation, in this particular case less than five cubic meters, equivalent to an ordinary truckload, in a three-month period, is also exempt.

In terms of enforcement procedures under the Act, part XXI of the Municipal Act applies to this so that those same types of provisions in the Municipal Act can be used to enforce the bylaws and pass fines.

Mr. Riddell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The introduction of this bill is further indication of the speed at which this government moves on an important matter such as the indiscriminate mining of our natural resources. I think the member for Elgin can testify to the speed at which this government moves, because it took the Premier (Mr. Davis) 18 years to realize the member for Elgin had ministerial potential.

For the past three or four years municipalities have expressed concern that topsoil removal is a major problem and should be controlled. I vaguely recalled an article which appeared in the Toronto Star, in 1975 I believe it was, and with the assistance of caucus research I was able to obtain that article.

The article was entitled, "Topsoil Being Rustled in Ontario." I want to read a small portion of that article.

"The mishandling of topsoil, particularly in construction and agriculture, has become one of the latest worries of scientists and politicians." Although I sometimes wonder how many politicians have become very concerned about the removal of topsoil. To continue:

"Increasingly, I feel laws must be enacted to preserve topsoil use," said University of Guelph resource scientist Richard Rick Richards.

"Soil erosion was the number one problem in Ontario before land management was introduced, Richards said, and without wise management practices it is possible to foresee that soil erosion could become a problem again.

"Susan Singh, associate director of the food land section of the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture, has called land management the next frontier in pollution control of the Great Lakes which are threatened by run-offs from pesticides and fertilizers.

"Howard Henry, associate director of the soils and crops branch of the agricultural ministry, said: 'Valuable topsoil is too frequently buried in the construction of roads and buildings'."

Mr. Nixon: By the way, that's George Henry's grandson.

Mr. Riddell: "He said legislation drafted, but not yet presented to the Legislature, will seek to enforce the efficient use of topsoil in much the same way as the Pits and Quarries Act. That Act polices gravel pit operators who must return topsoil to the rehabilitated sites of worked-out gravel pits."

Now it's interesting to note from this article that legislation was drafted two years ago which would govern the use of topsoil in much the same way as the Pits and Quarries Act. Now that Act did not pass the onus to the municipalities for the policing of gravel pits and gravel pit operators to ensure rehabilitation of the site after the aggregate is mined, but rather the onus was placed, and rightfully so, on the provincial government.

While this government has seen fit to make the preservation of topsoil a municipal responsibility, and inasmuch as I believe that municipalities by and large meet their obligations responsibly, I can however foresee some municipalities giving this matter just a passing glance. So can we assume, then, that this government will be prepared to legislate topsoil use if the municipalities do not pass bylaws to control soil stripping in their own municipalities?

I am also concerned about the exemptions under this Act. A bylaw passed by a municipality does not apply to the removal of topsoil by a Crown agency or Ontario Hydro. Surely Ontario Hydro or some other Crown agency should not be given special rights to mine topsoil.

The day may well come when much of the land devoured by Ontario Hydro or other Crown agencies will have to be put back into production, and I would hope that the topsoil would be in close proximity to the place or origin so that it could be used once again for agricultural purposes.

The same can be said for soil that's removed along Hydro corridors and trans-

Canada pipelines, yet the exemption is made for the removal of topsoil as an incidental part of any construction for which leave to construct has been granted pursuant to the Ontario Energy Board Act; so I am assuming the government is taking into consideration such things as Hydro corridors, pipelines, et cetera. I just don't feel that Crown corporations and Ontario Hydro should be allowed to go merrily on their way without some kind of control by this government.

I wasn't too sure about the intent of section 2(2)(i): "The removal of topsoil"—this is another exemption—"The removal of topsoil where the quantity of topsoil removed in any one lot does not in any consecutive three-month period exceed five cubic metres."

I suppose this provides some flexibility so that farmers, or other people, may be able to remove topsoil if they wish to put in a swimming pool or if they wish to dig a basement under their house. Maybe the minister can help me to understand this clause a little better, but am I to assume that at the end of each three-month period that the owner of a lot could mine five cubic metres of topsoil? Now that's not a great deal, it may be a truckload of topsoil, but depending on the size of the lot, I could see where over a period of years much of that topsoil could be mined. If it is just to provide some flexibility so that a person may dig a swimming pool on his lot, then I can see the purpose of that particular clause. Maybe there will be further clarification in the response from the ministry.

So certainly we are going to support the bill; but again I am just wondering if it should not be a provincial responsibility and not one that's passed off to the municipality, because I can see where one municipality could perhaps pass a bylaw and the adjacent municipality may not consider it that important, in which case topsoil could be mined and there would be no way of policing or controlling it. I do look forward to the response from the ministry.

Mr. MacDonald: The case has been put by the hon. member for Middlesex and most of what I have to say is a reiteration of it, but let me reiterate a bit.

The government apparently has become persuaded that topsoil has to be preserved in this province, and that's good. If people driving around the highways in the province of Ontario were impressed, puzzled or concerned at seeing these monstrous trucks carrying tons of sod into the cities, representing the mining of prime agricultural land—pardon?

Mr. Nixon: That's not topsoil, sod trucks?

Mr. MacDonald: The sod truck is mining some of the topsoil.

Mr. Nixon: That is not controlled by this to a great extent.

Mr. MacDonald: Of course it can be controlled by this.

Mr. Nixon: No.

Mr. Riddell: Sod farming is exempt under this.

Mr. MacDonald: Sod farming is exempted under this? Well that makes it even worse.

Mr. Eaton: Here we go.

Mr. MacDonald: Pardon?

Mr. Nixon: We are going to have a division again, he is going to work himself up.

Mr. MacDonald: My point was simply that the government has finally woken up to the fact that something must be done to protect topsoil, whether it be topsoil extracted as topsoil, or whether it be, as it is now pointed out to me, the topsoil involved in sod farming.

But having come to that decision, the next question is why do you come in with a half measure? Because that is what this bill is, a half measure. The bill is permissive, therefore it permits a municipality to move if its officials become sufficiently apprised of the problem. But other municipalities, that either have looked at the problem and sloughed it off or have not even bothered looking at the problem, can continue to go on their merry way and the mining continues.

As was pointed out by the hon. member who has just spoken, other legislation passed by this government to preserve resources has usually made provincial authorities responsible; but here you haven't the courage to move at the provincial level, you come in with just permissive legislation. The net result is that in many municipalities in this province, indeed in many instances the municipalities that most need the protection of a bylaw to avoid topsoil mining or the mining of our prime agricultural lands, local authorities are not going to move. That's at best, a half measure.

The second point, that clearly has already been enunciated and I reiterate it, is the list of exemptions. One wonders, sometimes, what are the thought processes of this government. You bring in an Act which lays down rules that must be lived up to; then you bring in exemptions that permit the public utilities, or the most powerful people, to be able to breach the Act by having an exemption, in this instance the exemption being right in the Act itself.

Just by way of an aside, you have it in the Environmental Assessment Act. You bring in an Act that says every project must be assessed for its environmental impact, and then the biggest single project that this province will have to face, in Darlington, is exempted.

Here you have a list of exemptions, the net impact of which, quite frankly, is inestimable. I don't know really what value the Act is going to be, even in terms of the municipalities that may pass the bylaws, because of such a significant list of exemptions. The thing that is the most disturbing of all is why, for example Crown agencies, Ontario Hydro or public utilities of one kind or another, whether they're publicly or privately-owned, should be exempt under this Act from the mining of prime agricultural land? I'd be interested to hear, from the parliamentary assistant, the government's explanation.

However, I conclude in essentially the same way as the spokesman for the Liberal Party concluded; at least this empowers those municipalities which have become apprised of the problem and want the authority to cope with it to be able to cope legally with it. Whether they're going to cope adequately we'll have to see, that will depend on an assessment of the impact of all of the exemptions.

Half a loaf is better than none. It's a step in the right direction, and the bill should be supported for that reason; but it is a woefully inadequate and typical kind of bill that we expect from this government.

Mr. Hall: I want to speak briefly in support of this bill. Municipalities in my area have been wanting to stop certain practices that have been going on for several years. They have tried very hard to find any legislation that would assist them in their concern for preservation of local topsoil, but the province has been found wanting, up until now, in providing the authority they need.

I, too, am concerned about the list of exclusions, and I'll touch on that in a minute. The Ministry of Transportation and Communications, when installing service roads and interchanges in the Niagara Peninsula, in my view bought topsoil for its needs around such interchanges, for sodding and seeding, without any concern for the source of the material.

I know from personal experience of one first class peach orchard that was completely levelled, and the soil from it has now been buried under the Queen Elizabeth Way; not in the pavement section, I don't mean to imply that. It seems to me that ministry set a poor example. There's the question of responsibility to the general public, if the government of the province has not been concerned it's rather hard to expect others to be concerned.

I am interested to hear from the proponent of the bill why the counties and regions are exempted, along with the other agencies. If the municipality is expected to be responsible, I can't understand why their actions shouldn't be respected and supported by the counties and regions involved. Unless the parliamentary assistant was talking about merely rights of ways controlled by counties and regions, then I would like to have a further explanation. If that is the case, it makes sense. I hope he'll respond on this point.

Mr. Germa: I think I understand that the intent of the bill is so that people cannot destroy the prime agricultural land by transporting top soil out of that area so that large acreages in Ontario then would not be productive. I think it will also have the effect of forcing developers to take care or precautions when they are doing their development to preserve the topsoil which they have, and not churn it under with bulldozers so that that topsoil is buried under clay or some other substance. The point I want to make is related to my riding. My riding seems to be unique inasmuch as almost everything that happens in the province of Ontario does not apply to my riding.

I think most members of this House know that the city of Sudbury 25 years ago was totally denuded of topsoil. That came about, Mr. Speaker, as a result of cutting timber without replacement. Following that process the introduction of mining and smelting produced poisonous sulphur dioxide fumes which prevented the forest from coming back to preserve the topsoil. Consequently, over a period of 20 or 25 years all topsoil was eroded and washed away—I know where it is, by the way. The point of the matter is that the whole city of Sudbury was in fact rock and clay.

Mr. Mancini: Where is it, Bud?

Mr. Germa: If this law had been in effect at that point in time the very lot on which my house sits could not have a lawn, nor could any of my neighbours have a lawn, because every cubic yard of topsoil in the city of Sudbury had to be transported in from some other area.

I think it is a question for the minister to respond to. Here you have a unique situation, where the topsoil has been denuded for one reason or another.

I think it is beneficial to us in the city of Sudbury that we were able to transport in topsoil, and at least have a couple of trees, a few blades of grass. Even to this day we have continually to replenish the topsoil on our lawns because the topsoil is not natural there.

Everybody, of course, understands the expense involved. All a person puts in to grow his lawn is probably three inches of topsoil, he uses it very sparingly, but because the growth is not such that it retains the topsoil it is gradually eroded away. I would say every 10 or 15 years everybody in the city, in my riding, has to go someplace and buy more truck loads of topsoil to keep his lawn going.

I don't know just what we are going to do if the regional municipality of Sudbury passes a bylaw which will prevent the removal of topsoil from any place. In 20 years we are going to be back where we were—with not one blade of grass left, not one tree; or not even a carrot in Sudbury. Some people bring in topsoil to run their little backyard garden. Without permission and the right to bring topsoil in you are just going to create another back-of-the-moon situation.

Mr. Mancini: I rise to speak on Bill 72. May I also add my congratulations to the member for Elgin, who I am sure will carry out his responsibilities in a very fine manner.

I would like to say that I am very concerned about some portions of the bill. I am extremely pleased to see in section 2(e) state that the local municipalities have the authority to pass regulations and bylaws for the rehabilitation of agricultural land.

In my riding, where we have extensive mining and open pit quarries, we've seen many areas of our landscape put in pretty ugly-looking shape; now I know that the municipalities will have the power to have those areas put back into the condition they once were.

As the member for Elgin well knows Essex South is a very fine agricultural community. I see under exemptions that sod farming and greenhouse operations will not come into this Act. I am pleased for that part of the bill because, as the member for Elgin knows we have 90 per cent of all the greenhouse industry in the province of Ontario in our riding.

Since I am speaking about greenhouses, I want the member for Elgin to bring back to the Minister of Agriculture and Food the thought that if he doesn't get off his rear and do something for the greenhouse industry we're going to lose it. That's just an aside.

[5:30]

Mr. Riddell: You know what they are doing, they are going to put one up at Douglas Point.

Mr. Mancini: Secondly, I'd like to speak about another exemption that I'm extremely disappointed with. If the member for Elgin can do anything about this exemption, I would urge him to speak with his cabinet colleagues to see if this can be changed in the future.

I don't understand how the members on that side of the House, every time we have an important piece of legislation that puts regulations on most of the people of Ontario exempt Ontario Hydro. I don't understand for one minute why the biggest spender of the province, the biggest contractor in the province, an agency which has a very tarnished reputation, is always exempted. Why do you keep exempting Hydro? That's a very fundamental question. Why do you exempt that agency? Why should they not come under the same scrutiny as others? What have they done to deserve special status? Why should the ordinary person of Ontario feel there are laws for him and not for this government agency or others?

I find it very difficult to support this part of the bill. I just wish it wasn't there. I say to the member for Elgin that if there is anything he can do to possibly change it in the future this would be a feather in his cap.

Mr. Haggerty: I'm pleased to see the government has finally brought in this type of legislation, an Act to Preserve the Topsoil of Ontario. I can recall a number of years ago that I asked the Ministry of Treasury and Economics to bring it under control through the Planning Act. We must have some regulation to control the removal of topsoil in Ontario.

I, like the other members who have spoken previously, am concerned about the areas in the Act that permits the exemptions. There are a number of areas, there must be about seven or eight of them concerning the Ontario Energy Board for example, that shouldn't have the exemptions under this Act.

If you look at the utilities, such as the gas utility industry going along the countryside and the roads putting in new pipelines, they certainly do a lot of damage to the soil in the area. Perhaps this ground should be conserved. Perhaps much of it could be put into a soil bank within a municipality, as the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa) suggested. They need topsoil in the Sudbury area to have grass around their homes, which sometimes has to be replaced due to erosion that takes place in the area.

I notice under the Mining Act that there are also exemptions; I suppose that comes under the Pits and Quarries Control Act too. I can cite a particular industry under the Pits and Quarries Act, Port Colborne Quarries, which has conserved topsoil and used it to quite an extent in a rehabilitation program, which has made a vast improvement around its quarry, so much of the extra subsoil can be used.

I know when I first moved to Sherkston it was a habit of certain businessmen in that area to go out and strip 25, 30, and even 50 acres of excellent soil; which was then left to grow up into weeds, that's about what has remained. I'm not aware of any provisions here for rehabilitation of the land that has been stripped of the topsoil. Yes, I see in section 2(1)(e), "requiring rehabilitation of lands from which the topsoil has been removed."

I want to look at the particular area that means that you're going to have to have another bylaw officer in the community; that's going to add an extra cost to the municipality. Perhaps the building inspector will have to look after that area.

But I think the most important item here, as the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) has mentioned, is about leaving the responsibility under the Act to the local municipalities.

You could have one municipality that would jump onto this and pass a bylaw, while nextdoor the neighbouring municipality would not have a bylaw and you would have almost a runaway of topsoil there. You'd have almost the same conditions as existed before the Pits and Quarries Act; you'd have, in a sense, an extractive industry there.

I would suggest to the minister where there is a county form of government or a regional form of government that they should administer the bylaw and perhaps it can be tied into a regional plan.

I suppose under certain conditions, you're going to have to permit a certain amount of removal of topsoil, that is in the matter of topsoil for the production of sod. The Minister of Transportation and Communications uses quite a bit of that. However, in some cases they remove good topsoil along the highways and it perhaps goes to some other area; now that could have been used for a topsoil base.

I would suggest that perhaps the ministry should let the region or a county form of government administer this particular section of the Act so that you have uniformity across the region. That's the method we should be following.

I question the areas that are exempt. I see no reason why certain exemptions should be permitted, particularly for a Crown agency such as Ontario Hydro, the Ontario Energy Board and the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. I can cite a current instance where they're constructing an overpass on the regional road in Stevensville connecting with the Queen Elizabeth Way. To put in the cloverleaf there they've removed acres of topsoil and earth to a depth of maybe six or seven feet and have left nothing but a large hole in the ground, without any consideration at all for conservation.

It could be used for a bird sanctuary if it was located in the right spot, but usually it is constructed right along the Queen Elizabeth Way and there is not much chance of any vegetation growing around that particular pond or that open hole.

I think that perhaps the minister should be looking at some of the MTC procedures and methods. They shouldn't be permitted to do some of the things they do. They leave an ungodly-looking sight along the highway. I would suggest that this is one area where there should be no exemption. MTC should be told to rehabilitate a certain area, put in trees around the pond, or whatever it may be, and provide a sanctuary for birds and animals.

But I support the bill in principle. It's long overdue and I think it's a step in the right direction.

Mr. McNeil: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I do want to thank the hon. members opposite for their kind remarks and for their criticism.

Mr. Lewis: They weren't kindly. They were sarcastic and venomous. You couldn't distinguish.

Mr. McNeil: Oh, I'm sorry. I must have misinterpreted.

Mr. Lewis: I guess so. That happens, Ronnie.

Mr. McNeil: Being a Tory, I might be forgiven for doing that.

Mr. Lewis: Ronnie, we love you. We love you, Ronnie.

Mr. McNeil: Now, if I was an NDP member, probably that's the way I would interpret them.

First of all, I'd like to reply to the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex. I think I should point out that topsoil removal is not similar to rehabilitation of pits and quarries. I think he recognizes that the type of topsoil in this province varies even within municipalities and from location to location whereas pits and quarries have practically the same problem throughout the entire province.

As the hon. members are quite well aware the municipalities have requested this legislation. They requested that it be placed in their hands because they feel that they can control it within the municipality. Of course, the legislation even allows them to designate an area in the municipality if that is what they so desire.

Section 2(i) is designed to prevent the by-law from being applied to rather minor situations. I might point out to the member that, as I understand it, if a farmer wanted to take a bit of topsoil to fill in an area in one of his fields it wouldn't be necessary for him to apply for a permit as long as there wasn't a big area involved. I think you would agree with me that removing a truckload, which is the amount that's mentioned, wouldn't be very attractive, commercially, to anyone in the business.

One of the reasons the Crown corporations and Hydro are exempted is because it's felt they'd be controlled and governed by provincial legislation.

Mr. MacDonald: By what?

Mr. McNeil: By the present provincial legislation.

Mr. MacDonald: In other words, they're not controlled at all?

Mr. McNeil: I think they are under various Acts.

Mr. Riddell: What provincial legislation? There is no provincial legislation.

Mr. McNeil: Actually, with any installation Hydro has put up other than pipelines, the land has been well rehabilitated when they're completed and the land under the power lines is workable throughout the province. It isn't workable within the area because of the large machinery we have now in use on most of our farms in the province.

The member for York South was asking about sod farming. I'm told with modern technology and the amount of fertilizer used, the land in sod farming is in better condition after the small amount of topsoil is removed than it was before. They have modern machinery which only skims a very, very small amount of land and then a lot of fertilizer is poured onto the soil. In addition they develop a very thick matted grass and there's a lot of fibre and organic matter in the soil. The ministry officials involved in soil maintenance in this province claim the soil is being quite well maintained under present conditions, as far as sod farming is concerned.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm a little skeptical but I'll accept the member's word for it.

Mr. McNeil: Thanks, I'm glad to hear that.

Mr. Mancini: That's because we trust you, Ron, but not Bill Newman.

Mr. MacDonald: Nor Bob Eaton.

Mr. McNeil: You fellows are very kind to me today.

Mr. Lewis: No, no, you are misunderstanding again. Do you remember that talk we had in St. Thomas? I took you behind the barn and explained what the situation was.

Mr. McNeil: I forget whose barn that was now.

Mr. Lane: It was a bar, wasn't it?

Mr. McNeil: No, barn, he said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Which section of the bill refers to a barn?

Mr. McNeil: We feel this bill can be more effective if it's placed in the hands of municipalities because municipalities are requesting this type of legislation. It would be more effective in their hands than in the hands of the entire province because of the very nature and characteristic of the commodity with which we're dealing. Of course, I think we all believe in local autonomy.

All exemptions mentioned are relatively small-scale removals and we feel they're incidental to legitimate activities with respect to this bill.

I think it was the member for Lincoln (Mr. Hall) who spoke next; he was quite concerned about the fact that the counties and regions were excluded. It is rather difficult and I think we all recognize that the counties and regions cannot be governed by the local municipalities.

[5:45]

Mr. Haggerty: What about unorganized territories?

Mr. McNeil: There is nothing to prevent them from being involved in this type of legislation.

The member for Sudbury was quite concerned about whether any topsoil would be removed from his municipality. I might say that I would think that this is one of the reasons for having it under the control of the local municipality. There would be no problem with Sudbury importing topsoil.

Mr. MacDonald: What if the neighbouring municipalities passed a bylaw?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. McNeil: Well, I think that the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Elgin has the floor.

Mr. McNeil: I think the local municipalities or the neighbouring municipalities would pass a sensible bylaw. I have a great deal of confidence in the local autonomy and in the local members of council.

Mr. Warner: It is definitely not reciprocal.

Mr. MacDonald: I am glad you are in favour of local autonomy.

Mr. McNeil: I appreciate the remarks of the member for Essex South. I am sorry that he is having a little trouble with his greenhouse industry, but I think that those matters can be resolved.

Mr. Lewis: He was the most nasty. Of course, you spread a little green around it.

Mr. McNeil: I appreciate also the remarks from the member for Erie. I might say that I have always felt that the various road authorities in this province do a fairly good job of rehabilitation—

Mr. di Santo: You would make a good leader.

Mr. McNeil: —with respect to topsoil removal. I know the municipalities in my area remove the topsoil and then they replace it after the road is constructed. As a rule, they have a little left over, so I think they are actually trying to do a good job with respect to rehabilitation. I don't think that there will be much of a problem with respect to the municipalities in this province.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for third reading.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 72, An Act to preserve Topsoil in Ontario.

ONTARIO GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener moved second reading of Bill 73, An Act to amend the Ontario Guaranteed Annual Income Act, 1974.

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to add a few comments on Bill 73.

It is no doubt, complementary to the changes of the recent federal legislation related to old age security. The federal legislation deals perhaps more with the criteria for eligibility for a pension in full or in part. Forty years of residence in Canada after the age of 18 qualifies an application at the age of 65 for full pension payable anywhere in the world. Under the new rules, partial pensions are established and each year of residence in Canada after the age of 18 has the same value of one-fortieth of a full pension. Ten years of residence in Canada after the age of 18 has a value of ten-fortieths of a full pension.

The federal amendments make it possible for the old age security pension program to include a reciprocal social security agreement with other countries and the benefits are portable by agreement when they are negotiated.

Mr. Lewis: Sure creates two classes of citizens—that is what the federal legislation does.

Mr. Haggerty: Yes, that's what was said last year. I believe in the amendments to this guaranteed annual income—

Mr. Lewis: It is great that you are supporting it.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I think it's a step in the right direction. What it actually does is ensure that those persons who contribute to old age security will receive the maximum benefits.

My area is close to the American border. In the past the federal government perhaps has been over-generous in this particular type of legislation. A person just had to move into the country and claim residence by paying municipal taxes for a period of 10 years. It has been a great benefit to those landed immigrants or citizens moving in from the United States without taking out Canadian citizenship. It has its advantages for Canadians who contribute to it.

I am well aware of the social security program in the United States. Under that scheme a Canadian working in the United States must contribute to that social program before receiving benefits.

Mr. Lewis: The problem is not with the Americans. The question is raised about new immigrants to Canada.

Mr. Haggerty: The section has a provision which will exempt family allowance benefits as an income supplement, and spouse's allowance. Parents and guardians will benefit from this change.

The bill to my knowledge does not suggest portability of the Ontario guaranteed annual income system. Under section 4 the explanatory notes state: "Subsection 4 of the new section 1a empowers the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations to adapt the monthly benefit provisions of the Act to situations, as yet unknown—I am a little bit lost on just what the intent of the bill is in this particular area—which may arise when agreements between Canada and other countries are made, as provided in section 22.2 of the Old Age Security Act (Canada) for the payment of old age security benefits." Perhaps that may answer the question that the leader of the third party has asked.

I see no change in the benefit as far as the cost and involvement of the provincial government is concerned. This still remains at $38.88. I thought that we would see an indexing here—the same as applied by the federal government to old age security and old age supplement.

Those are the comments that I have about the bill. We support it in principle.

Mr. McClellan: I did have some comments to make in opposition to the bill. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, because of the hour if it would make sense at this time to adjourn the debate and resume it—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is still five minutes. It is entirely up to the House.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, you wouldn't have to adjourn the debate. If the hon. members want to call it 6 o'clock, that's all right with us.

ANSWER TO A WRITTEN QUESTION

Hon. Mr. Welch: I wonder if I might at this point table the answer to question 27 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix page 1654).

Mr. Lewis: The member for Bellwoods has two hours, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Of course we don't want him to get a second wind, Mr. Speaker.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See page 1653)

The answer to a written question was tabled as follows:

27. Mr. Grande—Inquiry of the ministry: 1. How many of the residents who were previously overcharged in the Lincoln Place Nursing Home since January 1, 1976, have been reimbursed by the home? 2. In how many other private nursing homes has the same situation existed? Were the residents in those homes reimbursed; if so, how many? [Tabled October 18, 1977.]

Answer by the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell):

1. In my statement to the Legislature on April 14, I indicated that the fiscal resources branch of my ministry would investigate the matter of telephone and ironing and mending charges made to residents of Lincoln Place Nursing Home. I further indicated that, if our findings confirmed the allegation of overcharging practices by the nursing home, I would insist that the residents be reimbursed.

In keeping with my commitment an investigation has been undertaken.

The investigation revealed that residents or their next-of-kin who have been charged for ironing, mending and marking services have signed a "formal written agreement" with the nursing home. Under the terms of this agreement, they are charged a flat rate of $10 per month for this service.

I should point out that under the provision of the Health Insurance Act 1972, "laundry" including machine washing and drying is an insured service. However, mending, marking and ironing are not considered to be a part of "laundry" and are therefore uninsured services. Through an informal arrangement between the Ministry of Health and the Ontario Nursing Home Association in 1973, homes providing this service are not required to maintain detailed documentation supporting the charge, unless specific problems are encountered. It was also agreed that under this arrangement detailed documentation of charges would be provided in the event that the monthly charge exceeds $10.

With respect to the charge for telephone services, this too is an uninsured service and is therefore an item over which we have no statutory jurisdiction. I should point out that legal counsel has confirmed that we have no jurisdiction over uninsured services.

My staff also considered the question of whether the uninsured services which were charged for had actually been provided. Due to the previously identified lack of documentation with respect to ironing, mending and marking, we were unable to determine whether or not the residents who have been charged did in fact receive the services. With respect to telephone services our investigation confirmed that all the residents who have been charged received the services.

In my April 14, 1977, statement, I indicated that I would insist that refunds be made for any overcharges. This statement was based on the advice of my staff who had addressed this matter purely on "moral grounds." It appears to my staff that the amounts being charged for the services may be excessive in relation to the cost of providing the services. The experience of this ministry has been that where charges for uninsured services appear excessive nursing homes have co-operated in making the necessary adjustments.

The ministry has taken the following steps.

(1) The home has been advised to establish an appropriate record-keeping system which will accurately reflect the nature and amounts charged to residents for uninsured services. Follow-up investigations have confirmed the implementation of this requirement, as well as a reduction in the monthly charge for telephone of approximately 50 per cent from the previous $2.15 per month.

(2) Appropriate amendments are being considered in the current review of the nursing home legislation to prevent overcharging.

(3) The informal arrangement with Ontario Nursing Home Association with respect to ironing, mending and marking is being reviewed. In addition, consideration is being given to the possibility of including this service as a part of "laundry."

I should point out that even though the ministry does not have legal jurisdiction over the amounts charged for uninsured services, we intend to pursue the "moral issue" with the licensee of this nursing home.

2. Since January 1977, complaints have been received in connection with six nursing homes regarding charges for uninsured services. These were investigated and two of the complaints were found to be justified. As I mentioned in my answer to Mr. Grande's first question, we have no jurisdiction with respect to the amounts charged for uninsured services. However, the nursing homes have been responsive to our persuasion and have agreed to make the necessary refunds.

In addition, there have been two requests for investigations by a financial consultant from fiscal resources branch of the ministry—excluding Lincoln Place Nursing Home—namely Taara Nursing Home, Port Credit, and MacLaren House Nursing Home, Ottawa. Taara Nursing Home has made the required refunds and the investigation at MacLaren House has not been finalized.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1977

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: We are dealing with second reading of Bill 73. I believe the hon. member for Bellwoods had the floor.

Mr. McClellan: I am rising to oppose Bill 73 on second reading. I would like to set out for the House the basis of our opposition to this bill. I see it as the final step backward or the final step in the dismantling of what was once an excellent provincial minimum income program. When the GAINS program was first introduced in 1974, it represented an excellent bit of progress for this province of Ontario. It was in its structure a very good piece of legislation.

While we on this side of the House had arguments against the adequacy of the benefit levels, we approved—in fact we had demanded—some kind of a minimum income program for Ontario's elderly pensioners. We were pleased when the GAINS program was introduced. As I have said, we were unhappy with the low level of the minimum income ceiling that had been established under GAINS, but in its structure it was an excellent program and it offered much potential for building upon.

The first step in the destruction of the provincial GAINS program took place the last time an amendment to the bill was before us, when the residency requirement was changed from five years to 10 years. We on this side of the House fought that as vigorously as we could, because we saw that as a destructive step which established in this province two classes of citizens: Those who have been here for long periods of time and those who are newcomers to this province, those who are immigrants and new Canadians.

They were discriminated against under the amendments to the GAINS bill that were introduced, I believe, in 1976. They are Canadian citizens who are living in my riding of Bellwoods, in the ridings of Dovercourt, Oakwood, High Park, Parkdale and Downsview and in all of the communities in this province where new Canadians have come and settled. They are Canadian citizens who are discriminated against under the legislation, and that is very tragic.

We now have the final dismantling of what was once a minimum income program for all of the people of this province. What this bill does, through the mechanism of a relation to the residency and eligibility requirements of old age security and the guaranteed income supplement, the changes that were implemented by the federal government in July, is to remove any concept of a minimum income for new Canadians. That essentially is what this bill does. There is no other way of cutting it; there is no other way of describing it.

I can cite some remarks from the compendium of information that was provided to the critics by the ministry. I quote from page three of the background statement: "In order to avoid substantially increased benefit and administration costs created by the federal change, parallel changes to GAINS qualifications will be made." They go on to explain that they have brought the GAINS program into line with the federal program for this simple reason. They have done this, the compendium says, "because the calculation of the GAINS guarantee has been based upon the full old age security level, therefore, partial old age security recipients would have the difference between partial and full old age security made up fully by the GAINS payment if no change in GAINS qualifications were made."

That's it in a nutshell. The fact that the federal legislation was bad legislation and the fact that the federal legislation discriminates against new Canadians and against immigrants does not justify the destruction of the provincial GAINS program.

What should happen, as is suggested on page three of the background statement, is that despite the fact that the federal government has imposed residency requirements on OAS and GIS which effectively exclude new Canadians—that is to say, people who arrive in Canada after July, 1977—from obtaining full old age security and GIS benefits for 40 years, despite the inequities and injustices of the federal law, Ontario should have continued to provide a minimum income program for all senior citizens.

It is simply iniquitous that this change to parallel the federal changes has been made. It is an enormously complicated bill technically. I don't propose to go into the technicalities of the bill, but I need to try to describe to you, Mr. Speaker, what in fact this bill does. As I said, it establishes two classes of recipients. There are those who are referred to under the legislation as entitled to increments. Ministry officials refer to them as "increment people." These are people who meet the full residency requirements in order to qualify for old age security and guaranteed income supplement either now or in the future. They and only they will be entitled to a minimum income. These are the only people in Ontario who will be entitled to a minimum income.

Mr. Wildman: It is discriminatory.

Mr. McClellan: It is discriminatory. The other category of recipients who are entitled to a monthly benefit under the amended GAINS legislation, referred to as monthly benefits recipients by ministry staff, are entitled only to partial old age security and guaranteed income supplement. For them there is no minimum income. There is no income floor below which they will not be permitted to fall. That, as I said, was the essence of the old GAINS program. For every citizen of this province who had been here for five years and who had no other income, a basic income floor had been set by the GAINS program below which no citizen would be permitted to fall. Now that has effectively been undermined and destroyed for those who come to this country after July, 1977.

There is another group of people who are here now and who will have the choice of applying either under the old regulations or under the new federal regulations, but it will take a chartered accountant to make the choice rationally as to whether one should apply under the old provisions of OAS-GIS or under the new provisions of OAS-GIS. That is a situation that nobody in this province, or in this country, should have to undergo.

What's being offered to new Canadians in a nutshell is that they can go on welfare. They can go on welfare or they can go on family benefits—if they reach their retirement years and they qualify either not at all because they have not been here for 10 years, or they qualify only for a portion of OAS-GIS and GAINS. And again, to qualify for the full OAS-GIS GAINS you have to be here for 40 years. And it is simply unacceptable to establish those kinds of discriminations as between long-term residents of this country and those who are going to be new arrivals.

On the basis of my own experience as a representative of a multi-cultural riding I find that my constituents will not go near a welfare office. My constituents, when they are faced with unemployment and not being eligible for unemployment insurance benefits, or if they are on Workmen's Compensation and are having difficulties with the Workmen's Compensation Board, they will not go to a welfare office. There is that much stigma attached to going on welfare within new Canadian communities. That is a simple reality that anybody who represents a new Canadian community is well aware of. Yet the only recourse—and the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick knows what I am talking about—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That makes one of us.

Mr. McClellan: The only recourse, I put to the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick and anybody else who is willing to listen, that is being offered to the elderly from this point on, is to go to the welfare office and then transfer onto family benefits. But the concept that had been available under the old GAINS program of a minimum income ceiling below which no one would be permitted to fall, based only on your current income, no longer exists.

We opposed the changes to the GAINS legislation when they were introduced previously bringing the requirements up to 10 years. We oppose this final dismantling of the GAINS program that is before us today. There is no room in this province for two classes of citizens. There is no room in this country for two classes of citizens.

That the federal government has so estranged itself from the realities and experiences of what was once a very strong part of their constituency is their problem, but the injustices and inequities built into the federal amendments to OAS-GIS last spring should not be built into Ontario provincial programs. We should go back to an adequate GAINS program, which establishes a minimum income for all the elderly in this province based solely on an income test.

All of this nonsense about residence requirement has only to do with residual nonsense, dating from the Elizabethan poor laws, that ought to be scrapped. It has no place, it has no business in a modern industrial society. Human rights do not attach themselves to people by virtue of their nationality. Human rights accompany people by virtue of their humanity. When people come to this country they bring those rights with them and one of those rights is the right to a decent and adequate income in their old age, without the stigmatization and degradation and humiliation of having to apply for welfare.

I hope that my colleagues to my right will have the wisdom to appreciate the rightness of what I'm saying and will reconsider their position. Because this is—

Mr. Riddell: The member has to make his argument a lot more convincing than that. Why should a person be able to qualify for—

Mr. McClellan: I regret that, but the reality is this legislation is discriminatory and should be opposed.

Mr. B. Newman: I rise to support this piece of legislation. I do it because of some of the comments that the previous speaker made. He mentioned that this legislation makes two classes of citizens. Unless we have parallel legislation with the federal legislation we would have two classes of citizens. We would have one class that would qualify under provincial legislation; we would have another that would qualify under federal legislation.

Mr. Wildman: And some wouldn't qualify at all.

Mr. Philip: Because the federal government is wrong doesn't mean we have to be wrong.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: If you had your way everyone would qualify for welfare.

Mr. B. Newman: I think it's quite important to have uniformity if at all possible, and it is possible in this case.

But that isn't the only reason. There is no one in this House who isn't concerned for those in need; everyone is, be they to the left of us, across the aisle or on my right or in my immediate vicinity. We're all concerned and we want to see that everyone that comes into our country is treated fairly.

But, Mr. Speaker, the members on the right, as members of the Legislature, think that they should qualify for maximum members' pensions after three or five years. It's the same thing. Sure they're talking about the same there. They want an individual to come into the country and immediately qualify without making a substantial contribution.

Mr. Conway: Give away the store.

Mr. B. Newman: They can become Canadian citizens in three years. So in three years they would qualify for maximum benefits. That's what they want them to do. Yet the UAW itself and all the unions fought for a 30 and out and a 35 and out.

Mr. Wildman: What's that got to do with it?

Mr. B. Newman: Why didn't they fight for a three years and out? The principle is exactly the same. If it's good for 30 and out or 35 and out, then it's also good for three and out, with a maximum pension.

Mr. Laughren: You are an embarrassment.

Mr. McClellan: This is old age security we are talking about.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, all pensions are generally based on contributions. To make any pension actuarially sound, it should be based on contributions.

Mr. Bounsall: These are not actuarial.

Mr. B. Newman: I know this is not one you can base necessarily on contributions—

Mr. Bounsall: Yes, it destroys your argument.

Mr. B. Newman: —but provision is being made in here to take care of the senior citizen or the individual who comes into Canada and does not necessarily live here for the 40 years. After all, it's two and a half percent for each year of residency, essentially so.

One place where I do differ with the government is that I think that any GAINS programs should be indexed. If the federal government indexes their OAS and their GIS, GAINS likewise should be indexed in the same fashion.

Some of the members don't realize that those of us who live in border towns could have thousands of repatriates coming into Canada and others just crossing the border, living for three years, collecting what they would be entitled to from the American side plus what they could get after a three-year residency or some short period of time.

I think out of all fairness the legislation we have here today does not necessarily meet all of my concerns, but at least it is a step in the right direction.

Mr. Laughren: What a sad performance.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Collecting what they would be entitled to.

Mr. di Santo: I rise in opposition to the bill, not because of the very ludicrous argument made by the member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. Laughren: Silly arguments.

Mr. di Santo: In all honesty, I think he must have been speaking of a different bill.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You were whipped into line; that's why. Your leader said do this and you are doing it. You're a bunch of sheep.

Mr. di Santo: We are not talking tonight of the requirement that immigrants or Canadian citizens should have in order to have a full or partial pension. We are talking tonight of a bill which is modifying the GAINS program instituted by this government in 1974. GAINS is a supplement given to those Canadian residents or citizens who do not qualify for the minimum pension. It is for those Canadians who have been working for a number of years, who have not been able to contribute towards the pension plan and who don't qualify for that minimum income about which even the government's counterparts in Ottawa are talking today. If you read today's newspapers, Mr. Speaker, you will see the federal National Health and Welfare Minister Monique Begin is talking of trying to work out a guaranteed minimum income system.

With this bill we are removing that basic attempt made by the government of Ontario in 1974 to bring about some equity for those senior citizens who have been residents of this country for a number of years but didn't have a chance to contribute fully towards the pension plan. With the GAINS program this government gave them the possibility of getting a minimum of income which would allow them to live in dignified way. As my colleague from Bellwoods said before, we thought when the GAINS program was introduced it wasn't good enough. Even today a pensioner who gets the maximum of GIS and the maximum of GAINS and reaches $294.82 a month is still below the poverty level.

We recognize that, but what this government is doing with this bill is subtracting money from those people who came to this country and who are Canadian citizens, whether they have been living in this country for 15, 20 or 25 years. They are subtracting from their pensions, from their supplement, an amount of money which is quite substantial. In fact, it can be seen from the background material supplied by the minister that if a person has been a resident of this country for 30 years and then qualifies for full GAINS supplement, he or she will get $294.82. But if somebody has been living in this country for 10 years, then he or she will get $181.99, which is more than a $100 difference.

What does that mean not only in financial terms for a pensioner, but in human terms? We are treating citizens of this country in two different ways. We are treating citizens who have certain requirements of residency in one way, while citizens who for reasons we may not know, for reasons that are their own, citizens who have left this country before the 40-year requirement, we are treating in a different way. That's discrimination.

I think this is one of the ways this government has always treated the most vulnerable and weakest group of our people. We know that the government takes a different attitude when we speak of Inco. When Inco lays off 2,800 workers, they don't talk the same way to Inco.

We read today in the Financial Post that there are big Canadian companies—Alcan and Co-Steel—which are investing money in the US. The government is not threatening to withdraw their tax exemptions, but when they come to pensioners and immigrants they do not react to them. That's why they hate them.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Such absolute balderdash. You don't know what you are talking about, Odoardo. You are badly misinformed.

Mr. Wildman: Oh, go back and go to sleep.

Mr. di Santo: This is the same cynical attitude that we have repeatedly noticed in the Minister of Labour when she deals with the injured workers. The last example was the opening of the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker: We'll deal with Bill 73, please.

Mr. di Santo: Yes, but Bill 73, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, she is an emotional cripple.

Mr. di Santo: Bill 73, unfortunately, reflects the general attitude of the government of which the Minister of Labour is one example.

Hon. B. Stephenson: At least I am intact, which is more than I can say for you.

Mr. Wildman: That's true.

Mr. di Santo: As I said before, we oppose this bill which has nothing to do with the pension or qualifications for a pension.

Mr. Warner: The coffee bean is waiting over there.

Mr. di Santo: We're not advocating full pensions for residents of this country after three or five years, as the member for Windsor-Walkerville was saying. We're not saying that. We are talking about the supplements which are a minimum amount of money.

Mr. Haggerty: It's the same principle.

Mr. di Santo: We are talking about the $38 which is subtracted from the people who most need it and for this reason we are opposing the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to enter the debate? If not, the Minister of Revenue.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the members for their comments on this bill. I was interested to hear the remarks from the members for Erie and Windsor-Walkerville. They both appeared to have a good insight as to the intent and purpose of the bill, and indicated the support of their party for it and I thank them.

I think the point the member for Erie made was quite true. It will assist more recent residents, dwelling in Ontario for 10 years or more. I think that's the most important point.

In listening to the arguments raised by the member for Bellwoods and, latterly, the member for Downsview, I'm nonplussed at how they arrive at the rationale for their argument.

Hon. B. Stephenson: There is no rationale.

Mr. Warner: We wouldn't expect you to understand.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: We are talking about the guaranteed annual income supplement, a benefit paid in Ontario impartially to all persons who can qualify, in the first instance, for the old age security pension and subsequently for the guaranteed income supplement. We're providing a benefit. It's not a pension; nor is it a peg to income in the way the member for Bellwoods seemed to imply and as his colleague did as well. I will come to that in just a moment.

Here is a benefit which is now going to be extended and broadened to include a whole new range of people who previously did not qualify. This is especially true for the family and relatives of new Canadian citizens who have come here to be with their relatives and who previously did not qualify in any way. Now, after 10 years' residency with one year in Ontario, they will be able to qualify for a partial old age security pension, a full guaranteed income supplement if their incomes permit it—

Mr. McClellan: That is double speaking.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: —and a full GAINS benefit if their incomes permit it.

Mr. McClellan: You don't understand the bill yourself.

[8:30]

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: I will say it another way. In computing the way a recipient is paid GAINS in Ontario, the recipient who has a full pension is considered to have a full pension in the way we compute our supplement payment. To put it another way, the amount of the monthly benefit paid in Ontario will be equivalent to the monthly increment that would be payable to such persons were they entitled to receive a full monthly pension under the federal Act. We do not take it down in terms of the number of years required in residency as that is pegged to the old age security pension.

In talking about this bill, the member for Bellwoods and his colleagues referred to the matter of discrimination. I suppose it's predictable in terms of the philosophy of their party—

Mr. Wildman: We don't believe in discrimination.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: —but I thought it was not a very strong argument and certainly it was one which failed to convince me; they didn't even express it very strongly themselves.

If there is discrimination, I submit that it is really in the order of dual discrimination at the federal level. In the first instance, if there is anything discriminatory at all, it is discrimination against those who qualify in some way for the old age pension and for the subsequent benefits as against those who do not because they lack the residency. In the second instance, as the member for Windsor-Walkerville has pointed out, there is also an implied discrimination against those who have lived and worked in this country over a period of years and how they have achieved their residency.

Mr. Laughren: Shameful.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Frankly, I think what we are talking about is a really excellent program and one that leads in its field, and has led from the time it was introduced in 1974, in terms of what it does—and this I can say with impunity—over any other jurisdiction in Canada.

Mr. McClellan: Absolute rubbish.

Mr. Warner: The minister of crumbs.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: What we are talking about is a provision in Ontario for a whole new group of pensioners who will receive the same amount that they would receive if they qualified for a full pension. There is no discrimination in terms of residency in terms of the way GAINS is paid.

Mr. Warner: That's a real big "if."

Mr. McClellan: Why don't you live on the $38 supplement?

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: The point of the bill is that the benefit is pegged to income as is the federal guaranteed income supplement, and it is intended to assist senior citizens who are resident in Ontario and who require that supplement.

Mr. McClellan: But there is no income ceiling.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: As has been already mentioned, there are other benefits available for those who do not have their residency qualifications, and I refer to family benefits.

Mr. di Santo: Yes, sure. Welfare.

Mr. Laughren: Lick somebody's boots.

Mr. Walker: More crumbs. You spend your time crushing crackers over there.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Finally, I thank the members of the opposition party for their support. I have to say that I find it regrettable that the members of the third party are not supporting this bill. I think that it is no credit to their party.

Mr. Warner: We are the conscience of Ontario.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Ordered for third reading.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener moved third reading of Bill 73, An Act to amend the Ontario Guaranteed Annual Income Act.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of third reading of Bill 73 will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

RYERSON POLYTECHNICAL INSTITUTE ACT

Hon. Mr. Parrott moved second reading of Bill 25, An Act respecting Ryerson Polytechnical Institute.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?

Mr. Sweeney: Is the minister not going to make a statement?

Mr. Speaker: The bill has passed second reading. What is your wish?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, with respect to that ruling, I was talking to my colleague at the time. We were under the impression with regard to these amendments to the Ryerson bill, since they have been put off for some time and since we were under the impression as well that the members of the board wished to be available to us for this debate this evening and present in the House, that there would be a ministerial statement. If that was to have been the case—and we certainly expected that that was to be the case—as a result, I would ask for the reconsideration of that matter because that was certainly the expectation we had.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of the evening, and it seems so very pleasant in here this evening, we should perhaps accept the suggestion that we do have debate on second reading, although I have no opening statement.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, if I may just speak to the point of order, we were waiting our opportunity. Usually you recognize the official opposition first.

Interjections.

Mr. Martel: We were waiting our turn for the Liberals to be recognized and we would appreciate if Mr. Speaker would give us an opportunity to take part in the second reading debate. I don't think there is that much difference in what's going to transpire, but I think it would be important that we give the bill the consideration it deserves.

Mr. Nixon: He should be running for leader.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this only highlights the need for members to pay attention to what is going on.

Hon. Mr. Welch: You wouldn't get away with that at Ryerson.

Mr. Speaker: The question was duly put and members were given an ample opportunity to respond as they saw fit. I heard nothing.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. In view of what has been said and given the spirit of the House tonight, I'm willing to forget what has gone on before. We will consider second reading of Bill 25. The hon. member for Kitchener-Wilmot has the floor.

Mr. Sweeney: I have been advised by the minister that he would like to get this bill through as quickly as possible, but that other one was absolutely ridiculous. Let me say at the opening to the minister I have no intention of unduly delaying this bill. I would however want to point out, and I think it should be on the record at this time, that when amendments were made to this bill back in 1971 and 1972 there was a clear commitment by this minister's predecessor—I guess two predecessors back—that it would come back in for review within two years.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It is ordered in fact by the bill.

[9:00]

Mr. Sweeney: Okay. It has been put off and put off. As a matter of fact, as early as 1975 we had a clear indication it was supposed to be coming forward. It was put off again in 1976 and now into 1977. I make that observation only because we in all three parties have been given some indication by the Ryerson community they want this bill to go through. However, I think they should recognize if it were held up even tonight, it certainly wouldn't be our fault.

I also want to point out to the minister that I intend to support the bill. I want to make some reference to certain aspects of it and some of its implications, but I certainly will support the bill itself.

There are two chief points to this bill. The first one is the expansion of the board of governors from 13 members to 23 members and also a broader representation of that board of governors. One of the broader representations is that the government appointees will no longer have the very heavy influence on that board they have had in the past. I will certainly speak to the reason why I think that's necessary.

The second major change in this bill is to legitimize, to legalize, the academic council at Ryerson. Ryerson, since it is usually considered along with the universities in this province has not had, up to this point in time, an academic council, a senate, whatever you will, making the major academic decisions, the major curricular decisions and it's well nigh time it did. One of the reasons why I will not hold up this bill any longer is because at the present time the board of governors at Ryerson, I would suggest, because of some recent revelations from that institution, is somewhat demoralized and need an uplift of spirits. There need to be some changes on that board and we will speak to it.

The second point for not holding it up is because after speaking to all the various constituent communities of Ryerson—the faculty, the students, the support staff, the administration staff—they all indicate to me that basically the bill is the best possible compromise given all of their wishes and desires.

With respect to the board of governors, we very much want to see some changes, but in order to highlight those changes, to move down, if you will, the influence your government has had on this board, I want to highlight a few points from the past. I'm not bringing up the past solely for its own sake. Rather we need to emphasize some of the things that have gone wrong in the past before we'll fully appreciate the need to make some changes in the future.

I would draw the minister's attention to the fact that, to the best of my knowledge, Ryerson is the only post-secondary institution in this province that, for some reason or another, has found it necessary to release all four of its presidents. The board of governors has taken action to dismiss all four presidents of Ryerson—for different reasons and under different circumstances, but nevertheless, that is a fact. It has occurred. I don't know of any other post-secondary institution that has had to do that and it speaks to me of some serious internal problems in that institution.

At this point I want to make it very clear that to the best of my understanding and knowledge and from my association with him, the existing president is doing a fine job and should be strongly supported. I would not want any of the points I would make to be a reflection on his administration.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But.

Mr. Conway: But he's running for the leadership of the NDP.

Mr. Sweeney: No, that's beside the point.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If we overdo it, he might.

Mr. Sweeney: I indicated before I feel there has been undue influence, indirectly albeit, from this government on this board.

Mr. Nixon: Indirectly?

Mr. Sweeney: Let's just look at some of the members who have been appointed to this board. Let's just look at some of them. William Kelly.

Mr. Ruston: Oh, I got a letter to our school wanting money for the party. I've got it right here.

An hon. member: The famous William Kelly?

Mr. Sweeney: Hugh Macaulay has been appointed to this board.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Walter Pitman.

Mr. Ruston: Who is he?

An hon. member: Oh, no. Some columnist dog.

Mr. Sweeney: Clare Westcott has been appointed to the board.

Mr. Ruston: Oh, no! Who's he? Whoever heard of him?

Mr. Sweeney: And the present secretary of the board is a former defeated PC candidate—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All your guys are on the bench in the Supreme Court.

Mr. Sweeney: —handed to the board, which was told: "This is going to be your secretary." It is these kinds of things that would suggest to us that there has been undue influence.

Mr. Nixon: How much are they paying him?

Mr. Martel: Sounds like the federal Liberals, doesn't it?

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sweeney: Let's take a couple of specific examples. At a point in time in the fairly recent past, the faculty of Ryerson, supported by the board of Ryerson, decided that they were going to buy a Honeywell computer. A message was brought to them: "No, you won't buy a Honeywell computer. You'll buy an IBM computer." It just so happened that at that particular point in time IBM was the only computer company that had any contracts with this government—lease, sale, anything. There was direct interference by the government itself at that particular institution.

Some hon. members: Shame.

Mr. Sweeney: And yet the minister makes reference to the autonomy of the institution.

Mr. Nixon: They have got a lot of trouble with computers.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I can't hear the speaker for the interjections.

Mr. Sweeney: Let's take a look at this incredible Korey affair again, because I think it is indicative of the kinds of things that have been happening that should not have been happening.

Mr. Peterson: I agree.

Mr. Sweeney: In 1973, while there was a crisis going on because of the dismissal of another president and a lapse as to who the new president would be, this absolutely incredible contract was drawn up. It's one that, as far as I know, once again, has no parallel in the annals of post-secondary education in this province; and if it has, I would certainly like to hear about it. It was a contract worth in excess of $1 million and lasting for 14 years—10 years definite, three more years at an option and another year of sabbatical on top of that, at a salary of $65,000 a year. That's more money than the Premier gets.

Mr. Nixon: You would think he could play hockey.

Mr. Warner: He's not worth that.

Mr. Sweeney: There are a couple of other things that flow from this. The first one is that despite section 7(c) of the existing Act—not the new one; the one we have been working under—which clearly says the president has to be kept informed of what's going on with respect to the staff there, the current president of Ryerson was not apprised until less than a year ago of the contents of that settlement. He didn't know what the salary was. He didn't know what the terms of reference for the job were.

Hon. Mr. Welch: What, his own?

Mr. Sweeney: No, not for himself; for this vice-president who was appointed. Granted, he wasn't there when the deal was made but if any board had any integrity at all as far as their president was concerned, surely he would have been informed. One of the reasons we suspect he wasn't informed is that when one looks at the contract he was given and at the terms of reference of his job, he was for all practical purposes the acting president of that institution. No wonder.

Another thing we have just discovered recently is that several of the board members weren't aware of that particular contract and the contents of that contract. Look at what has happened recently: the so-called settlement, which is costing Ryerson $322,000 at the very same time that Ryerson has a $960,000 deficit for the 1977-78 year. It is already suffering financially and we throw another $300,000 plus into the pot. These are moneys that are not available to the students for the kind of program that we want there.

That's an incredible saga. We really have to wonder, why do they make that kind of a settlement? Is it possible, for example, that under the Corporations Act the individual members of that board might even have been financially liable? Is that one of the reasons? I don't know, but at least I believe it perhaps should be considered.

Let's consider some of the other things that have happened there. Just two years ago, in 1975, it came to our attention—and the deputy minister finally had to advise Ryerson of it—the board approved $325,000 of provincial grant money that should have gone for the day-by-day operation of the academic program of the school was diverted to non-academic uses. Clearly a statement from the minister's own deputy that was not permissible, should not have happened, and yet it did, under the direction of this board.

We have on that board a noted architect; a very fine man, a very reputable man. But was it correct that an architect on the board was also involved in the design of the Ryerson Institute? I am not sure whether that's the best kind of thing to happen. I am not suggesting any lack of integrity there, but that is kind of questionable. I don't think that kind of thing should take place.

One very recent incredible thing—we talk about this board and its chairman, in particular. Does the minister realize that the chairman for the last 16 months has not been the chairman of the board? He has been acting as chairman, but he hasn't been the official chairman. He was appointed in June, 1973, for a three-year term that should have ended in June, 1976. Apparently nobody knew, not even the chairman himself, that according to the bylaws of that board if he were going to continue as chairman he would have to be renominated.

Let me just read what Mr. Kennedy himself said, when this was brought to his attention. Kennedy said: "It's three years, is it? An election is quite possible, then?" Even at the next meeting, what a flippant attitude.

I would have to question what has happened to that board in the last 16 months. Where does that put the decisions that they made? I am not sure. I wonder if your staff knows. And Jack Gorman, the secretary of the board, admitted that he knew that this was going on and yet at the same time said nothing about it. He said: "You asked me if it was my responsibility; it isn't specifically stated in the bylaws. I suppose it could be construed that way." The secretary of the board, who by the way, was earning a salary in the vicinity of $50,000. That's more money than you make, Mr. Speaker. You know, sometimes we have to wonder—

Mr. Reid: That's more money than the minister makes.

Mr. Sweeney: Yes, more money than he makes. Sometimes we have to wonder with these kinds of salaries: $65,000 for the vice president; $50,000 for the secretary of the board. We have to wonder whether this board thinks it is running General Motors or something. A dismissal settlement of $322,000. In 1975, the president of Ryerson brought to the attention of the board that the salaries of the top administration staff should be frozen. What did the board do? Oh, we can't do that.

It might put us out of the competitive running. Competitive running for what? Stelco?

These are the kinds of things we have to look at. I am suggesting to the minister all these things go on and on and on and on.

Okay. What does it boil down to? It boils down to two things. First of all, a clear need to change this board. A clear need to change the chairman of this board. A clear need not to have this government, through its appointment of members of this board, continuing to use Ryerson literally as a plaything.

That's a serious charge, I'll recognize that, but that is the way it has to be perceived. What does Ryerson mean to the government anyway? It's a unique institution in this province, the only one we have—I'd like to speak to that in a few minutes. But clearly changes need to be made.

Mr. Conway: Fire the minister.

Mr. Reid: We can't fire him. He is cheaper than the board comes.

Mr. Sweeney: That's true. Section 3 of this Act speaks to the purposes, the goals and the aims of this institution. I think it's important at this point in time to take a couple of minutes to look at that.

I want to come back to the point I just made. Ryerson is unique in this province. In a way, that's somewhat sad because Ryerson stands for the training of graduates going into our society in the whole area of sophisticated technology. Not only are they top-notch technical people, but they also get a good social training as well.

That's exactly the kind of people that our society needs right now. Economists have been telling us over and over again that the only way that this country is going to survive is to start moving into this area of highly sophisticated technology. We can't compete with some of the Third World countries in lesser industries. Yet if we look at any one of our trading partners, Germany, Japan, Sweden and even England, which we have always thought, recently at least, was less technologically advanced than we were, or had more economic problems, every one of these has clearly recognized the need for polytechnical institutes. Every one of them has many more than we have in proportion to their other post-secondary institutions. We have 16 universities, 22 community colleges and only one polytechnical institute.

It makes me ask again, does the minister really appreciate, and really understand what an institution like this stands for and how needed it is in our society?

Let's just take one other example in terms of high technology. There are several ways in which Canada has shown leadership in the world. One of them is in nuclear energy and it isn't something that happened yesterday. It goes way back 10 or 15 years. We knew at that time we were going to need sophisticated technicians to handle that equipment. Yet what did we do in this province? We've debated this before but it alludes to this particular debate. We didn't do anything to train them; Hydro did train some. Why are we in the position now where we have to bring over all those technicians from England?

I realize they have a longer history in nuclear technology than we do, but we're not babies at it. We knew 10 years ago we were going to need these people. The same thing applies to our basic technicians. Is the minister aware of the fact that right at the present time the majority of top-notch skilled technicians in this province, particularly in industry in this province, are European immigrants? These are men who are in their late forties and early fifties. Thank God they came! They came from eastern and western Europe and helped staff our industry. I don't know where we'd be now if they didn't because we weren't training them ourselves.

The tragedy of this is that when one looks behind those people, there aren't enough young Canadians coming up to take their place. We aren't meeting that need. We aren't meeting that need for high technology technicians, especially in our industry. Ryerson is the very kind of place that can do it. Again, let me repeat, it isn't just because of their sophisticated technical skills. It's also because of the broad social backgrounds they've got. That's what we need. We need this kind of dual man. We perhaps need him more than we need anything else today.

Can the minister continue to justify having only one polytechnical institute in this province? I would have to suggest to him that we should consider almost immediately setting up at least two more, say one in eastern Ontario and one in northern Ontario. I'm not even suggesting that we add on. I'm suggesting that we take one of the community colleges in each of those areas and upgrade it, and I don't think the residents of any of those areas are going to object to an upgrading of a facility, so that we are really meeting some of the advanced needs of this province.

One of the points I want to draw to the minister's attention, and he probably knows something about it, is that the staff at Ryerson right now are making intense personal sacrifices in terms of their budget and in terms of their time to do some long-range planning for Ryerson. Where does it go in the future? They're making those sacrifices. I think it's time for the government to make some indication it supports them in those sacrifices.

When we look at the kind of support they're getting, when we see that they're $960,000 in deficit for this year, when we notice that their BIU is 1.3, which is about as low as they can get—well, they can go as low as one—compared to the university funding, and they're lumped in with university funding, we really have to wonder how serious the government is in financing this institution.

Ryerson came to the attention of the public shortly after the Second World War when the veterans flooded back. We discovered that men and women could come back to this country highly motivated, but many of them without too great academic backgrounds, and turn out to be tremendous people that once again have been very good for our country. I would suggest we've got a similar pattern here right now. We've talked about this in your ministry estimates, that there surely is a need in our society now to provide high technology training; in terms of opting in for people who are already out there, people to whom maybe we haven't given a chance, or maybe we haven't offered the right thing to them.

What I am saying overall is that I think Ryerson is a pretty important place. I want to see it run as well as possible. I think the provisions of this bill are going to make it a better place, but it is only going to be a better place if you and your government are equally dedicated to it. If you can match the dedication of the president and the staff of that school, and of the students and of the faculty and of the support staff, if you are as committed to it as they are; if you can take a look at Canada's needs for today and tomorrow and see that a place like Ryerson, and a couple of more Ryersons are going to help meet those needs; then what we are doing will be well worthwhile and I will certainly support you.

Mr. Bounsall: I rise in wholehearted support of this Act respecting Ryerson Polytechnical Institute. First and foremost because it finally assures the formation of a board of governors at Ryerson who, as opposed to the boards we have had there in the past, will be solely dedicated to the best interests of Ryerson. That is very much what we need at that institution. They have grown; they have prospered; they have made great academic achievements and turned out graduates who are extremely useful to our society—

Mr. Laughren: Right here.

Mr. Bounsall: We have one in our caucus on this row as well, the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren), extremely useful to our society and among those who have self-fulfilled themselves in spite of some of the machinations which have gone on there.

The previous speaker mentioned the various government appointees to the board who were very closely associated, in one capacity or another, with the present government in power. I think some of them were capable of making good decisions, but I think that sort of close tie-in was a type of tie-in which is not needed at any of our so-called autonomous institutions of post-secondary learning. In fact it acted, I suspect, to the overall detriment of Ryerson in its board decisions.

Here we have a board which will in fact from the composition of it, ensure that the best interests of Ryerson, not necessarily the best interests of the government of Ontario, are first and foremost in their considerations. The addition to the board of three members from the alumni and two members from the academic staff, meaning the members of the support staff bargaining committee, are in fact very worthwhile additions to any board of governors, and in particular this one. That there will also be three members from the teaching faculty and three members from the student body is indeed a welcome addition.

I have read over the submissions by the various bodies at Ryerson, it seems such a long time ago, for the formation of this new board of governors. Some may quibble on that representation, but from my contacts with them I can assure the House that the bill, as presented by the minister, is one on which all sections of Ryerson are indeed happy in terms of how they feel their board of governors should operate. I would say to the minister that in his appointment of the nine members—or the appointment by the Lieutenant Governor in Council—that they do not fall into the errors which they have in the past in appointing people who the government feels they can influence, or who can be counted on to be a mouthpiece of the government if that has in fact been the case. I suspect it has been. I would say to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that she go out of her way for this unique institution to appoint persons who will be sincerely dedicated to the best interest of that very good institution and not ones who will necessarily be holding the line for the government or giving forth a policy for the government.

I very much regret that this bill was not brought in and debated in this House sooner than tonight. The original date on the bill for the formation of the board was to be November 1 of this year following the elections from those various constituent bodies. The bill was introduced in the spring; it should have been debated then so that this board, a much more dedicated one, could have been in place by now. It should have been debated in July when it was again introduced so that this board could still have been in place now.

I gather that the minister is making an amendment which changes the date on which, following election, the board members will take office. It is to be July 1, 1978. I don't quarrel with that date, because for it to be done any sooner one would have to have elections for the students and the faculty, and some mechanism for the alumni elections, which are impossible, really, at a very much earlier date now.

I regret very much that the minister could not ensure that the bill was in fact debated—not that it being such a good bill it needs much debate in the House, but so that the board could have been in place now.

There are many interesting aspects of the bill on which I could speak at some length, but I rather thought the member who spoke earlier and who was occupying the chair at the start of the debate, was perhaps in tune with the feelings of the House when he indicated that the bill had passed second reading without any comment from this side of the House. He was a bit perceptive about the need to get this bill passed and in operation. Very little in fact needs to be said about a bill which has met with such widespread approval within the institution of Ryerson itself.

The minister has made comments from time to time about this bill not setting a precedent for boards of governors of other institutions. I think he's right in one respect in that statement in that every bill for any institution is a separate bill, brought in on its own and it need not necessarily set a precedent. But the very fact that this is a board which has members of the support staff bargaining unit on it, that provides for parity between students and faculty members, and has the same parity with alumni, is a pattern that is going to be rather irresistible for other institutions which may want to follow the trend. It is a pattern which can be welcomed; a pattern which the minister, as bills come forward for amendment—the University of Toronto Act, for example, should be before us very soon—a pattern which the minister need not shy away from. In fact the minister can point to this bill as one which met with approval from Ryerson and one which, as far board representation is concerned, could well be followed and not be feared by any other university in this province.

In looking at the bill in terms of comparing it with the other Ryerson bill, the bill under which Ryerson has operated up to now, we can certainly say that the reappointment and re-election clauses are an improvement and certainly reasonable. Two terms maximum before a board member must go off; but here again if you find an excellent board member whose contribution has been superb, after one year that board member may be brought back on.

I think that the provision for vacancies is an improvement over the previous Act under which if a member had, without having had a leave of absence, attended less than a third of the meetings, he would formerly have been off the board. That's now been increased to half. I think that's a valid increase. It means that you really shouldn't be sitting on that Ryerson board unless you are dedicated to doing a job for that board, and the increase to one-half from one-third is a positive step.

Again, the method of filling vacancies when they occur is quite reasonable. The academic council appointed under this particular bill, now that it's finally established, is of course a necessary thing at Ryerson and represents quite a step forward. It is comparable to what one usually refers to as the senate in other universities, but the term "academic council" is much more descriptive of what takes place and less pretentious, and it is to the credit of Ryerson that they call the council that deals with all academic matters an academic council rather than some name which does not aptly describe the function. Of course, the meetings of both the academic council and the board are open to the public.

I just wish to say, Mr. Speaker, a very few words on the situation of Dr. George Korey, knowing full well these remarks are really out of order since we're really speaking on a bill to establish a board of governors and an academic council and the conditions under which they operate.

The situation of Dr. George Korey, who if nothing else it becomes clear is a superb negotiator, is indicative of the fact we needed a board reorganized as it has been in this bill. A board such as this would not have let those conditions develop; it is a board which—

Mr. Wildman: Was Alan Eagleson working for him?

Mr. Bounsall: —would be more in tune with academic considerations in this province than the previous board must have been when, in 1973, they made the incredible arrangements, of which we are now aware, for and with Dr. Korey for his continued participation at Ryerson.

The question arises, this same board had to do with his termination. I'm not getting down on that board, I don't know what the considerations were with respect to the lump sum payment finally arrived at, $217,316.32 Canadian funds, pertaining to finally getting rid of Dr. Korey, but I suspect with the problems which may well have arisen if a settlement of this sort had not been arrived at, the legal battles which may have ensued and the time they would have taken from the other proper activities of board members and administrative officers, it might have been relatively cheap at that price. I'm not privy to all the ins and outs, but I can imagine the amount of time spent, the amount of time taken away from other activities in which the board and the administrator should be engaged, which might have occurred if we had arrived at a situation of unpleasantness at Ryerson with respect to this particular person's termination.

I don't pass judgement one way or the other on it, those are just my feelings.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, Ryerson is a very typical institution in the province of Ontario. It has tremendous strengths. It has a president who is respected all across Ontario; who is seated in our Speaker's gallery tonight listening to the debate. He is a former member of this House who was well respected in this House while he was here, and he continues to gain respect.

Mr. Conway: If you only had him now he might do something with that bunch.

Mr. Martel: At least there are possibilities beyond the pale.

Mr. Bounsall: The suggestion came from the Liberal critic for Colleges and Universities that here in Ontario, we should develop another couple of polytechnical institutions similar to Ryerson. Ryerson has always done a good job in the past, in spite of its board, in spite of its lack of academic council. We have a bill before us which allows Ryerson to fully develop as a democratic consultative institution within its internal structures, as it should have long ago but is about to as of July 1978.

I would hesitate to try to reproduce anywhere else in this province, by upgrading or otherwise, an institution equal to what Ryerson is at the moment, and will most certainly continue to be. I think we should all rejoice in a bill which gives Ryerson, in every respect, it's proper structure to carry on the excellent job which it has done in the past in full confidence. It will continue to grow and do a most excellent job in the future.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I could not let this event pass without expressing myself.

Mr. Martel: Is that in your riding?

Mrs. Campbell: Yes.

Mr. Martel: I thought it was.

Mrs. Campbell: The great institution in the great riding of St. George.

I am here to congratulate the minister in bringing this legislation forth. We have been discussing it for a long time. It seems to me the sooner we pass it, the sooner we may clarify, at least, the issues which still must be faced in the interim in this institution.

It is indeed a great and singular institution in this province. I hope that under the new regime we will never again face the kinds of experiences we have evidenced in the last few years. I, too, want to add my voice in congratulation to the president of this great institution, because he certainly, in my opinion, has pulled a great deal of this place together against rather long odds.

Mr. Reid: We like him better now than we did when he was here.

Mrs. Campbell: I did not know him when he was here so there are no comparisons to be made.

Mr. Reid: He was the only sane NDP member they had.

Mr. Martel: Like the only Liberal Labour member in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: He doesn't know where to sit now.

Mrs. Campbell: I would like to point out one of my concerns, and that is the way in which we have dealt with this recent contract, and the way in which we have employed personnel. Mention has been made of at least one position. We went through anguish when we were trying, against what we foresaw in those times to be desperate odds, to save the open college program. I am prepared to welcome the new regime, deeply confident that that sort of dichotomy will never again occur in this institution.

I would add to what my colleague has said by way of training. At this point in time in our history in this province it is a pity as I see it, that we are also having to watch one of the ministries of this government, namely the Labour ministry, import personnel to supervise the occupational health and safety legislation.

Mr. Reed: That's a shame.

Mrs. Campbell: Surely this is a function that Ryerson could be uniquely prepared to undertake. I also join with my colleagues in this House, both of them, in urging that there should be more polytechnical institutions in this province. I would accept that they should be in eastern Ontario and in the north where we have a great need to develop the skills such as Ryerson had developed, but I would remind those who are so interested in the establishment of those two new institutes that Ryerson is the flagship of them all.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, before I begin, I also wish to pay tribute to a man who was a former member of Parliament, a former member of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, and who presently is a renowned runner in the city of Toronto as well as being the president of Ryerson, and a man for whom I have a great deal of respect; and who is sitting in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, observing the proceedings.

Mrs. Campbell: You are not allowed to do that.

Mr. Warner: If cabinet members can do things like that then we mere opposition members can.

The minister, having presented us with some very desirable and long-sought legislation, should now bring back the Act respecting community colleges and amend it accordingly so that at one fell swoop those 22 institutions finally will have represented, at their locations, students, support staff, teachers and other administrative people as well as a real cross-section of the local community involved in the setting of the business of those community colleges.

It's about time—and we have done it here; we have dragged the board out of the closet and we are finally going to be able to see what they do. We are going to have some idea of how they carry on their affairs and we have a little better opportunity now to have some sort of balance.

The kind of situation the member for Kitchener-Wilmot (Mr. Sweeney) raised with respect to a contract, or whatever it happens to be, is the kind of thing that should not happen. It has happened and it continues to happen because of those patronage appointments and because it's a closed shop. For all intents and purposes it really is a closed shop. The minister finally has opened the door of the closet, because for too long we have been operating in a closet in having those decisions made and people not knowing what's going on. The institution is not able to respond and the community is not really represented.

I know the minister will tell us tonight that we have put token women on boards and we have had token representation from labour in some communities, but he really hasn't had his heart in it. He really hasn't tried to get a cross-section of the community represented on the board. That has got to stop, and the minister now provides an opportunity.

Mr. Conway: Are there any good Liberals on there?

Mr. Laughren: Name one.

Mr. Conway: I am available, Floyd.

Mr. Samis: He said a good one.

Mr. Warner: We know that—and for free.

I would like to know how the minister intends to carry on from here. He has presented some decent legislation. What will he now do with respect to those other institutions in Ontario? How does he intend to get those other universities to enact the good legislation that's in here? What kind of influence is he now going to use with those other institutions?

We did see the McMaster bill earlier, a year or so ago, where we made some improvements—not enough but some. The improvements, quite frankly, were not as good as what's in this bill dealing with Ryerson, but they were a modest beginning.

I'd like to know what kind of a timetable the minister has set out for himself to bring about the improvements for the remaining universities, and if he is now prepared to deal with that one Act respecting the 22 community colleges, because that is extremely important.

At the same time, I think he should be telling the House what he intends to do to ensure that the kind of contract that was handed out at Ryerson, the kind of contract that even Bobby Orr couldn't get in his heyday, or any other of those overpaid characters, won't be repeated ever again. Because surely the members of this House, and the public members of the boards of these institutions, should not be expected to have to spend their time rooting around trying to find out where they are being ripped off.

Surely that is something that can be stopped right at the outset by the minister himself. I'd like to know what he intends to do to make sure we don't have any more of these economic leeches hanging around. That kind of business has got to stop.

I know the minister is going to acknowledge that the blame comes back to the very beginning of the patronage appointments. What else can you expect when you start filling up those vacancies with defeated Tories? Heaven knows there's enough of them around, but what else do you expect? Or from appointing—somehow it makes a great deal of sense to start appointing to the board of Ryerson or any other place, the heads of corporations, and I don't understand that. Most of those people have never worked a day in their life, but somehow they are going to understand the plight of students. Somehow they are going to understand what the college should be doing in order to educate those students so that they can get a job. Ridiculous.

This bill happens to go a step along the line of eradicating that kind of nonsense. It is a beginning, a modest beginning—a good one, and I applaud it as others have this evening; but it's a beginning. I now want to know what the minister is going to do to follow it up so that this whole business of patronage appointments, of non-representation from the community, can be answered once and for all.

Can it be done in the next two years? I think the minister can do it within two years. I call upon him to do exactly that, so that within two years we have made the kinds of changes that are in this Act apply to every community college and every university in the province of Ontario.

The challenge is there for the minister, if he has the interest and the desire to confront all those defeated Tories.

Mr. Van Horne: I support Bill 25 and my comments in support will be brief, however I hope they will be meaningful.

Let me note at the outset that I am proud to say that in the academic year 1951-52 I was a Ryerson student. I am proud to be able to say that those days in the old buildings were rather different, I suspect, from the days a student might experience now at Ryerson. But I did perceive, in those days, a very dedicated staff and a talented student body.

Mr. Conway: Obviously.

Mr. Van Horne: Ryerson, in my opinion, was good then and it is almost great now, in spite of what I perceive to be some of the meddling of our present government. It is interesting to note, and I am sure many of you have, that there are apparently more of us on this side of the House who consider this to be an important issue than there are on the other side of the House. Witness the numbers present.

Mr. McClellan: Cross indifference.

Mr. Baetz: We have quality if not quantity.

Mr. Breithaupt: Six are enough.

Mr. Van Horne: My colleagues from Kitchener-Wilmot and St. George, and also the members for Windsor-Sandwich and Scarborough-Ellesmere have all spoken very eloquently about the excellence of education at Ryerson and they have brought to our attention some of the political warts on the surface. I would sincerely hope that this bill, and even more important the discussion tonight, will act as a source of motivation for the ministry to make sure the educational process and not the political process is first and foremost in all our minds.

Generally, I think we all concur that the expanded board is a positive move. I do have one or two personal reservations with a section or two of the bill and I would like to at least have this noted on the record. It strikes me, and I say this by way of reservation, that there is a little bit of discrimination in section 4(10), which specifically excludes members from the teaching faculty, administrative staff and the student body from ever being chairman or vice-chairman. One would have to wonder if there isn't a case that could be made for the involvement of these people at least in a compromise position as vice-chairman.

I would suggest, in keeping an eye on the implementation of this bill, that the minister consider the possibility, particularly if there is further recommendation or representation from faculty and students, of a later amendment. I would suggest that we also all have great hope for the academic council and its role. There has been considerable criticism about the apparent lack of planning to meet the needs in our 1977 technological age. My colleague from Kitchener-Wilmot made particular note of that, as did the member for Windsor-Sandwich. I would like to suggest that academic council, in the role as defined in section 10, has a very important part to play in the life of this great institution.

In summary, it is a pleasure to be able to make these remarks in support of this bill.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Conway: Now this is conflict of interest.

Mr. Cureatz: Where did he graduate from?

Mr. Laughren: It was not my intention to take part in the debate, but as another graduate of this fine institution I felt I really should say a few words.

Mr. Conway: Was it really that valuable then?

Mr. Laughren: Contrary to the opinion of some members of the House, I received a very fine business education at Ryerson. For those of the other parties who think we couldn't run a corner grocery store, I can assure you that I could run a store much larger than that. As a matter of fact, I'd like to run the store called Ontario some day.

Mr. Curcetz: Never.

Mr. Warner: You guys opposite would sell the store to the Americans.

Mr. Laughren: Just give us the chance.

I am very happy, by the way, to see the expanded board and to see what we've always called parity on the board. I can remember the debate back before I even got here. I can remember reading through Hansard, when I was the critic for Colleges and Universities for the New Democratic Party, and reading the rather heated debates over what parity meant and some of the rather strange pronouncements that came from different people in the university community, who should have known better, talking about parity, and from members opposite as well.

I can remember the position of the then minister, I think it was John White, and some of his vacillations on the subject. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we need to approach that kind of co-operation, not only in places like Ryerson but in many other institutions in our society. Other speakers tonight have made the point very well—that it is not something to be feared but rather something to be encouraged, and I think that Ryerson serves as a very useful model.

When I went to be an instructor at a community college in Ontario, because of my background I always had in mind the institution of Ryerson. I think that really was a very suitable model upon which community colleges were built in the province. I think they have contributed a great deal and will continue to contribute a great deal to the educational process in Ontario. So I am very pleased to add my voice of support for this bill.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to get involved in this debate? If not, the hon. Minister of Colleges and Universities.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief in my reply to the various speakers. When the member for Kitchener-Wilmot got to the middle of his speech this evening I thought perhaps I had misread this House rather badly, that I didn't see the spirit I thought was there; it sort of dissipated for a few moments there.

Mr. Sweeney: But true.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: But he wound up on the right note, so we'll forgive him all those nasty comments.

Mr. Conway: Dentists have such thick skins.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am very pleased you have admitted that by consultation we have reached the best possible compromise. You know that's high praise for this government, and I don't presume to say that I deserve that myself but it is certainly nice to hear the members opposite say that by consultation we have reached the best compromise possible. I think that should be underlined in Hansard and I am glad to see it on the record.

Mr. Conway: It's a rare thing.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Quite frankly, very few of the remarks by the member for Kitchener-Wilmot were on the principle of the bill. I shall not reply, therefore, to those remarks at any length whatsoever.

Mr. Mancini: A cop-out.

Mr. Warner: What an easy way out.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am apt to praise the president of the institution, as he holds his office today, in fine style. I am even prepared to forgive him his misspent youth on the benches opposite. I don't think we should hold that against him. Now that he has matured I am sure that he, like you have said, is doing an excellent job as the president of a great institution.

Mr. McClellan: What are you going to do when you grow up?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: You know, it's just wonderful to stand in this House and have total support from all sides and all members. There is one contradiction, however, that worries me a little bit, and that is members indicated the past presidents were all wrong, past members of the board were all wrong.

Mr. Sweeney: I said they were dismissed.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That was the way it came through; and yet at the same time the institution was a great institution.

Mr. Sweeney: In spite of it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I suspect that you know its pretty difficult to separate the presidents and the boards from the quality of the institution today, as you make the point, as it was in the past.

Mr. Warner: Kind of like your election. It happened by accident.

Mrs. Campbell: The faculty and the students.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I accept your comments that Ryerson is a great institution both today and previously, and I predict it will be a great institution, as great as it is today.

I must take exception to comments, particularly the comments from the member for Kitchener-Wilmot, that Ryerson is the plaything of government; a grossly unfair statement, Mr. Speaker, I think that was entirely uncalled for.

Mr. Sweeney: When you interfere that much what else can we think?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Because in my opinion there have been some excellent people serve on that board in the past. There will be excellent people serve on it in the future, and to suggest that this government—

Mr. Warner: Name names.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —has considered Ryerson a toy is a great disservice.

Mr. Sweeney: You misused it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, the hon. member said that, and at great disservice to a fine institution. But I am being a little provocative when I say that and I shouldn't continue on that line.

Mr. Lewis: Do you know any members of the board? Name one excellent member of the past boards.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I do want to say though, Mr. Speaker, when we talk about the commitment of the faculty and staff and students, I am not going to deny that for a moment—

Mr. Lewis: It is not students.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —but I think this government has always matched the dedication of the students and the staff and faculty. In fact I don't think there is a jurisdiction that has put greater emphasis on post-secondary education than the province of Ontario over the years, and that's as it should be. But I think we can say, on this side of the House, we do match the dedication and the commitment to post-secondary education that we see in the institutions.

[10:00]

Mr. Conway: Dream on, Harry, dream on.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I would like to say to the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere that five of the 15 universities have had their Acts updated in recent times. Carleton and York are on their way now; the Toronto Act will be before the House when Dr. Macdonald's committee has reviewed the U of T governing council. So that I don't see a great number of bills coming forward, other than the three I named, in the near future.

There really is very little more for me to say, except to again express my pleasure that so many members of this House have expressed their endorsement of the bill and of the institution. Let it be on the record that this government has always considered Ryerson a unique institution and one that deserves a great deal of praise. I'm sure it will have a continuing history of fine academic record in training people for the various endeavours in Ontario.

During the committee of the whole House, and I hope that's where it might go for a few minutes, there is a very small amendment to change the effective date from November 1977 to July 1978, that I hope we can address at that time.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole.

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION AND HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 84, An Act to amend the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act.

Motion agreed to.

The bill was also given third reading on motion.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 85, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

RYERSON POLYTECHNICAL INSTITUTE ACT

House in committee on Bill 25, An Act respecting Ryerson Polytechnical Institute.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The only amendments I have, Mr. Chairman, the critics have notice of. They are to section 17 and section 19.

Mr. Philip: I'd simply like to comment to the minister—

Hon. Mr. Welch: We are on Bill 25.

An hon. member: You are on the wrong bill.

Mr. Chairman: This is Bill 25.

Mr. Philip: Okay, sorry.

Mr. Lewis: It was the House leader's error.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Be careful, I will be quoting Dr. Seuss.

Mr. Lewis: Oh? That would raise the level of the debate.

On section 1:

Mr. Sweeney: On section 1(2), I would like to ask the minister why that section was put in. My understanding is a specific Act always takes precedence over a general Act and therefore it would appear that this section is not necessary. Why is it put in?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I don't think that detracts at all from the bill. I think it clearly identifies that in a conflict the Corporations Act will have precedence, or at least this Act will prevail. I see no problem; I really don't understand the difficulty.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Chairman, I'm not objecting to it. I just wondered if there was some reason to put it in because I can't see any point to it. All right. Let's leave it at that.

Section 1 agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Sweeney: Section 4(1)(e): The terminology used there is "two members elected by the administrative staff from among themselves for a term of two years." Is the term "administrative" used here to include support staff? I understand that's the intent, but I want to be sure the minister means that.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: As I go to the definition, I read "administrative staff" means the full-time employees of the board who are not members of the teaching faculty," and I think what you're saying is correct.

Mr. Sweeney: Good. Thank you.

Section 4 agreed to.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. Sweeney: Section 6(1)(p): We have to go back and check a couple of things. It says the academic council will recommend with respect to such things as degree programs; the board, in consultation with the minister, will in fact accept the program. Just exactly what does "in consultation with the minister" mean, because it is my understanding at the present time the minister may in fact decide there shall or shall not be a degree program at Ryerson? Does "in consultation" mean something else?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: In this particular institution, the degree-granting portion has always had very limited connotations and to ensure that continues, the Act clearly states it must be "with consultation" rather than in a university community, where that consultation isn't required.

Mr. Sweeney: I understand that's been the practice in the past, but now we are legitimizing and legalizing the academic council and if I may move ahead, just to illustrate the point, to section 10(c) and then again subsection (h), it would appear the new academic council has expanded powers and duties beyond what the old board had. At least that would be my interpretation. That's why I'm asking whether in fact, Ryerson is entering a different kind of era than in the past with respect to its own autonomy to decide whether or not it shall have a degree program.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Not with reference to degree programs.

Section 6 agreed to.

Section 7 agreed to.

On section 8:

Mr. Sweeney: Section 8(3) is a new item: "The board shall make available to the public an annual report including an annual financial report in such form and manner as the board may determine." Given some of the difficulties of the past, why would the board make that decision rather than the minister?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: In section 8(1) we are in a position where we can ask for the financial report. The key words in subsection 1 are "financial report." It's quite conceivable that the board might wish to have additional information for the public in addition to the annual financial report; so it gives the board an opportunity to make a fuller report if they so wish. Obviously the minimum is a financial report, which is required by the ministry.

Mr. Sweeney: I appreciate the point the minister is making in subsection 1, but under subsection 3 does that mean that if the board were to make information available to the public in such a form that was unacceptable to him and his ministry, that there is nothing the minister could do about it?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think we're getting into the area of institutional autonomy. Our main concern, and rightly so, should be the financial report of that institution. There are many other matters which are not necessarily under the jurisdiction of the ministry, and I don't think that we should put into the Act the restriction that it would be our requirement for the type of information that must be supplied. If we're going to give the board the accountability and responsibility that they have under the Act, then we should give them this leeway.

Section 8 agreed to.

Sections 9 to 16, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 17:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Parrott moves that section 17 of the bill be amended by striking out "November 1977" in subsections 1, 2, 3 and 4 and inserting in lieu thereof in each instance "July 1978."

Motion agreed to.

Section 17, as amended, agreed to.

Section 18 agreed to.

On section 19:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Parrott moves that subsection 2 of section 19 of the bill be amended by striking out "November 1977" in the second line and inserting in lieu thereof "July 1978."

Motion agreed to.

Section 19, as amended, agreed to.

Section 20 agreed to.

Bill 25, as amended, reported.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Chairman, we were going so fast a few moments ago that we seemed to have slipped through third reading of Bill 84. I find that I have a very minor amendment which I agreed to introduce. I would like to ask the concurrence of the House to deal with both Bill 84 and Bill 85 in committee.

Mr. Breithaupt: We are prepared to agree, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lewis: You don't hear anything from me.

[10:15]

Mr. Chairman: I would have to ask the House to reconsider that. I just don't know if the committee has the authority to do that or not.

Mr. Lewis: I think we would have to ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Chairman, I think we have consent on that with your permission.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT

House in committee on Bill 85, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Mr. Chairman: Any comments, amendments on any section?

On section 1:

Mr. Philip: I am particularly pleased to see section 1 of this bill. The minister will recall that the previous member for Durham East and I brought up this whole issue of medical records in April. We were very concerned about what would happen about the privacy of the medical records. The minister fairly promptly responded then that action would be taken to safeguard the privacy of the individuals and we appreciate the sensitivity that he has shown in bringing in this bill, and then in handling it in section 1.

I am still not convinced, and I might add neither are a good many of the trucking companies or their drivers or their personnel, that it is necessary for the MTC to still collect this data, and why it wouldn't be sufficient to simply set standards and to have a medical practitioner certify that the person concerned then came up to the standards. However, be that as it may, certainly we agree and we are very supportive of the intent of section 1. We welcome the fact that the minister has responded to this.

The only other item that I will have to bring up is some question on section 15 unless there is someone who wishes to speak on a section earlier to that.

Section 1 agreed to.

Sections 2 to 14, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 15:

Mr. Philip: My understanding of the definition of a highway was that this could include concession roads. Many farms have had roads pushed through their property as the area gradually changes from being a rural farm area to suburban or sometimes rural residential. My concern is with subsection 2. I wonder if the minister would comment on the necessity of having animals deprived of using the highways in certain municipalities, where, perhaps, cottagers or residents from urban areas may in fact be able to control councils. Would this not present a problem to the original rural inhabitants? Would he be willing to consider at least deleting that one small section of the subsection?

Hon. Mr. Snow: This amendment involves the deletion of the words "on which the maximum speed limit is 50 miles per hour." At present, a municipal council can pass by-laws to prohibit certain vehicles, animals, et cetera, from using a highway under its jurisdiction on which the speed limit is 50 miles per hour.

This reduction or deletion of the speed limit gives the municipality the same right to limit the use of that highway, for instance, if the speed limit happened to be 40 miles per hour. From experience, not necessarily with all roads but most of the rural roads that we are concerned with as far as animals are concerned, the speed limit would have been 50 miles per hour in any case and the municipalities, the townships, already have that right.

The purpose of this particular amendment is to allow more built-up municipalities to control the use of vehicles on those of their streets that may have speed limits of less than 50 miles per hour, such as not allowing bicycles or other types of vehicles on a particular street. I don't anticipate there would be any problem for any rural municipalities prohibiting animals, because in most cases they can do it now since most of the roads have 50 miles per hour limits.

Mr. Philip: With all respect, one can understand why the minister would want to prevent horses and cows from running down the streets of Etobicoke. However, in those transitional communities and where farming is active this will pose a problem to the local farmers.

It's a concern that I checked out with some people at the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. They, in turn, expressed some concerns on that one particular item that it would cause problems for some of their members. I am wondering if perhaps in this one case then that the minister might consider deleting the word "animals" from that section.

Hon. Mr. Snow: There has been a communication from the Federation of Agriculture to the ministry. I was not aware of it until this moment. Certainly it is not the intention of this amendment to interfere in any way with the agricultural community or with a farmer from moving his animals from one side of the road to another. As I say, in most cases a rural municipality could do this now because most of the roads have a 50 miles per hour limit. I just can't envisage any municipality passing a bylaw that would prohibit the movement of animals on a rural road.

I can see a municipality passing a bylaw where it would want to limit or prohibit animals, oxcarts or whatever it might be from travelling on Yonge Street. At the present time, they could not do that because Yonge Street doesn't have a 50 miles per hour speed limit.

I can understand the hon. member's concern, but certainly there is nothing intended here to do that. If we were to remove the word "animals" from the regulation, then that would not allow a municipality to prevent someone driving a herd of animals down the main street of a municipality.

Mr. Philip: I don't want to prolong the debate because I recognize that it may not be a matter of immediate provincial importance. However, could the minister not simply handle that problem by simply adding the word "non-farm animals"? That would get away from the problem of people driving oxcarts and things like that down the streets of Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I still say that does not serve the purpose that is intended here—to give municipalities the same power to control animals on a 30 miles per hour road as they presently have on a 50 miles per hour road. Certainly the necessity for this control is more so in a 30 miles per hour zone than in a 50 miles per hour in a built-up municipality.

Section 15 agreed to.

Sections 16 to 18, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 85, as amended, reported.

Hon. Mr. Welch moved the committee rise and report.

Mr. Philip: Point of order, Mr. Chairman, before that motion is put, I understand that the minister had an amendment to make to Bill 84.

Hon. Mr. Welch: You will have to go back into the House.

Mr. Lewis: You forgot another one. That is what I told you. You are just not a very competent fellow—you are well meaning and earnest but bumbling.

Mr. McClellan: You couldn't run a peanut stand.

Mr. Lewis: You have never met a payroll on Main Street—you can tell that.

Mr. Chairman: Is there a further amendment to Bill 85?

On section 19:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Snow moves that subsection 1 of section 19 be amended by inserting after section 7 in the first line "16" and that the said section 19 be further amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"(3) Section 16 comes into force on a day to be named by proclamation of the Lieutenant Governor."

Section 19, as amended, agreed to.

Bill 85, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported certain bills and asked for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

THIRD READING RESCINDED

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the third reading of Bill 84 be rescinded.

Mr. Speaker: As you know, this is a departure and we don't want it to be taken as a precedent in this House. It just highlights the need for members and ministers to pay attention.

Do we have unanimous consent? If we have unanimous consent, it's in order for you to move the amendment.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The minister can now move the amendment that he proposes to Bill 84.

Mr. Lewis: This is a humiliating night for the government.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I apologize for this but this is a minor amendment which has been discussed. I'm not sure it's necessary but to alleviate any concerns I would like to move it.

Hon. Mr. Snow moved that subsection 2 of section 7 be struck out and the following inserted in lieu thereof: "(2) Subsection 3 of the said section 91(a) is amended by striking out 'to a municipality' in the first line and by inserting 'in lieu thereof pursuant to an agreement under subsection 2' and by striking out 'by the municipality' in the second line."

Mr. Makarchuk: That is very clear.

Mr. Riddell: Let's have an explanation.

Mr. Speaker: Do you want to dispense with the reading of it by the Chair? Is it understood?

Mr. Philip: We appreciate the amendment. In conversation with the minister before the bill was introduced, in lieu of my introducing a different amendment that attempted to do the same thing and to clarify an area we thought was not completely clear, he agreed to introduce his own amendment. His own amendment suffices to do that. So we are in support of the amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading on motion:

Bill 84, An Act to amend the Public Transportation Highway Improvement Act.

Bill 25, An Act respecting Ryerson Polytechnical Institute.

Bill 85, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Before moving the adjournment, because this is a change from the program that was announced last Thursday, we will take into consideration tomorrow afternoon the private member's motion standing in the name of Mr. Germa, being notice of motion No. 11.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1977

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

SALARY INCREASES

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that a tentative settlement was reached last night between the government and the Ontario Public Services Employees Union on salary increases for bargaining unit employees in the administrative services category.

This is one of the three contracts which expired on September 30 last.

The agreement was arrived at with the help of a mediator appointed by the Ontario Public Services Labour Relations Tribunal, and, if ratified by the employees concerned, will provide increases ranging from 6.1 per cent for the highest paid employees in the group to 8.6 per cent for those in the lowest salary range. The average cost of the settlement is approximately 7.1 per cent and is within the limits established by the Anti-Inflation Act.

INDUSTRIAL MILK REGULATION

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I had intended today to make quite a lengthy statement. With your approval, I will table my lengthy statement and stay with my short statement.

I wish to inform the members that I have reached an agreement with the Mennonite Central Committee regarding concerns of the Old Order Amish about the can-to-bulk conversion for industrial milk.

Members may recall that when this question first arose, we suggested two alternatives, namely the conversion to cream shipping only or the building of communal bulk tanks off the farm. Although the communal tank was initially accepted, it later ran into problems. Throughout this entire time I have conducted informal talks with the Mennonite Central Committee, and during one of these informal talks a point was raised that seemed well worth pursuing.

According to the committee, there was no objection to the use of gasoline or diesel-powered engines. I discussed the use of this type of engine for the cooling of a bulk tank with the Ontario Milk Commission, which agreed that this arrangement would meet the intent of the health regulations.

I was about to announce that we were prepared to amend the regulations to allow for this type of tank on October 27. That was the day, however, when the Amish launched their appeal with the cabinet. Instead I announced the postponement of the implementation of the regulation.

In the last week the Premier (Mr. Davis) and I have met with Mr. John Laskin and Mr. Ian Hunter, the official legal representatives appointed by the Mennonite Central Committee to represent the Amish. I myself met with the Amish in Kitchener on the weekend and I'm happy to say that a solution acceptable to all is in sight.

The Amish have informed me that our proposal that they operate their bulk tank by direct-drive gasoline or diesel-powered engines has met with the approval of three of the five Amish communities concerned. The other two are not opposed. They have some reservations but are mainly concerned with whether to switch to cream shipping or to bulk shipment.

The importance of this development is twofold from the point of view of the Amish community. It means that they can continue to operate their dairy farms without electricity. It also laid to rest their concern about the survival of their family farms and their ability to pass farms from father to son.

I have asked the Ontario Milk Marketing Board to meet with the Amish to discuss their concerns about the handling and marketing of their milk. I have also informed the board that I would be prepared to accompany the Amish to this meeting. The board has agreed to a meeting, scheduled for later this month.

From the outset of our discussions we have endeavoured to explore every possible alternative. This government does not have to be reminded of the valuable contributions made by the Amish to the social fabric of this province. Our problem was finding a solution that would safeguard provincial health standards and would not cause undue hardship. Mr. Speaker, we have met both these objectives.

ORAL QUESTIONS

NUCLEAR WASTE

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Minister of Energy. It's not so bad, Jim, relax.

Mr. Lewis: Relax? He's almost comatose.

Mr. S. Smith: Is the minister aware of proposals of the Atomic Energy Control Board to the federal government suggesting that the federal government establish a separate arm's-length-away agency to handle nuclear waste? Does the minister not feel, as I do, that the provincial government should have some involvement with any such proposals, in the sense of a federal-provincial secretariat or a federal-provincial agency of some kind to handle the matter of nuclear wastes? Is this not the time to get involved in those discussions now that the matter is just at the proposal stage, so that we in this province, with our great concern for the environment—as has been demonstrated with our Port Hope problems and, of course, the near problem at Madoc and so on—could make that suggestion and be involved with the federal government at the planning stage of the nuclear waste agency?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I guess I'm as familiar as the Leader of the Opposition with the recent news report. May I say that my ministry is in continual touch in that regard and we have done considerable work in connection with the overall concept of waste management and the different aspects of it.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Would the minister to some extent be willing to take us and the public into his confidence and let us know what proposals he and his ministry have made to the federal government, and whether they are, in fact, planning a submission at this time so as to make the proposed nuclear waste agency truly a federal-provincial one, rather than leaving it totally and completely under the auspices of the federal government, despite what the laws happen to be at the time?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: May I inform the Leader of the Opposition and the House that this whole area concerned me shortly after becoming Minister of Energy, especially as it focused on a site near Madoc for waste management. When I looked at the background of that I very quickly made a decision that this was not the way to proceed. We had the AECL at the federal level and, of course, Ontario Hydro at the provincial level, two Crown agencies that might very well be running ahead of government insofar as government had not determined what its policy would be.

I called the federal minister, Mr. Gillespie, and made arrangements to see him in Ottawa in connection with that. I brought to his attention my concern and suggested we might define our respective roles and responsibilities in connection with this area. That proposition was accepted at the federal level. Since then, we have been working in this whole area. As members can appreciate, there is a mixed jurisdiction and it is necessary to determine what provincial responsibilities are in regard to the fact that we in this province, through Ontario Hydro, are a large consumer of uranium.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: I wonder what the minister has to suggest to the people in the Chalk River area, for example, who are receiving much of the nuclear waste of this particular province and what specific proposal he might bring to the federal Minister of Energy to prevent a situation occurring in the future that forces such extraordinary cost upon the people of this province in terms of carrying that waste such a great distance. I think the cost is well over the $1-million mark right now. I am wondering what specific proposals the minister might have to prevent that kind of costly situation from recurring?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I think our major concern in Ontario is the waste and irradiated fuel that results from the utilization of natural uranium in our reactors. I think that is the big problem and we have facilities to accommodate that on our sites so that it is not a question of transferring great volumes of waste or irradiated fuel to Chalk River.

If one transports the irradiated fuel, for example, to a central site or interim storage or long-term storage, the handling is going to run into a considerable amount of money. There is no question about that. It's a cost that I think is incidental to our use of uranium and which we can accommodate. But the member should remember we have quite an investment in this province in irradiated fuel. It's not a liability. It's really an economic asset.

Mr. S. Smith: Could I ask one more supplementary to this question which comes from the last words? If the minister regards irradiated fuel as an asset, do I take it then he is in support of the idea that we should reprocess this fuel for further use in more advanced reactors? If so, would he please make that clear as government policy because I would certainly take issue with him?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: There is no government policy developed as yet on reprocessing.

Mr. Warner: On just about anything.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: It's a policy that would have to be enunciated by the federal government. As the Leader of the Opposition may know, there was a meeting of seven nations in London on May 7—Prime Minister Trudeau was there—at which time it was agreed to make a study in connection with advanced fuel cycles and the aspect of reprocessing. It was expected that would defer the decision for about two years.

I say it's an asset because there are certainly countries in the world that do reprocess. England reprocesses at Windscale and France reprocesses. I think Windscale has lost some business because of events there. Japan, for example, has given probably half of its business to France rather than to England. That is a loss of business. I'm sure that Windscale, for example, would consider reprocessing of our fuel if we made that overture. It could very well be that the reprocessed fuel could then be sold to other nations which have a need for it, because there are over 40 nations in this world that are using uranium in the generation of electricity. What I'm saying is that there really is an asset there.

Mr. Reed: Supplementary: Since there is obviously, according to the minister, a cost factor involved, either positive or negative as the case may be depending on government decision, will the minister make sure that Ontario Hydro includes cost of this kind of waste disposal in its nuclear generation program, so that the true cost of this nuclear program is figured into Hydro's price of power generation?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I'm sure that the cost of fuel and fuel management would certainly be factored into the cost of production of electricity through nuclear reactors. May I say, though, that fuel as a percentage of cost of the electricity in a nuclear plant is about three-quarters of one per cent, as opposed to 21 per cent of the total cost of production of electricity by coal.

Mr. Speaker: We've spent 10 minutes on that question.

INDIAN COMMUNITY SECRETARIAT

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the minister in charge of interministerial co-operation with regard to Indian affairs. I guess that would be the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. Is the minister able to tell us what has happened in the Kenora office of the Indian community secretariat? Is he able to tell us why it is that a staff of five people has dwindled due to resignations until the only person there is a secretary-receptionist who from time to time answers the phone? What happened to this vaunted notion of interministerial co-operation and this marvellous secretariat that the government was setting up?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I'm just aware that there was one vacancy. One of the senior persons has left for another position that he accepted in the province of Manitoba where the remuneration was higher. I am not aware that there is such a shortage of staff as the hon. Leader of the Opposition mentions, but I'll be pleased to look into it.

Mr. S. Smith: When he's looking into it, can the provincial secretary comment on the charge that's been made by the person who left that there was really no interministerial co-operation allowing meaningful development in that area, and can he, in fact, explain to this House how it is that this vaunted idea of an Indian community secretariat has been allowed to dwindle down to the point where it has neither personnel nor function?

Is he doing anything with regard to the devastated economy of that area consequent upon the mercury pollution which has occurred, and what is the policy of this government with regard to the Grassy Narrows and Whitedog reserves, given the fact that their economy has been devastated?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: As far as the services to native people in northern Ontario are concerned, I'm not aware that there has been a deterioration of services. The services are still being provided. As for the Grassy Narrows and the Whitedog Indian reserves, the fish-for-food program is still in effect, it is still being done and there are various programs, as the hon. Leader of the Opposition probably knows. There is an interministerial committee, federal and provincial, which has been working with the native people of those two Indian reserves on various programs. I'm not aware of any of the problems that the leader refers to.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary, coming right back to the first question which the Leader of the Opposition asked? Is it true that the government has farmed out by way of private contract to a management consultant firm a review of the Indian development secretariat in the Ministry of Culture and Recreation to which the member for Hamilton West referred? Can he table the terms of reference of that review of the Indian community secretariat in this Legislature, and can he tell us which of the native people's groups the management firm has discussed these matters with?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: The Indian community secretariat comes directly under the Ministry of Culture and Recreation. I am aware that there is an internal review of the secretariat. However, I do believe it is up to that minister to make that information available to the hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, the provincial secretary is the minister co-ordinating all of these matters as I understand it. Is it true that he has hired a private management consultant firm to review the activities of the Indian community secretariat and its future?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: That could well be.

Mr. Lewis: You don't know?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I don't know.

Mr. Warner: Right on the ball.

Mr. Lewis: Neither do I, but I am asking.

VENTURE INVESTMENTS BY INCO

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism? Has the minister been in touch with Inco about the amounts of money which Inco is investing in venture capital undertakings and the areas where those investments may take place?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I'm not aware of the venture capital investments that the hon. leader of the NDP refers to. If there is one, we'll take it under advisement in the ministry.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, does it not strike the minister as peculiar that Inco, this company in so much economic difficulty, has all kinds of money, apparently millions of dollars, to invest in venture equity capital right now on the marketplace, advertising, none of which is to be directed towards the Sudbury basin? Can the minister explain that?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: No, I cannot.

Mr. Warner: You're too busy travelling.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION BOARD

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a question of the Minister of Labour? Does the Minister of Labour know that Michael Starr, the chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board, is now publicly on record as saying that the Workmen's Compensation Board will probably be replaced in the future with a universal insurance scheme in the province of Ontario?

Interjections.

Mr. Lewis: Since on this one occasion I am prepared to attribute to Mr. Starr prophetic wisdom, may I ask the minister whether that mirrors government policy since he stated it categorically?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I think the chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board was expressing a personal view related to his experience and the knowledge that he has gained in his present role—

Mr. Wildman: He wants to get out of it.

Hon. B. Stephenson:—and examining the experience of those jurisdictions which have moved in this direction. I think he is suggesting that several light years down the road this sort of thing might happen in Canada as well.

Mr. Swart: It will be with you.

Mr. Conway: That's the speed.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I'm not sure that he was saying that specifically about the province of Ontario.

Mr. Wildman: That's the speed at which your government goes.

Hon. B. Stephenson: But I think he feels that this is the direction probably in which movement will take place in the future.

Mr. Roy: He is very prophetic about the government.

Mr. O'Neil: I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Labour what her views are along this line?

Mr. Lewis: That is what I thought I asked.

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, that isn't the question that the hon. member for Scarborough West asked. I am very interested in watching carefully—

Mr. Samis: In the fullness of time.

Hon. B. Stephenson:—the experience which has been gained in New Zealand, the one jurisdiction which has moved specifically in that direction. There are so many problems with that program right at the moment that it is, I gather, a little bit dubious whether it may survive.

Mr. Lewis: Slander. Shame, shame. Michael Starr knows better.

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, that's entirely true. None the less, this is an interesting experiment which I think is going to be of great value to all jurisdictions—

Mr. Warner: Get moving along with it.

Hon. B. Stephenson: —which have to deal with this kind of problem. I think it's the kind of information which will be invaluable to us in developing future programs.

Mr. Laughren: In view of the fact that the chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board has admitted there needs to be some kind of umbrella protection for people in the province, I'm wondering whether or not people within the Labour ministry or at the board are investigating, along the lines that the Saskatchewan people did, the possibility of establishing this in the province of Ontario, and to not dismiss the whole question out of hand?

Hon. B. Stephenson: There was no intention on my part to dismiss this out of hand. As I said, we are watching with great interest the developments of similar programs in other jurisdictions.

Mr. McClellan: You said light years.

Hon. B. Stephenson: They have met, as I said, many problems in trying to develop these programs. I think we can gain a good deal of knowledge from their experience in this field and we shall continue to watch them carefully.

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can she recall about a year ago last December a resolution passed in the ministry's estimates, and adopted by the ministry, that a study be initiated to cover this particular area of a comprehensive plan for injured workers in Ontario? I believe that she said, based on a letter that I had directed to her, that the study would be completed by June of this year. Is that study now completed?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not. One preliminary report has been received. I anticipate that we will have the total report by the middle or the end of December of this year.

Mr. Laughren: Do the Liberals support this?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Indeed, the direction which was given to us during those discussions by that resolution will have been completed by that time and we shall have a report.

Mr. Reid: Will you table the report?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Oh, I would think so.

Interjections.

Mr. Reid: Will you table the report?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to take that under consideration.

BROWNDALE

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Premier. Is the Premier aware that an opinion from Mr. Scullion, the acting deputy director of the Crown law office, has totally blocked my efforts to properly review the Community and Social Services estimates, specifically the amount of money expended on Browndale, Ontario? And that the minister, citing this opinion, has even refused to tell the committee how much money is currently flowing to Browndale including any information as to the present per diem? Would the Premier undertake to have this matter reviewed to ensure that we are able to receive at least the information pertaining to the present budget in that ministry or being reviewed in that ministry?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am not aware of any legal opinion that has been given on this matter but knowing the objectivity and the fair-mindedness of the hon. member for St. George and her own respect for legal opinions and the process of law, I'm sure that she must want to be guided, as is the ministry, by these legal opinions. I'd be quite prepared, short of giving a legal opinion of my own, which I'm always very reluctant to do—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't want to answer all these interjections. I would only say to the member for Ottawa East that if I really were in a position of choosing a legal opinion from the Attorney General or from the member for Ottawa East—

Mr. Roy: My record is better than his.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know something of the member's record in the courts and he has lost more than one case.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, in the good old days he even lost some very easy prosecutions. Any assistant Crown Attorney out of Osgoode could have had them.

Mr. Roy: I am not even a QC and I value my opinion better than his.

Mr. Speaker: Back to the question, please.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, I was diverted. I will say this to the member for Ottawa East, he certainly has been in the courts more recently than the Attorney General or myself—probably like yesterday.

Mr. Roy: That is right. I am in shape—in great form.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will be delighted to look into this for the hon. member.

[2:30]

Mrs. Campbell: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the government's refusal since 1974 to answer questions regarding Browndale finances represents stonewalling which pre-dates the police investigation by nearly two years, would the Premier not agree that the opinion from this office is now being used to add legitimacy to the cover up of this subject? Can he assure us that when the police finally dispose of their investigation we will obtain the information we are seeking and that all papers, records and documents pertaining thereto will be preserved pending that information being given?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the hon. member started out her semi-question statement by saying "would the Premier not agree." I guess I can give a very simple answer to that, Mr. Speaker: Yes, the Premier would not agree.

Mrs. Campbell: I have a supplementary: Would the Premier at least go as far as to assure this House that he will see that all the documents and papers referring to this particular item will be preserved and available to us following the completion of the investigation by the OPP?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can't undertake things that are not within the purview of the government or the ministry. That would be, I think, an unfair commitment to give or for the hon. member to ask. She is asking if there are any documents, or whatever it is that she would love to get her hands on, and I don't even know what they are, Mr. Speaker.

Certainly I do my best to please the hon. member on all issues, as she well knows—that is all issues raised here in the House. I certainly would undertake that any documentation in the ministry will not disappear. I can't account for documents that might appear in some brown envelope under the hon. member's door; I can't control that sort of situation. But certainly I will make every effort to see that there isn't a disappearance of these documents that the hon. member is so anxious about.

ACTIONS OF POLICE AT BURLINGTON

Mr. Deans: I have a question for the Solicitor General. Is the Ontario Police Commission currently investigating, or are they about to investigate or have they been asked to investigate, the alleged brutalities being undertaken by the Burlington city police and Burlington regional police? In particular, would the minister look at the news story reported in yesterday's edition of The Spectator with regard to some statements made by a Roy Murden, which seems to indicate that he, having been a policeman in Burlington, had taken part in some rather serious brutality on a number of people who had been arrested by the Burlington police?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I thank the member for Wentworth for drawing this to my attention. I can't tell him whether the OPC has or has not been asked to investigate the matter but I will certainly read the article. I am not aware of it but I will make myself aware of it and report back to him.

Mr. Deans: One supplementary question: Would the Solicitor General direct himself particularly to the statement by Mr. Murden that although he agreed to discuss his tactics he would not be specific about names and dates because he could still be liable to criminal action? Would the minister also determine whether in fact there are people who have been severely treated by Mr. Murden or others, and look back into the files of the Solicitor General's office to complaints which I registered about two years ago with regard to the Burlington police actions—I can't remember the exact date—to determine whether this is an on-going problem?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: We will do that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Dealing with accusations of police brutalities and citizens' complaints, when are we going to see that legislation dealing with citizen—

Mr. Speaker: No, the original question was very specific about an incident in Burlington.

Mr. Roy: That would apply to the Burlington citizens complaint bureau.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is why you lose cases.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

COFFEE COMPANY DISPUTE

Mr. Ashe: I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Germa: Another setup.

Mr. Conway: Just remember to be diplomatic.

Mr. Wildman: Where is John Williams?

Mr. Ashe: There has been a rather lengthy strike that has been taking place in my riding, and I would just like to ask the minister what the current status is of the strike situation regarding the Sandra Instant Coffee Company in Ajax?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted, after a very difficult period of time, to announce that our disputes advisory committee was successful last evening and that, indeed, a settlement was reached which was ratified by both parties this morning.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Are you sorry you told them?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. Minister of Housing will come to order he can answer that question that was asked yesterday.

OHC LAND SALES

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the hon. member for Oshawa asked if I would tell him and the House how much money the ministry had received through the sale of land.

To date, we have marketed land for 717 residential units in eight municipalities, and, given the current market conditions, by the end of this fiscal year we expect to have marketed land for about 2,400 units. At this volume of residential land sales, together with any attendant commercial, industrial and institutional land sales, we would expect cash flow on the profit side during this fiscal year of about $1,432,000.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That surprises the member, doesn't it?

Mr. Breaugh: No, it is nice to see that if we are going to speculate we can make some money from it. By way of supplementary, could the minister now clarify exactly how he will use that money for further housing programs? How does he intend to make that work?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: As the hon. member knows, and I think fully endorses and supports, there are a number of fine programs within the ministry that require funding. This money is being realized on these land sales and will be used to apply to various housing programs—

Mr. Breaugh: Like what?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: —some of which are doing an excellent job in his own riding at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Unlike the member.

Mr. Breaugh: I know that the minister is a wonderful person and everything he does is wonderful, but could he be just a little more specific? Is he prepared to take that $1.4 million and reinvest that in the kind of employment programs, like we do with home renewal, that might assist us in the unemployment problems we are having this winter?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The money we would realize would be invested in such programs as home renewal and others which require substantial funding and that would, of course, assist in the employment problems throughout the province.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Maybe you could do better.

Mr. Lewis: Since, as I recall, in this House just a week or two ago the minister was going to make what he calls a profit on the cash flow side of some $3 million in the Kitchener area alone, where is the ministry losing money, which is an unusual phenomenon?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I think the hon. member realizes that in the case of Kitchener we were talking about a prolonged period of time for the sale of the total number of acres, which was 300-odd acres of land. This is in this one fiscal year.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Given that the minister has indicated he is not prepared to sell land at cost because he doesn't want the initial buyer to be able to reap a profit by then selling it at market value, has he considered instead a forgivable mortgage for that differential between the ministry's cost and the market value, say spread over 15 or 20 years, which would guarantee that the original buyer would not be able to sell for a profit because the ministry could continue to hold that mortgage, and thus permit many more families to be able to afford a home of their own? Has he considered that as an alternative?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: No, I have not.

Mr. Sweeney: Would he?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I am prepared to consider any suggestions that seem to have some reason to them, yes.

LOTTERY GRANTS

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health. I wonder if the minister could give us some background on the recent announcement that only those areas having district health councils will be eligible for provincial lottery funds to finance research and development projects?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The hon. member has put it into something of a different context than the way in which it was originally put. The $25 million from the lottery which is for health and environmental health-related research breaks into a number of areas, including capital construction, purchase or replacement of equipment, teaching positions in the health sciences centres, grants to the statutory foundations and grants to the non-statutory foundations, as well as an amount for the ministry's own grants-in-aid program for health research. There is also an amount for the district health councils to carry out research in their respective areas for whatever purposes.

I am not quite sure the way the member took it, but I think he took it in a rather different sense than the very positive one that was intended.

Mr. O'Neil: Likely I have, and I think a lot of other people across the province are doing so. As a supplementary, since the approach of the Health ministry has been that the establishment of these district health councils has been on a voluntary basis, does he not feel that the disbursement of lottery funds in this manner could have a detrimental effect on the voluntary aspect, and is that his intention?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am sorry, on the voluntary aspect of what? District health councils?

Mr. O'Neil: The establishment of health councils.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, I don't. Not at all. For instance, as the hon. member may or may not know, in the Ottawa-Carleton region there is an extensive needs study under way under the auspices of the district health council in co-operation with the faculty of the University of Ottawa. There, the ministry is paying half the cost of that research, albeit not out of the provincial lottery funds.

In the future I can see that that kind of study, or looking at mental health problems, long-care needs or whatever, taken in the context of long-range region or county-wide planning, could well be considered for provincial lottery funding. I really don't see that that's in any way going to take away from the volunteerism aspect of the district health councils any more than I see it in any way diminishing the voluntary aspects of the efforts of the statutory and non-statutory research foundations.

Mr. O'Neil: Supplementary: I wonder if I might ask the minister, though, about the Belleville-Trenton area. They are presently considering whether or not to establish a district health council; if they decide not to establish one, would those lottery funds be available to them?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Unless there is a non-statutory, disease-related research foundation in the area, there would be no body in the area that I am aware of—a body that is as all-embracing as a district health council—that would be eligible for grants. There are hospital planning groups and other kinds of planning groups, but all working separate one from the other. District health councils at least bring together people from a variety of backgrounds and look at the total health care needs of a county or of a region. The answer is, I don't know that there would be any other groups that would be eligible.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary; the hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: Would the minister make very clear in his effort to make sure that this not be interpreted as some attempt to force people into district health councils, that where such bodies exist that can undertake needs studies, such as groups of hospitals voluntarily coming together or district psychiatric services groups, or for that matter municipal or regional governments without health councils—where those bodies wish to use funds for such research into future needs, that they will have equal access to those lottery funds and not be restricted from it unless they happen to have the type of regional health council that the minister would happen to prefer.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The hon. member in his usual inimitable fashion has a way of twisting the truth around.

Mr. O'Neil: You are not giving a straight answer.

An hon. member: That's not parliamentary language.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, on a matter of privilege, I wish to raise this matter in two ways. One is that his comment was derogatory to me in terms of saying I am usually twisting truth around. There is no evidence of this at all.

[2:45]

The second point is that I myself—prior to being raised to such a lofty level to deal with people such as those opposite—used to have a certain professional capacity in which we did a number of community-based studies of communities, and did so without a health council. I would like, therefore, a clear statement from the minister that it will not just be regional health councils that will be entitled to those funds to do needs studies in their areas.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: What is your matter of privilege?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is a little sensitive, I don't know, perhaps due to past events, to my earlier comment, then I'm sincerely sorry for that. I was very careful in the way I put it. But obviously I've touched a nerve somewhere.

Mr. Roy: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: He hasn't said that. He hasn't said that.

Mr. Lewis: What is the meaning of twisted truth?

Mr. Speaker: There is quite a difference in a statement like that and accusing someone of telling a falsehood.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, with regard to this particular allocation, if previous experience is anything to go by, I'm sure that even from the district health councils the requests will probably exceed the available funds.

Mr. Foulds: That is the important point, isn't it?

Mr. S. Smith: Just say that any community can get needs studies done.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Why don't you just button your lip and let somebody finish an answer?

Mr. S. Smith: Make a straight statement.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If the member will be quiet, I will be glad to finish my answer. I'm trying to make it very clear that in no way am I trying to force any part of the province into adopting a district health council where the people don't want it. I offer up the example in Perth and Huron counties where the steering committee by a vote of eight to seven said that it did not want a district health council at this time. My response to that was, "Fine. Maybe you, the people in that area, will look at it again in a few years' time, but I'm not going to force it on you."

My point earlier, which I think may have been missed, was that district health councils afford the opportunity for all aspects of health care to be considered in one forum, rather than different aspects of health care in isolation.

Mr. O'Neil: You are blackmailing us.

Mr. Conway: A teen-aged Darcy McKeough.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Absolute, unmitigated nonsense. If I am teenage, you are hardly past the fetus stage.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You are just jealous because youth is passing you by.

Mr. Lewis: Personally, I think you are both pre-pubescent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Talking about ages, maybe somebody would try to act his around here.

HEALTH OF WORKERS AT RED LAKE

Mr. Mackenzie: To the Minister of Labour: In view of the disturbing and tragic sequence of events in the case histories of the workers in the greater Red Lake area, which have been turned over to the minister, which indicate examinations which revealed nothing, yet one year later a worker is in the hospital having a lung removed, can the minister indicate if she has investigated the consistency and quality of the examinations and the various testing equipment being used in that district?

Hon. B. Stephenson: At the request of the union in that area, and much before that as well, we have been following this situation. There is an examination of the medical records of various individuals who have been made known to us. In addition to that we have been looking at all of the records that we've had of testing done in the area, in many specific work areas, in order to put all of the information together, so that we may have a meeting with the union and with the companies involved to provide all of the information to them and try to find solutions to the problems of health and safety in that area.

I have to tell you that we have been unable to contact the district director of the union for the past seven days in order to try to arrange the meeting. In his absence we have arranged alternative meetings which we hope will be satisfactory to him.

I gather that Mr. Cooke at this present time is in Russia. I didn't know he was there and was unable to make contact with him. However, we are in the process of attempting to arrange that meeting either at the end of this week or the beginning of next week. I had hoped that it was going to be the beginning of this week but because of his absence we have not managed to do so at this time. That information will be placed clearly before the employees, the union and the employers, and we will have a discussion about finding solutions.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Could the minister refer to the initial part of the question from the member for Hamilton East about the testing that is available, because surely the case studies that she has been able to look at so far indicate a grave lack of diagnosis? After being steadily tested, apparently for a number of years, the worker is suddenly in hospital to have a lung removed after being given a clean bill of health a year previously.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I would have to remind the hon. member that it is not unusual.

Human beings do not necessarily all react in the same way, and it is not unusual to find the development of a very serious illness within a relatively short period of time from a diagnosis of a reasonably clean bill of health. He and I have had friends or acquaintances who have had all the tests available for cardiac disease and they've proven to be perfectly fine, but then they've died of a coronary the next day. Unfortunately, medical science is not infallible and human beings are not machines that can be tested in exactly the same way constantly.

However, this is being investigated and as a result of the investigation the information will be placed before the group. I am happy to tell you that the meeting has been finalized. It will be Tuesday morning of next week at 10 o'clock.

Mr. Lewis: In Moscow. In Red Square.

ENROLMENT OF STUDENTS AND TEACHERS

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Education. With the reference to remarks the minister made this past summer with respect to the enrolment in teachers' colleges, I wonder if he could help me reconcile these figures. In 1973, the student enrolment of the province was 1,361,000; in 1974, it was 1,340,000—that's a drop of 20,000—and in 1975, it was 1,323,000—that's a drop of almost another 20,000. In other words, in three successive years we see a drop in enrolment, and the minister's own reports show that that drop in enrolment began in 1971 and continues to the present day. That's one set of figures.

Mr. Speaker: This is not a question.

Mr. Sweeney: Yes, this is a question. I want a reconciliation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to hear a question.

Mr. Sweeney: Will the minister reconcile these figures? In 1973, enrolment at teachers' colleges was 1,780; in 1974, 2,229, an increase of 500 and in 1975, an increase to 3,300. How is it possible that the same time the enrolment of students—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be directed to the order paper. Put it on the order paper.

Oral questions?

HORNEPAYNE TOWN CENTRE

Mr. Wildman: I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs: Could the minister indicate to the House the status of his ministry's and the other ministries' studies of the Hornepayne Town Centre and the government's participation in that development? Could he also report what the government's participation might be, and has a final decision been made?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, as you know, my ministry has been actively involved in that particular development with the CNR and with Hallmark Hotels Ltd. As recently as last week, we advanced a small amount of money to the Hallmark Hotels people to take the next step, which is preparing the design plan on which tenders could be called. As the hon. member is aware, working drawings will not be prepared because of the time factor and the desire to get on with that project if it is approved in total. We felt that we had to take the next step in order to get some hard figures to deal with. We hope to have those figures in our hands early in 1978. On the basis of those figures, we'll be making a firm decision, positive or negative.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: Could the minister indicate whether that means that once the design drawings are prepared the government is prepared to commit itself now to participation and tendering will then take place early in the summer or late spring next year?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think the principle is there and that the government has shown its interest to this point in time. There's no question about that; we've put up our share. In fact, the first portion was shared on a three-part basis and the next phase was shared on an equal basis with CNR. That's a sign of good faith but we can't really commit ourselves on the entire project until we get some hard figures and some firm data to deal with.

PROVINCIAL GRANTS

Mr. B. Newman: I have a question of the provincial Treasurer. Is the Treasurer aware that the city of Windsor has been deprived of about $20 million in grants since the year 1973? What solution or what relief is he prepared to give to the city of Windsor, in the light of this unfairness, which he has admitted in a letter of August 8?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This is a matter which is under consideration.

Mr. B. Newman: Will the minister elaborate a little further on what type of consideration? Is the minister going to give an unconditional grant to the municipality?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, that is not part of the consideration. I have met with the mayor of Windsor on three different occasions and with his officials and we are reaching, I think, some agreement on facts. Whether solutions will be found, I simply don't know.

Mr. Warner: You should consider resigning.

ROSS SHOULDICE

Mr. Martel: Has the Premier decided to order the chairman of the Commercial Registration Appeals Tribunal to reinstitute the inquiry into the actions of one Ross Shouldice, now that Mr. Shouldice is involved in selling real estate or handling real estate, without a licence I presume, in the Sudbury area under the name of Berosh Holdings and advertising his services in the local media?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I recall receiving a letter from the hon. member where he raised this question with me. He enclosed an ad. I think that is my recollection of his correspondence, which I always read very carefully. I noted that he signed it but didn't add any PS though.

Mr. Martel: No, nor any BS either.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: That was all above the signature.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have to add that it wasn't written by hand, thank heaven, or I might not have been able to read it. I have asked for a report on it and as soon as I have that report I will get the information to the hon. member.

PURCHASE OF ART OBJECTS

Mr. Stong: I have a question for the Attorney General. Is the Attorney General responsible for the priority, and which priority would allow $40,444 to be spent on art objects for the courthouse in Barrie, especially in view of the long list of cases that are unheard of—unable to be heard and unheard of—particularly when $40,000 is more than ample to pay the salary of a judge and provide new court space, particularly in Toronto and Hamilton?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have no knowledge of any such expenditure and it would not come within my ministry. It perhaps would be a matter that might be directed to the Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, I would like that question redirected to the Minister of Government Services. I also note that the Ministry of the Attorney General has its stamp on each item in each courthouse as well.

Mr. Speaker: You may redirect.

[3:00]

Mr. Stong: I would like to redirect this question to the Minister of Government Services. Is he responsible for setting the priority which would allow $40,000 to be spent on the Barrie courthouse on art objects when there is such a backlog of cases in Toronto and Hamilton and Ottawa, and which amount would be more than ample to pay the salary of a judge and appoint new court space?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I could have the question referred back to the Attorney General. The bulk of the question revolves around what is better—art or a judge?

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Can we have some order, please? The hon. Minister of Government Services has the floor.

Hon. Mr. McCague: To answer the half of the hon. member's question that would come under Ministry of Government Services policy, when a courthouse is established, it is the policy to spend about half of one per cent of the cost of the building on art, and that normally is local art.

Mr. Stong: Is the Minister of Government Services responsible for setting that priority?

Interjections.

Mr. Stong: With 3,000 cases in the backlog, we've got $40,000 worth of art. People waiting in jail even.

Hon. Mr. Davis: This party has never been against the artists. Are you against Ontario artists?

Mr. Stong: People sitting in jail for eight months and we can go to look at pictures.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McCague: As to whether or not it's policy, I'm not sure. I think that as well as the solicitors which the hon. member referred to in the first part of the question, the artists have to live also and it would be a sad state if we didn't have them.

Mr. Lewis: Good for you. You are not a Philistine like all the rest of them.

COFFEE PRICING

Mr. Swart: My question is to the Premier, Mr. Speaker, if I could have the Premier's attention.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You have it—my undivided attention.

Mr. Swart: Is the Premier as indifferent to the high coffee prices in Ontario as his Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations? I hope the Premier is not, but if he is not, would he—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Swart: —instruct that minister—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Swart: —to go back and do a thorough inquiry into coffee pricing—

Mr. Eaton: Quit using the imported stuff and start using milk.

Mr. Swart: —something more than just asking the coffee companies for their explanation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Welland-Thorold really answered the question himself when he recognized that I certainly wouldn't be indifferent to any situation. I wouldn't be indifferent to the hon. member, although the temptation is great on occasion.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: He was indifferent to us yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He certainly was, I think, very indifferent yesterday.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Forced the vote and then wasn't here. Shameful.

Mr. Ruston: That's right. He was calling the radio station back home.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I certainly am not indifferent if that helps the hon. member. I would say though, on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture and Food, that probably a lot of us would be healthier if we were to substitute a portion of the coffee we drink with milk, which would also assist the dairy industry, and be healthier in the process. I'm not advocating that to the hon. member, but that is an alternative that is available.

Mr. Swart: Would I be right in assuming from the Premier's reply that he's not asking the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations to make any further investigation and, although far be it from me to make the controversy in your cabinet any worse, but because the Minister of Correctional Services is quoted as saying—

Hon. B. Stephenson: You don't have to buy it.

Mr. Swart: —with regard to coffee prices, "When I say ripoff I know what ripoff means," would the Premier direct him, by special assignment, to make an inquiry of his own?

Mr. Breithaupt: That is since he got into the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I certainly don't want the hon. member to really feel that there are ever any differences of opinion in the executive council of this province.

Mr. Wildman: Tell us about the drinking age.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the hon. member wants to raise the question of the drinking age I think it would be more appropriate tomorrow afternoon. If the hon. member for Renfrew North is suggesting that we substitute alcohol for coffee, that I don't recommend. The Treasurer reminds me that there are grapes in the Peninsula. That's something else.

Mr. Conway: And baloney in Brampton.

Mr. Ruston: And a lot of corn in Chatham too.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There's corn too.

I have not directed the minister. I find that the ministers of the Crown in this province really demonstrate great initiative. They have the capacity to react to these matters and I have complete confidence in the minister of that ministry in dealing with these issues in a way that will be, I think, ultimately acceptable to the hon. member for Welland-Thorold.

Mr. Deans: This is very boring.

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has expired.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

LAYOFF OF NICKEL WORKERS

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, before calling the motion, I would like to indicate on behalf of the House leaders how we would propose that the members agree to share time on the debate on the motion in the name of the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa).

We would ask that it be agreed that the time between the calling of the order and 5.50 p.m. be shared equally by the parties, that is one third each. We leave it to each party whip to arrange his speakers in such a way that none of them is deprived of reasonable time, but that the last of those speakers for each party not go beyond the time limit for his party. We would ask, Mr. Speaker, that you put the proposal to the House for consent; and if agreed that you name the minute at which the debate starts, and as well that you terminate the speech of a member whose party's time has elapsed.

Mr. Speaker: As you know, there is nothing to be guided by in the standing orders with regard to the time allocation for emergency debate, but it seems to have universal approval that the time be allocated one-third for each party. If that is the wish of the House, we will attempt at the table here to indicate when the time of each party has expired, in co-operation with the whips, if that is agreeable to all parties.

Mr. Germa moved private member's motion No. 11:

Resolution: That the government of Ontario has had before it numerous reports with recommendations that deal with the orderly planning of resource industries and resource industry communities in northern Ontario, and had been unable or unwilling to develop a viable strategy based on these recommendations; and as the lack of such a strategy has been primarily responsible for the current economic problems in the Sudbury basin; and as more than two weeks have now passed since the announced layoffs at Inco and the government has failed to produce any initiatives to deal with the proposed layoff of 2,800 persons and the adverse effect this will have, not only on the economy of Sudbury but on employment in other service and consumer areas; therefore, this government does not enjoy the confidence of the House.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, the motion which I have placed on the order paper indicates that this government does not enjoy the confidence of the House. The reason for entering this motion on the order paper, as recited earlier in the motion, is that the government is unwilling to develop a viable strategy to ensure the viability of northern Ontario, and it has also failed to produce any initiatives to deal with the proposed layoff of 2,800 persons in the Sudbury area.

So we have two considerations, both the long-term failure of the government to deal with the problems of northern Ontario and Sudbury specifically, and the short-term failure of the government to deal with the events which are upon us. It is, then, a natural progression that a motion of no confidence should ensue when I have heard so many voices raised in objection to the actions of Inco in their announced intentions to terminate the employment of so many men, any action which is going to wreak havoc with the economy of an entire area and going to have a severe impact on the entire province.

I recall that the Liberal leader (Mr. S. Smith), when the incident was first before the House, made certain demands upon the government. He said, in a very strident voice, that this government should use its full weight and go to Inco and demand that they cease production of minerals in Indonesia and Guatemala. The government has failed to meet the request of the Leader of the Opposition and I would, therefore, assume that he too will express no confidence in the government, because it certainly has not met his demands.

Certain other opinions have been expressed by people across the province of Ontario—and I could go through a long list of people who have expressed lack of confidence in this government. I go to a person who is known to the government of Ontario—the mayor of Sudbury, a Mr. Jim Gordon, a former Conservative candidate for office for this government. Mr. Gordon expressed his feelings in a very resounding voice at a rally in Sudbury two weeks ago, on a Sunday afternoon, with 2,000 people in attendance. It was a spontaneous rally in objection to the action of Inco and the lack of action by the government. Mr. Jim Gordon, this very good Tory and a former candidate said: "Nail this government to the wall and shut them down." I think that this motion addresses itself to the demand of the mayor of Sudbury that this government be nailed to the wall and that they be shut down.

The first area in the motion deals with the unwillingness of the government to develop a strategy. The government did express some interest in strategy in 1970 when it brought in a series of reports across the province on the various areas concerned. Unfortunately, the reports addressed themselves to particular areas; when we put the report together we find we have conflicts in the various reports.

I refer firstly to the report tabled in 1970 by the Treasury on the Toronto-centred region Design for Development. On page 4, one of the stated objectives in the report was, and I quote: "The Toronto-centred region probably can increase its economic role in processing resources which currently come from northern Ontario."

That statement is certainly not in favour of the stated objectives which we can find in a further report having to do with north-eastern Ontario. I think it is this statement in the Toronto-centred region report which has been the problem facing northern Ontario for the past 50 years.

This is in direct conflict with Design for Development, 1970, Northeastern Ontario Region. In that report there were 82 objectives recited, 82 things which should happen in order to ameliorate the lack of development and to enhance the lifestyle of people in northern Ontario. Twenty-three of these objectives were rated as "in the high category." We cannot go through the 82 objectives, but I have pulled out of them 10 particular areas which the government should have addressed itself to. We will see whether some seven years later the government has addressed itself to reaching any of those objectives.

The first objective was to reduce outward migration. If we look at the population figures of northern Ontario, we find that the increase in growth as compared to the provincial average is not comparable whatsoever. In fact, the growth in northern Ontario is somewhat less than one per cent. It is somewhat in line with the growth in the eastern provinces which have long been recognized as a very depressed area.

The second objective was to increase female employment opportunities in northern Ontario. We know that female participation in the work force in northern Ontario at present is running at 35 per cent, whereas the participation of females across the province is at 44 per cent. The government has not addressed itself to that objective.

"Increased employment opportunities for skilled and educated people": It just has not addressed itself to that, because it has not corrected the imbalance in northern Ontario which results from our economy being based on resource extraction industries.

"Increased employment opportunities in manufacturing": I think it is indicative that the government has not moved into that area; otherwise we wouldn't have this calamity falling upon Sudbury, and Sudbury is the biggest community in northern Ontario. Yet when there is a layoff in the one prime industry, it throws the whole economic balance upside down.

"Increased industrial diversification": That also speaks to the lack of manufacturing.

"Equalized opportunity for native people": We know what has happened to the native people. We could go back to the English and Wabigoon Rivers and see exactly how this government has failed to equalize opportunities for northern people.

"Reduce housing costs for low-income households": We know very well, without sending another great group of people up there to study it, that housing costs in northern Ontario are just beyond the means of the average individual.

"Reduce traffic fatalities": The statistics coming out even today indicate that the hazards on the highways in northern Ontario are extreme compared with the rest of the province. Part of that, of course, is because of our geography, part of it is because of our weather, but most of it, I think, is because of lack of proper highway facilities in northern Ontario.

"Reduce occupational accidents and fatalities": A recent report indicated that the hazards faced by a miner in northern Ontario are seven times as great as the hazards faced by a policeman. Police are recognized as a high-risk profession and yet in mining, which is our main source of employment in the north, miners have to suffer hazards seven times greater than those faced by police.

"Reduce property damage by fire": My friend the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) has addressed himself to this problem several times in this session, and the only response from the government is that they would do something about installing smoke detectors in northern Ontario.

I think it's evident that the government has failed to meet any of the objectives. That is just my opinion. There are other people with opinions in northern Ontario, and I refer now to the response of the Chamber of Commerce to the northeastern Ontario development strategy.

Mr. Martel: Let the government disclaim its friends now.

Mr. Turner: That's all you've got, eh? Pretty shallow.

Mr. Germa: The Sudbury Chamber of Commerce, of course, is not a radical socialist organization, and I just have to put on the record some of the statements by the friends of government and how they feel about this government.

On the very first page they say: "We are disappointed, disillusioned and impatient with the provincial planning program that has accomplished little in a full decade of existence."

That's their opening shot. On page 1: "The northern Ontario regional strategy is devoid of any strategy of development—physical, economic or social. It represents the pinnacle of intellectual bankruptcy of the southern establishment in even analysing the problems of the north, let alone dealing with them effectively.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You fellows wrote it; that's why.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: They helped to kill Reed.

Mr. Germa: "The only way to deal with northern Ontario regional strategy is to let it terminate as an expensive receptacle of dust until it glides gracefully or otherwise into oblivion."

Mr. Martel: That's what they think about the government's plan.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Remember Reed?

Mr. Germa: "The fundamental problem with northern Ontario regional strategy can be summed up as the troika of noes—no strategy, no analysis, no programs; therefore, no use."

Mr. Conway: Governor Bernier is disturbed.

Mr. Germa: I'd like to give you just a couple more quotes, Mr. Speaker. On page 6 of Profile in Failure: "Having failed dismally to deal with the substantive issues, the NORS has resorted to restating motherhood objectives in the hope that somehow innocuous objectives can substitute for a reasoned strategy. The fundamental flaw of NORS is the absence of any strategy of development."

On page 7: "There is, however, a secret strategy in the NORS. The secret strategy can best be characterized as the colonial exploitation of the natural resources of the north for the benefit of the south. On careful evaluation, one has to conclude that the NORS use the north as a supplier of raw materials for the golden horseshoe and as a market for its manufactured goods and services."

That is the opinion expressed by the friends of government. The government is losing friends at a very rapid rate.

The summary of Profile in Failure is such that they see that there is a lack of strategy owing to the fact that there was not a proper analysis or understanding of the problem in northern Ontario or even an understanding of the opportunities which might be there. When you do not have a strategy, consequently you don't get a program.

The paramount recommendation in Profile in Failure was that the government must move to diversify the population from the golden horseshoe area.

To speak to the second statement in the motion, the lack of a short-term policy by the government of Ontario, the only thing that we've got from this government is the promise that they are going to erect a $10-million office tower in Sudbury.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You don't want it? You are against it? Are you for it or against it? Don't ride two horses. The same old hypocrisy that I have heard for 20 years.

Mr. Laughren: Don't be stupid. That is downright silly; go back to sleep.

Mr. Germa: We appreciate the $10 million which is going to be expended, but I will ask the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) how can $10 million replace the loss of $69 million in wages? The $10 million just doesn't fit the need when we are losing $69 million in wages.

Mr. Martel: When $69 million is lost in one year, you dummies offer us an old building.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I hope Hansard has got that—an old building.

Mr. Germa: I am going to terminate my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by making a demand of the Premier of this province (Mr. Davis).

Mr. Conway: You will make a Teddy Roosevelt out of him.

Mr. Germa: I demand that the Premier of the province take steps to reverse the decision of Inco to lay off 2,800 employees on January 31. He should understand that this is a classic example that even the strongest union on the North American continent is not strong enough to deal with multi-national corporations and that the workers of this province have to have the strength, the backing and the weight of this government to protect them from multi-nationals which have no concern whatsoever except for the bottom line on the balance sheet.

How is the Premier going to do this? I am even going to give the Premier a recipe on how he can lend his weight to have this objective of terminating the layoffs. I would ask the Premier of the province to get himself a ball of steel wool. Then let him get himself a pair of knitting needles and knit himself a barbed-wire overcoat. He will put on this barbed-wire overcoat and go into the board rooms of Inco with his elbows up. He will say to Inco: "Reverse your decision or we will take those leases and grants of ore bodies back into public ownership and renegotiate new leases with you so that it will have the effect of having government input into how these resources are depleted in the future."

Mining companies are no longer granted outright lifetime grants for the ore body.

I think these ancient leases and deeds or titles which Inco has have to be terminated in order that the ore body be exploited properly over the next 50 years. It is not my intention to have 2,800 men standing around doing nothing.

I will suggest how those 2,800 workers can be used. The mines and plants of Inco in Sudbury are in a deplorable state. If we look at the death and accident rate at Inco we see that it has one of the most dismal rates, not only in Ontario but across Canada. I would propose those 2,800 men whom we will not be laying off then be put to work cleaning up the plants and the mines which are presently coming down around them.

I have an estimate that putting proper lighting in the mines in Sudbury is a job worth $40 million. That is how far behind Inco is in maintenance of its plants. We know from tests that 50 per cent of the deaths and injuries in a mine are as a result of lack of lighting.

I just ask you how you and I could function in this room if the lights were out. We would adjourn the debate.

Mr. Conway: Oh, no. This place functions much better in the dark.

Mr. Germa: Yet we are asking people to work in the dark. And that, I think, is the minimum demand I can make on the Premier of the province.

Mr. Martel: Here is the greatest apologist for the mining companies.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the motion as tabled by the hon. member for Sudbury. I am, however, pleased to discuss the points and the issues raised in that particular resolution.

I would say before I begin my remarks that I suspect this is a grandstand show by the third party. The list of speakers has just been given to me. For your information, Mr. Speaker, the member for Sudbury is the leadoff speaker. The member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh) is speaking on behalf of the NDP later on. Then the member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans) will speak and then the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). The windup speaker will be the defunct leader who is there now.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is part of the leadership race we will see in the next two or three or four weeks ahead of us. They are getting their feel, they are putting their feet on the ground and trying to appeal to northern Ontario.

They have caught up with you, fellows. You are wasting your time, they know where you stand.

[3:30]

Mr. Laughren: Go ahead, apologize. Give us the Inco line, Leo.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Many of the issues that were raised in the resolution have already been debated in this House during the emergency debate a few days ago. One thing that became abundantly clear in that debate was the fact that the company's problem was one of an international nature, one of offshore markets, one of world demand declining considerably.

Mr. Wildman: It is not that we don't have confidence in Inco, it is you guys.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Just before coming to the House this afternoon I learned from my staff that a mining company in Australia is about to go bankrupt and the French producers in New Caledonia have cut back their nickel production substantially. So we have a situation which we all recognize. Those of us who have the depth to understand the problem of the mining industry in Sudbury, understand that it is one of a world-wide nature.

Mr. Laughren: They really did right for you though, Leo.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think on this point no one in this Legislature should underestimate the concerns of the Ontario government with regard to the hundreds of employees who may be laid off by Inco, both in this province and in the province of Manitoba.

Mr. Germa: Do something then, do something.

Mr. Warner: You have done nothing.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No one should underestimate our concern. We are as concerned and worried about that situation as any party in this Legislature.

Mr. Cassidy: We'd like to see some action.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No one party, no one government, has all the answers to their particular problems.

Mr. Wildman: What about long-term planning?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There is no easy solution to that problem. But I think that we can be encouraged, because there are continuing discussions going on between the company and the union; and certainly they are very constructive discussions, very positive ones.

We're all very pleased as well to hear of the positive and the practical suggestions that have been put forward by the Sudbury committee themselves. Sometimes when I hear members of the third party speak of the Inco decision I have to question if they are fully knowledgeable of what their union leaders are discussing and putting forward to the company in those discussions. It leaves a question mark in my mind, because I don't think they are totally informed.

Mr. Wildman: We are not talking about Inco, we are talking about the government.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, since the announcement concerning the massive layoffs, the government has acted very positively. We have had meetings with union leaders, with municipal leaders in all sections of the province. We have attended joint meetings with the federal government, municipal governments, labour meetings, to explore every possible avenue to deal with this situation.

The Premier recently announced a special cabinet committee to deal with the short-term and the long-term problems facing the Sudbury basin. In addition to that we are also looking at the long-term economic future of mining in this country, and of course our deliberations will have some effect on mining in the country as a whole.

Mr. Wildman: What have you been doing for seven years?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: While these things are being quickly put in place, the government has moved in another direction. As the hon. members have correctly pointed out, we announced a $10 million construction program to complete the provincial building in Sudbury. Certainly this will add, on a short-term basis at least, some needed employment in that area.

I realize there are many positive forward steps that should be taken, and they will be taken. But as the hon. member for Sudbury quoted the mayor of Sudbury, Mayor Jim Gordon, I think it's only right that we put on the record his comments that were quoted in the Sudbury Star on November 4. After the Premier's announcement that there would be a special cabinet committee established, that there would be a go-ahead on the provincial building, and that there would be special funding to the industrial development study group in Sudbury, this is what Jim Gordon said—and it was headlined: "Natural and Welcome Move a Symbol of Faith the Province Has Shown in Our Area."

The reaction of Doug Frith in the same paper: "The project will bolster the region's economy over the next two years when we need it most. It shows the province has confidence in our area. Important achievements for the Sudbury committee." Those are the kinds of the positive things that are coming out.

Mr. Martel: A $69-million loss in salaries in one year, and you're giving us $5 million.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, don't be swayed by the attitudes and some of the comments that are coming from that group, because they're not identical to what's being said back home in a place like Sudbury. They are a very positive, sincere group up there and they want to do something.

Mr. Germa: Nail you to the wall, Jim Gordon said.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I would like to review the status of Design for Development. I'm sure many members here will have known that over the past several weeks and several months and several years—

Mr. Martel: Seven.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —we have been meeting with various groups, dealing with a number of reports and putting together a design strategy for the northeast and the northwest. As you are fully aware, Mr. Speaker, in 1970 the government of Ontario adopted Design for Development: Phase 2 for the northwest and, of course, these recommendations are being implemented right now. In fact, that particular Design for Development is being written at the present time, so that we're in phase three of Design for Development in the northwest. Of the 70-odd recommendations, actions have been taken on at least 69 of them.

Mr. Foulds: The Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) has announced phase three. Phase three has already been announced. This is phase-out four.

Mr. Conway: They're going to turn Minaki into—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Regarding the northeast, a number of interim documents are in the final strategy report and, as members of this House will remember, it was tabled in the Legislature in April 1976.

Mr. Cassidy: And promptly forgotten by your government.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Since then it has gone through a number of discussions with public and industry sections all over northeastern Ontario. We have amendments for it, we have amendments in our hands now.

Mr. Foulds: Why did you do all that secretly?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We're discussing it. We're looking at it from the government point of view.

Mr. Cassidy: You're looking uneasy.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: These are being very closely reviewed and, of course, will be included in the final document.

Mr. Foulds: Why did you have that review process in secret?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We have not waited for the dotting of the final i's before taking action on development in the northwest and the northeast.

Mr. Cassidy: You've already decided to delay.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, we have taken some positive action on a number of fronts. I'd just like to run over a few of those for you, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: It will be a short run.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Transportation is a typical example; we consider this to be a major contributing factor to the economic base and the economic future of all of northern Ontario. Line ministries, of course, are doing their job in providing the necessary facilities and doing the work that will improve transportation corridors throughout the entire north. As an example, Highway 144 linking Sudbury and Timmins is well on its way to completion.

Mr. Martel: Thirty-three years in the making!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Fine, but it's done.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: To give another example, there is the highway from White River to Hornepayne. Those are just two examples.

Mr. Germa: How wide is that road?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Right across the north, for those of us who live there, the transportation corridors have improved immensely and they will continue to improve.

Mr. Martel: You're unbelievable.

Mr. Conway: You're creating certain difficulties for a certain member over there.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As members of this Legislature, another aspect of transportation we can take pride in, of course, is the air transportation program that this government has come forward with and implemented and which is now recognized as one of the finest regional carriers in all of Canada. Through the norOntair service, which many of these members use on a regular basis, we serve 16 communities across northern Ontario. In fact, while in 1971 we carried only 500 passengers, up to September 1977 that figure was over 7,800. We provide a full service of airline flights between a number of local centres, with good connections to regional airlines on the main traffic hubs. In 1978 we will be adding two more centres to the 16 that I have already mentioned—Geraldton and Terrace Bay.

Mr. Conway: That won't help Inco, will it?

Mr. Martel: That really does a lot for employment, doesn't it?

Mr. Lupusella: How many jobs?

Mr. Foulds: Tell us how many permanent jobs?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In the field of transportation, under our airstrip development program we have constructed 12 airstrips in the remote areas of northern Ontario, two are under construction and six more airstrips are being planned. Nine more have been requested by Treaty No. 9 and they are currently under review.

In the field of municipal airports—that's over and above the remote airstrip development program—10 airports have been upgraded and two airports are under construction. In the fields of highway transportation and air transportation, things are moving ahead in northern Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: Most of them straight out of the north.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Another area of major concern to all of us in northern Ontario is the regional priority budget. This is a fund that has been given to the Ministry of Northern Affairs—

Mr. Germa: It's a community tap.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —which is an amount of money over and above the regular normal spending of line ministries. As an example of this particular program, we are assisting with the infrastructure development at Timmins in the form of a $12 million sewer and water project; a project for sewer and water facilities at Walden Industrial Park; the development of an industrial park, $3.5 million—

Mr. Martel: Fifty million dollars in the Oshawa area.

Mr. Cassidy: How much for Highway 401?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: At Thunder Bay alone, there is $28 million for the development of new infrastructure.

Mr. Conway: What kind of a check-mark have you got for Grassy Narrows?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The Kimberly-Clark impact area, taking in Geraldton, Longlac and Nakina, over $12 million is being spent. We haven't forgotten the smaller communities of the north either, such as Kapuskasing, Cochrane, Parry Sound, Blind River—

Mr. Lewis: What have you done for Blind River?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —Gore Bay, Chapleau and all across the northeast; even in Cobalt where the government responded within a matter of hours to the disaster that occurred there. For once the government was there, on the spot, to make some immediate decisions.

Mr. Martel: For once!

Mr. Samis: That's in Hansard now.

Mr. Lewis: That's in Hansard now, you can't change it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's not that often we have a fire of that magnitude. I have to point out to the hon. members that it was a disaster and I hope that all members of this Legislature applauded the action of the government in that particular case. I'm sure they did.

Mr. S. Smith: If they are going to have a fire they have it just before an election.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In the northwest, action has been taken under the regional priority budget. If the hon. Leader of the Opposition would go up to northern Ontario once in a while he would know what's going on. There is massive development happening up there. But we don't see him, he spends all his time in southern Ontario.

Ninety per cent of the land mass is north of the French River. Only 10 per cent of the population lives there but we're alive and we're well and we're growing.

In the northwest, action has been taken at Kenora, Dryden, Ignace, Ear Falls, Red Lake, Sioux Lookout and Schreiber. Since 1974, under the regional priority budget, the government has spent over $90 million in the economic development and the infrastructure planning and development of communities in northwestern and northeastern Ontario.

In addition, the Treasurer stated on May 12 of this year that other funds are being channelled into the northeast. I quote from that statement: "Sudbury now receives annual payments of $7.6 million as part of the government special support grant to northern municipalities."

He goes on to say: "The NODC, in 1976, loaned some $21 million to the manufacturing and tourist establishments in the northern region."

Mr. Martel: It is Utopia.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think one of the major steps forward was when he said: "We have created a Ministry of Northern Affairs to improve the co-ordination of our programs and to give the north a bigger voice in government deliberation." That was a very important step.

Mr. Foulds: And what have you done on this issue? Nothing, you have done absolutely nothing; you haven't taken any initiative.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In the field of mining tax, a group over there advocated the nationalization of our resources. You know what that would have done. I ask you, what would that have done to the world-market situation?

Mr. Foulds: It would have put you out of a job.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Would that have increased our sales to the United States and the European common market?

Mr. Laughren: Is that a question he is asking, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, it's not. Nor is it a statement.

Mr. Germa: You've spent $10 million in the last 10 years.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: On the process of mining tax, I want to quote from the Treasurer's statement when he said:

"We built in the incentive to further process raw materials and the incentive provided was the highest in Canada, even higher than in southern Ontario. The economic benefits are there to see. The record is as clear as crystal. Texasgulf has announced a $300 million capital expenditure program in which it gives full credit to the mining tax incentive as an important part of that decision. Inco was greatly influenced by the new tax system in its decision to construct a new coinage mill in Sudbury rather than in the United States."

Mr. Martel: Then they lost 2,800 people.

Mr. Germa: Yes, and what about Falconbridge?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: And listen to what Grubb, the former chairman of Inco, said:

Mr. Lewis: Grubb, they booted him out.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: "Recent technical innovation, along with tax incentives provided by the Ontario government to encourage further processing of metals in northern Ontario, now make this type and scale of project feasible. These two decisions alone will produce 2,225 new jobs and also, of course, a new mining tax system because it's practical and realistic."

Mr. Lewis: Where are they?

Mr. Germa: They lost 4,300 jobs.

Mr. Martel: I thought we were losing 2,800 jobs.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I realize I may be running out of time, but I just want to close on a personal note. It's something that's very close and dear to me, as one who has lived and worked for the north all of my life.

Mr. Lewis: Go on, Leo. Minaki Lodge—do you want to talk about that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, and I'll touch on Minaki Lodge before I'm finished.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I'm sure you will.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I've worked on five or six elections. I've listened to the people of the north and know what the people of the north really want. But I get sick and tired, I get disgusted; I really get upset with the hypocritical approach of the third party in this House and what they're trying to do to those of us who live in northern Ontario.

Mr. Cassidy: We are fed up with your lack of action.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We saw what happened in the last election; we saw as northerners. We flushed them out, don't worry. We know that we were being used to garner votes in southern Ontario. We know that Minaki Lodge was used for a purpose.

Mr. Foulds: How many votes did you get in the northern part of your riding?

[3:45]

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We know that Reed Paper was used for that purpose. We know what you did to Matachewan; all those jobs, all those jobs. They are yours. You carry that load to the people of the province of Ontario, carry that message across northern Ontario and see what they do to you. You lost three seats on June 9, and if you carry on that same approach you will be wiped out in the north. I guarantee that if you keep that same approach.

Mr. Lewis: There has never been so much claptrap in this House as in the last five minutes. You are so riddled with guilt you don't know how to handle it, Leo.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I represent an area that's very dependent on the mining industry, and I refer to the Red Lake-Balmer-town-Cochonour area. Through the years my father worked in the Howey gold mine. He knows what it's like.

Mr. Germa: Where did you work?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You are not the only people who worked in the gold mines. He worked there back in the 1930s. He knows what it's like. That mine is closed today, as is MacKenzie Island, as is Cochenour Willans, as is Madsen, as is Hasaga, as is Starratt Olsen. They are all closed.

Mr. Cassidy: That is what we are saying.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That community, Red Lake, was fighting for an economic base, for an existence to keep the people there and and working.

Mr. Cassidy: So what are you putting up as alternatives? There are no alternatives.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: And what did the NDP do when they had an opportunity to use the normal resources of this province, of their area? What did you people do? Where did you stand? Where did the member for Fort William stand?

Mr. Foulds: You wanted to mine that timber the very same way that you mined out those gold mines. What did you leave there?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The member for Lake Nipigon had the guts to stand up and support the rest of this party here.

Mr. Foulds: You didn't have the guts to come to Red Lake when I was there and you were invited two weeks ahead of time. You didn't have the guts to come to Red Lake and face me on a platform.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He was there. The member for Lake Nipigon (Mr. Stokes) knows. He reads the north. He knows where he stands. They want jobs. They want economic development. They also want environmental protection, and we built that into the memorandum of understanding with the Reed Paper company.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, sure.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It was there. It was there, Mr. Speaker. It was there.

Mr. Cassidy: Why did you set up the commission then?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The people of Red Lake will never forget what that particular party did to their opportunity to have a long-term viable economic base. They will never forget.

Mr. Lewis: One day you will lose and it will be a great thing for Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The same thing can be said for the areas of Geraldton and Kirkland Lake. They ride two horses—

Mr. Lewis: You are a disgrace to politics, Leo Bernier; the only member of the cabinet who is a disgrace.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —and I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that that day is going to come to an end. You can't ride both horses.

Mr. Cassidy: We can't stand that hypocrisy coming out again.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I ask them to join the bandwagon, get on the team that will develop northern Ontario and vote against this particular resolution. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Germa: Everybody is leaving.

Mr. Foulds: Mine out the timber like you have mined out the ore.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, what we are dealing with today is surely first and foremost a human problem. We have to deal with the fact, sometimes forgotten I guess in the heat of partisan politics, that a great many young people mostly, because they are people with less seniority, a great many people who have just started young families, who have perhaps in many instances just put a down payment on a home which will now be virtually impossible to sell, a great many of these people are now wondering what our economy, what our system, what our province, what our way of life means if they have to somehow pick up and lose whatever little they have put into their homes and so on.

They now have to try to find another way of earning their living and supporting their wives and children. We are very deeply concerned about the fact that these people seem to be the forgotten people. There was a great flurry about them, there was a great number of headlines about these 2,800 people, and somehow when the numbers get large enough sometimes the human story is forgotten, but I am very concerned about these people.

It's obvious to me from the examination of what happened in the world nickel market that some jobs are likely to be lost. It is not obvious to me that all 2,800 have to be lost. In fact, it's not obvious to me at all that the pattern of investment of Inco has been in the best interests of Ontario. I feel that this government has in some ways very seriously been negligent of its duty in keeping the multi-national corporations, be they allegedly Canadian multi-national or foreign multi-national, it seems to me it has been very negligent in its duty to keep these multi-national corporations under some form of proper relationship to the people of Ontario. I would have to say, just perhaps as an aside to my comment in the House the other day, that some of our branch plants in this country which don't export in competition with their multi-national parent in other countries are really not doing a great service here and are doing us a great disservice in many ways, as is shown in the case of Anaconda Brass and Copper.

It is a pity that this government seems not to understand that. By continuing to foster multi-national operations here, branch plants, without insisting on certain guarantees that the interests of Ontario are put before the interests of international shareholders, in that way it seems to me the government has been very negligent in its duties.

I also feel it is quite unacceptable that the government has been caught by surprise in this matter. Everyone who follows the financial pages knows that the nickel industry was in trouble. Everyone knows after the Port Colborne layoffs that there were serious problems in the international metal markets related to nickel. All the government has to do is read the financial pages to find it out, let alone bother to call the company.

I met with the company some weeks before the layoff and they certainly didn't tell me about the layoff, but I sensed there were problems in the field. I met with the unions some weeks before the layoff and they knew there was something up, they knew something was coming. I think it is unacceptable that this government was caught by surprise.

There is a more serious matter and it is a matter which, frankly, is referred to in the motion put forward by the hon. member for Sudbury. It is the fact that during the 34 years of stewardship that the resource sector has been under this Tory government, there has been opportunity after opportunity wasted and squandered when we might have been developing a resource strategy and when we might have been working on some means of diversifying wherever possible. It is not always possible in every town and village, but wherever possible we should have been working on diversifying the economies of our resource towns.

I, for one, am somewhat new to politics perhaps, but I am very saddened at the fact that those who have been in charge of our lives and governments at every level have failed to develop a proper resource strategy, a proper economic strategy for that matter, an industrial strategy for Ontario and for Canada. We have drifted and we continue to drift.

I am profoundly distressed. I don't know how one can speak to some of these workers who have lost their jobs in Port Colborne and Sudbury and be able to explain to them how this country and this province can be proceeding, seemingly so comfortable, and seemingly so carefree without a proper strategy to cope with the futures of these young people, and for that matter their children to follow.

I'm concerned that this government has not shown much analysis in terms of the world market. They seem to have been caught, as I say, by surprise. Nor have they been willing to stand up to Inco and insist that if there is bad news as a consequence of over-expansion and as a consequence of an unanticipated slowdown in the world's capital goods requirement which has hurt the nickel industry, that this bad news be spread about all of Inco's operations, especially considering the moral obligation that is owed to the Sudbury basin, since the money of the company has been made here with the resources in the Sudbury basin in Ontario and yet it has been transferred in gigantic quantities to other parts of the world for investment elsewhere. Why the bad news cannot be shared with those parts of the world is something which I believe is a disgrace to Ontario and also to the multi-national corporation involved, and I have told them so personally, as you well know, Mr. Speaker.

I tell you, furthermore, that there are a number of proposals the union has made which are excellent proposals and which could at least mitigate to some extent the blow which has fallen upon these people and upon the community of Sudbury. I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that in Forbes Magazine, a financial magazine, in the issue of October 1, there is a very intelligent and penetrating analysis of the Inco company. It indicates there that Sudbury can produce nickel competitively and could beat the price of the Indonesian and Guatemalan operations of Inco, but it is in Inco's interest not to let Sudbury compete.

We want Sudbury to be permitted to compete and we insist that those who represent Sudbury's interests permit Sudbury to compete in the world markets. If, in fact, Indonesia and Guatemala could produce it more cheaply, then I might begin to understand the situation with Inco, because after all if not Inco, it would be the Swiss or the Germans or some other group that would develop those resources and sell in competition with Sudbury.

But Sudbury can compete. My only concern is that Inco isn't letting Sudbury compete. I believe we have to have a government that is strong enough to stand up to the company in this regard. We are interested in helping as many people as we possibly can. We are interested in facing the realities of the international market for nickel, but in a manner to mitigate the effects wherever possible and reducing the jobs lost wherever it is possible to do so.

We want to have a strategy in the resource sector, and that is why we have suggested that there be a committee of the Legislature with all-encompassing terms of reference, to permit not only the inquiry into the activities of certain of the senior officials from Inco, who most certainly should be called before the bar of this House, but also the calling forward of other persons who might contribute in a useful and constructive manner, such as the labour union.

I would like to hear from the labour union, I would like to have them tell the story here, to find out just how duplicitous the company might have been in its relationships with the union in terms of telling them so little, or leading them to believe that the layoffs were not, in fact, imminent.

I'd like to know from international experts whether Inco will be telling the whole truth when the officers come in here to tell us about the unexpected difficulties in the international market. I would like some corroboration from other people, not just from the senior officials of Inco.

Mr. Lewis: You have largely accepted it.

Mr. S. Smith: I'd like to hear from other people in the city of Sudbury and in the area who could make some intelligent suggestions—which they already have in some ways—and I would like them to have a chance to expand on them in front of all the parties of this House.

Mr. Cassidy: They suggested that we nail the government to the wall, are you ready to do that?

Mr. S. Smith: That's why we have suggested widely expanded, broad terms of reference for the committee. We have also suggested that once the committee is finished, in one month, with a report on the specific situation, it should then go on to become a select committee to inquire into the state of the resource sector and to come up with a strategy.

That is constructive, in my opinion. There may be those who disagree with the idea, but I think it is constructive. We put forward these suggestions with every good intention to have the matter dealt with by all parties in this House in as expeditious a way as possible.

Now we come to the actual suggestions made by the members on my left in the New Democratic Party. Some of their suggestions are excellent. The idea that more attention could be paid to safety and some jobs could be saved by having more work done in that area is an excellent suggestion. I am happy to applaud the suggestion and share it with the member.

However, I must say to you that the suggestion that nationalizing Inco would, in fact, solve the problems of these 2,800 layoffs, or in some way improve the international nickel market, is a suggestion that I find preposterous in the extreme.

Mr. Foulds: It is not in the motion, speak to the motion.

Mr. S. Smith: I feel, in fact, that the point of view that has been expressed by the mover of this motion—I notice he left it out of the motion, but he has certainly expressed it on many other occasions, supported by many other members of his party—

Mr. Foulds: He didn't express it in this today.

Mr. S. Smith:—the idea that nationalization would in some way solve this problem is a complete mystery to me. It would cost a lot of money to do that. I do not believe this is an intelligent time to put the people of Canada into the nickel business in this manner.

Mr. Cassidy: You are a hypocrite and you are trying to justify not supporting the motion.

Mr. Bounsall: The Leader of the Opposition can't vote against the motion on that basis.

Mr. S. Smith: I think that is a suggestion that is utterly and completely preposterous.

Mr. Martel: Speak to the motion.

Mr. S. Smith: But now, having decided not to proceed with nationalization at this time, having decided somehow or other to paper over the cracks in that party by deciding to downplay and soft pedal the nationalization aspect now, they have come up with a second solution to the problems of the 2,800 souls who are facing layoff in Sudbury, and that is that we should have an election.

Now how in the name of goodness can we possibly save the jobs of those people by having an election? Are we going to use them as poll clerks throughout the province of Ontario?

Mr. Breagh: Where is your principle?

Mr. Foulds: The Lieutenant Governor might ask you.

Mr. S. Smith: This has to be, as far as I am concerned, one of the most politically opportunistic motions ever to come in front of this House. I can certainly respect the desire of the member for Sudbury to be re-elected in his seat. I can understand that he is aiming at that.

[4:00]

There may be some poor souls in Sudbury who actually believe any guy who stands up in the House and is willing to have an election for them must be a super guy. But I'll tell you this, nobody, even in the midst of the depths of depression and sadness in Sudbury would be so stupid as to believe an election is a solution to their problems at this time.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We agree.

Mr. Germa: The mayor was one, the mayor said it: "Nail them to the wall."

Mr. S. Smith: Only the people in the NDP could be as irresponsible, as shallow and as opportunistic as to play on the sadness and the difficulty and the despair in that area to bring in this posturing motion, this motion which is fundamentally designed for the folks at home to show what brave fellows exist in the NDP. Everyone knows neither nationalization nor elections will sell one ounce of Canadian nickel overseas.

Mr. Samis: Remember December 1975.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. S. Smith: And so therefore I put to you, Mr. Speaker, that what we need in this House is a proper committee representing all parties to form a strategy in our resource sector, to look at all aspects of the Inco situation, to save whatever jobs are possible, to stand up to Inco and insist Ontario be put first on their list of priorities. We've got to ram down the throat of this government a proper attitude towards the resource sector in this province.

Mr. Cassidy: It will die on pieces of paper.

Mr. Germa: Can I have some studies?

Mr. Laughren: What a joke.

Mr. S. Smith: But we don't need an election. The members to my left know we don't need an election and this whole bill, this entire afternoon's debate, is designed to serve their narrow political, opportunistic purposes and should be shown up as a shallow exercise they have inflicted upon us. Thank you very much.

Mr. Germa: Same old gang; what nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: First candidate. Jim, why aren't you in this?

Mr. Breugh: I rise to speak in support of this motion and I think it important that people across the province of Ontario understand the impact of the issue before this particular House on this afternoon; understand that unlike what the minister proposes to put in front of us this is not a matter of geography, this is not a matter of the north versus the south.

This is a matter of economics. It is a matter of the future of the province of Ontario, of how we utilize the resources that are here, of what impact we might have on our own economy. It is also, as the member for Sudbury so eloquently put it just a week ago, a matter of the human investment, of people who have spent their lives working in a particular community, making that kind of human and very personal investment in an industrial situation only to have it thrown out the window.

Mr. Havrot: Sudbury isn't the only mining town in the country.

Mr. Breugh: I think we should look at a couple of other interesting things that have evolved from the discussions around this very issue. For some time now, we've been listening to a great deal of chatter about the productivity of the Canadian worker, and in particular, the difficulty of getting the kind of productivity from Ontario workers which would allow them to compete on an international market.

All of a sudden all that is not true; all of a sudden the Premier of the province, as an example, is adamant the productivity of the workers in the Inco plant is not in question at all, that in fact they can compete on a world market and the problem is simply that the world market is having a little difficulty. So all that we listened to for so long about Canadian workers, about Ontario workers in particular not being able to compete, is now shelved.

Let's look at this very question which has been raised several times; the question of whether the province of Ontario ought to nationalize International Nickel, of whether the province of Ontario ought to have, in public ownership, that entire resource sector or parts thereof. Let's realize, too, the province of Ontario has a pretty substantial financial investment in that one plant.

Mr. Conway: Now tread very easily, those delegates will be listening.

Mr. Breugh: In preparing some information on this, I found it very interesting to understand the people of Canada have invested substantial amounts of money. In terms of federal subsidies, there are tax credits involved totalling some $73.85 million; provincial subsidies in sales tax exemptions of $24.95 million; deferred federal and provincial taxes of $378 million; an export development corporation loan of some $77 million. That's a pretty healthy chunk of the Canadian tax dollar going into one corporate entity in one particular place. Those of you who are making the argument you cannot afford to nationalize Inco might ask the logical question, "What did we get in return for all that financial investment?"

Certainly we did not get much equity in terms of shares of that particular plant operation; nor will we, I suspect, get much assistance from the corporation in terms of the kinds of social costs that we, the people, will pay for. It is not just the $69 million that we lose in salaries, but the impact on that community, the problems that we will pick up in social assistance programs, the difficulties that we will face on the streets of those communities, and that we, the people will have to pay for thereafter. I wonder what sort of equity that is. I wonder what businessman in his right mind would stand up and justify that kind of investment, with absolutely no control.

If a case to nationalize Inco ever was to be made, it has been made by the company itself.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Are you for nationalization? Let's flush out the leaders.

Mr. Conway: What's your position on it, Mike?

Mr. Breaugh: There has never been a situation of a more clearly defined rip-off of the Canadian public in terms of its tax dollar investment, and even in terms of kind consideration by a corporation for its workers or the economy of the province than we are seeing in this particular instance. The thing that disturbs me most of all is that almost all of this is a clear act of will.

I want to read, very quickly Mr. Speaker, from three examples that bring to mind a number of issues. These are exemptions under the mining tax, all dealing with the same corporation, all dealing with a number of items that we have discussed in this House many times.

International Nickel has been given an exemption to the mining tax for an unspecified quantity of materials from the dates of January 1, 1975 to January 31, 1978, to export iron oxide pellets to Hanna Mining Company in the United States; to export nickel oxide and cobalt oxide to Inco in Wales; and oddly enough refined nickel sulfide to the Tokyo Nickel Company in Japan. It is an act of will, a violation of a piece of legislation that this House passed, supposedly a good decision on the part of the government which would do good things. It would be difficult to identify those good things that were supposed to have happened.

The company supposedly is having some difficulty with its Sudbury operation, and yet it seems to have a good deal of capital still available to invest in other kinds of operations, perhaps in other places in the province of Ontario but certainly not in the Sudbury basin.

Whether you make the case to nationalize Inco, or whether you say that for all of that massive public investment you surely should have received some measure of control—

Mr. S. Smith: Which side are you on?

Mr. Breaugh: —or whether you are prepared to say, as perhaps the Liberal government might say, that at least you should influence the role of that particular corporation and its function in the Sudbury basin, one of the oddest things is that a federal government, a federal Liberal government in particular, which has stockpiled everything from eggs to wheat, all of a sudden says that you cannot stockpile something like nickel.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Are you for nationalization? Let's hear it.

Mr. Breaugh: Let me put to you very briefly the kind of sweet reason, in the midst of all this madness, that comes from the workers themselves who are asking for simple things like no more overtime, a work-to-rule program, improvement of their pension program, the stopping of contracting out and adjusting the vacation schedule.

Mr. Conway: What is your position?

Mr. Breaugh: In all of this you see a failure on the part of the government of Ontario to implement its own fantasies in terms of a Design for Development for northeastern Ontario; a failure of the province of Ontario to establish in financial terms, a commitment to the development of secondary industry in the north at all. Frankly, in terms of what the member for Sudbury said, and he quoted at some length from this document, "all of what the government has even faintly attempted to do in the north has been, indeed, a profile in failure." Thank you.

Mr. Pope: May I say at the outset that I am in strong opposition to both the motion and the remarks of the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa) and of the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh) who followed him.

Mr. Riddell: Is Bill Ferrier after you?

Mr. Cassidy: You have a nationalized industry in your riding.

Mr. Laughren: I think I am going to be sick.

Mr. Pope: Let me hasten to assure the House that I am not speaking merely as a member of the governing party, I am speaking as a member who represents a northern riding and a member who received over 50 per cent of the vote in my riding in the last election. In my view, Mr. Speaker, the motion of the member for Sudbury is both ill-considered and precipitous.

Mr. Cassidy: Precipitous? After 34 years?

Mr. Pope: It is stated that the government has been unable or unwilling to develop a viable strategy for resource industries and resource industry communities in northern Ontario. This statement is completely without foundation. The government of Ontario has many strategies, which taken together form an impressive program for development in the north.

Mr. Cassidy: And none of them work.

Mr. Martel: What?

Mr. Pope: I am getting to it, just wait. The programs of the government are clear—

Mr. Cassidy: Name one!

Mr. Pope: —and the overall strategy should be patently obvious to all except those who refuse to recognize it.

Mr. Martel: Does the chamber of commerce support it?

Mr. Pope: In the first place, there is a regional priority program. This program is designed to assist municipalities to provide necessary municipal services. The main beneficiaries have been northern communities and a number of projects are under active consideration. Some examples of projects and funding in the past through DREE-TEIGA agreements cover a number of communities. For instance, Timmins, $10.7 million for sewer and water; Dryden, $2.9 million for sewer and water; Sudbury, $3.1 million for industrial site servicing. Examples of projects under consideration are North Bay, servicing and industrial park; Elliot Lake, servicing for housing. Capital expenditures under the community priority programs have an estimated cost in 1977-78 of $27,599,000.

Mr. Conway: That's just normal funding.

Mr. Pope: The projected cost for 1978-79 is $35,443,000. This will be mainly aimed at municipal servicing and development of industrial sites. The figures included an allocation of $3,250,000 for servicing of Walden industrial park in Sudbury, which should be completed this year.

Under the Neighbourhood Improvement Program, again jointly funded by the federal, provincial and municipal governments—the town of Iroquois Falls for instance, just in the last month, received an allocation of $680,000 for basic municipal services in the Porquis Junction area.

Mr. Martel: Imagine, in 1977 getting sewer and water in Sudbury. In 1977 you are getting sewer and water in Timmins. Hurray.

Mr. Pope: The second topic I would like to deal with is the Design for Development program. We have passed Phase 1, which was a thorough analysis of northeastern Ontario combined with some elementary suggestions. Phase 2, which was tabled in this House in April of 1976, deals with policy options. In conjunction with the municipal advisory committee under the chairmanship of Mayor Aurele Gervais of Iroquois Falls, a number of public meetings were held and input was received from municipalities and interest groups in the north. At the present time policy decisions and future options are being considered at the cabinet level. In brief, Design for Development is a forthright, public and vital part of the government's strategy for the north.

Thirdly, there is the important matter of conditional and unconditional grants for northeastern Ontario municipalities. The same unconditional per capita grant rates apply in the north as in the south. However, under the provision of the resource equalization grant, the special northern general support grant and the general support grant that applies to all Ontario municipalities, northern municipalities can receive up to 49 per cent of the general purpose municipal levy in addition to the unconditional per capita grants. There are northern municipalities in which the combination of unconditional grants account for up to 60 per cent of their municipal levy.

Education grants are not only based on equalized assessment but also on a number of weighting factors. Those factors most beneficial to the north are goods and service costs for small schools, small boards and compensatory education for a number of underprivileged pupils. These weighting factors increase grants to the north by about 12 per cent over those for the south. These are over and above the increases due to lower assessments in the north.

Mr. Riddell: Do you not think the government is obligated to spend some money in the north, Alan?

Mr. Pope: In addition, there is the strategy evolved by the Ministry of Natural Resources for the use of Crown lands. By this strategy the government has adopted policies for the disposition and use of these lands. Since lands comprise over 80 per cent of the land in northeastern Ontario this is important, when we consider timber rights, potential mineral development and agricultural use. The government's policy with regard to Crown land are an important component in the overall strategy in the north.

Mr. Foulds: They are an important part of the sellout, Alan.

Mr. Pope: Then there is the matter of capital hospital grants. Municipalities in the north are required to provide one-sixth of the capital of the hospital construction costs, whereas those in the south provide one-third. This in an obvious recognition of the special problems of the north and a concrete illustration of a definite program.

Mr. Martel: We have no taxpayers.

Mr. Pope: I would now like to move to the question of housing in the north. The government has a definite commitment to help provide affordable housing for citizens in northern Ontario. In my own riding, for example, Timmins, Iroquois Falls and Matheson have received many millions of dollars under a variety of programs ranging from community sponsored housing, urban renewal, Home Ownership Made Easy, RRAP and OHRP.

The Neighbourhood Improvement Program I mentioned earlier is a joint project with the federal government and provides help with basic municipal services. All of these programs are related to a larger plan to provide reasonably priced, serviced accommodation to citizens of the north.

I could read figures on this all afternoon. What is important is that all of these programs, and I've mentioned only a few, constitute a clear and definite commitment on the part of the government. To say that they are haphazard or that they are not part of a viable overall strategy is simply irresponsible.

Mr. Conway: The strategy doesn't exist.

Mr. Pope: Let me now turn my attention to the government's programs for industry in the north. The Mining Tax Act which is so often decried by the members of the third party has, in fact, been of tremendous assistance to the northern communities. The benefits of the Act can be seen in the decision of Texasgulf to develop refining and smelting facilities in Timmins.

This alone has produced a great deal of employment, both in the construction and mining industries. This was the intent of the Mining Tax Act, while attempting to extract an increased return on natural resource industries for all the people of Ontario.

Then there is the Northern Ontario Development Corporation, which has incentive loans and term loans for the development of businesses—

Mr. Laughren: A joke.

Mr. Pope:—which will contribute to the growth of northern Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: You will wear out the knees of your pants genuflecting to Leo Bernier.

Mr. Pope: Among the loans made by NODC reported in the 1976-77 annual report of the corporation, are C & A Steel Fabricators of Sudbury, $108,000; Dhyrn Limited of Haileybury, $500,000; Northern Cable Services Limited of Sudbury, $500,000—

Mr. Conway: Such generosity.

Mr. Pope:—Northern Customfab Incorporated of North Bay, $106,000—

Mr. S. Smith: I didn't think there were that many Tories up there.

Mr. Pope:—and Sudbury Basin Spring Service and Welding Limited of Sudbury, $253,757.

Mr. Martel: They're all closing now.

Mr. Pope: Many more examples could be given of assistance programs which benefit the northern part of the province.

Mr. Conway: Minaki.

Mr. Pope: Finally, with regard to the Sudbury area, the Premier announced last Thursday the formation of the cabinet committee on the economic future of mining communities.

Mr. Foulds: How much on Minaki?

Mr. Pope: Members heard or read the statement of the Premier, and I do not need to elaborate upon it.

Mr. Foulds: Why didn't they appoint the member for Cochrane North (Mr. Brunelle) to that? What's he doing in that Resources Development secretariat?

Mr. Pope: I would like to say, however, that no effort has been spared by the government in an attempt to solve the particularly difficult problems faced by the miners in Sudbury.

Mr. Conway: Is that your wife giving out medals these days?

Mr. Pope: The Inco layoffs demand special consideration, but this crisis alone does not mean that the government of Ontario has no viable strategy for northern Ontario.

Mr. Conway: Who's giving those medals out in Timmins?

Mr. Pope: I have mentioned only a few of the examples that could be given to demonstrate the government's commitment to orderly and productive growth for the northern part of the province. Plan by plan, program by program, it should be clear to everyone who cares to examine the record that the government has not ignored the north. Far from it, the programs I have mentioned are only parts of the whole, which is a reasonable, viable strategy for the north.

Mr. Conway: Twenty-eight hundred layoffs.

Mr. Pope: It should be obvious from what I have stated that the government has approached and is approaching the needs of the north, both in terms of the industries and in terms of the communities. What I take from the motion of the member for Sudbury is the idea that the third party is saying: "Forget about the Hartt commission; forget about the municipal advisory committee"—

Mr. Foulds: That's what the Minister of Northern Affairs said the other day in Sioux Lookout.

Mr. Pope:—"forget about the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee"—

Mr. Martel: The Minister of Northern Affairs said forget about Hartt.

Mr. Pope:—"forget about the mining municipalities in northern Ontario; forget about the Federation of Northern Ontario Municipalities; forget about the Northeastern Ontario Municipal Association." In short, they are saying: "Forget about consultation and go ahead and act."

This is not the style of this government, Mr. Speaker. The programs that help make up the northern strategy I spoke of earlier were all developed in full consultation with the people and the industries of the north.

Mr. Foulds: Postpone, postpone; delay.

Mr. Pope: The Inco problem is serious, and it has been addressed seriously. It is irresponsible for members opposite to talk of such things as influencing the international market for nickel when it is clear that the provinces, indeed the federal government, cannot control international prices.

Mr. Foulds: Or Inco for that matter.

Mr. Pope: Let me assure you that this government is acting to the best of its ability to help solve the problems of the day, with a long look to the future.

I would not be here today if the voters of Cochrane South did not agree with the manner and methods of the Progressive Conservative government of Ontario. What I sense, Mr. Speaker, in the motion of the member for Sudbury, although it is not spelled out in the resolution, is the idea that the NDP would like us to nationalize Inco, or all resource development companies for that matter.

Mr. Speaker, this was the issue on which the last election campaign was fought in northern Ontario; and while the leader of the New Democratic Party was playing a game of lost horizons with that policy, it is now before us again as spoken by the leadership candidates of this party.

Mr. Deans: Do you know Kilmarnock is ashamed of you? I checked, they're ashamed of you.

Mr. Pope: I say that this blind perversity and this blind unthinking commitment to an abstract philosophy—

Mr. Martel: Your colleagues are blind too.

Mr. Pope:—does not meet the needs of northern Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: For 33 years you haven't met the needs.

Mr. Pope: The people of northern Ontario have spoken and said that they do not want it, and if you continue on the course that you are now following with the blind philosophy for the benefit of the south, you're going to lose more than three seats in the next election.

VISITOR

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I am sure members of the House would like to recognize a former member of this Legislature, a former cabinet minister, Matthew Dymond, who was with us for many years.

Mr. Bolan: I rise to speak against this motion of no confidence which was brought by the member for Sudbury, a representative of the New Democratic Party. I had a long talk with Dick Smith this morning and he advised me to deliver this speech.

Mr. Martel: He wrote the mining Act.

Mr. Bolan: I really don't think the people of Ontario want to have an election as a Christmas gift. If one transposes the period of time which one must allow from the date that an election is called, this would bring us to December 24. Surely not even the members of the New Democratic Party would want to have an election on Christmas Eve. They must be accountable for something and the least they can do is give Santa Claus a break. When I first heard of this asinine motion, I started asking myself certain questions.

Mr. Deans: Did you get any answers?

Mr. Bolan: Whose benefit was it for? Is it for the benefit of the people of Sudbury who are thrown out of work as a result of this?

Mr. Deans: The answer is yes.

Mr. Bolan: Is it for the benefit of the many workers from my riding, from Nipissing, who are affected by this?

Mr. Martel: And the answer is yes.

Mr. Bolan: I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, there are many workers in the Nipissing area who are affected by this.

Mr. Germa: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Bolan: Within the west end of our riding we have anywhere from 50 to 75 workers who will be laid off as result of this. Not only that, before this announcement was even made the writing was on the wall in other industries within the Nipissing riding. I'm thinking of manufacturing companies like Jarvis Clark. I'm thinking of exploration companies like Canadian Longyear, Craig Bit and Mining Machinery and Equipment. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that before the layoffs in Sudbury came, there were well over 200 people in the city of North Bay, in the manufacturing industry related to mining, who were put out of work because the orders stopped coming in from Sudbury a long time before the actual announcement was made of shutting down? While all this was going on, where were they? What were they doing about it?

Mr. Germa: You've got a chance now to do something about it.

Mr. Bolan: Now we come back to the real purpose of the motion, and you have to ask yourself why is the motion being brought. The motion is being brought for their own derelict political posturing.

Mr. Lupusella: Don't be silly.

Mr. Conway: Fall off the grandstand.

Mr. Bolan: That is the real motive behind the motion. I was in the House when the hon. member for Sudbury spoke out on the date of the emergency debate. To listen to this hon. gentleman speak one would think he is the only one in this House who ever worked in a mine.

Mr. Laughren: It was a great speech.

Mr. Bolan: One would think that he is the only one in this House who ever went down a shaft in a bucket or in a cage and worked in a drift or in a raise, or in a stope.

Mr. Laughren: All of this is coming from an over-priced lawyer.

Mr. Roy: He is a success.

Mr. Bolan: One would think he has a monopoly on having done hard work. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that I too worked in the mines and I worked in the grimeiest holes that you would ever want to think of, that is the mines in Cobalt.

Mr. Germa: I know about that.

Mr. Bolan: If you think for one minute that working in a mine in Sudbury is hard-ship, then you come on up to Cobalt and I'll show you what it's like.

Mr. Conway: So will I.

Mr. Bolan: I can assure you that working in the mines in Sudbury is living in a Taj Mahal as compared to what you can expect in the mines in Cobalt.

The hon. member for Sudbury also spoke about nationalization; couched behind this unworthy motion of his lie the undertones, of course, of nationalization. That's the answer of the New Democratic Party—nationalize. As soon as a problem presents itself, that's it—nationalize it. Let the government take over, that is their answer to everything.

Well now let's look at that, let's analyse that a little bit closer.

Mr. Martel: What does Dick Smith say?

Mr. Bolan: Let me ask this question to these members to my left: Is nationalization of Inco going to create a better market for nickel in the world? Are we going to sell more nickel as a result? What are we going to accomplish? What is the cost of nationalizing Inco, $2 billion? Fine, we will find it tomorrow. How about $3 billion, Elie? What is the cost of that, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deans: What's is the cost of not doing it?

Mr. Bolan: This seems to be the philosophy of this party to the left, as soon as you have some kind of problem in an economy you nationalize the problem, you take it over.

Well let's look at some of these things. Let's look at some of the other areas in this province where there have been layoffs within the past two months.

Mr. Laughren: Another apologist.

Mr. Martel: You are sitting on the wrong side of the House.

Mr. Bolan: Quasar Electronics Canada Limited recently announced the shifting of production to the US with the loss of 125 jobs. Are you going to nationalize that one?

Mr. Germa: What are you going to do about it? Where's your recipe?

Mr. Bolan: Why not nationalize it? Go ahead, let's apply your logic all the way through. Let's look at other areas which have not fared too well. Fort Erie and Port Colborne.

Mr. Martel: Are you talking about northern Ontario or us?

Mr. Bolan: They are losing 384 jobs there. Nationalize that as well.

Is there anything else they want to nationalize, Mr. Speaker? It is embarrassing and it is shameful.

Mr. Conway: We nationalized the classroom and look what happened.

Mr. Bolan: As far as the other side is concerned, Mr. Speaker, they have to share the responsibility for what has happened in this province.

Mr. Roy: The first thing we do is fire Leo.

Mr. Bolan: They have known for some time that this was going on. You know if a little backbencher on the side of the official opposition can find out in July there's going to be 4,000 layoffs in Sudbury in the fall, then surely the boys on the other side are responsible to know about these things as well.

Mr. Germa: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Bolan: Look at all of these old, tired faces sitting in that front row. Do you know what I see, Mr. Speaker? I see they are deeply lined. I see great etches in their faces; and those, Mr. Speaker, are lines of guilt. They are lines of guilt for mismanaging this province for the past 34 years.

Mr. Roy: Get on your knees, Leo, and apologize to the province.

Mr. Germa: Wash the blood off your hands, Leo.

Mr. Bolan: I would hope, Mr. Speaker, with the creation of a committee to look into this whole question some sensible solution other than the inanities spoken about by the people to the left will be arrived at.

Mr. Germa: Another study.

Mr. Ruston: Lean to the left, Michael.

Mr. Bolan: I would also hope, Mr. Speaker, with good sound planning emanating from the other side, emanating from this government in a minority position eventually we will be able to develop an industrial and resource strategy for the province of Ontario to see to it this type of problem does not arise again.

Mr. Deans: There isn't a great deal of time, and I don't want to waste time dealing with the comments of the member for Nipissing—

Mr. Roy: You should sit down right now.

Mr. Conway: This will be a first.

Mr. Deans: —other than to remind him that his predecessor was much more enlightened, and understood the problem of the resource sector far more intelligently than has been evidenced by the speech we just heard.

Mr. Roy: You are going to have a problem with predecessors, too, Ian.

Mr. Deans: I want to suggest that the question before us is who, in fact, is going to govern the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Stick to the resolution.

Mr. Deans: Is the province going to be governed by the corporate sector? Or is the government of Ontario going to exercise some responsibility on behalf of the people of Ontario to guarantee that there will be a reasonable share of the value of the resources of this province used in this province for future generations' needs?

And that's what the question is. The question is whether or not this government recognizes that the corporate sector in the province is now making all of the major decisions and that the decisions that are being made are not being made in the best interests of the province, but are rather being made in the best interests of the profitability of the companies involved. And that's what we are faced with.

On numerous occasions over the last number of years this government has had before it reports dealing with the resource sector in this province. It has had reports which spoke directly to the problems of northern communities on the fact that it is very difficult, if not impossible, to develop an economy in the north if it is to be reliant almost entirely on the extractive and lumber industries; that there has to be a new infrastructure to guarantee that there will be secondary manufacturing; and that there will be job opportunities that will be lasting for people who live not only in northern Ontario today, but people who are going to come into northern Ontario to live in the future.

That requires government action. The government has had recommendation after recommendation with regard to how it ought to attempt to manage the resources of the province of Ontario. It has failed in every single instance to take any action.

My colleague from Sudbury and I sat on a select committee, which made a number of recommendations; not any of them, to my best recollection, dealt with nationalization. And yet those recommendations received the concurrence and support of every single member of that committee, whether they were on this side of the House or on the government side of the House. They spoke to the need for the government to be directly involved—directly involved in managing the resources of the province, in the interests of the people of the province.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Are you going to nationalize or not? Make your position on it.

Mr. Deans: I want to suggest to the minister that it is said by many people that Ontario is extremely wealthy. When they say that, they speak about the resources we have, and the value of those resources. The fact of the matter is we are not extremely wealthy, because we have to ask: Who gets the wealth? And the answer is obviously, not the people of Ontario.

Mr. S. Smith: Oh, that is nonsense. That is real nonsense.

Mr. Deans: I don't need any comment from you, because I am coming to you in a minute.

Mr. Roy: Hang on.

Mr. Deans: The question is who pays the price?

Mr. S. Smith: That's right. They are so much better off in socialistic countries.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: This is your position now? Nationalization?

Mr. Deans: If this was the first time that Inco had acted in a bad corporate way, then I could understand it. But this is the second time in this century that Inco have failed to recognize their responsibility to the province of Ontario. In fact, at the turn of the century, there was a considerable amount of upset throughout this province as a result of Inco not responding adequately to their responsibilities.

At that time—for the benefit of the Leader of the Opposition—the Liberal Party had the intestinal fortitude to stand up and to say that the resources of the province of Ontario should be developed in the public sector.

Mr. S. Smith: Is that what you are saying now?

Mr. Deans: That's where the Liberal Party stood, which is considerably different from where they stand now, for they are prepared to give the resources away without any consideration for the rate of return—

Mr. S. Smith: Are you saying that now? Are you for nationalization?

Mr. Deans: —without any consideration for planning, and without any consideration for the future needs of the province.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Deans: This is in fact the tip of the iceberg.

Mr. S. Smith: Are you for nationalization though?

Mr. Deans: This is the tip of the iceberg. What we have is a company that is fabulously wealthy in its own right.

Mr. S. Smith: And you are going to nationalize them, right?

Mr. Deans: Inco has been given concession after concession by the federal government; concession after concession by the provincial government. There has never been one single attempt made by this government to determine how those resources ought to be developed in Ontario for our benefit. And the difficulty we have is, by virtue of the give-away programs of this government and its inability to come to grips with the kind of economic planning that is necessary, that this company has been able to take the wealth of Ontario and to put it outside of this country to develop alternative sources of the resource. Thus, we are now faced with a situation which will continue to deteriorate.

What we are seeing in Sudbury today is the beginning.

Mr. Martel: That's right.

Mr. Deans: It's not just simply a slight drop in the productive capacity. It is the beginning of a gradual phase-out of the operations in the Sudbury basin by Inco in the interests of the operations they are now developing in Indonesia and Guatemala.

If you take a look at the Guatemala and Indonesia situation you find that in one case they're in partnership with the government. In the other case their partnership extends not only to the government but to the Japanese interests, who in fact won't now buy the refined ore from Ontario because they have an interest in getting it from where they have a partnership, and that's in Indonesia.

Mr. S. Smith: Ten per cent.

Mr. Deans: I don't care if it's one per cent.

Mr. S. Smith: We could ship it from Sudbury into that subsidiary if we have to, and then to Japan.

Mr. Deans: Oh, could we?

Mr. Martel: That is what you advocate, fewer jobs.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Deans: What we were faced with in the area was the union in Sudbury being quite prepared to enter into any kind of reasonable arrangements to preserve the jobs of the people there. Unfortunately the government wasn't even interested in sitting down and talking about those things. The company, recognizing that it had the full support of the Tory government of Ontario, didn't feel any obligation to sit down and discuss what might reasonably be done in order to keep those jobs in place.

I think there are a number of things we've got to do in this province. I want to suggest them in the two or three minutes I have left.

I think the first thing we've got to do is develop a policy which brings an end to this government's complicity in encouraging direct foreign investment in the resource sector.

I think secondly, that we've got to make sure that in the mineral resource sector, particularly in nickel and copper where the jobs are already being lost, the government has to stop or make representation to Ottawa to stop all of the depletion allowances, all of the arrangements that are currently in place, until such times as we can come to an arrangement with Inco about its continued operations in this province.

I think the government has to launch a policy of pressuring the resource corporations into making sure their priorities are consistent with the priorities that may be in the best interests of the province of Ontario.

Finally, I think the government has to take a stand and say since the profitability of this corporation is immense, we will not have these layoffs take place until such time as there is a rationalization of the industry and an understanding of what the future development is to be.

I think the government has to sit down and begin a process of economic planning. That economic planning has to follow the patterns established by many industrial nations in the world, in that there has to be an overall economic plan. There has to be sector planning in the economy. That planning has to apply not only in the public sector but it must also apply in the private sector.

There has to be a clear understanding of what not only Inco will do, but what all of the other resource-based industries intend to do with regard to the future of Ontario. I think we must set economic priorities in this province. One of the primary priorities—in fact, probably the single most important priority—has to be jobs in this province. There has to be a clear understanding of what we expect from companies operating in this province, of what we expect by way of direct return in taxation, and of what we expect by way of what is called by the Treasurer “good corporate citizenship.”

I think we have to establish clearly in the province that the raw material potential is to be used in the interest of the province of Ontario and of all Canadians. We have to make sure the resources are being developed in our best interest, because they are our resources.

I think we have to take steps to try to come to grips with the manufacturing sector directly related to the mining industry. We've got to take a look at how we develop that manufacturing sector so we can, in fact, manufacture machinery, so we can, in fact, use the potential we've got in order to build an infrastructure for northern Ontario that would sustain itself through periods such as this we're now going through.

In the public-private argument I'm convinced, looking historically at what's happened throughout most, if not all, of northern Ontario, and looking back to the early part of this century, to what happened with International Nickel, we, the public of Ontario, have been abused, shortchanged and even cheated by the actions of companies such as Inco and by the action and non-action of this government and its predecessors.

Mr. Germa: Resign.

Mr. Deans: I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, the future development of resources in this province should and must be in the public sector. I want to tell you further the reason is because they are our resources and for 70-odd years, for 70-odd years we have allowed the private sector to develop them and we have virtually nothing to show for it.

Mr. Martel: Empty mine shafts.

Mr. Deans: We can't possibly do the planning that has to be done in the interests of the people who are going to live here generations from now, unless we have a direct say in how those resources are to be developed.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am surprised you take that stand. I want to see where Mike stands.

Mr. Deans: We have an obligation to develop—

Mr. Wildman: A gold mine.

Mr. Deans:—and to determine what is in our best interests—and we have an obligation to develop an economic plan that will speak to the needs of this Ontario and a future Ontario.

Mr. Lane: I would like to congratulate the last speaker on a very good leadership speech. It was too bad there was no practical suggestion to the problems we are facing in Sudbury today.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Right on.

Mr. Lane: And it is also too bad the third party has to use this kind of a crisis for political purposes.

Mr. Wildman: Come on, John, you don't believe that.

Mr. Cassidy: You are not a politician, eh?

Mr. Lane: I would like to go back a few years and think about how and when mining started in Sudbury. I understand it was about 1882 when the CPR tracks were being laid in Sudbury that the rich ore was discovered but copper was more important in those days than nickel.

Mr. Laughren: Address yourself to the issue. You know what the motion says.

Mr. Lane: The Canadian Copper Company was formed in 1886.

Mr. Germa: I read the book, John.

Mr. Lane: In about 1900 nickel became rather important and the Mond Nickel Company came on stream. These companies continued to operate until about 1929, when they were merged with Inco.

Mr. Martel: Tell us in your history analysis how we got a refinery in Canada.

Mr. Lane: I might point out at that time Inco had 5,780 people on its payroll. Now Inco has 17,000 people.

The city has grown with the company. Back in the 1930s when there weren't any jobs for anybody, anywhere, people from my riding were able to get jobs with Inco in Sudbury, because as I said, they had 5,780 employed at that time.

Mr. Wildman: You know, John, if they had their druthers, they would be back in Manitoba.

Mr. Lane: I am a little bit older than some of the members and I have been around a little bit more and maybe I am more of a northerner than some of them, but I worked in Sudbury in 1938—

Mr. Germa: Why did you leave?

Mr. Lane: —and I can recall going to the Inco employment office at 4 o'clock in the morning only to find that 500 men were in line—some of them had been there all night—trying to get a job with International Nickel. That is how scarce jobs were in those days. And Inco was one of the employers in my area.

Mr. Germa: Why is everybody leaving?

Mr. Havrot: Found out that you were there.

Mr. Wildman: Want to return to those days, John?

Mr. Lane: As a matter of fact, a number of the young farm boys from Manitoulin Island worked in Inco in the 1930s. Some saved enough money in the years of the depression to go back home and buy a farm which is still owned by that family. So Inco has done a lot of things, not only for Sudbury, but also for the surrounding area.

Interjections.

Mr. Laughren: Boy, this is some apology. Whose pocket are you in?

Mr. Lane: You know, Mr. Speaker, I did not really know how bad the people who run Inco were until I was elected as member for Algoma-Manitoulin in 1971 and heard the members from the Sudbury area tell this government almost on a daily basis what bad people were running Inco.

Mr. Martel: And they were right. Look what they have done to us today.

Mr. Laughren: Now you.

Mr. Lane: I always felt the elected representative from any area, more or less, became the spokesman for that area.

Mr. Germa: We are.

Mr. Lane: When a member runs down his own riding—

Mr. Wildman: Oh, come on.

Mr. Germa: I am not in Inco's pocket.

Mr. Lane: —runs down his own town, runs down the company that built that town, I point out we would not have had a city of Sudbury with 100,000 people or so, had it not been for Inco.

Mr. Wildman: How about that.

Mr. Laughren: You are an embarrassment; you embarrass your own party.

Mr. Lane: I am not saying by any stretch of the imagination Inco has done everything right, because there is no company that does everything right. But I will tell you one thing, if I were to get together all the Hansards published since I became a member six years ago, put them together in a book and handed it to Inco, if they were not interested in Sudbury they would not just cut back on the jobs, they would simply move out of the area as a result of what members from that area have said.

Mr. Martel: I wish they would. I would even give them bus fare.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lane: I believe the hon. member said on one occasion before that they could do without Inco in Sudbury.

Mr. Germa: We will do it ourselves.

[4:45]

Mr. Martel: If they promised to leave I will even pack their bags.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Laughren: There's blood on your hands, Leo. You are not one to talk.

Mr. Germa: Eleven dead men last year.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You don't know what it is to make a dollar.

Mr. Laughren: Not dishonestly, that's right. We don't make dollars from the public the way you have.

Mr. Lane: Mr. Speaker, could I have some order please?

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lane: If it wasn't a sad situation we're facing it would be almost funny.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Could we please stop the cross talk and allow the member to continue?

Mr. Laughren: You are being provocative.

Mr. Lane: The members from that area have been continually downgrading the company, downgrading the government—

Mr. Laughren: We don't want blood on our heads.

Mr. Cassidy: We will keep on downgrading you, too.

Mr. Lane: —saying we don't need Inco. Now they're saying save us, save us, save us from them.

Mr. Martel: Nationalize them, we will take them over. The Premier even made me the manager.

Mr. Lane: Certainly this government, the government that I'm proud to be a member of, will do everything possible to help the situation in Elliot Lake.

Mr. Laughren: Blood on your hands there, John.

Mr. Germa: How many dead men there, 34?

Mr. Lane: We have always responded to situations like that Elliot Lake had a few years ago which Sudbury has today. We respond to the needs of the people. We always have and we always will. And we'll do everything that we can to help the situation we're now faced with in Sudbury.

I don't proclaim that we never did anything wrong, but we do have a very high batting average. The people of this province have enjoyed a very high standard of livelihood for the last 30 years because of that batting average.

Mr. Laughren: How about the miners at Elliot Lake?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: A banner province.

Mr. Lane: I am calling on all members of this House regardless of party affiliation to lend their efforts to help resolve this serious situation we now have in Sudbury and not just try to make political marks on it.

I have here a copy of Hansard for June 27, 1977, where the hon. member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan) is making a speech. He's saying we should have a moratorium on all development north of the 50th parallel.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's right.

Mr. Lane: That's what those people want, they want a moratorium on everything. When I was trying to get a Ministry of Northern Affairs so we'd have a vehicle for the north they fought me every inch of the way.

Mr. Foulds: And look what he's done to save the jobs.

Mr. Lane: Just give us time. Those guys over there didn't want the province to—they wanted to make marks at the expense of people. They want to make marks now at the expense of the worker in Sudbury, that's why they want an election.

Mr. Foulds: Marks? What the hell are you talking about? Do you know what you are talking about?

Mr. Lane: The hon. member of the official opposition hit the nail right on the head a while ago when he said there wasn't anybody else so stupid in this country who would want an election at this time to resolve this kind of a problem. He was right on.

Mining has been the main source of employment in Sudbury now for nearly 100 years. I'm sure that if we do as I have suggested, and everybody lends their efforts to try and resolve the problem that we're faced with, it will be the main source of employment a hundred years from now.

Mr. O'Neil: It's a pleasure to make a few comments today concerning the problem that we have in Sudbury with Inco. As was mentioned by our leader in the few words he gave at the beginning of this afternoon, several from our party visited Sudbury during the summer months and spoke with some of the union members at that place. We were made aware of some of the serious problems which were pending, not only with Inco but also with Falconbridge. We met with labour people and management people, and came back and expressed our concern to our leader and our caucus members. As a result of that the Leader of the Opposition visited the area and had discussions of his own with people in that area.

Mr. Eaton: You mean he actually went back to the north? One time he said he wouldn't.

Mr. O'Neil: As I say, we were very concerned, and our concern was that the government, which I understand had the same information in the dialogue with some of the union and management people, did not take steps to try to find a solution to this. I feel that a lot of the onus lies not only on the government but on the present Minister of Labour for not providing some better type of preventive medicine or sending a team of troubleshooters to the Sudbury area to talk to these people with whom we had talked and to try to solve the problem or to come up with some suggestions.

Some measures have been brought to light now, of course, such as the building program the province plans to initiate in Sudbury and some of the dialogue concerning travel between Sudbury and Elliot Lake, but again these are things that could have been started or put into effect many months ago, had the government moved a little.

Mr. Martel: The building was started two years ago.

Mr. O'Neil: Yes, but it hasn't progressed to the extent it should have to put some of these people to work who are out of work now.

Mr. Martel: That's the sop.

Mr. O'Neil: I say to my friend that he has his reasons for making his comments.

I was very pleased last week to introduce one of the things I think possibly could have got rid of some of the problems we have. I refer to the private member's bill that I introduced last week, the purpose of which was to increase the time of notice to an employee whose employment is to be terminated where the employer plans to terminate employment with certain numbers of people—50 to 200, 200 to 500, and over 500. If a bill such as this had been brought into this Legislature some time ago and put through, it would have solved many of the problems we have today.

Our leader has made some comments this afternoon about his desire that a committee, possibly a select committee, be set up to study the resource sector, and hopefully, that this would be set up after we have meetings, first of all, with Inco. It is our hope that such a select committee will be set up so we can look at the resources sector in this province to see that there is an overall plan that can be approached.

Mr. Foulds: Mackenzie King style: postpone, postpone; never do anything by halves what you can do by quarters.

Mr. O'Neil: The member for Wentworth a few minutes ago mentioned nationalization and made some comments concerning Inco. As was mentioned by the previous speaker, Inco can't take all the blame. Mind you, there are a lot of things that could have been done by the company. But, on the other hand, I think we have to realize, as responsible people, that there wouldn't be the jobs there are in the Sudbury area if it hadn't been for the nickel companies. As was stated by the previous speaker, it has resulted in a very excellent area and a very nice city of Sudbury.

With the establishment of the committee, and if the Inco people and some of the business and labour people come before this committee, I hope we'll come up with some of the solutions that are needed, that these people will not be put out of work and that it will be followed by a committee to study the total resource sector.

Mr. Germa: That was pretty weak.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I'm disturbed both by what the government has had to say about this resolution today and by what the official opposition has had to say.

Mr. S. Smith: And your two colleagues.

Mr. Cassidy: The cabinet is meeting while Sudbury bleeds to death. The leader of the official opposition says we should have more meetings; he wants to huff and puff like the big bad wolf in the fairy tale in the hope that Inco somehow is going to come to heel.

Mr. Eaton: Talk about huffing and puffing; that's you.

Mr. Cassidy: It's simply not true that the strategies of the government have been effective, and it's certainly not true that the work of the official opposition is going to have any effect at all.

I grant that the government has put a certain amount of money into northern Ontario. But the thing that bothers me about the statements that have been made in the House today is the belief of the government. They are so opposed to any kind of government spending that they believe every nickel and every dime that is spent from government funds in the north is a gift rather than the right of the people of northern Ontario.

They do not understand that for year after year, and decade after decade, southern Ontario has been milking the north dry and it's about time we reversed that particular process. That's what this resolution is about. It speaks to the layoffs at Inco and it speaks to the failure of the government of this province to develop a viable strategy for the economic development of the north so we are not subject to the boom and bust cycle of a dependence on resources.

The government has mismanaged the north. It has mismanaged the economy. Now we are having to try and pick up the pieces at a time when the economy of the province is weak and when it is exceptionally difficult to put the whole situation back together.

I want to read to you, Mr. Speaker, some statements by the Premier of this province, commitments which sounded pretty good but which in fact had no meaning at all. Back in April of 1976, he introduced the Design for Development documents into the House to say how we were going after 10 years of planning in the province. He said the government aimed at the increased development of the north. They have botched that, Mr. Speaker.

He said the government aimed at diversified development of the east. They mismanaged that, Mr. Speaker.

He said the government wanted to see the enlightened use of our natural resources. They have mismanaged that, Mr. Speaker. He said the government wanted to see development of strategies for the careful use of mining and lumbering reserves—mismanaged and botched all the way, Mr. Speaker.

In Trends and Options, which was the major statement of the government's policy about how they wanted to develop this province, they talked about a balanced growth across the province and the reduction of economic disparities. Well, Darcy McKeough doesn't talk that language any more, because it has been botched—mismanaged, Mr. Speaker—and we are not making any progress.

The government said in particular it would be its aim to have the stimulation of economic growth in northern Ontario. What we have now is the deindustrialization of the north. Now people who have worked and lived for generations in northern Ontario are having to pay the price.

The Treasurer said good planning is simply good management. We agree with that. We find a failure in good management on the part of the government and now the problems are being felt up in northern Ontario.

The government says it's committed to comprehensive and effective provincial and regional planning. They said they were reaffirming that particular policy, but in fact they have been backing away from it on a systematic basis.

Both the government's own documents and the Ontario Economic Council point to the failure to develop growth in the north, to the slowdown in the primary industries, to the fact that incomes in the north are below the provincial average and to the fact that the social and cultural amenities people should have in northern Ontario simply have not been installed because this government exists for southern Ontario and not to give equal opportunities to people across the province.

The government over the past 10 years has systematically destroyed what once looked like a promising effort to get into systematic planning for the province. When Design for Development began, it was a plan; now it is simply a strategy. Originally it was going to be acted upon; now they are looking for comments and nothing more. That's particularly true with relation to northeastern Ontario. We have to try and build a balanced economy, when economic conditions are tough, because we didn't work to build a balanced economy when economic conditions were booming.

The government is setting up a committee to examine the future of the mining communities after disbanding six years ago the development councils which were designed to do specifically that in northeastern Ontario.

The government has failed to establish the advisory committees which were called for in the Design for Development process in order to ensure that there would be local input into the planning exercise which is now being abandoned.

What we have instead is a Treasurer who says—and I quote, believe it or not: "With just a little more social awareness in the decisions of the private sector about where they set up new operations, we could have a significant impact on regional development." That's what this government believes about regional development. Stand back and let the private sector do it all.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, I have been gravely disappointed, when we have come to the specific questions about Inco, in the lack of concern of the government and in their failure to take any effective actions—even to put up the pretence of trying.

We asked the Treasurer whether he had any specific figures for the tax concessions given to the company. He said, "No."

We asked if he had ever talked to the company and asked them to create jobs on the basis of the tax concessions they are being given. He said, "No."

Had anybody else from the government done that? He said, "No."

We asked if Inco was a good corporate citizen. He said: "Yes." The Minister of Industry and Tourism said the same thing. We profoundly disagree that a company which has created jobs in the north but has failed to reinvest its profits in the north, has created pollution in the north, has built up a multi-national enterprise in the United States, in Wales, in Guatemala, and in Indonesia without any sense of responsibility at all to what is happening in northern Ontario, can be considered as a good corporate citizen.

[5:00]

It goes even further than that. Last May, the Treasurer and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Kerr) met with Inco and asked them how they were doing. Inco described its ventures in the developing world. They patted them on the head and said; "That's great."

Inco described what it was doing in the field of undersea mining of nickel nodules, and the Treasurer says now, "It is fair to say we gave them a great deal of encouragement."

"That was great," they said. "Take your marbles out of this country, and we'll cheer as you take your wealth from northern Ontario out of the country."

This government has failed to give direction to the private sector in northern Ontario in the development of Ontario's publicly-owned resources. This government has failed. Other people in the private sector have stepped in and have given instructions to Inco, which it heeded when it would not even consider talking to this government.

What hasn't come to the public's attention yet is the fact that shortly before Inco began that two-week process of deciding on the layoffs, they had a letter from Moody's and a letter from Standard and Poors, the two major bond rating institutions down in New York. Moody's cut Inco from a rating of AA to A, and Standard and Poors adjusted them from AA to AA minus.

When the financiers on Wall Street spoke, Inco shut down in Sudbury. That's the truth of the capitalistic system as it applied to northern Ontario. That was an inevitable consequence when this government failed to plan for the future of northern Ontario, and left the future of 2,800 miners and the future of this province in the hands of the private sector.

A company whose reserves are worth $35 billion proven and $100 billion sitting there in the ground should have more responsibility than that. A company with $1.5 billion of working capital and $800 million worth of assets should be prepared to put off those layoffs until adequate provision is made for the future development of northern Ontario.

A government which is concerned about the future of this province should ensure that our public resources are used to ensure jobs, and ensure that a diversification of the economy take place. That's not occurring right now. It hasn't planned over the last 10 years. The government hasn't responded to these particular layoffs, it is resigning itself to the private sector, and all of the impact that that sector is having on our people today. We say that isn't good enough. We say it is time we go back to the people of the province and install a new government, which can plan adequately for the future of northern Ontario and for Ontario as a whole.

Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, may I point out to you, sir, that we only have 14 minutes and 48 seconds left for our party, so we will hold off and use it for a windup speech. If there are other members who wish to speak they can continue the debate until we have our 15 minutes.

Mr. Deans: Just one quick comment. Well, that is true; you would of course speak second last.

Mr. Maeck: I am not objecting to that, but I want to be sure the members use all the time. We have used our share, we want to reserve the other 15 minutes.

Mr. Kerrio: At the outset I would like to say that it's a very irresponsible motion. If it were to accomplish something it would be worth considering but the party left of us knows fundamentally that there is nothing to be gained by passing this motion on the floor of this Legislature.

Mr. Foulds: It might turf the beggars out. That might accomplish something.

Mr. Kerrio: The fact of the matter is that at a time when Canada led the world in nickel deposits and supply, nothing was done in the way that would cause us to have the kind of impact that could have been had on the markets of the world. Since then, the discovery of nickel in many other areas certainly has put us in an entirely different position.

I think the responsibility of those of us on the floor of the Legislature as far as private enterprise is concerned is to see to it through a tax structure and through a responsible position in this Legislature that those people that are given the opportunity and the privilege of extracting the ores from this country of ours are made to pay a fair share of taxes and to make a commitment to a reinvestment in the country that they extract these ores from.

The fact that nationalization could even be considered as a way out is certainly kidding everyone in this province. The fact that hardly anything that's nationalized or run by the government is as competitive as the free enterprise system is easily proven.

Mr. Laughren: That's an in-depth analysis.

Mr. Ziembra: It sure beats unemployment.

Mr. Kerrio: I rise here to suggest that we have had a recent election, that there is nothing to be proven by an election and that the foisting of an election on the citizens of this province at this time is not going to help the Inco workers, and that's what we should be addressing ourselves to.

It just so happens that as recently as three days ago I rose on the floor of this Legislature to ask the Premier of this province if he would address himself to seeing if we can move the federal government into purchasing pipe for the pipeline that is manufactured in Ontario, in Welland, if you will. That's the kind of constructive criticism we need in this Legislature today. Those are the things that will create jobs. Those are things that are immediate and in the offing.

I stand here and tell the party to the left that they can move this piece of legislation across the floor and if there was by some chance a miracle that it might pass, they would accomplish nothing—absolutely nothing.

Mr. Laughren: Try us.

Mr. Kerrio: It's a posture they're taking that is not going to fool anyone in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Laughren: Ask your leader about Port Colborne.

Mr. Breithaupt: What about it?

Mr. Kerrio: To get back to the suggestion that I have for that party, I would suggest to them—

Mr. Laughren: The Liberal Party would wipe out Port Colborne completely.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. S. Smith: How many orders would nationalization get for Port Colborne?

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please. Would the Leader of the Opposition and the members of the third party please allow the member for Niagara Falls to continue.

Mr. Samis: Start over again.

Mr. Kerrio: I say it's time to address ourselves in this House to meaningful input, to doing something that would have a good chance of creating jobs, not to attempt to put something on the floor that takes up our time and that isn't going to accomplish anything in the way of providing jobs for the workers in Ontario.

I would like to get back to the original statement that I made, if those people on the left would listen. We have now committed ourselves to putting one of the biggest construction jobs into place in the western part of Canada.

Mr. Laughren: You are a hero.

Mr. Kerrio: The major portion of the contract for the installation has been let to a construction company. We have not committed ourselves to the purchasing of the pipe, which is a billion-dollar purchase. It can be manufactured in Welland, Ontario, a stone's throw from Port Colborne where Inco has put so many people out of work. I tell members this is the kind of constructive criticism that should be directed at the government, but it also should be put to the people over there. It's the kind of thing we have to address ourselves to to make this economy move.

That kind of thing the party to my left is doing today and the kind of time it's taking up today is going to accomplish nothing. I would say to them that I've asked the Premier of this province to participate and to get to the federal government. The installation part of the pipeline contract has been let but the pipe has not been bargained for as yet.

Mr. Laughren: You should hear what I told him.

Mr. Kerrio: The Americans are expecting a part of the order. All that we've been committed to so far is that it's going to be done in a way that's competitive. At this juncture, we need a little bit more of a guarantee than that. I say in all fairness to the Canadian scene that as the pipeline is crossing Canadian territory we should have a good portion of that commitment to the Canadians. In that way we'll have it committed to Ontario. It is one of the few jurisdictions that can produce the type of product that is being looked for.

I say to the members of the NDP with respect—and I'll tell them they will not budge me from the position—that any place in the whole world where this socialist jurisdiction has prevailed has been a complete and utter failure. We still can stand proudly and suggest to the members to my left that the free-enterprise system is still the only way to go.

That thing they presented on the floor here today is going to fail because it's going to accomplish absolutely nothing and that is what that party has to offer this whole society of ours—nothing.

Mr. MacDonald: You ought to read Canadian history.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the House expresses lack of confidence in this government, and I suppose that is fair enough. But at a time like this I wonder if it in fact is the appropriate response of a responsible government to a problem we all face. You know, in the opposition all three respective candidates for the leadership have talked about nationalization of the company as the solution. Nationalization will not sell metal.

Mr. Laughren: So simplistic.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The simplistic part of this House is not on this side or in this part of this side, it is in that part of the House.

Mr. S. Smith: Let the record show he pointed to the NDP.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think in fact we have, as the introducer of the motion pointed out very early in the game, two basic problems and the first is the immediate problem of helping the displaced workers in the Sudbury area either to retain their jobs with Inco, or to help them to find employment elsewhere.

As a matter of fact, I think a good deal is going on at this point. Last week, as you know, Mr. Speaker, the Premier appointed me as chairman of a committee to look into both the short-term and the long-term problem. That is a job that I have taken on with enthusiasm. I have met with my colleagues, I have met twice with representatives of, first, the northern mining communities and, second, with the Sudbury committee, as I believe it calls itself. I found them to be a very, very responsible mixture of labour, management and business people from the community. In fact, it was one of the most reassuring things I have seen.

Mr. Martel: We are on that committee by the way.

Hon. F. S. Miller: All right, but the people present at that meeting were responsible. I will phrase it that way.

Mr. Martel: No, we made the decision they asked for.

Hon. F. S. Miller: This group, while having individual differences, is interested in solutions, not in rhetoric. This House needs to be interested in solutions and not in rhetoric.

Mr. Lewis: What is the minister going to do?

Hon. F. S. Miller: What am I going to do? First, both management and labour have assured us that they need some time to complete certain discussions they are now having. That, I am sure, is an encouraging sign. I hope those in the NDP party accept it as encouraging—

Mr. Lewis: Not NDP party, the NDP.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am sorry, the member is correct. I am being redundant.

An hon. member: It's not a party—it's a movement.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It is a collection of free souls who found no other banner to associate them.

We are working with that group and I would hope before too many days or weeks pass we will have the opportunity to visit them up there after there has been time for the decisions or the discussions between the company and the union to have been completed. They are anxious for us to wait for that time and we are willing to.

In the meantime, we have taken two positive steps: We have shown our faith in the community because we believe the community of Sudbury has a great future, and we need to help them through what is a present trough until that time. In the long range what this province will be doing—

[5:15]

Mr. Lewis: You have offered nothing in the short range.

Mr. Speaker: I think I have the member for Scarborough West down to speak later.

Hon. F. S. Miller: From 5.42 to 5.50.

Mr. Lewis: Do you, Mr. Speaker? All right, whatever you say.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In the long range of course, we have to be concerned about this province's mines' ability to compete in world markets. In fact, we have to be concerned about attracting the investment to develop the future mines which most assuredly will be found in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Mackenzie: What about their problems going out of the province?

Hon. F. S. Miller: This province has the best technology in the world for the discovery of ore bodies. That, in fact, is one of our export products. We are exporting the expertise to discover mines in other countries as a business.

Mr. Reid: Guatemala, Indonesia.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes. Is it not better that Canadians be involved in the process than not involved?

Mr. S. Smith: Yes, but do you understand what it means?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm talking about exploration right now, not development. They are entirely different things. I see as my duty as minister the responsibility, with my committee, to find a tax structure which will maximize employment in mining and processing in northern Ontario. That has to be a very neat balance between extremes. I've heard one side which says, sell everything we can in as unfinished a state as we possibly can, via Indonesia or any other route.

Mr. S. Smith: Seventy-five per cent product, you know darn well.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition has already spoken.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The other extreme won't ship anything out until it's finally refined. In today's world, it's not a seller's market, it's a buyer's market and the policies will need to reflect that.

Mr. S. Smith: So we shouldn't buy either.

Hon. F. S. Miller: If one looks at it, there are some seven or eight jobs in the mines for every job in the refining process. That's the key thing; the mining is the greatest part of the labour content of the extraction and processing of our ores. As a country, we need to make it amply evident to the people we are dealing with, the people who have a choice of developing ore bodies here or ore bodies in some other location, they can count on private ownership of their mine through the duration of its life. They can count on a tax system that will be equitable so they in turn will have a return on their investment.

Mr. Laughren: Want to tell them to lower the price?

Mr. Mackenzie: Get rid of the surplus.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's one of our future policies. We have to look at many other things in the north that don't relate to mining, but specifically I'm going to take a good look at that with my committee in the near future.

I have begun to talk about these problems with the Ontario Mining Association. We had our second meeting on that topic yesterday.

Mr. Martel: I have been asking for that for 10 years.

Hon. F. S. Miller: And we will continue those. They are very complex discussions.

Mr. Martel: Well, you are in trouble today, aren't you, because you didn't act?

Hon. F. S. Miller: They probably took the advice from whence it came and ignored it, as they should have done.

Mr. Martel: You're in trouble today, aren't you?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm in trouble today because I listened too often to the member for Sudbury East. In any case, Mr. Speaker, I'm satisfied there is a danger of overreaction. There is a danger of frightening away the very people on whom we need to count for the continuation of the success of the Sudbury basin. I'm convinced our committee and this government has within its hands—

Mr. Lewis: Who would you frighten away?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Just ignore the interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'll rephrase it, Mr. Speaker. Let me put it this way. Prophecies, as you know, are often self-fulfilling. One of the problems we face in this country is taking a calamity such as has happened in this area and talking about it to the point where we frighten many other people from making decisions they otherwise would have made. Which in turn, cuts down on retail purchasing, which cuts down on manufacturing, which increases unemployment and which deepens the cycle. To me, that is the basic problem I hear when I hear the opposition talking about lack of concern for our government.

I'm sure there are other speakers who wish to speak and I'll stop here.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. Conway: Now here is Liberal and Labour.

Mr. Martel: The only one in the House.

Mr. Reid: He used to be a friend of mine. I sympathize a great deal with the motion as put forward by the member for Sudbury—

Mr. Mackenzie: However.

Mr. Reid: —because as a member from northern Ontario I share his frustration. Besides feeling frustrated about the lack of action by the government, I also feel a certain amount of despair about the whole situation, because I have been a member of the House for 10 years. While I won't ask you to concur with my remarks, I think you, Mr. Speaker, probably share the feeling of the people of northern Ontario. In my 10 years here, we've seen very little by way of improvement of the situation in northern Ontario.

There's not much coming forth from the government benches to really indicate that that situation is going to change. The Minister of Natural Resources, in his usual—

Mr. Wildman: Affable.

Mr. Reid: Thank you—affable style, has sort of calmed the waters in saying: "Now, this is our future policy and we're going to do this 10 or 20 years from now." We have a press release and a statement from the Premier that we're going to have, in response to this crisis in Sudbury, a cabinet committee set up, composed of the Minister of Natural Resources, the Minister of Northern Affairs, the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Industry and Tourism.

I would like to ask, and since the Premier is with us, perhaps he can answer, why, in the name of all that is holy, first of all, is the minister responsible for resource development in this province not on that committee? Considering his depth of knowledge in regard to resource development—

Mr. Conway: Indian affairs.

Mr. Reid: Indian affairs, and bilingualism, all of which he is responsible for, and has displayed an amazing grasp of nothing concerning these matters, what is that particular minister doing? The other person who should be, who makes all the decisions in the government and who is not on this committee, is the Treasurer. It doesn't matter what the Minister of Natural Resources says, or the Minister of Industry and Tourism, or the Minister of Labour, and certainly, least of all, what the Minister of Northern Affairs says because it's going to be the Treasurer who makes the ultimate and final decision. We know what his response is: "Nothing can be done."

Mr. Martel: For 20 years in the north.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What is this all about anyway?

Mr. Reid: The fault does not lie entirely with the provincial government. The federal government is to be condemned also, because we have no national industrial strategy. We have no natural resource strategy. We have no national transportation policy; that should be an integral part of those matters.

Mr. Conway: Throw them out.

Mr. Reid: But that does not excuse the provincial government from having carried on in the same manner, with a complete lack of policy and direction, in northern Ontario.

Mr. Swart: Lack of economic planning.

Mr. Reid: For some 10 years, myself and yourself, Mr. Speaker, and others, have asked for some policy in regard to resource communities in northern Ontario and one-industry towns. We've got no response from the policy ministry, the Provincial Secretariat for Resources Development. I tried to get in the back door, so to speak, once by imploring the Minister of Labour to look at the effects of strikes in one-industry towns—to highlight the problem of the economy of a one-industry town, all of which, with few exceptions, are in northern Ontario.

Mr. Conway: Is Brampton a one-industry town?

Mr. Reid: This government has got to be condemned equally with the federal government for the lack of policy in this regard. It's a sad state of affairs that with the bureaucracy and the number of civil servants and the cabinet committees and all the highly-priced people that we have—and some of them are very good—we have only to come up with some kind of holding policy when we run into what amounts to a veritable crisis, whether it be Reed Paper and the mercury situation, or whether it be Inco and the layoffs.

We have no response to these things. I'd be the first to admit there are no easy solutions. Obviously, with all due respect to my friend I think he's put the motion to emphasize his frustration, his despair, and to underline the importance of having these kinds of policies. Obviously, that is the reason this motion is there, because an election is not going to solve the problems of Sudbury.

Mr. Speaker, we have a stranger in the House. I would ask your indulgence while we introduce him to the House. The leader of the federal New Democratic Party, Mr. Broadbent, is with us. He is obviously here, Mr. Speaker, to get some policy positions from the Ontario Liberal Party to take back with him to Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He will be very disappointed if that is why he came.

Mr. Reid: He can only go up. It can only be an improvement.

Mr. Conway: He is here for the leadership race.

Mr. MacDonald: He is more perceptive than that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, you are right, but I will tell you why he is here some time.

Mr. Breaugh: We already know and we don't care.

Mr. Breithaupt: Another appointment?

Mr. Reid: Does Walter Pitman need an associate at Ryerson?

The Minister of Natural Resources has mentioned some future policies again—

Mr. Martel: That is down the road.

Mr. Reid: —and that is not going to cure the problems we're going to have. We might as well face the fact and the reality now. Sudbury is only the first of many problems we're going to have in the resource communities of northern Ontario in the next few years.

I would like to commend, to speak about corporate responsibility, the attitude that Steep Rock Iron Mines is taking in the community of Atikokan. There, the iron ore mine is phasing out; the available ore is gone. There are some 600 workers who are going to be affected when that operation closes down and yet Steep Rock has been working to develop an ore body, an alternative ore body, at Bending Lake.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I've been working with them.

Mr. Reid: Just a minute. So those people can be employed, Steep Rock, one of the few Canadian-owned and managed companies in Canada in the mining field I believe, is showing that kind of corporate responsibility. I will say, and put on the record, that the Ontario government is, in fact, working with Steep Rock to, hopefully, make that Bending Lake property, a reality.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You're trying to justify two hospitals.

Mr. Reid: Yes, and I am sure that the minister who has such a personal stake in the community, the Minister of Natural Resources, will continue to work with Steep Rock and to provide the assistance that is necessary to keep those 600 people employed. But we have to have more than an ad hoc approach to resource communities in northern Ontario.

I have voluminous correspondence with the Treasurer in regard to these matters going back some years in his first emanation as minister and in his present emanation as minister. The only consistent policy the government has is we deal with these matters on an ad hoc basis. We cannot afford to keep doing this. We have to have some consistent policies in regard to secondary industry in northern Ontario.

Nobody expects that, all of a sudden, because of something the government does there are going to be small industries popping up in every community in northern Ontario. We must face the fact some of the smaller ones are going to have to be phased out. There is just no doubt about that. I think we would be unfair to raise the level of expectations to say that some of those communities are going to continue. But we must have a consistent policy to deal with these matters, and it must be done in conjunction with the federal government.

Because this matter deals specifically with mining communities, and with Sudbury in particular, I don't want to get into discussing forestation and the issue of reforestation, but surely—and I said this to the Premier when he made the announcement of the special committee—the guidelines of that committee should be broadened to deal with all the resource communities, particularly also those that are dependent on the forest resources. I hope in fact, that will happen.

Those are a few of my thoughts, Mr. Speaker. I am sure you have heard them before. Again, I sympathize with the position put forward by my friend from Sudbury but I must say that I don't think the ultimate result of his motion would really solve the problems that we see today in Sudbury.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Renfrew North for four minutes.

Mr. Conway: Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I did not expect to be left such a generous allocation by my colleague from Rainy River. Therefore, I do want to restrict my remarks to generalities.

Mr. Deans: How could you speak other than in generalities?

Mr. Roy: They should be familiar with that on the other side.

Mr. Conway: It is with a great deal of personal interest that I can take part in this debate this afternoon. There is a tendency in certain parts of this caucus, I think, to want to support much that is behind this confidence motion because this party, and certainly those of us who represent what might be considered areas beyond the south-western Ontario region, have a keen appreciation for the very substantive matters that are raised by our good friend, the member for Sudbury.

As has been mentioned, I think very properly, this Inco situation reflects very keenly the frailty of much of the Ontario economic structure. To anyone who has had any observation about the growth and development of regional economies in this province, I think the one impression that must rest most directly over and above all others is that the east and the north particularly reflect in economic terms a clear and definite intention by the metropolitan south to develop those regions in purely colonial terms.

I would go further in saying that northern Ontario, certainly from the beginnings of this century, was developed in economic terms as a colony of the industrial south. The resource economy that has grown and developed, particularly under the aegis of the Ontario Progressive Conservative tradition, has done nothing but reinforce that colonial relationship.

In the few moments and seconds that I have left, I want to say, not only on behalf of the northern Ontarians but certainly on behalf of those people in eastern Ontario who can well appreciate the seriousness of the economic difficulties relating to the Inco layoffs—layoffs that were brought to this Legislature without any prior consultation, despite the expression of a contrary position some months earlier about the need for communication on behalf of government and the private sector—that the colonization attitude of this government and of much of the multi-national sector is at the root of this problem.

The answer surely must not be a Christmas Eve election, which certainly the hon. gentlemen to my left do not want, but the maintenance of this minority government to bring this particular party and its administration of colonial economics to heel in this chamber. It is for that reason that I cannot, as much as on philosophical grounds I might like to, support the resolution; and I will not.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will make every effort to confine myself to the six minutes, which for me will not be easy but I will certainly do my best.

Mr. MacDonald: You will not only make an effort but you will confine yourself.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Certainly I will confine myself, as long as I am not interrupted too often.

Mr. Speaker: Five minutes.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That has to be the fastest minute in the history of this House. At the outset, without in any way suggesting there is any partisan feelings in this motion—

Mr. Deans: There is.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —I would like to say to the member for Sudbury and the two other members of the New Democratic Party caucus that I understand and am sympathetic towards the very legitimate concerns they have expressed on behalf of their constituents. I can't really add a great deal to the lack of logic, the lack of intelligence and the lack of understanding—

Mr. Laughren: You can add a lot.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —that is contained in a motion that would in its resolution, as they see it, provoke an election at a time in the history of this province when it is something I genuinely believe we do not need and which would not solve any problems—

Mr. Lewis: That's not what you told us when you called one.

Mr. Conway: That was a painful lesson, wasn't it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and would not serve the interests of the people of Sudbury or the Sudbury basin.

Mr. Conway: A $20-million lesson.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't say this in any critical sense but—

Mr. MacDonald: Of course not.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —as I listened to a lot of criticism, I didn't hear too many constructive ideas emanating from anybody across the House on this occasion. It's great to stand up and be emotional—and I would be emotional too, speaking for my constituents, I understand that—but if that party really wants to solve problems, it is not going to solve them by this particular no confidence motion. It is not going to solve the long-term problems of Inco by nationalization.

I have to go on record as saying that sort of proposal would, in my view, lead to greater difficulties in Sudbury, greater employment problems and probably to a lack of a competitive position on the part of Inco, and that is what provides the jobs for so many of their constituents. Their theory of nationalization, in today's climate just would not work. I am surprised they would even promote that, although I understand the three leadership candidates are all totally committed to it.

I too would like to welcome Mr. Broadbent. Mr. Broadbent is here, incidentally, not to listen to the debate. He is here to speak to the Premier of the province. I will be delighted to welcome him later on in my office when we will discuss in a logical way the unemployment problems that exist here in this province. I will certainly give him the benefit of my advice.

Mr. MacDonald: I hope you give him more than you have given us.

Mr. S. Smith: He has the benefit of my sympathy.

Mr. Martel: He is not going to learn much.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, he has a point of view. I appreciate the fact that he recognizes the great leadership that has been given in economic terms in this province and wants to find out how it is we are making it work.

Mr. MacDonald: He just cancelled the appointment.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am interested in the solution of problems—Mr. Speaker, I am being interrupted.

Mr. Speaker: You are indeed. Will the hon. members for York South and Scarborough West try to contain themselves.

Mr. Lewis: I haven't said a thing. This is a congenital affliction of yours.

Mr. Speaker: I am anticipating you.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I want equal treatment. They should both "decease"; one did in a political sense and the other is in the process.

Mr. Lewis: Which one of us is that?

Mr. Conway: Just keep your eye on the Brutuses behind you.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I never worry about the people behind me.

Mr. Speaker: The Premier has one minute.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can tell the member for Renfrew North it's the leader of his party who should keep an eye behind him, and to his left and to his right; he should be looking all over as a matter of fact.

Mr. S. Smith: I find cabinet material in each direction.

Mr. Conway: The member for Brock (Mr. Welch) is an eminently fine fellow.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would urge in this one minute that is left that the members of the New Democratic Party understand one thing. We face a serious economic problem in the Sudbury basin, I don't minimize it; but your solutions don't make any sense, they won't work.

We're living in a world marketplace. This government understands it, and we're committed to the solution of these problems in the long-term basis. I'm very optimistic that we will achieve those solutions.

You can belittle the cabinet committee, you can belittle many of the things that they're doing, but let me remind the members of the House one thing—

Mr. S. Smith: Why is the member for Cochrane North (Mr. Brunelle) not on that committee?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —that this province, in economic terms, in the time that I have been a member of this House—

Mr. Swart: Is fine.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —has prospered, has grown more than any other jurisdiction in Canada, more than any other jurisdiction in North America; and that it's going to continue under this administration.

Mr. Germa: Industrial wasteland.

Hon. Mr. Davis: As I finish, I appeal on a very genuine basis to the leader of the New Democratic Party: Let's not partisanize this issue. Let's try to find solutions; let's not, as he did this morning—

Mr. Speaker: Time.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —tend to escalate the matters in his communication on the air. And please, in his eight minutes will he impress upon his colleagues that he has changed his mind and he too will show some sense and show confidence in the government of the province of Ontario at this very important time in our history.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it will distress the Premier to know that not only have I not changed my mind, but the absence of anything concrete in his finale to the government position reaffirms in my mind and our mind yet again that this kind of motion is absolutely indispensable at this point in time in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Stephen, you know and I know you are playing politics; everybody knows you are playing politics.

Mr. Lewis: I want to say to the Premier that I didn't want, we did not want, to have to move this kind of motion. We wanted to wait and we did, to see whether any initiatives would come from the government which were a feeling and real response to the predicament of the Sudbury basin.

After two weeks of discussion, consultation and negotiation, and every other invention available to you, you came up with a building which had been promised before and a ministerial committee on which sits a minister in this House whose negligence over the last several years is largely responsible for the problem that is debated today.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Stephen, I can always tell when you believe what you are saying and when you don't.

Mr. Lewis: As a matter of fact, if I may say as amiably and affectionately as I can—I know winning plaudits even of the Liberal Party in this case—put René Brunelle on, take Leo Bernier off.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You are still smarting over Minaki.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if I may say to you, sir, the record of the government in dealing with the resource communities has been pretty abysmal over the years. The Premier may have forgotten that I go back 14 years in this House. The Premier goes back even further than that, but he may have forgotten the record in northeastern Ontario.

Perhaps he remembers 1958—the northeastern Ontario region economic survey; perhaps he remembers 1966—the update of the northeastern Ontario economic survey; perhaps he remembers the report in July, 1968, on the public sector and northeastern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You did this with education. They were all American publications when you did it the last time.

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps the Premier remembers February, 1969—the five-year development program final report for northeastern Ontario; perhaps he remembers September, 1969—the northeastern Ontario regional development program; perhaps he remembers 1971—Design for Development, Northeastern Ontario, where in the very first few pages there occurred the following paragraph:

“The region as a whole has a narrow and relatively slow-growing economic base. This is the case in most of the larger centres, and is particularly so in the many smaller communities. If under these conditions the dominant industry declines, substantial hardship follows, because few, if any, alternative forms of employment are available.”

The litany for 20 years; and when Inco lays off 3,000 people, the Premier has utterly no response whatsoever, he is politically bankrupt again. How does he answer; how does he answer?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: How ridiculous can you get.

[5:45]

Mr. Lewis: May I point out, Mr. Speaker, despite all the evidence, despite all the work, despite all the recommendations which have come forth since 1958 in one report after another, nothing happened. Despite other considerations and factors as well; despite the fact Inco has taken $1.7 billion in profits out of the Sudbury basin over the last several years; despite the fact Inco is using Ontario money to buy the battery plant in the United States for nearly a quarter of a billion dollars, a plant which is now self-sufficient in Inco's diversification in its manufacturing sector while our mining sector goes down the drain; despite the fact Inco took our money—

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is not going down the drain.

Mr. Lewis: —from Ontario and went to Guatemala and Indonesia—

Interjections.

Mr. Mackenzie: It hurts, doesn't it fellows, it hurts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I cannot hear the member for Scarborough West.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Good.

Mr. Speaker: No, I am entitled to hear him.

Mr. Lewis: Despite the fact they took our money from Ontario in profits, went to Guatemala and Indonesia and entered into consortia with the governments of those countries, participating in large measure in the exploitation of that resource—an anathema here, a requirement there; despite the fact that even now Inco is engaged in large amounts of capital expenditure under your venture investment program, receiving, let me remind you, and not often referenced in this House, by virtue of a bill introduced into this Legislature on November 1, a 250 per cent writeoff against current income for every penny they put up by way of venture capital, so that if they give $2 million they write off $5 million from current income. All of this being done and not a penny of it designated for the Sudbury basin. And you talk of questions of public ownership.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They have spent hundreds of millions since 1970.

Mr. Lewis: Let me ask you, Mr. Speaker, and through you the Premier, what is wrong with owning the ores of Ontario?

Inco owns the ores. Would you allow Abitibi or Reed or Domtar to own the trees? Do we not own the trees as Crown land and lease the resource for development? Why do we not work out a lease with Inco rather than letting them run roughshod over the economy of Ontario? No answer to that.

Mr. S. Smith: Pseudo nationalism.

Mr. Lewis: That is what we are talking about; the ownership of the ores of the province and the renegotiation of the terms. And why not? What is inconsistent in that, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Because it would not solve the problem and you know it.

Mr. Lewis: Sure it would solve the problem, which brings me to the finale I wanted to put to you.

We don't understand, in this caucus, why you have been unable to come to grips with some very particular employment programs. We don't know why you have not intervened to facilitate the suggestions made by the union which would have kept several hundred people on the job. We don't know why you haven't said to Inco, “men must continue to be employed to replace the electric problems underground in the mines and to deal with the ventilation and safety problems in the mines.” We don't know why you don't insist on using some of those who might otherwise be laid off in a program to rehabilitate the environment of the Sudbury basin which Inco and Falconbridge together had desecrated. We don't see why you cannot—

Mr. Speaker: The time has expired.

Mr. Lewis: —say to that company, “you will lay off no one unless and until there are alternatives.” And that is why we have moved and stand by this motion of no confidence this afternoon.

The House divided on Mr. Germa's motion, which was negatived on the following vote:

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, may I make three quick announcements? Tomorrow morning we meet at 10 o'clock, of course, and we'll do the private members' business when we get to orders of the day. There seemed to be some misunderstanding and I'd like to clear that up now. The standing committee on resources development will meet tomorrow morning after routine proceedings to take into consideration the estimates of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food. The House leaders and whips will meet tomorrow morning at 8:30.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a question of the government House leader? Does the government intend to block the private member's bill from the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini) tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Tune in at 1:45 tomorrow afternoon.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 6:02 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1977

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

DON JAIL

Hon. Mr. Drea: I will close the old Don Jail on December 31, 1977, forever. I have asked my colleague, the Minister of Government Services (Mr. McCague), to have tenders prepared for demolition contracts.

I see no value in preserving the old Don Jail. To do so would require the taxpayers to pay many hundreds of thousands of dollars to meet acceptable public fire safety standards. Heat and maintenance alone cost nearly $500,000 a year. Without additional expenditures, there would be a persistent pest control problem.

It is repugnant to me that preservation would mean that the curious would line up to see four steel-enclosed death cells, a gallows where 70 persons have been executed and jail corridors and cells which for more than a century have witnessed the worst in the human condition. Upon completion of the demolition work, inmates will develop and maintain a massive flower garden for the benefit of patients of Riverdale Hospital. I regard this as a far better land use.

During its controversial existence, which began in 1865, over one million persons have passed through the Don Jail. The physical limitations of this old jail imposed upon its inmates conditions which are unacceptable.

In addition to the hardships imposed upon the inmates, the outdated facilities have placed stressful demands on the staff. They deserve praise for their dedicated service under trying conditions for so many years. There will be no loss of jobs as a result of this closure. Staff working in the old jail will be transferred to other facilities.

The inmates presently incarcerated in the old jail will be accommodated in the modern detention centres which my ministry opened this year in Etobicoke and Scarborough and in the jail building adjacent to the old jail at its Gerrard Street and Broadview Avenue location. Some alterations to the admission area and to the medical area in the newer jail building will be carried out. Inmate labour will be utilized wherever possible for the work related to these alterations.

In addition to thanking the staff who have worked in the outdated facilities of the Don Jail over the years, I would like to pay tribute to my predecessors in this portfolio who laid the groundwork that has made possible this historic announcement. The impetus for the replacement of outdated local jails was provided in the 1960s by the then minister, Hon. Allan Grossman. Under his leadership the ministry assumed full responsibility in 1968 for the operation of all county and city jails, one of which was the old Don Jail. An immediate program of renovation and replacement was begun, which has already seen the closure of 13 outdated jails and the opening of six modern detention centres. The old Don Jail and Hamilton's old Barton Street Jail will cease to exist in the new year, with the Hamilton facility being replaced by a modern detention centre.

Each succeeding minister after Mr. Grossman—Hon. Syl Apps, Hon. Richard Potter, Hon. John Smith, Hon. Arthur Meen, and more recently the Solicitor General (Mr. MacBeth) as acting minister—made individual contributions to the program designed to provide the province with jail facilities that meet the standards of accommodation and security expected by the Ontario public.

I am sure all hon. members will share my satisfaction that the beginning of 1978 will see the disappearance of this notorious 112-year old institution.

I would draw the attention of the House to the fact that my director of operations, the man who has wanted the Don Jail closed for many years, Mr. Harry Hughes, is in the gallery, as is Mr. Gerry Whitehead, the last governor of the Don Jail when it was run by the city of Toronto, and Mrs. Whitehead who did yeoman service there on behalf of female offenders.

ORAL QUESTIONS

WILD RICE HARVESTING

Mr. S. Smith: My first question is of the Minister of Natural Resources; it is with regard to the subject of wild rice harvesting in northwestern Ontario.

Does the minister not agree with me, and has he not indicated in the past, that as a substitute for the devastated economy, previously related to fish now poisoned by mercury, that in order to become self-reliant Indian people in that area could be encouraged, aided financially and given whatever assistance and advice necessary to become successful business people in the realm of the wild rice harvest? Aside from some small bush logging operations, does he not see this as the one possibility for self-reliance by those Indian bands at Grassy Narrows and White-dog; and what is he doing about it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: It is not the only one, but it is an important one. One has to realize the wild rice harvest only lasts for a few weeks in the late summer each year.

There are a number of problems. I have had some private chats with the Treaty No. 3 chief on the matter. I went so far as to ask his advice on some proposed changes in wild rice policy. This is something that is not normally done, but I gave him confidential documents on the basis of what staff were thinking, not what policy is but what staff were thinking, simply to have his input before I reached a decision.

Our estimation is that in the northwest there are potentially about 20 million pounds of wild rice for harvest. It varies a great deal from year to year. I am told this was to have been a very good harvest year. I am also told the price this year soared to all-time highs because of competitive bidding from the United States markets. The price got up to $1.40 or $1.50 a pound green, and that is a very high price. There are some problems, however. One is that the Indians have looked upon this as their resource and theirs only.

One has to be careful in saying that any resource is exclusively the right of a given group of people. I said to the Indians I would like them to be the people harvesting the wild rice in northern Ontario and I intend to give them the first option of harvesting the wild rice in Ontario, but I really don't want to see 95 per cent of it fall into the water each year because it isn't harvested. I said to them if they are not really able to use modern techniques to harvest the wild rice, because there are modern techniques which they do not wish to use yet, or are not willing to go into those areas and harvest them by traditional methods, surely it is better not to waste a resource and simply let it drift into the water.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, since we must agree with the minister one doesn't want to see an important resource wasted, does he not agree with me that the ministry should be working hard to arrange for better flood control and better dams to be built on certain small tributaries so that we could have a more stable, year-to-year predictable wild rice yield? Rather than simply ask Chief Kelly whether he intends to harvest a certain amount, shouldn't the ministry be working hard to assist the Indian people with the mechanization that is required to assist them to set up the corporate structure that might be required? Shouldn't we be taking advantage of this opportunity and not just pointing a finger at them and saying they are wasting it so we are going to give it to some other people? Should we not be helping them to become self-reliant, good businessmen in this regard?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Certainly. As a matter of fact, I have seen some of the devices we have helped finance up there for this very kind of mechanical harvesting. Sadly enough, I have seen them in pretty poor shape because they have not been maintained. We were leasing back one of the machines this year in an attempt to use it as a demonstration piece of equipment so that it could be used to demonstrate the rapid rate of harvesting—I think it was in Fort Frances I saw it.

I want to point out something. I am sure Chief Kelly and others are faced with a conundrum almost. They know that the best and probably the only way they can increase their overall yield of the harvest significantly, apart from getting more of the people to go out in canoes and beat it into the boats as they now do, is to go to mechanized equipment. At the same time, knowing that, they are aware that their own people are resisting this change because they see the mechanical harvester as an intrusion on their culture and tradition.

That is a problem the member and I are not really able to solve. I think we have to encourage rather than legislate. I, for one, am going to encourage the Indians to work with us in an attempt to increase their revenue from the wild rice harvest. I am reasonably satisfied it can be done only by the use there of such modern techniques as we have in all other forms of agriculture.

As far as the dams and tributaries go, they may play an important role, but currently we need to learn to harvest the rice that is growing without the assistance of man at all.

[10:15]

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Does the minister not think it might be a good idea not to grant any more licences for the harvesting of wild rice until the Hartt commission has made its determination on development in the north?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I don't know that that's right. I've said to the Indians that we have an old agreement in the northwest that basically reserves wild rice for, Treaty No. 3 I believe it is in that general area. There are some existing white licences in the area and they're pursued reasonably actively. But really, should one waste a resource totally if, in fact, we can get some agreement as to where the Indians are willing to harvest the rice? I suggested to them in this meeting, "Tell me those areas you can't harvest, knowing you can't harvest them all, and I'll be glad to consider only those." Currently we haven't made any progress on that because their position has been that there shall be no white licences at all.

Mr. Foulds: A further supplementary: Does the minister not think that it is worth concentrating, first of all, on the labour-intensive aspects of that industry? Is he not aware that the population of the correctional institutions in the northwest drops dramatically among the native population when the wild rice harvest season is on, and is that not an important factor rather than merely the market value that he seems to have his mind cast on?

Secondly, does he not think that the higher the price that can be obtained by the labourers picking the rice, the better it is, socially, economically and culturally, for the people in that area?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Certainly I'm delighted to see the price of wild rice go up, because of course this provides more revenue for the people on the reserves. And I'm told by the Indian people that the harvesting of wild rice, while it's work has been one of those traditional seasonal joys they have; they thoroughly enjoy going out and doing it.

I only say that we need to encourage them to do it, whichever way they wish. That still will leave, if they do it by the old methods, a great deal of unharvested rice. If they go to the new methods, it will not leave so much, if any, unharvested rice. I think that choice basically is going to be theirs as to which route they follow. I think I have the responsibility, if there is a wasted resource, of seeing that it is utilized.

STREETCAR CONTRACT

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications in reference to the contract between Hawker Siddeley and the Urban Transportation Development Corporation for TTC streetcar bodies: Can he confirm that the contract has just been signed and can he tell us whether there is an escalation clause of any description in that contract? Furthermore, can he tell us whether the competitive bidder, Bombardier of Quebec, would also have insisted on an escalation clause?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that the contract with Hawker Siddeley has been signed recently. I believe I can also confirm that there is an escalation clause, but I cannot give the hon. leader specific details; I can get him whatever information he requires. Actually, I believe there was an escalation formula proposed in the call for tenders for these cars. It is a normal process in this type of a contract to include an escalation cost factor in the contract over the period of years that the manufacturing takes place, tied into some specific Statistics Canada or other cost-of-production increases.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, could the minister tell the House whether the escalation formula that was in the call for bids, or at least that he thinks was in the call for bids, is the same escalation formula that has now been accepted as part of the contract? If he doesn't know that, I would appreciate if he would obtain the information for us.

Can he furthermore tell the House whether the TTC has a guarantee of a fixed price and whether it has been insulated against possible escalation in price or not? Does the minister's letter to the TTC guarantee, in fact, that it will receive a fixed price or is it subject to escalation in what it has to pay for these car bodies?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I'll get all that detailed information. Of course, as I recall it, 75 of the 200 streetcars are being paid for 100 per cent by the province of Ontario. The other 125 are being paid for on the normal capital subsidy arrangement of 75 per cent provincial and 25 per cent TTC. I believe there is also an escalation clause in the contract between TTC and UTDC for the purchase of the cars, so I would expect there could be some escalation clause built in for the 25 per cent TTC portion of the 125 cars. I'll get the detailed information for the member.

ANACONDA LAYOFF

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism: Can the minister give us a report on the state of negotiations over the purchase of Anaconda?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, about a week or 10 days ago, the question was asked in the House and I said we would look into it and we have. We have had representatives meeting with the principals in New York city along with representatives of the union that represents the workers at Anaconda. I can't go into all the details, because there are some negotiations still taking place between the union and the Canadian management arm of Anaconda and they prefer that we not get into any public debate on it at this time. I have said that would be agreeable to us, at least as far as the government is concerned.

At the moment it appears that the union and management have come to an understanding as to an extension on the contract which will afford us some other opportunities to look into the possibility of an extended life period for that particular firm.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: Is it not true that the extension of the life of the firm is only meant to last as long as a pursuit is made for possible potential buyers? What I'm really asking the minister is whether there is any reason now for optimism about a potential buyer for that plant in order to preserve the 800-plus jobs?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, the assessment or analysis made by the leader of the NDP is correct. I have not been privy to all the discussions, nor do I believe I should be, but I believe there has been a common understanding that there will be an extension to the contract at least until some time in late spring which will afford the Canadian management, the American management, the federal government and the provincial government of Ontario, an opportunity to continue to seek out a potential purchaser of the assets of that corporation.

At this very moment, I understand, there are at least two, if not three firms or consortia looking at the possibility of the purchase of those assets.

There is a very great concern, Mr. Speaker, by the federal agency, particularly the mint of Canada—

Mr. Lewis: The mint?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The mint, yes; because it is a large purchaser of copper from that particular concern. The company has been a major supplier to the Canadian mint and in respect of some contracts that the Canadian government has negotiated with foreign countries through the mint, there will have to be a greater supply of copper available to the mint for the production of coinage for other countries if we are successful in winning those contracts.

So the mint is principally concerned that this company stay in existence, both for competitive pricing and supply of material on a potential contract.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, does that ban on export sales to the United States still stand with respect to any potential purchaser?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, at this very moment there is no ban on that company exporting into the United States. About five per cent or slightly better of their sales in 1976 were exported to the United States market. No condition has been set down by the company to the best of our knowledge.

The reason the Deputy Minister of Industry and Tourism of Ontario and the Deputy Minister of Labour for the province of Ontario, in company of the trade commissioner in New York City and the representative of the federal Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce went to meet with the executive of this company, was to make sure that this type of a condition was not encompassed within the terms of reference relating to the sale of the company to a Canadian or other foreign operator.

To the best of my knowledge, it's very clear the condition is not there. I understand the company has also investigated the fact that if it was here it would have little or no legal possibility of being sustained by them against a new purchaser.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a very brief supplementary, because I haven't realized it? What proportion of the purchase of company products does the mint reflect? Is it the major purchaser from Anaconda?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: To the best of my knowledge, in my discussions with people that represent the mint and its purchasing department, I understand it could be as high as 20 per cent of the volume coming out of Anaconda. I know there has been a long-standing relationship between the mint and Anaconda. I also know there is a fairly substantial portion of government ownership of material on hand at Anaconda at the moment.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the other ministers I wish to question are not here. I'll hope to enter the rotation later.

KOMOKA PROVINCIAL PARK

Hon. F. S. Miller: On November 8 the hon. member for London North (Mr. Van Horne) asked me if I would give the House a complete accounting of the moneys that have been spent on the proposed Komoka Park. I will give the hon. member a copy of this so that he won't have to copy it all down.

The 67.4-acre Smith property was acquired in July 1974 at a cost of $186,000. The 28.8-acre George property was acquired in July 1974 at a cost of $97,000. The 1.6-acre Vanderydt property was acquired in June 1975 at a cost of $55,420. The 49-acre Restoration Realty property was acquired in February 1975 at a cost of $552,500. The 65-acre Saint property was acquired in September 1977 at a cost of $261,200. The 50-acre Otago Investments property was acquired in September 1977 at a cost of $200,000. The two-acre Crone property was acquired in August 1975 at a cost of $26,250. The 36-acre Cooper-Zabransky property was acquired in December 1975 at a cost of $183,750.

The total acreage acquired to date is 299.8 acres at a total acquisition cost of $1,562,120. In the case of the Saint property, the Otago Investments property and the Cooper-Zabransky property, the value may increase as the final compensation will be determined by the Land Compensation Board.

Mr. Van Horne: I would like to thank the minister for acting on this. I would, however, like to pursue it, at least in part today, and ask a further question. Through the last four years that it has been reported in the press, going back to 1974 in the London Free Press, this has been described as a proposed park site. I would like to ask the minister if it is still a proposed park site? Further to that, if it is in any way, shape or form firming up, could he give us the definition of the boundary of that park site?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have with me a map of the entire property as originally suggested for park reserve. I think the term park reserve would be the land-use designation we place upon this land until such time as it is formally, by regulation, created as a park. A park reserve, normally, has certain restrictions placed upon the use of the land and is usually done by a deputy minister's order.

If we follow all three phases, we still have to acquire about 132 acres in phase 1 on the southeast shore, about 105 acres in phase 2 in the southwest section and 620 acres on the north shore to complete the original proposal.

I am told that the north shore has significant aggregate reserves on it and that it was not the intention to convert it to park land until those reserves were used.

Members may have heard that I asked for a complete review of the need for this park some while back because the dollars available for park land acquisition are considerably less than they were at the time this park was announced. I have asked my staff to do that and have received a report. That report was done by the London office, and obviously therefore I was interested in London parks. I have now asked for a comparison of the need for this park versus parks in other parts of Ontario. I should have that early next week. I have been told I will have it for Monday or Tuesday. At that time I am going to relate the costs of acquiring the balance of the land to other needs in the province and decide whether or not this should go forward. I believe the people whose lands in effect have been sterilized have a right to expect them to be purchased.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question—

Mr. Speaker: I would like to remind the hon. member for London North that the original question asked for a fair amount of detail which was read into the record. If the hon. member wants any additional information, I think maybe it should be placed on the order paper. It was quite a comprehensive question and a comprehensive reply.

KENNEDY LODGE NURSING HOME

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps I could put this question to the Provincial Secretary for Social Development. In view of what has emerged about the nursing home on Kennedy Road, and in view of what is emerging about nursing homes intermittently in the province, has it been suggested by the Social Development secretariat that an analysis be undertaken in areas of finances, care and staffing of nursing homes and homes for the aged generally, since there are such frequent anxieties expressed?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: As I am sure the hon. member is well aware, it has been done on an individual basis where this kind of thing has been brought to our attention. Certainly we are very concerned with the story in this morning's paper and I will be discussing it with the minister.

Mr. Warner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) in the month of July answered my question by saying there had been a full investigation into Kennedy Lodge and that all major faults had been corrected? Further, that the Provincial Secretary for Social Development's efforts may be deterred at that home because the owner says, and I am quoting from the paper: "This is a private enterprise, not open to public scrutiny, and therefore I don't have to answer any of your questions." What will the minister do now?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware that she was speaking to a reporter. She certainly does have to answer to the Ministry of Health and their officials. There are rules and regulations that must be met and we must have that information.

UNIVERSITY ENROLMENTS

Mr. Sweeney: A question of the Minister of Colleges and Universities, Mr. Speaker: Since the minister's letter to the Globe and Mail of a few months back saying that the higher tuition fee for foreign students would not restrict those students from coming into Ontario, how does he explain the following: At the University of Waterloo the enrolment of foreign students is down 32 per cent, at Laurier 40 per cent and at Western 20 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I suspect it has a pretty strong relationship to the fact that the registration at McMaster University is down the same percentage. The hon. member well knows the fee doesn't apply there, so he shouldn't try to relate the two of them.

Mr. Sweeney: How would the minister explain, then, the fact that the overall applications of all foreign students are down 21 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: First of all, there are a lot of factors on university enrolments not related to fees. The enrolment of our own students is down. We are not yet in possession of all of the information.

I think the member is basing his remarks on the number of applications, not the number of enrolments. If he has the actual number of enrolments of all the universities, he has information that I don't have. One cannot make a decision based on applications; it is on head counts that will be formally submitted a little later on.

Mr. Sweeney: I would ask the minister to respond to my first question on actual enrolment figures, not applications.

Hon. W. Newman: He just said he doesn't have them yet.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I believe the report on which the member based his remarks was on the number of applications. I can't be sure of that. I don't at this moment have the actual numbers; those numbers aren't in our ministry yet.

Mr. Sweeney: They are the actual figures.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: With the drop in foreign student enrolments and applications, as evidenced by the program, does the minister not realize that with his inroduction of the eight eligibility periods for grants we will be getting a similar 18 to 20 per cent drop in graduate students likely in our universities next year?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think that is a long way from proven, Mr. Speaker. I think it is important that we relate many of the factors. One of the factors that I think should occur, particularly in graduate schools, is that we must place a great deal of importance on academic excellence. I believe, given the increase in graduate scholarships and the importance of academic excellence to a graduate program, there will be no serious decrease in enrolments in graduate studies.

Mr. Sweeney: That is what he said about the foreign students.

Mr. S. Smith: You will have higher standards of financial excellence in graduate schools.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That is so much nonsense and you know it.

(Applause.)

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must remind our visitors in the gallery that no outbursts are allowed. I would ask them to refrain from doing so.

SALES TAX EXEMPTION

Mr. Roy: I have a question of the Minister of Revenue, pertaining to information and a question I supplied to her yesterday regarding such activities as the ice follies put on by the Minto Skating Club, the only amateur show of its kind in North America. Can she advise whether it is, in fact, the policy of her ministry, as stated in a letter of November 1 from one of her officials, that all performers have to be either residents of Canada or amateurs so that they can qualify for an exemption on the sales tax?

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Yes, that is correct, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Roy: Would the minister then explain why in the past these criteria seem to have been excepted for the Minto Skating Club, which was allowed to put on performances when not all were amateurs or residents of Canada? Does she not understand that by this policy she may well deny the holding of this exhibition and, therefore, deny funds to young Canadian amateurs to participate in competition?

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the member sent me a letter indicating all his concerns. I reviewed it here at my desk; I sent him a handwritten note indicating that I understood it, that I was reviewing it, and I suggested to him that he should not be overly concerned; that the subject is now before me in the ministry and he will receive a reply from me in due course.

Mr. Roy: I will admit, Mr. Speaker, that she did write me a very encouraging note. "Please don't worry," she said.

Mr. S. Smith: She is getting into my business now.

Mr. Conway: Was it "Dear Albert"?

Mr. Roy: Yes, it was. May I ask this supplementary of the minister?

Mr. Speaker: Please do.

Mr. Roy: I just thought you'd like to hear these little tidbits.

Can I convey the minister's encouragement, her mot doux and her note to the Minto Skating Club members and say to them that they need not worry, that she will allow them to hold their ice follies this year?

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: I think the member is trying to provoke me to give him a commitment right now. The fact is that I'm exceedingly sympathetic. I understand full well what the problem is. He will have my response very soon.

COAL SUPPLIES

Mr. Samis: I have a question of the Minister of Energy. I put it with some trepidation, knowing the possible length of the answer.

Mr. Reid: You mean response, not answer.

Hon. W. Newman: What is the question?

Mr. Samis: In view of the impending serious coal miners' strike scheduled in the United States for December 6, can the minister tell us what his ministry has been doing to ensure there will be no shortage of coal this winter for Ontario Hydro?

Hon. W. Newman: They stockpiled it long ago.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I'd be happy to take the member out to our stockpile if he would like.

Mr. Samis: Supplementary: Without asking for a lengthy dissertation inside or outside, could I ask the minister what is being done?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I hope the member would be intelligent enough to perceive that Hydro does have stockpiles that would carry us through basically for the best part of a year.

VEGETABLE GROWERS' CO-OP

Mr. Riddell: A question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the minister could comment in very simple and general terms on the results of the meeting he had with the Eastern Ontario Vegetable Growers Co-op yesterday; and tell us if, as a result of his meeting with them, it would appear that a solution can be found to the problem, which would not necessitate a great deal of amendments or changes in the legislation? If he does not feel it's in the interest of the agricultural community to answer the question now, I can appreciate that too.

Hon. W. Newman: We did have a meeting yesterday. We set up a task force to look into the problems. We had representatives from the Eastern Ontario Vegetable Growers' Co-op, the Vegetable Marketing Board and the processors at the meeting. We had a very meaningful meeting, I must say a very lively meeting. As a result of that we set up a task force. If there's any legislation coming forward I will be announcing it at the appropriate time.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary: Is it true that the co-op was built with government money and is now owned more than 50 per cent by a private individual?

Hon. W. Newman: I know there is ARDA money involved. There is federal and provincial money in the project which I might say is operating very efficiently. I can't say any individual owns 50 per cent of it at this point in time. I do not believe that is correct, but I'll have to check it out and let the member know.

HERITAGE LANGUAGE PROGRAM

Mr. Grande: My question is of the Minister of Education. This question is regarding the heritage language program and the funds available to the boards of education to implement the third-language programs.

Is it clear to the minister now, because it wasn't clear to him during his last estimates, that the boards across Metro and many of the boards across this province are just not setting up these third-language programs? What is the minister doing to meet the legitimate concerns of the boards? What are the reasons the boards are not implementing these programs? What is he doing so that he can assure the hundreds of parents across Metro and across the province, who assumed that the programs would be set up as a result of the government's tremendous election announcement, so that they may feel that when they do go to the school and speak to the principal—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked in three parts.

Hon. B. Stephenson: How about a statement?

Mr. Grande: —that the parents will feel that the principals will say, “Yes, we are implementing these programs”?

[10:45]

Hon. Mr. Wells: First let's get it very clearly understood by all: this wasn't an election promise.

Mr. Roy: Oh no. You don't make those.

Hon. Mr. Wells: My friend keeps using those words, but he knows—he sat in this Legislature and heard me say many times that we would have a statement on the whole multicultural policy regarding education. This was part of that statement. It was announced in the Speech from the Throne at the beginning of this year, well before the election was called. So let's put an end to that nonsense about calling it an election promise.

Mr. Grande: You said that in 1975.

Mr. McClellan: It was an election promise.

Mr. Roy: No, you guys don't play politics with things like that.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Having said that, let's also get rid of all this nonsense about the program not being accepted. Many of our educational programs rest with the local boards to use their initiative, working with the parents, to establish the programs; if many of them were as well accepted as this one, I would be very happy.

As my friend knows, there are about 15,000 youngsters in the Metro Toronto area, about 15,000 in the separate school system and probably another 8,000 in this province who will be taking part in programs financed under our heritage language program this year.

Mr. McClellan: Most of them were there before your program was introduced.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would say that it comes almost dead on with what we predicted would be the first-year figures of people taking the program. I am not dissatisfied at all. We are working through our regional offices to encourage boards to adopt the program if parents indicate there is a need in their community. But I have to say to my friend that his message of gloom and doom about the program is completely unwarranted.

Mr. Grande: Supplementary: Could the minister possibly tell me why the boards of education for Scarborough, North York, Peel, and the Welland County Separate School Board, York and Toronto have said to the ministry, “Put your money where your mouth is; otherwise these programs will not be set up”? I asked for the reasons why these programs have not been set up in these boards, and the minister is evading that question totally.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Is my friend saying in that list—and I can't tell him about all that list—that the board of education for the city of Toronto is not setting up the program?

Mr. Wildman: He didn't say Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Wells: He did say Toronto. And I tell him he is absolutely wrong. The board of education for the city of Toronto and, I believe, the board of education for York as well as the Metro Toronto Separate School Board and many other boards in this province, are taking advantage of that program.

I will be happy to find out why the board in Scarborough isn't taking advantage of the program. But, as he knows, the initiative lies with the parents and the local board to move ahead with the program. Of course, if he is saying he is completely against any type of local autonomy or local involvement in education, that everything should be directed from this place and from the Mowat Block, then let him say that. But that isn't the policy we adopt over here.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware that the board of education of North York, which is the largest board in the province, has deferred the program because the program is not self-supporting and has suggested that either the ministry pays for the program or the parents be charged? Is he aware that in 27 schools in the borough of North York, the parents themselves had to set up programs financed by themselves; and what is he going to do about this?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: What's wrong with that?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Under the system we have in this province—and it is fair game to state one's political position as to how one thinks the system should work—all the services in education are shared between the provincial level and the local level, and this is one of them.

Mr. McClellan: The government's share is peanuts.

Mr. di Santo: The local share is 75 per cent.

Ms. Gigantes: The government pays 25 cents on the dollar.

Hon. Mr. Wells: There is a local share, and a provincial share if there is a continuing education program in quilting, in fishing and fly-casting and so forth.

Mr. Martel: The government is desperate.

Hon. Mr. Wells: All we are saying is that the program is there and the money is available under the continuing education program, but a school board has to agree to pick up the program and to pay its share.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary from the hon. member for Oakwood. It was his question.

Mr. Grande: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is the minister doing? It's very hard to know; I have been trying to find out for the past two years what he has been doing. I have been trying to say to him that the boards of education across Metro, and the Toronto Board of Education included, have said to him that they require full funding or at least have—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Grande: Yes, Mr. Speaker, thank you. Is the minister giving any thought to having the heritage language programs under a totally different kind of grant, other than the continuing education grant, so that the boards can have a little more funds with which to begin these programs?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I think that my friend, who is supposed to be very knowledgeable in these matters, should have attended some of the meetings that we attended. I might say that even my friend the hon. member for Kitchener-Wilmot (Mr. Sweeney) took the trouble to attend the meeting of the Toronto Board of Education and is able to tell his colleagues what we are and what we are not doing. I'm afraid the member for Oakwood just doesn't know what we are doing or what we are not doing; and he just doesn't know what the boards are doing. Perhaps when he has had a chance to talk to them he will be a little better informed. Perhaps he will then know that we have met with the Toronto board. We have discussed funding; we have agreed that we will look at funding for the future; and we have agreed that the program is going to be taken up.

Ms. Gigantes: Oh!

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member says, "Oh." We look at funding in terms of all programs for the grant regulations every year. It's a normal procedure to look at all funding when we develop the new grant regulations, and the new grant program for 1978 will include that.

But the member for Oakwood would know the kind of response from the community groups, he would know if he had met with the Black Liaison Committee, as I have, the kind of arrangements that we are making there. So all I say is get a little informed on what is going on.

NANTICOKE SERVICES

Mr. G. I. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. I have received information this morning on a contract that has been let for grading and yard service in the city of Nanticoke, a contract to Boschman Contracting Limited for $503,000. Exactly what is that for? It wasn't clearly stated in the letter.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As the hon. member said, it is for grading and certain installation of infrastructure. However, I will be happy to elaborate on the letter that I wrote to the hon. member. I usually send him the particulars and details of the contract. If he didn't get that I will make sure he does.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Is it at the water intake site in the city of Nanticoke? I have a further supplementary if it is.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I don't want to say that for sure.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Supplementary: Could I ask, for the information of the House, how much money has been invested in this water intake site at Nanticoke and does that include the lines to Texaco and Stelco? Could the minister provide that information?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It's about $500,000, at this stage.

DRIVING SCHOOLS

Mr. Philip: A question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations: Has the minister seen, in last night's paper, the comments by Richard Palmer, head of driver education for the Ontario Safety League, that many commercial driving schools treat the lack of government controls on their industry, "as licence to do anything they want to make all kinds of promises they can't deliver in order to get more customers"? If so, what action does the minister plan taking to prevent consumers from being enticed into worthless insurance certificate programs offered by schools not certified by the safety league?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, first we should have a look at the history of this, which begins when the Premier (Mr. Davis) and the then Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations approached the insurance industry to see if a better deal couldn't be struck for young drivers. As a result of those initiatives the IAO and other insurance groups did find a way to look after that situation. In accordance with statements made by the then Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, he reported that the industry had decided, and I'll read from that statement: "A new driver who has completed an approved driver training course, would now enter the insurance market at level three. The difference in premiums between levels three and zero"—at which they had entered earlier—"could be as high as 44 per cent." It was as a result of that initiative, then, that the IAO began to work with certain driving schools through the vehicle of the Ontario Safety League.

For the member's information, and directly dealing with the question, it sets out in the report on highway safety on page 2-11: "The committee gave very serious consideration to regulating the commercial driving school industry. The demand for regulation is impressive. The committee has decided, however, that new specific regulation is not needed to deal with bad business practices in the industry or to improve the quality of instruction."

By the way the member's colleague next to him was the chairman of the committee.

"With respect to bad business practices, the committee notes the existence of the misleading advertising section of the Combines Investigation Act, along with relevant sections of the Ontario Business Practices Act. It is the view of the committee that if sectors of the industry are engaging in such practices the strict enforcement of existing laws will be sufficient to remedy the situation."

Mr. Nixon: That was directed at you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It goes on to say: "It is important to note that the committee did not receive any evidence to verify a single incident of specific wrongdoing by a commercial driving school." That's the report on highway safety.

I want to report that we have had in my ministry one complaint—sorry, two complaints—about one single driving school. As a result of our contact with that school they changed their advertising to indicate that the certificate from their course would be accepted by some insurance companies, as promised by the insurance industry, and would effect their new driver rates.

Mr. Philip: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister not admit, and I happen to have that report of the select committee on highway safety in front of me at the moment, that the committee report goes on to say that in fact MPPs have been receiving a great number of such complaints? Would the minister agree with the recommendation on the next page which says: "The government of Ontario should clearly and publicly designate the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations as the appropriate agency for the strict and active enforcement of all relevant consumer protection legislation"? Why is he not doing something about the kind of advertising which seems to be enticing people in, and that MPPs have reported on to that select committee?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I've already indicated that we really didn't need recommendation 2-2 in the report to designate my ministry as the organization in the provincial government responsible for active enforcement of "all relevant consumer protection legislation," that is our mandate.

I've also reported to the member that we have had two complaints only in this area, both related to one school, and we rectified that immediately. If the report of the highway safety committee indicates that MPPs gave other reports to them that driving schools are unfairly advertising, then I question why those members haven't forwarded those inquiries to my ministry pursuant to doing a good job of protecting consumers. Either the MPPs receiving them are not passing them on, or they passed on the two instances and we've dealt with them.

I want to say we are watching advertisements. Where they are inaccurate, action is taken, not only at the instigation of MPPs but on our own instigation. We do move in where any of that advertising in this field, or any other field, is unfair or inaccurate. If the member has any specific instances, other than the article he stuffed in his pocket as he stood up to put this question, then he should send them to me instead of reading from someone's allegation and suggestions that we are not doing the job. Give me specifics and we'll do the job, or if not he can then stand up and say we're not.

[11:00]

REGIONAL GOVERNMENT FINANCES

Mr. Bradley: My question, Mr. Speaker, is of the Treasurer: It has been the established practice in regions that the regional finance committee and the regional government shall agree upon what shall be the debt level for individual area municipalities. Does the minister agree that the finance committees of the various regional governments should now have the right to veto specific projects of individual area municipalities, and therefore determine the local priorities?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I don't know that I could answer that with a simple yes or no. I think this was debated at the time of the regional legislation. There's no question that it is the credit of the region which is at stake. Certainly one of the strong by-products of regional government and restructured government has been the excellent credit ratings achieved by a number of the regions.

The Premier will be interested to know that the region of Peel received a triple-A rating yesterday. It may well be that the principal municipality, in that case Mississauga, might have achieved it on its own; it's highly unlikely that the other two would have. So in that aspect there is a real advantage of restructuring in terms of the better credit arrangements which the whole region then shares in.

The ultimate responsibility has to be, then, in one place, and that is the region. There is—what I think we said at the beginning and I don't think we've changed this—there is in effect an appeal to the board. I'm not entirely happy about that, but I recognize the concern of the member. However, I don't know that I have a solution, or a yes or no answer to his question.

I think if I were pushed on this, I would probably come down on the side of ultimate responsibility being that of the region. I don't like to express it in terms of giving them a veto, but I think the ultimate responsibility should be theirs.

The other alternative, of course, which I reject completely, is that the province get much more involved in this. One of the strong reasons for restructured government is to put some of that decision-making closer. Whether the people of St. Catharines would be happier with me or the Ontario Municipal Board making a decision or whether they are happier with a regional council on which they have—whatever they have, 11 or 12 out of 26—I would think they would be happier, or less unhappy, with a local decision than they would be with ours.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question: The concern that is being expressed is not specifically with the debt levels. I think individual municipalities realize that the region has the right to establish the debt levels. What I am asking the minister is does he not feel that local autonomy, and by local autonomy I mean that of the area municipalities, is adversely affected if the regional financing decisions determine the specific priorities? Let us say they give $5 million or allow a $5 million debt, if they then determine whether it should be spent on arenas, sewers or some other project, are they not eroding the local autonomy completely?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I don't know the situation, the specifics, but I would think they have a very definite responsibility; a responsibility which in part has been delegated to them by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Kerr). If they're putting sewers or sewage treatment ahead of arenas, I don't know that I would necessarily quarrel with that decision. I think if there is just so much money to go around and they are determining that at this moment the priority might be higher on a sewage treatment plant or whatever than on something else, again I'm not prepared to say in a quick way that is necessarily wrong.

ONAKAWANA LIGNITE DEPOSITS

Mr. Foulds: I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources with regard to his statement of November 1 on Onakawana. Could the minister tell us if the definition he uses for environment on page 3 of his statement, which talks about the environmentally acceptable conditions under which Onakawana would be developed, is the same definition of environment which is used in terms of reference for the Hartt commission?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The definition in the Hartt commission is the definition in the Environmental Assessment Act, if the member recalls. The definition in the Environmental Assessment Act is quite different than that used in the Environmental Protection Act, in that it involves the social and other aspects of life. We have put the Onakawana project under the Environmental Assessment Act, and therefore the definition is the same.

Mr. Foulds: Can the minister give us the assurance that the development of the lignite deposits will coincide and dovetail with the ongoing program and review of the Hartt commission into the environment north of the 50th parallel?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think I'm going to leave that kind of decision to Justice Patrick Hartt. He is deciding what his involvement should be at this moment. He has made certain statements that he does not wish either to include or exclude projects. I felt that by requesting that this project come under the Environmental Assessment Act, it would get a very thorough review of its total impact and not just the particular effect upon the air, water, et cetera of the area, and therefore,

Hartt commission or not, it would pass the scrutiny required.

Mr. Cunningham: Supplementary: I wonder if the hon. minister has determined whether or not the development of the fire-clay resources that are located in the Onakawana area would not be incompatible with his current plans as they relate to the development of lignite coal?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, they will not be incompatible at all. We hope that the use of those fire-clay resources will result in a secondary industry, perhaps in Cochrane or perhaps somewhere else in the north, Moonbeam. In any case what we have done, as I recall, is allowed that resource to be extracted by the one contractor. If Onakawana Development Limited go ahead with the extraction of lignite and have their machines on the property removing the overburden, which could easily be the fire-clay, there would only be the one set of people working the site, even though that resource would be sold and utilized, if possible, in the construction of fire-brick.

Mr. Cunningham: One further supplementary? Has the minister, recognizing the reluctance on the part of the principal involved in the lignite development, not considered the possibility of bringing in other individuals or other corporate interests to develop that fire-clay industry and develop employment for at least 35 or 40 people there?

Hon. F. S. Miller: First of all, I have to say I have no reluctance at all. In the discussions I have had, I've specifically talked about that point to see that that resource is made available. The only issue in discussion was should it be physically removed from the site by one company or two. I would agree, in the interests of managing a resource, the one company should be taking off all the overburden.

Mr. Cunningham: What if one company is not interested?

TEACHERS' SUPERANNUATION FUND

Hon. Mr. Wells: I was asked by the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson), during a supplemental question, about the merits of a one-year valuation of the teachers' superannuation fund. At present, there is a three-year actuarial valuation. This is according to the provisions of the Teachers' Superannuation Act. It began about 1917 when the fund was established and conforms with the Pension Benefits Act. The actuaries have just completed the 1975 one. It cost about $50,000. Although all the returns are not in,

I've asked the actuaries and they say that a three-year valuation is a sufficiently good piece of information to allow for good management of the fund. I think any opinions that go beyond that should probably be presented to the commission that's studying pensions in the province at this time.

HERITAGE LANGUAGE PROGRAM

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, I'm totally dissatisfied with the answers supplied by the Minister of Education on the heritage language program. I wish the opportunity to debate it at the proper time.

Mr. di Santo: I'd like to give notice that I am dissatisfied with the answer given by the Minister of Education. I'd like to debate it on Tuesday.

MOTION

APPOINTMENT OF SELECT COMMITTEE ON INCO LAYOFFS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that a select committee of this House be appointed to inquire of senior officials of Inco Limited and its employees or their representatives into the factors and considerations leading to the decision to announce layoffs at the Sudbury and Port Colborne Inco operations;

And further to examine the future plans of the company in relationship to the effect on the Canadian operations; and that the committee report back to the House at its earliest opportunity, but no later than one month from the date of the first hearing, making appropriate recommendations;

And that the committee have power to send for persons, papers and things, as provided in section 35 of the Legislative Assembly Act, and power to retain counsel;

And that the proceedings of the committee be recorded and transcribed selectively, as determined by the committee with its counsel;

And that the committee be composed of 18 members as follows: Handleman (Chairman), Bolan, Hennessy, Elgie, Germa, Haggerty, Kennedy, Lane, Laughren, Mackenzie, Martel, McCaffrey, O'Neil, Peterson, Pope, Reed (Halton-Burlington), Taylor (Simcoe Centre) and Walker.

Mr. Speaker: I must remind the House that under standing order 32(a), unanimous consent is required in order to accept this without notice. Do we have unanimous consent? Agreed. The hon. member for Kitchener.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, at this time I will place amendments to this motion, because there are certain things in the motion that we believe are inadequate under the present circumstances, and that having been done, I will then speak briefly to the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Breithaupt moves that the motion for appointment of a select committee on Inco layoffs be amended as follows:

1. That the words "and others" be added after the word "representatives" in the third line of the first paragraph.

2. That after the word "operations" at the end of the first paragraph there be added the following: "And further to recommend appropriate government action that would avoid or ameliorate the impact of those layoffs on individual workers and on the Sudbury and Port Colborne areas."

3. That after the second paragraph there be added the following: "And that the committee then inquire into the state of the resource sector in Ontario and make recommendations thereon."

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, these three amendments have particular purposes which I believe would be served and would be useful to the work of the committee, and I will refer to each of them separately.

First of all, the addition of the two words "and others" would allow other experts or other individuals whom the committee might wish to have before it attend as part of the work of the committee. It is recognized that the committee, of course, has, in its usual powers, the power to send for persons, papers and things, as provided in section 35 of the Legislative Assembly Act. However, I believe that a normal reading of the paragraph as it is now is somewhat restrictive.

It is the intention that senior officials of Inco Limited appear before the committee, because they have the most detailed knowledge which has not yet been available perhaps as public opportunity to review the information they know than has existed heretofore. We have had, by amendment, added on agreement that employees or the representatives of employees be allowed and encouraged to come before this committee, since obviously the union representatives and others would be useful in the deliberations of the committee.

However in addition to those two groups, we believe there must be the opportunity for outside experts or for anyone in a narrow range that the committee might wish to inquire of.

Mr. Lewis: We can seek advice from anyone as a committee. They can be brought before the committee as observers and as commentators.

Mr. Breithaupt: I suggest to the leader of the third party that any reading deals with inquiry of only two groups of persons and that they can be sent for; other persons not referred to in a normal reading of that paragraph, I suggest would not be included. I am suggesting, therefore, that the words "and others" would be a useful addition to the work of the committee.

The second point which I will refer to I believe also sets a completion on the three phases that this committee should do. In the first instance, the committee is going to inquire of certain persons into the factors and considerations leading to certain events. The second thing it is going to do is to examine the future plans of the company. However, I believe there is a third area that it is most important to have tied into this motion, and that area is referred to in the second paragraph. The paragraph I have suggested would tie these first two items together so that appropriate government action could be considered, and as a result a much sharper focus could be placed upon the work of the committee.

It may be said that the committee by reporting back will of necessity make recommendations in those areas. I do not know whether that is so or not. Therefore, I suggest that this additional paragraph would be a useful completion of the three phases that I think this committee should follow.

Mr. Reid: It wouldn't hurt.

Mr. Breithaupt: The final item, I suggest, is a useful one which would see to the continuation of this committee, that is that the committee inquire into the state of the resource sector in Ontario and make recommendations thereon. There have been a number of comments made in the House, including those in the debate by the leader of the third party yesterday, which referred to a great series of reports that this government has commissioned over the last 10 years or so and from which action has not proceeded.

As a result, the continuation of this committee would be a useful investigative procedure which would benefit the members of the House and as well benefit the people of Ontario, particularly those involved in the resource sector which very often involves a large number of one-industry or one-particular-specialty communities in the northwest and northeast of this province.

Those are the three things I suggest are useful amendments to this motion and will allow the committee to do what it is supposed to do, to come up with serious conclusions after a full investigation of these most difficult facts.

Mr. Deans: I am satisfied that the terms of the appointment of the select committee will meet the objectives we have in examining into the effect of and the reasons for the layoffs by International Nickel at Sudbury and Port Colborne.

Mr. O'Neil: What about all your comments yesterday on resource industries?

Mr. Mackenzie: The important thing is yours, and we heard them.

Mr. Deans: In dealing with the comments of the Liberal House leader, first of all to make it clear that since we have limited the time that the committee will have in looking into these matters, I don't want to leave the impression that this is to be an all-encompassing review. The purpose of the review is to try to determine what the reasons were for the layoffs and what, if anything, can be done before January 31.

Mr. S. Smith: That's why we should get experts, get international people.

Mr. Deans: I am sure there will be an opportunity for the good doctor to speak any time after I have finished.

Mr. S. Smith: I certainly shall.

Mr. Deans: I am sure you shall.

Mr. S. Smith: And you are an easy act to follow.

Mr. Conway: Who would want to follow God?

Mr. Deans: It seems to us that the people who would be most likely to have direct input would be the senior officials of Inco and the employees and their representatives. Beyond that, the committee, if it wanted to seek guidance from any other expert, would have the right under section 35 to inquire of that expert, from wherever that expert is, on any matter of his or her expertise. Therefore, I don't see the reason for including "and others" if we're attempting to get expert guidance.

Under the section of the motion which says "and that the committee have power to send for persons, papers and things," the committee therefore would be able to send for any person, any paper and any thing which it believed had any bearing on its deliberations. To add "and others" is therefore redundant. And that's the interpretation, as I understand it, of the government House leader.

The second point again, as I understand it, is dealt with in the motion. The motion says: "and that the committee report back to the House at its earliest opportunity, but no later than one month from the date of first hearing, and make appropriate recommendations."

I would assume, since they're inquiring into the reasons for Inco's decision and the effect on the workers and the layoffs that are occurring, that the recommendations that would be appropriate would be recommendations dealing with those matters. Therefore, I can hardly imagine why we would encumber the motion by adding any further words such as "and make appropriate recommendations." That seems to me to be all-encompassing.

Finally, there is the whole matter that deals with whether the committee ought to be able to inquire into the state of the resource sector in Ontario. I don't think there's anyone in this House who denies that we are going to have to have a serious review of the state of the resource sector in Ontario. I don't think there's anyone in this House who would argue with the committee if, after it has completed its deliberations, it comes to the conclusion that there should be a recommendation saying that a further study is required and that a committee should be set up for the purpose.

But I don't think that at this point in time we should distract from the immediate problem facing us. The immediate problem is that of the layoffs at Inco in Sudbury and Port Colborne and the reasons for them. After having gone through the deliberations, I feel confident that in fact the committee will suggest that there should be further study undertaken, that some economic plans should be developed and that particular attention ought to be paid to the difficulties now facing the resource sector and the problems of a resource-based economy in many of the northern communities of this province.

Mr. O'Neil: Why don't you include it now?

Mr. Deans: But since this is an emergency situation, I don't believe that we should encumber this committee with that requirement at this time. I feel that if we're going to do that, we should do that with appropriate terms of reference having been drafted. But if we're going to set up a committee for the purpose of inquiring into the state of the resource sector in Ontario, we should design appropriate terms of reference for that committee; it should speak directly to the problems as we in this House perceive them, and not simply be an adjunct to this important matter which must be dealt with expeditiously.

I would suggest to the committee, if I may—and it may be a little presumptuous of me—just as a member of the Legislature—

Mr. Conway: That's never stopped you before.

Mr. Deans: And it's not going to stop me now.

Mr. Lewis: And why should it?

Mr. Deans: As a member of the House, I think I can suggest to the committee that during their deliberations they give consideration to what the appropriate terms might be for a further study in order that they might recommend to the House at some point what should be contained in terms of reference for this much larger study of the resource sector and its future as well as its impact and effect on the economy of Ontario.

While the Liberals in their normal fashion are attempting to get everything into one and mess it all up in the way that they usually do, they probably have overstepped themselves just a little bit this time. They have attempted to do what cannot reasonably be done by this committee—

Mr. O'Neil: It is what you were asking for yesterday.

Mr. Deans: They have not yet identified what the problems are to determine what responsibilities the select committee inquiring into the state of the resource sector should be charged with. That requires considerably longer debate because it takes into account a number of things other than simply the Inco layoffs. It has to take into account a much larger problem. That problem includes not only the immediate Sudbury area and Port Colborne areas but all of northern Ontario. It takes into account not only the mineral resource areas of the north but it takes into account depletable resources as well as renewable resources. I think we have to be sure of non-renewable over and against renewable. We have to be sure when we appoint that committee that it knows exactly what its terms are and what is intended to be studied.

I don't understand why they have moved these. I think the reason they moved them, incidentally Mr. Speaker if you will forgive me, is that before they read the actual motion they had made up their minds what they wanted. They didn't really understand the motion.

Mr. S. Smith: Stop wasting the time of the House with this garbage.

Mr. Deans: I can appreciate that, because it is the normal practice in the House for the Liberal Party not to read what is put before them. They are trying to play political games and it won't work.

Mr. S. Smith: That is pretty nauseating.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Standing up to agree with my friends in the ND Party—

Mr. McClellan: You finally got it right.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —is something that is not common.

Mr. Deans: And not even required.

Hon. F. S. Miller: However, I think one should keep a couple of points in mind. This committee is reacting, as all speakers yesterday agreed one should react, to an immediate problem. The real problem, one which needs study, is being studied right now by the committee of cabinet. This does not in any way preclude future study by the resources development committee or any special committee. But let's concentrate today on the immediate problem and let's pass the resolution as proposed.

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to speak to this amendment. I think these matters are crystal clear. I hardly wish to give the member for Wentworth the unnecessarily high recognition of even responding to his comments.

Mr. Deans: Then don't.

Mr. S. Smith: I would point out to him that the recommendations we have made with regard to this were released by our party in a press release several days ago, long before we even saw the motion that came from either one of these parties.

Mr. Deans: You can't move now, you are locked in again. After having made a silly suggestion, you can't backtrack.

Mr. S. Smith: What I would like to make very clear is that some considerable discussion has gone on with other House leaders with regard to this. The three matters that have been suggested as amendments could be, if anyone here so desires, voted on separately. I would like to discuss them separately.

The first one suggests that "and others" be added. We have heard from the wisdom and depth of experience of the member for Wentworth that in his view any other experts desired by the committee could easily be called under section 35. It is my understanding that in point of fact the restrictive nature of the wording in the first paragraph means it will be very difficult for the committee to reach outside the terms of that paragraph to call in experts from other companies, experts from the financial world and experts from the metal markets to check on the kind of information which the committee receives from Inco and from the other representatives who will be there.

It is a very simple matter to be settled as far as I am concerned. If the government House leader is willing to assure this House that his members on the committee will agree that paragraph one not be interpreted in a restrictive manner, and that the committee will have the right to bring before it whatever persons and experts it may wish, then we will be quite happy to withdraw the first part of the amendment.

Mr. Lewis: There is the chairman of the committee, ask him.

Mr. S. Smith: We insist that we have that assurance from the government House leader that this will not be restricted just to big business, from Inco itself, and just to the union people, who we are very happy to see added and were added at our suggestion anyhow.

Mr. Deans: Your suggestion? Not on your life.

Mr. S. Smith: That is correct, my suggestion, yes.

Mr. Deans: Not on your life. You never even put it forward.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: My God, they are insufferable.

The second aspect of the amendment suggests that the committee recommend appropriate government action to avoid or ameliorate the impact. It has been criticized on the grounds of redundancy by the party to my left. I can accept that it may be in some instances, by some interpretation already taken care of in the general point, that the committee may make what recommendations it wishes. Nonetheless, we see no harm in being a little more specific in outlining this, and if redundancy be the only sin with regard to this amendment then I think the people to my left are being exceptionally purist, especially given the lack of support they gave the idea of a core curriculum for the teaching of English in the schools of Ontario.

I would say, as far as the third one goes, that we all agree there is a need for a committee to look into resource strategy in this province. The member for Wentworth suggested that such a committee would have to have very clear and well thought out terms of reference, and of course he is quite right. The fact is that the terms of reference suggested for such a committee could easily be discussed in the committee we are now setting up; that particular committee could come back with the terms of reference for the consideration of the House if it so wished.

In any event, members of the House may be interested to know that our party was quite prepared to accept a situation in which, if the committee presently being struck was to make a recommendation for a select committee to look into the resource sector, if the government would guarantee that such a committee would in fact be struck, we would be quite happy not to put forward this amendment. We received no such guarantee from the government House leader, and I would think that the member for Wentworth ought to recognize that the government has steadfastly refused to guarantee that if this committee we are presently striking were to ask for a committee to look into the resource strategy of this province that it would automatically set up such a committee. It would simply consider the matter in the fullness of time. Under these circumstances, he may be willing not to take this opportunity to get the resource sector looked at and to rely on the good faith of the government. I am not willing to rely on that so-called good faith.

Mr. Germa: You had your chance yesterday and you blew it.

Mr. S. Smith: If the NDP members wish for some unknown reason, on the fictitious grounds of so-called redundancy, to proceed without a guarantee that the resource sector in this province is going to be looked at, then that in view of all their posturing yesterday, they will have to explain that in northern Ontario and elsewhere.

Mr. Wildman: That's what you are doing today.

Mr. S. Smith: We have an opportunity here to amend the motion in such a way as to assure the people of Ontario that the resource sector will be looked at in this province and, furthermore, that there will not be unnecessarily narrow terms of the present committee that we are striking.

This is a great opportunity. It's a great pity; it looks to me as though the other two parties have decided to scuttle what could be an excellent opportunity for the people of Ontario.

Mr. Germa: You had your chance yesterday.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I am really amazed at the Liberals' position, having listened to them yesterday as they ranted and raved. In fact, the only one who spoke any sense was the member for Rainy River.

Mr. S. Smith: Oh yes, a committee we don't need but an election we need, according to the NDP.

Mr. Martel: He talked some common sense yesterday. The rest of them ran off both sides of their mouths at the same time. When we talk about a review of mining, there was a report tabled in this Legislature in 1973 about mining and a whole series of recommendations, which they all dissociated themselves from yesterday, particularly the member for Nipissing (Mr. Bolan), whose predecessor in that position signed a select committee report which called for equity in mining. Yesterday, listening to the Liberals, it was amazing.

Mr. O'Neil: Get on with the subject.

Mr. Martel: I am speaking to the motion. They are talking in their amendment about a committee to inquire into the state of the resource sector. That was examined in great detail for about two and a half to three years by a select committee, and yesterday the Liberals dissociated themselves entirely from the recommendations which were made by that committee. I remind them that they had two colleagues on that committee—the member for Nipissing (Mr. R. S. Smith) and Mr. Deacon—and they dissociated themselves from that yesterday. Even though their colleagues at that time called for a 50 per cent equity in mining, yesterday they flailed around and ranted and raved about nationalization and having no part of it, and here they are today saying—

Mr. Deans: They want to study it again.

Mr. Martel: —“We want to study it again. We want to study it again.” They had no confidence in those two colleagues.

Mr. Breithaupt: You would rather not study it at all.

Mr. Martel: We studied it for three years. I'm sure we've got some feeling for it.

Mr. Lewis: We don't need another study of the resource sector in this province.

Mr. Martel: I suggested that we did, and you've totally ignored it, just as yesterday you wanted to scream that you were free enterprisers.

Mr. Breithaupt: And we are.

Mr. Martel: You ignored that whole study, and you're going to ignore it again, I don't doubt it. So the hypocrisy shows. You had your opportunity yesterday and now you want to cloud the water. Let me tell you how.

Mr. Wildman: You want it both ways.

Mr. Martel: I hate to go over what my colleague has said, but I don't know if you can read. You're the people who talk about something wrong with our educational system.

Mr. Lewis: You have problems with simple literacy over there. You are a pack of illiterate babble over there.

Mr. Mancini: I object strongly.

Mr. Martel: I want you to get the flavour of this, okay. In the recommendations it says, “and that the committee have power to send for persons, papers and things.”

Mr. Breithaupt: Only those referred to in the first paragraph.

Mr. Martel: Don't kid the troops.

Mr. Breithaupt: We will see who is right.

Mr. Martel: My friend, if you take that attitude, we have enough votes in the committee to force what we want.

Mr. Breithaupt: Maybe so.

Mr. Martel: Maybe so. Well you can show your true colours there.

In fact as I read that it says, “and that the committee have power to send for persons, papers and things as provided in section 35 of the Legislative Assembly Act, and power to retain counsel.” That tells us that if we need an expert in the field of mining, we as a committee have the power to send for that person to appear before the committee for their expertise in that particular field.

Mr. Breithaupt: That's your opinion.

Mr. Martel: That's my opinion and that's what I have to vote on—my opinion. But I'm not going to play little games.

Mr. Kerrio: We don't care if you vote. We want the government to say it.

Mr. Roy: Why not make it clear?

Mr. Martel: It is clear. I suggest that the member read it again, being a lawyer of all people.

Now what else have we got? We've got a thing in there that says, “and the committee has the power to make recommendations.” Now how in God's name do you think that extra clause is going to change anything, when already in the motion it says we will make recommendations is beyond me. All I can see is posturing on all three counts.

Mr. Roy: You wouldn't know about posturing, would you?

Mr. Lewis: Indeed we would; therefore, we should be able to identify it.

Mr. Martel: It seems to me that when the committee looks at Inco it will, in fact, discuss other things and hopefully come to a recommendation—such as what's happening in Falconbridge, where there's a bigger percentage of the work force being laid off than at Inco.

Mr. Haggerty: You had forgotten them, Elie.

Mr. Martel: No, I haven't forgotten them at all.

Mr. Haggerty: You're just worried about Inco.

Mr. Martel: I suggest you might have been here for the debate yesterday. You weren't even here yesterday.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order; confine your remarks to the subject at hand.

Mr. Martel: As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, if the member were so concerned he would not have had to fight with his leader, who a couple of weeks ago said we should refine the matte even less, and it would have wiped out Port Colborne totally. That's your leader. He called for even less refining.

Mr. Kerrio: That has already happened.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Liberals are going to have to explain to their constituents.

Mr. Martel: He was going to wipe it out. If you think you're down to 14 years now, you wouldn't have anyone there—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, speaking to the motion—

Mr. Speaker: We're dealing with specific amendments to a motion that's before the House; confine your remarks to the amendment.

Mr. Martel: I appreciate your bringing me back to the amendment, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that of the three items that the Liberals have moved, two of them are already in the motion; and surely the Liberal Party can't usurp the recommendations that the committee itself should be making to bring back to this Legislature for the government to act on. That's what the Liberals are attempting to do. They are trying to predetermine what the committee should make as recommendations.

Mr. Breithaupt: Your first speaker just said he was going to suggest what the committee should do.

Mr. Deans: I did.

Mr. Breithaupt: That is all right?

Mr. Martel: He said he would suggest it; you want to write the recommendations for us. Obviously, we don't need to sit, if you're already going to make the recommendations.

Mr. Deans: They already did.

Mr. Roy: You're just annoyed because you didn't think of it.

Mr. Martel: I would ask the Liberals to stop their posturing and let the motion go through.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other person wishing to speak to the amendment?

Hon. Mr. Welch: May I make one or two comments? I think it would be very presumptuous of me to attempt to guess or to anticipate what this committee is going to recommend to the House. When the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) starts putting on the record some request for undertakings with respect to what this committee might or might not do, I think it would be quite improper of me at this stage to make such undertakings. Under the circumstances the three amendments to the main motion that have been placed have been very well discussed. I do appreciate the comments of the Leader of the Opposition when he points out to the House that there have been a number of sessions, in which we have been attempting to arrive at some consensus to capture both the spirit of the earlier requests that were made during the course of discussion of these very important matters and, ultimately, the response of the Premier to refer these questions to a special committee of the Legislature.

I would think, on a reading of section 35 of the Legislative Assembly Act, that the committee has the powers to do exactly what that section says in response to the general terms of reference which lead to the clause that deals with making appropriate recommendations to the House. I would hope we would proceed to adopt the main motion so that this committee could constitute itself and get on with the immediate job that concerns all members of this House, to get into the Sudbury and Inco operations of Inco Limited so that we are that much better informed with respect to the immediate problem.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Breithaupt has moved an amendment to the main motion.

All those in favour of Mr. Breithaupt's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Mr. Breithaupt: In order to avoid cutting into the private members' time, we will not call for a recorded vote.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Conway: Red Tories and blue socialists.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILL

PETTY TRESPASS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Eaton moved first reading of Bill 101, An Act to amend the Petty Trespass Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Eaton: I feel there has been an ever-increasing increase in trespassing and petty thefts from Ontario agricultural land, and I therefore feel we need a curb on this activity. The purpose of this bill is to remove requirements from the Petty Trespass Act that land be enclosed or that land must be posted before one can be considered a trespasser. It places the onus on persons to ask permission to enter another person's land and it increases the maximum fine to $1,000 from the present $100. It removes the liability from a property owner for trespassers, unless deliberate intent to do harm to the trespasser is involved.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

ONTARIO FOOD TERMINAL AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Pope moved second reading of Bill 82, An Act to amend the Ontario Food Terminal Act.

Mr. Speaker: I would remind the hon. member that he has up to 20 minutes. If he wishes to reserve some time for a windup or a response to other comments, he may do so by indicating at the end of his opening remarks.

Mr. Pope: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do intend to reserve some time for a reply. At the outset I would like to thank Jean Charbonneau and Irene Avila for the assistance they have provided to me in the preparation of this amendment. This amendment first started with the Cochrane South Progressive Conservative Association in 1975. I would like to thank them for the research work they and many other people of northern Ontario have provided.

The purpose of this bill is, first, to expand the objects of the Ontario Food Terminal Board to include the establishment of a branch food terminal in the district of Cochrane and, second, to forbid new or expanded wholesale fresh produce operations in the district of Cochrane. Without these two substantive amendments to the Ontario Food Terminal Act, it would be impossible for the food terminal to expand to northern Ontario.

This bill arises from concerns expressed to myself and my predecessors by producers, wholesalers and consumers of my riding of Cochrane South, and indeed of all of northern Ontario, about the state of the agricultural industry generally, and the fresh produce sector of it specifically, throughout northern Ontario.

I would like to share, with the members of this House, my understanding of both the enormity and the complexity of the problem. This understanding, I must admit, has been gained through research of reports and interviews with farmers' unions, wholesalers, retailers, consumers and government officials as well as university professors.

The vast majority of arable land in northeastern Ontario is located in the great Cochrane clay belt, and in the vicinity of the city of Timmins, to the extent of 2.2 million acres; and in the little clay belt, in the northern end of the district of Timiskaming, to the extent of 391,000 acres. By arable land we mean class two and class three soils as defined by the federal Department of Agriculture or high-soil capability as defined by the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources.

Of the total of 2.7 million of high-quality arable land in northeastern Ontario as a whole, a mere 918,000 acres—one-third—are included in census farms. Further, only 382,575 of these acres comprise improved farm land. Of that improved farm land, only on 252,500 acres were crops of some kind being grown; this was done on 2,850 census farms through which 13,347 people derived direct income.

This base must serve, and be compared with, approximately 559,850 people in the northeastern Ontario market area at present. This population is projected at 779,000 by the year 2001. Note that we have not included the population of northwestern Quebec, which is almost totally served, with respect to food products, through Ontario.

Clearly, northeastern Ontario's vast agricultural potential is far from being fully utilized. Despite the high-capability land and the large size of farms in northern Ontario, economic output is low: 52 per cent of all census farms have gross annual proceeds of less than $2,500 and, in some districts, including the district of Cochrane, the average farm income for tax purposes is negative.

It is also clear that in northeastern Ontario farm incomes are declining along with farm population, the number of farms and the amount of improved agricultural land. Quite simply, agricultural land in northeastern Ontario is going out of production.

For example, the farm acreage in the district of Cochrane declined by 46 per cent from 1961 to 1971 and by 25 per cent for the whole of northeastern Ontario. In the district of Cochrane, the number of farms declined from 900 in 1961 to 340 in 1971 and from 5,000 in 1958 to 2,489 for the same time frame in all of northeastern Ontario.

A number of reasons have been given for this decline. The consensus appears to be a combination of more remunerative employment opportunities outside of agriculture, high transportation costs to market, fluctuating market demands, competing land uses, lack of storage and marketing facilities and climate.

A farmer in northeastern Ontario generally lacks access to local markets because of bulk-buying practices of chain stores and must ship his produce south to markets, including the Ontario Food Terminal in Toronto, or sell it at discount to a wholesaler to encourage pick-up in the north. It is thus the producer who must bear the transportation cost in order to be competitive with established bulk wholesale prices. This same product shipped south may be marketed here in Toronto and shipped right back up north to wholesalers and retailers there. In fact, we have an enormous transportation system handling fresh produce and potatoes, let alone dry groceries.

The Ontario Northland Transportation Commission through Star Transfer employs 12 refrigerated truck lines full-time on this north-south route. The rates charged from Toronto to Timmins for a 2,400-pound load is $2.01 per cwt, that is $482.40. With respect to a 30,000-pound load, it is $1.65 per cwt, that is $495, and with respect to a 40,000-pound load, $1.54 per cwt, that is $616. Note that this is a one-way charge only.

In addition, wholesalers annually ship from Toronto to Timmins, Cochrane, Kirkland Lake and Rouyn-Noranda approximately 1,400 truckloads of fresh produce. For instance, Jessels ships 400 trucks per year, according to its estimates, to the Timmins area. Porcupine Fruit ships 100 trucks. National Grocers, now located in Cochrane, ships 100 trucks. M and S in Kirkland Lake ships 50. Montemorro Food Stores in the Rouyn and Kirkland Lake area ships 250. Gamble Robinson presently located in Rouyn, doing its purchasing out of the Ontario Food Terminal in Toronto, ships 50. The chain stores, A & P and Dominion, ship approximately 100 truckloads each.

That total, by the way, is 1,150. In addition, there's approximately an additional 20 per cent of truckloads, or approximately 350 truckloads, of potatoes being shipped north to the Timmins, Cochrane, Kirkland Lake and Rouyn area alone. In addition, there are substantial transportation systems operating into the Sudbury area and the North Bay area. In the Timmins, Cochrane, Kirkland Lake and Rouyn-Noranda area alone, these truckloads of fresh produce, each valued at between $8,000 and $10,000, average a total dollar value in the range of $10 million. I believe the implications are clear. Northern Ontario, in spite of its vast agricultural potential, is not even meeting its own market needs, even in those agricultural products in which it excels.

Wholesalers in northeastern Ontario purchase fresh produce from southern Ontario and, because many are not licensed public commercial carriers, do not have full trucks or even part loads heading south. In other words, their transportation systems are inefficient. For many grocery products, the consumers of northeastern Ontario pay comparable prices to those in southern Ontario with a built-in five to eight per cent of purchase price for transportation costs. However, on many other items, northeastern Ontario consumers do pay more.

The construction of a food terminal by the government with space leased to the wholesalers would provide accessible market facilities for producers. It would reduce transportation costs to the producer in obtaining access to markets. Products could be transferred between terminals by the Ontario Food Terminal board according to its present mandate. With steady supply at competitive prices, because of the open market system, local producers could begin to supply the local market. Wholesalers and retailers could still order in bulk and split the source of their orders. In other words, an order could be placed in Toronto for both the southern Ontario market and the northeastern Ontario market. Shipments could be made to the northeastern Ontario market through the northern food terminal.

Storage facilities could be constructed by the Food Terminal Board or by co-operatives of producers or wholesalers. This would help to revitalize the agricultural industry. It would reduce costly inefficiencies in transporting practices of wholesalers and retailers in northeastern Ontario. This should have the effect, it is hoped, of decreasing some food prices to the consumers of northeastern Ontario.

In addition, a greater variety of crops, such as potatoes, cabbages, beets, onions, turnips, carrots and others—and I don't think I should mention mushrooms—could be grown and jobs would be created in agriculture, in processing plants, in freezing plants, and in agricultural service industries.

The implementation of this bill would not solve all the problems of the agriculture industry. We must consider changing policies on disposition or use of arable land by the Crown. We need agriculture research and moneys for the purchase of modern machinery. We need to examine the economies of farm size, we need storage facilities, but we also need, first and foremost, a marketing structure and strategy for agricultural products in northeastern Ontario, thereby creating the necessary incentives to revitalize the agricultural industry.

I believe this bill is a necessary step to begin that process. I hope other members will look upon it in that light and pass this bill through second and third reading today.

Mr. Riddell: In debating Bill 82, An Act to amend the Ontario Food Terminal Act, certainly we in the Liberal Party are prepared to support any means of helping northern Ontario with its agricultural industry, but I think we have to look at some of the problems that are found in that particular area and we also have to look at what the original concept of a terminal system was. The member for Cochrane South talks about all the arable land that is available in northern Ontario and is not being farmed at the present time, but I think he must also realize that it is simply not the land that will produce food, we also have to take a look at the heat units. The fact of the matter is that you simply do not have enough heat units in northern Ontario to grow very many fruits, and I understand that the vegetables that are grown in northern Ontario are pretty well limited to such things as potatoes, and they aren't grown in any great abundance.

The concept of a terminal system is to bring the most produce and the most buyers to one point. It has the most aggressive buyers and the most variety for the consumer. Remember, I indicated variety. There is something that we could not be able to put through a food terminal in northern Ontario, and that is a variety.

If we start building small terminals around the province it could very well jeopardize the terminal concept, because is there any more justification in putting, say, a food terminal in northern Ontario, where there isn't a great deal of produce grown and there can't be a great deal of produce grown because of the heat unit factor, than there is in establishing, say, a food terminal down in southwestern Ontario where we have a lot of this type of produce grown? I think we have got to take that into consideration.

I have also indicated there are very few vegetables grown in the north, not even enough to supply the local market. I got a lot of this information from talking to Ministry of Agriculture and Food officials in northern Ontario. There are some strawberries grown and there are some potatoes grown, but the fact of the matter is there are not enough heat units to produce the fruits and vegetables that are required by the wholesalers and retailers in that part of the country.

This bill, of course, does not cover live-stock, because fresh feed comes under another Act. I believe maybe it does cover some canned meats, but I am sure that that is not a major concern from the standpoint of this particular bill and the purpose in establishing a food terminal in northern Ontario.

I think we also must realize that a food terminal in northern Ontario would not be self supporting. I'm sure of this. I also received this information from Ministry of Agriculture and Food officials in northern Ontario.

In many ways I can't see the justification of the expense to establish a food terminal in northern Ontario. I think that the government should be setting up more vital programs for farmers that would be used, such as storage facilities.

The fact of the matter is, the wholesalers want to buy produce in large quantities and that's why they rely on the markets here in southern Ontario. They can't get the amount of produce in northern Ontario they need in any one week. They can't expect farmers to go to the field and dig potatoes in order to produce the quantities they require in their wholesale and retail outlets in northern Ontario. Therefore, to be sure of an adequate supply, they have to rely on the markets here in southern Ontario. That's what leads me to believe that wholesalers and retailers would perhaps not support a terminal market in northern Ontario. If they're not prepared to support it, then there's no way that that food terminal will be self-supporting.

I'm not too sure, with the restraint programs that we have at the present time, that the government is going to be prepared to keep this food terminal operating. The one here has to be self-supporting and it is. I would expect that the food terminal established in northern Ontario would also expect to be self-supporting.

I've indicated that storage for vegetables is a problem in northern Ontario and this is where I think we should be concentrating our effort. We should establish storage facilities so that the producers have a place to store their produce. Then the wholesalers and retailers might be interested in dealing with them, because they can get the produce they need in the quantities in which they need them.

I understand that a study is either being considered or has already been commissioned by the Ministry of Northern Affairs in conjunction with the Ministry of Agriculture and Food. I say that this whole thing should be studied first, that we should do a cost-benefit analysis before we rush headlong into establishing a food terminal in northern Ontario.

Lastly, I would like to indicate that we probably are inviting imports into northern Ontario—from Manitoba perhaps, from Quebec, maybe even from the States. If you put up a food terminal there, then I think you're going to see imports come in and your producers faced with competing with that produce coming in from other countries where some of them can produce it at an advantage you couldn't get in northern Ontario. I think you've got to take that into consideration.

Mr. Foulds: That happens now.

Mr. Riddell: So we're going to support the bill because certainly if there is any way of increasing the production of agricultural products in northern Ontario, we're all in favour of it. But I question very much whether you're going to get the type of support for a food terminal by the wholesalers and by the retailers in northern Ontario that would render that particular establishment self-supporting. Thank you.

Mr. Wildman: I rise in this debate on an Act to amend the Ontario Food Terminal Act to indicate support for the bill in principle. But I have serious questions about whether the bill will have the results that the member for Cochrane South hopes it will have or thinks it will have.

Certainly in northern Ontario we have a viable agricultural industry. We have some of the best soils in the province, as he has indicated. I am reminded that the member for Lambton (Mr. Henderson) one time got up in the House prior to an election and indicated he didn't think anyone on this side of the House represented an agricultural riding. At that time, of course, Mr. Bill Ferrier represented Cochrane South. Now, suddenly, we have a new member for Cochrane South who is interested in agricultural matters. I hope that he educates the member for Lambton—

Mr. MacDonald: The whole Tory party.

Mr. Wildman: —as to the fact that there are agricultural ridings in northern Ontario.

Mr. Eakins: The colour of his glasses has changed since then.

Hon. W. Newman: You came close, didn't you.

Mr. Wildman: No, I didn't. I went way up. So did the Tories, but not enough.

Certainly we have some of the largest farms in the province and I thank the member for supplying me with his background material so that I could look it over prior to the debate. Some of the things in the background material, though, I think should be looked at in relation to what it says in the bill.

First, certainly we have the soils; the arable soil is there. But the fact is that the background material doesn't include the number of farmers who actually are making a full-time living on farming. I think it is important to realize that the figures that the member for Cochrane South quoted as to direct income for farmers are very low, certainly when compared with those in southern Ontario. If he feels the setting up of a food terminal in northeastern Ontario would turn that around, I think we are going to have a lot more done to help northern Ontario farmers in order to do that.

I realize he says that this is a first step, and in that sense we are willing to support the bill in principle. But there is certainly going to have to be a lot of other things done because, as the member for Huron-Middlesex said, the land itself will not produce the goods unless we have the farmers who are going to be doing the production and unless we have the number of other factors that are going to make that possible.

One of the major questions I have with the bill, although I said I supported it in principle, concerns the idea of setting up marketing facilities in northeastern Ontario. I support that idea, but my question largely revolves around the location. I have discussed this with the member for Cochrane South and he has indicated that the large number of acres of arable land in the great clay belt was one of the main reasons that he decided it should be in the Timmins-Matheson area. If we are going to do this, I really wonder whether we perhaps should not be setting up a terminal that would serve the whole of northeastern Ontario. I think that is the purpose of the bill.

I wonder if that location is a viable one. Although we support the bill in principle, we would hope that it would go to committee so that study can be done to determine what would be the best location if it is going to serve the whole of northeastern Ontario.

The reason we are in favour of it, though, is that this is something that would help northern producers to give them an opportunity to market locally and to give good-quality produce to northern wholesalers and consumers.

One of the major problems that we have in northern Ontario, especially for farming but for other businesses and consumers generally, is transportation costs. If it is possible, through the development of a terminal, to have larger bulk shipping, and making the terminal board responsible for the shipping, then perhaps there would be a saving in transportation costs. The smaller the shipment, of course, the higher the cost. That probably would be a good thing.

One of the sources the member for Cochrane South pointed to was the strategic land-use plan and a statement made in that document where it states: "There is a great need for storage facilities in the region. Northeastern Ontario can produce outstanding crops, such as potatoes, raspberries, strawberries, blueberries; and vegetables such as parsnips, cabbages and carrots; but the lack of storage makes it necessary to ship these out of the region, often at a loss."

I think that really points out what the member for Huron-Middlesex is talking about. We need storage facilities. It's important that we have those kinds of facilities in the north. Again, I want to point out that it must not just be set up in such a way as to serve Cochrane. It seems to me if we are going to establish this kind of facility in northern Ontario, it must not just serve Cochrane but must serve Manitoulin, Timiskaming, Nipissing and Algoma. I am concerned whether that location would be a viable one. I would hope if it goes to committee that question would be studied and we could get some further information on that.

I don't think it is enough to say the number of possible acres of farm land in a particular district should be the only thing that should determine it. One of the problems we have in the arguments for Cochrane is that there are fewer farms in Cochrane. Although there is a great deal of land which could be arable and which could be used for farming, actually Cochrane has the weakest agricultural base, it appears to me, of all of the areas; certainly when compared with Manitoulin and Timiskaming. I wonder whether the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot) might be interested in having such a facility, if he is in favour of the bill, located in the tri-town area. That might be something to be looked at.

Mr. Bradley: He didn't promise it in the election campaign.

Mr. Wildman: Nipissing and Algoma also have a more viable agricultural industry than Cochrane does at the present time. I think that really has to be looked at.

The member for Huron-Middlesex, I think, also alluded to the fact that if this is a first step, there are also other things that have to be done, such as looking at the use of Crown land that could be arable. One of the problems we have right now is that the Ministry of Natural Resources has large amounts of land that could be arable, a good portion of it in my area, which at one time was used for farming and has reverted to the Crown for arrears in taxation. For some reason, the Ministry of Natural Resources makes it very difficult for any farmer now in the vicinity to obtain that land and to use it. They can only get a one-year land-use permit, and who is going to fence land for one year.

The transportation costs in general are a problem. That hurts farmers who are shipping not only this kind of produce but who are shipping beef. They have a great deal of shrinkage. They get to the Toronto market and they are stuck. They can't go home like a southern Ontario producer.

I know these comments may not relate directly to the principle of the bill, but I think that it is important that we realize that transportation costs don't just relate to this kind of project. They also relate to the question of getting parts. If a farmer has a machinery breakdown in the middle of harvesting, it is very difficult for him to obtain parts in northern Ontario.

We support the bill in principle.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Wildman: We would hope that the bill would go to committee to deal with the question of location so that it could deal with the whole area of northeastern Ontario.

[12:15]

Mr. Havrot: Mr. Speaker, first let me begin by congratulating the member for Cochrane South for presenting this excellent idea. It could have far-reaching effects on the economy of northeastern Ontario and I am naturally very enthusiastic about the whole concept.

Those of us who live in northeastern Ontario are aware that agricultural enterprises have not been flourishing in our area of late. This is not, however, because the opportunity is not there. The major problem facing our farmers or potential farmers is marketing and transportation. If this bill receives approval by the House and if the terminal is built, a shot in the arm would be given to our whole area.

There has been some question about the viability of agricultural activity in the north-east and I would like to put any fears to rest.

A recent study by Professor Douglas Hoffman of the University of Guelph Centre for Resources Development indicated there are certainly sufficient quantities of high quality land for agriculture in our area. Our cool climate is the only limiting factor with regard to crop production. However, there are over two million acres of class 3 soils in the great clay belt and in the Timmins region. Only a small amount of this land has been improved, but the potential is there.

Mr. Riddell: Land that will grow hay and grain.

Mr. Havrot: As Professor Hoffman has said, and I quote: "Shorter crop varieties, improved marketing techniques and greater world demand could lead to more agricultural opportunities in the north."

Of course, we can do relatively little about the world demand, but we can do something about the other two conditions. We have plenty of help in the area of shorter crops, and this bill could go a long way to improving marketing in the northern part of the province.

As more and more demands are made on the available land in southern Ontario we will be looking to the north for increased production. It certainly makes sense to me that we begin now to prepare for those increased demands.

As I said, it is not out of the question. We have the land, the expertise and the farmers. What is required is more sophistication in the marketing end. What is even of more interest to me, as the member from a neighbouring riding, is the possibility for the development of secondary industry as a result of placing a food terminal in the northeast. The opportunities for canneries, storage facilities and meat processing plants are readily apparent. Once the market is established, all of the facilities would be necessary.

It is not difficult, by the way, to see the development of a strong market, with increased marketing power and decreased costs, because we would be eliminating much of the transportation costs. The demand would be there. The increased demand in turn would encourage more and more farmers into production.

There is a great need for storage facilities in our region. As Professor Hoffman has pointed out the northeastern area of Ontario can produce outstanding crops of potatoes, raspberries, strawberries, blueberries, parsnips, cabbages and carrots. Unfortunately lack of storage facilities has made it necessary to ship these crops out of the region, and as mentioned before often at a loss.

Proper storage could provide a needed impetus to potato production, which is an important crop in the sandy, silty soils around Englehart and in the Cochrane area. I might add, contrary to the beliefs of the member for Huron-Middlesex, the quality of potatoes grown in my area, particularly in that area of Englehart, is such that year after year the Edwards family in that area of my riding have won first place at the Royal Winter Fair.

Mr. Riddell: What about the quantity? I didn't say anything about quality, I said quantity.

Mr. Havrot: They are not going to grow quantities if they don't have the marketing capabilities.

In the matter of secondary development, the possibility of new crops also exist in our area. Opportunities exist, for example, in the production of clover seed, milk, eggs, et cetera. These would be ideal products in the northeast, because they are less labour-intensive. Speaking of milk, I would just like to say that I've learned a dairy in New Liskeard has just been given the go-ahead for construction of a facility to produce ultra-high-temperature, long-life milk.

Mr. Bradley: It is costing you votes.

Mr. Havrot: This will be the only plant of its kind in Ontario, and its approval indicates the strength and the revitalization of the dairy industry in northeastern Ontario, specifically the district of Timiskaming.

Mr. Wildman: No question about that.

Mr. MacDonald: It doesn't need this bill. That is covered in other legislation.

Mr. Havrot: There is also, I might add, a new interest in the beef industry in the northeast. The potential for slaughterhouses and processing plants is there.

Mr. Riddell: It is still nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. Havrot: In other words, what I am saying is that there is a strong indication that the northeast is awakening to the increased possibilities of agriculture. So is the south. The food terminal suggested by the hon. member for Cochrane South would fulfil a vital role in continuing this stimulation. Of course, I also realize the potential for my own area. The location of the terminal as proposed would be ideal. It is adjacent to Timiskaming and the economic advantages would certainly affect my own riding. A revitalized agricultural industry would reinforce Kirkland Lake's role in transportation throughout the whole northeastern part of the province, as well as Quebec.

Let me conclude by indicating some of the scope of the advantages that would accrue to the north. Professor Hoffman has pointed out that with renewed production in the north the following areas would be stimulated: canneries for peas, berries, carrots and potatoes; freezing plants for peas, berries, carrots; abattoirs; storage facilities for potatoes, carrots, parsnips and cabbages; service industries; farm implements; fertilizer; feed and seed; co-ops; insurance; building products.

In short, I think the idea to build a food terminal in northeastern Ontario is first class, and I don't mean that in any selfish way. The benefits which would come from this terminal would find their way to all parts of the province. It is a suggestion that would stimulate many sectors of the economy and I am all for it.

Mr. Bradley: It would ensure your re-election.

Mr. Havrot: I'll conclude by once again congratulating the member for Cochrane South and by exhorting all members of the House to support the bill.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I'm probably the only member in the House who took an active part in the old St. Lawrence Market here in Toronto. Certainly it's one of the jewels in the crown of the government of Ontario that it took the move to the Ontario Food Terminal, going from a sort of rat-infested, very antiquated market to one of the most modern markets in North America, one that has been emulated by Americans and by people from Europe and from all over the world who have come to look at our terminal system. I've seen many markets in North America and other parts of the world and the Toronto wholesale terminal is one of the most outstanding markets in the world, and it's made so because it was given the benefit of government legislation and government protection.

If we in the Liberal Party could extend any of these benefits to our fellow farmers and growers in northern Ontario, Mr. Speaker you can be sure we would. As for the horticultural industry, while members of the horticultural industry at times may do some infighting, in the general sphere we feel that the more producers we have and the more impact that we can have upon the Ontario scene, the greater strength we're going to give to that Canadian industry.

While it has been so successful here in Toronto, I have some of the fears that have been raised by my compatriot from Huron-Middlesex about the viability of a terminal market in the north. You have to look at the question of what a terminal market is. A terminal is really sort of the end of a sea-way or the end of a railway line, and in not too many years gone by only railway cars were allowed into terminal markets. Trucks were not permitted. It's only in recent years that they have allowed trucks in. So the concept of terminal markets very often becomes a concept of imports, products brought there by railway. Therefore, we have to ask the question of whether this is going to be set upon rail lines that would facilitate the importation of foreign—especially American and to a lesser extent Mexican—produce.

In southern Ontario it has been a benefit to have the terminal—to have a wholesale farmers' market where farmers from the surrounding areas bring their produce. They have lived together in a compatible system and this has really strengthened the hand of the Ontario producer. But you wonder if that will happen in the northern part of the province where we are limited so much by climate—not so much by soil—in the amount of produce that can be produced.

There's presently a great system of trucks, as the member has pointed out, coming down from the north to pick up Ontario products and imported products. We wonder if the net effect of this would be a lesser use of Canadian-grown or Ontario-grown products.

So we have these questions of whether or not there will be a farmers' market, the question of imports, the question of trading area and the size of population that would be served. We would hope that discussion of these points in committee could give us a number of answers. Certainly, on behalf of my riding, and I think I can speak on behalf of many of the fruit and vegetable growers of Ontario, we would certainly do all we could to help our fellow producer in the north.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing the hon. member for York South I would like to advise him that the member for Cochrane South has reserved nine minutes and that time will come about at 12:36.

Mr. MacDonald: That means I have about eight minutes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Right.

Mr. MacDonald: Good.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who introduced the bill started out by drawing attention to the fact that there had been a great deal of research done in this matter. For example, he said his Conservative riding association in Timmins had studied it—that they had gone to academics, that they had gone to wholesalers and things of that nature. May I suggest as kindly as I can that I think that statement is, in fair measure, a bit of grandstanding.

I was interested to learn earlier this week that the main body they should have gone to to discuss this, namely the food terminal, had never been approached. It strikes me as rather remarkable they never did that. If you're going to amend the food terminal bill and you're going to extend it to include northern Ontario, I think the first people you would have discussed it with, if you were dealing with it substantively and not just as political grandstanding, would be the food terminal.

Mr. Wildman: They went to them last.

Mr. MacDonald: He went to them last, some time since I spoke with him earlier this week. There are a lot of other things in which the research has been rather thin. I'm not blaming the hon. member. He is trying to voice some of the long unmet needs of northeastern Ontario and he is looking for slogans and an appearance of coming to grips with it.

He says he's gone to the wholesalers and the wholesalers are in favour of it. Did he ask the wholesalers whether or not they were willing to pay for it so it could be self-supporting? I'll bet he didn't. And would they then have said yes, they were strongly in support of it?

He can take the figures from Stephen Rodd or others at Guelph with regard to the potential million acres up there, but has he taken into account the transportation costs that will likely be very prohibitive unless this government is willing to subsidize transportation from the north? Has he discussed it with Darcy McKeough as to whether they will subsidize transportation from the north so that they can get the products into that part of the province?

If he's going to make that land into prime agricultural land, and not just class three agricultural land, if he was to calculate the amount of subsidies that have to go in for drainage, and the upgrading of the land, I suspect it would take literally billions of dollars to turn that reserve the Minister of Agriculture and Food likes to talk about into something that could replace lost prime agricultural land in the south. So my first point is that a lot of research has gone into this but it's pretty superficial propaganda research rather than substantive research.

The second point is this. It is rather ironic to have this debate the day after we had a debate in which we focused attention on the inadequacies of this government, its sins of omission primarily, as well as commission, over all of the years with regard to the development of northeastern Ontario industrially and generally economically. There was a reminder, for example, by the leader of the New Democratic Party that we have had an unending series of studies, starting in 1958, about what can and should be done in northeastern Ontario. Yet nothing has happened. When we have an emergency like Inco, the government two weeks afterwards has nothing specific to offer, other than a building which was authorized two or three years ago which it has now re-authorized.

Here today we have a government backbencher coming in and, in effect, underlining the failure of the government in what he thinks is a key, important aspect of the economy of northeastern Ontario, namely, the agricultural sector. It is very interesting indeed. We appreciate the assistance the hon. member is giving us in documenting what we were making yesterday. All the member is indicating is that the government's failure to develop the potential of northeastern Ontario is total. It includes agriculture as well as the broader aspects of the economy.

Let me come to another point. With respect to the hon. member who introduced the bill and to the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex, they talked about the fact that if there was a food terminal up there, that might provide an opportunity for marketing local produce. I suggest they are chasing something at the end of the rainbow. The hon. member for Timiskaming who sat down a moment or so ago talked about the need for having more sophistication. May I suggest the problem in the marketing of food is that we have too much sophistication already? Do you know what the sophistication ends up with, not only in northern Ontario but even in southern Ontario, Mr. Speaker? The wholesalers and the supermarkets aren't interested in buying the product that is grown locally and is available for a six or eight-week period or something of that nature. They have long-term contracts they sign for the year and they bring in the produce from the southern United States or from Mexico or from somewhere of that nature.

Let's put this proposition in the context of reality instead of wishful thinking. Even with the food terminal in southern Ontario, only 30 per cent of the produce handled is local Ontario produce. Seventy per cent of it is imported. In other words, it's a wholesaling agency that is not really going to meet the needs, particularly of northern Ontario unless the government comes to grips with the so-called sophistication of the marketing procedures and the normal operations of the supermarkets. While I am only guessing, my guess is that if there was a branch of the food terminal in northern Ontario, there might be something like five per cent or maybe 10 per cent at the outside that would be locally grown produce, handled through the food terminal. The rest of it is going to be imported.

Something may be done—and this is why I am going to agree with everybody who has spoken up until now and will support the thing in principle—to rationalize the imports of produce so they can get it in quantity—copied with the transportation cost problem and, hopefully, reducing it—and in quality in northeastern Ontario, because in too many instances I don't think they get the kind of produce they are entitled to or of the quality that is available elsewhere.

The fourth point I want to make is that again I understand the motivations of the hon. member who wants to put it in the district of Cochrane. He comes from the district of Cochrane and, not to get a difference in the family, I can understand the hon. member for Timiskaming congratulating him and saying it's a neighbouring riding and it will help him because it's close by. But, quite frankly, I am not sure that the appropriate site for a food terminal branch, if we are going to have it, is in the district of north Cochrane. It may conceivably be, if it doesn't offend the hon. member who is now looking at me, in Timiskaming because there is presently a greater active farming community in Timiskaming.

Let me take another example up in northeastern Ontario. If the government were really trying to develop the market it might not only have provided storage, it might have provided slaughtering facilities. If it provided slaughtering facilities, far more important I think, the siting of them would be in North Bay or in Sudbury, because the major population concentrations are there. It may be an encouragement for the beefing up of the beef industry in that area if we could have slaughtering facilities nearby.

In short, just let me conclude, we support this in principle because we think that unwittingly the hon. member has hung an argument for the development of agriculture on too narrow a base, namely a food terminal, and I don't think that food terminal is really going to develop the agricultural base. There are far more important things that have been ignored in his research.

We agree that agriculture has been neglected in northeastern Ontario just like everything else in northeastern Ontario has been neglected. If supporting this bill in principle is going to provide us with an opportunity to take a look at the whole problem up there and come up with a solution so that northeastern Ontario won't continue to be neglected in the future as much as it has been in the past by a Tory government, we will support it.

Just as a final word, Mr. Speaker, we have done our best to give support to this because we think there is at least a core worthy of support. We wish sometimes on private members' bills and resolutions that the government members wouldn't look for any excuse to vote against something that comes from this side of the House.

Perhaps in our efforts to give them some support in meeting their problems, they might not follow the dictates of their Whips, which lash them into opposition of an idea that doesn't come from their side of the House, perhaps in the future they may support an idea that at least has a modicum of common sense in it if it emerges from this side of the House. The member's idea has a modicum, but not much more, because of the inadequate research.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Cochrane South for nine minutes.

Mr. Pope: Mr. Speaker, if it would be appropriate, with the consent of the House, I would deal with my reply for eight minutes and I believe the hon. Minister for Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) has a brief word, if that's acceptable.

There were a number of points raised. First, with respect to the hon. member for York South, I don't want to get into a partisan debate on northeastern Ontario. I'll do it at another time if the hon. member wishes—

Mr. Foulds: You did it yesterday and you will do it again.

Mr. Pope: I will do it again. This is a private member's hour in which private members' bills are debated. A private member has the right to bring localized policies—

Mr. MacDonald: What motivated your solid support against the private member's resolution last week? Was it partisan?

Mr. Pope: —which he thinks are appropriate before the House. I might add that the hon. member for York South was saying that the research was rather thin, but he didn't point out any inaccuracies in it.

The hon. member for Huron-Middlesex pointed out a couple of issues. First of all, there were not enough vegetables grown to supply the local market. I admit that is true, but again that gets into what I guess I could call a chicken-and-egg argument. In the 1920s and 1930s there were a lot of farms in production in the northeastern Ontario region. A significant portion of the population in northeastern Ontario was involved in agricultural production and the local market was being supplied by local producers.

The problem arose, for a number of reasons, in the 1940s and the 1950s, and since that time, as is indicated by any of the statistics I have, there has been a decline in the number of farmers and, therefore, in their capacity to supply the local market.

The hon. member for Huron-Middlesex also mentioned the heat unit argument. There is a debate, of course, involving heat units and daylight hours and whether or not there is a relationship between the two. I don't wish to take issue with him, other than to say that the report Professor Hoffman prepared for the Municipal Advisory Committee for Northeastern Ontario enunciated several products which he felt could be profitably grown in northeastern Ontario, including potatoes, peas, strawberries, raspberries, blueberries, parsnips, cabbages, carrots—and he goes on to list many more. He also refers to which of these products could be processed as well as marketed in northeastern Ontario, again profitably.

The other issue raised by the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex related to whether the food terminal would be self-supporting. That's a fair question to raise. I would say that the discussions I have had—and the hon. member for York South wondered if I had discussed it with anybody; I've had discussions with Jessels, Porcupine Fruit Stand, M and S of Kirkland Lake and Montemorro of Rouyn, together with the farmers' union from the Val Gagné-Monteith area—indicate that it would be self-supporting.

Those same wholesalers also indicate that they would be willing to rent premises from the Ontario government in a northern Ontario food terminal.

While I'm on the point, perhaps the hon. member for York South could inquire of the food terminal board as to whether or not it has had discussions about a northern Ontario food terminal with a Mr. Petroska and Mr. Brown in the last year and whether or not the food terminal board was aware at that time that they were engaged in those discussions on my behalf.

The other point I want to make is about why I suggested the district of Cochrane as the location. Incidentally, we are talking about only 30 miles if hon. members are worried about the district of Timiskaming as opposed to the district of Cochrane. I have provided the hon. member for Algoma and the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex with a copy of the soil capability study, and I would refer them to it. It clearly shows, I would estimate, that about 90 per cent of the arable land in northeastern Ontario is located in the area of the district of Cochrane and district of Timiskaming.

I refer also to the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission servicing maps and the system maps for the CNR, the ONR, and the CPR. If one overlays them, one will see that from the Porquis Junction-Iroquois Falls area down to the Matheson area, there is ready access by Highway 101, Highway 11 and Highway 144, plus access to two CNR lines in proximity and the ONR spur line into Timmins as well as the main ONR line. There is also, I would submit, access to the Quebec market in rather close proximity to that location.

Those were some of the discussions. In all honesty, I had originally considered just having a general resolution calling for the establishment of a food terminal in northeastern Ontario. The reason I could not do it is because of the second substantive part of the bill, which dealt with the fact that new wholesalers could not come in; I couldn't justify that kind of a provision for all of northeastern Ontario.

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take exactly one minute to point out to some of the members opposite who have been talking about a food terminal in the north that it's a concept we appreciate and we support. We realized it was going to take a lot of time because it has to be self-sufficient. We will be certainly looking at it and we're going to endorse this bill in principle. But what I would like to say to some members opposite who don't know anything about the north is that it has a great potential and they can grow the vegetables and the crops—I could list them off here. I've been writing them down while we're sitting here. They have a great potential in the future.

Mr. Wildman: That's right.

Hon. W. Newman: I say to those members opposite, don't talk to me about the north.

The potential is there and I hope they realize that.

Mr. MacDonald: We have known that for years.

Hon. W. Newman: The hon. member for York South is the agricultural critic for his party; he should know that the potential is there.

Mr. MacDonald: I do know. Most of the minister's colleagues have only learned now.

Hon. W. Newman: Keeping in mind that a food terminal must be self-sufficient and that it would require a great deal of study to make sure that all the wholesalers and other people are interested in this, we are going to support this bill in principle. But I have to say, don't start knocking the great potential of the north. It bothers me, because there is potential there and we should recognize it.

Mr. MacDonald: Good for you; you have finally found out about it.

Mr. Pope: The hon. member for York South has never been up there.

Mr. MacDonald: What do you mean? I have been up there more than you have—infinity more.

[12:45]

LIQUOR LICENCE AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Mancini moved second reading of Bill 76, An Act to amend the Liquor Licence Act, 1975.

Mr. Mancini: I am certainly pleased to rise to speak on Bill 76. As you know, Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced by myself for first reading about 10 days ago. Before I get into the main subject of this bill, let me say its purpose is not to offend my colleague, the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent), or have him lose any of his business up there. It certainly is not to give any members of the cabinet heartburn. I am sorry if I caused them any of those problems.

At this time I would like to acknowledge the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk who seconded my bill. I would also like to thank Sandy Giles of the Liberal research department, who has worked very hard in helping me gather material for this bill. I would like to take one moment to reiterate what was said earlier. I feel it is very important for the private members' lottery bills to have a free vote in this House.

I can recall about a year ago the select committee of the Legislature returned from England and came back with this tremendous idea. The backbone of the private members' lottery bills and the spirit of that backbone is for all members in this House to have a free vote. I would like to say as an ordinary back-bencher this has really added a lot to my responsibility and to the responsibility of all other back-benchers in this House. It makes the legislative process a little more interesting and a little more demanding. I am sure the members of the House will agree with what I have said about the free vote aspect.

I would like to mention I have personally canvassed as many of the individual members of this House as I possibly could, and I would like to thank them for their co-operation and for their time. I would like to say that I have had the opportunity to canvass all three government leaders of all three parties, and I wish to thank them. I especially wish to thank the Premier (Mr. Davis) who said in his usual straightforward manner that he would let me know.

Mr. Lewis: What about your producer, your director and your script assistant?

Mr. Mancini: I would like to take a minute to explain Bill 76. Bill 76 is a very straightforward document. It asks that the Liquor Licence Act, 1973, be amended. It asks that the figure 18 be stricken out, inserting in lieu thereof the figure of 19. The bill asks that this take effect on March 1, 1978. I feel it was necessary to give the alcohol industry some lead time. I also thought it was necessary not to postpone it too far into the future because I consider the matter urgent.

Thirdly, in section 1(7) we have included what we call a grandfather clause. This will give everyone who has already received the right to drink at the age of 18 the opportunity to continue to keep that right and privilege. Anyone who turns 18 on or after March 1, 1978 will not have that privilege until 19.

We checked with the Saskatchewan Legislature and we found they felt it was necessary also to include this grandfather clause and that it sincerely helped their legislation. Talking for only a moment about the Saskatchewan incident or affair, as we can call it, it was very interesting to find that in the province of Saskatchewan they have had much debate on the drinking age. They lowered their drinking age originally from 21 years down to 19. A further bill lowered it to 18. Then in September, 1976, the Saskatchewan Legislature thought it was very necessary to raise the drinking age back to 19 years old.

I have introduced this bill for two specific reasons. Firstly, I feel it is absolutely essential to remove the influence of alcohol consumption from our secondary schools. Just for the information of the members of this House, I am sure they already have this information, but 97 per cent of all secondary school students are 18 years of age or under.

Secondly, I introduced this bill for the purpose of public debate on the whole issue of alcohol consumption. I believe it is very important for us to understand that we do have an alcohol consumption problem in this province of Ontario. If it were not so, I do not believe that the Ministry of Health last year would have spent a total of $600,000 of taxpayers' money to ask people and to encourage them to moderate their consumption. So, the bill has a two-fold purpose. I think that by the debate that we have already spurred in the media it's already served its second purpose.

Just let me go back to my first point. Being only recently a graduate of a high school, I can recall some seven, eight or nine years ago what it was like. At that time the legal drinking age was 21. I can recall the peer group influence. I can recall what it was like, I'm sure a lot better possibly than—

Mr. Lewis: Than I can, yes.

Mr. S. Smith: You were the peer group influence.

Mr. Mancini: —the member for Scarborough West, who is the leader of the third party. I can certainly recall that. I know how important it was, having been involved in many student activities at my particular high school, General Amherst, how I felt when a school dance was successful and how I felt when we had a good turnout for a very important football game. I knew how important it was to the social fabric of that school.

Today I say this is not happening. The senior students of our secondary schools are not participating in the social functions of those secondary schools the way I believe they should, because they are being influenced by their peers and they are spending their time at house booze parties and down at the local pubs, and they are returning to the dances late in the evening and are usually a very disruptive force.

Let me say that I can recall, when I was a member of the standing resources development committee only a couple of months ago, this all-party committee had the opportunity to travel to some parts of our fine province. I can recall one evening, after we had finished hearing the submissions of different unions and different management groups, that we went down into the local pub under this fairly large hotel where we were staying. The crowd in that pub was basically very very young. I am sure many eyes would have been opened if any kind of liquor inspector or anyone from the police department would have walked in and would have demanded IDs.

The most despicable part of over-consumption of alcohol is usually the ugly violence that follows. I can recall sitting in that lounge surrounded by many, many young people. It was getting close to closing time. The first thing you knew, four or five young fellows off to my left were ready to break bottles and chop each others' faces up. I would just like to mention that we left as soon as possible. So the ugly violence that follows young people consuming alcohol is probably the most despicable aspect of the whole situation.

I am not alone in suggesting that the drinking age should be raised to 19. Only recently a student from the Ottawa area, a young gentleman by the name of Thomas Lowden, had received a grant from the Department of National Health and Welfare and did his own study on 291 students of four different high schools in the Ottawa area. He has spoken with our research staff and he personally strongly recommends that the drinking age be raised to 19. His report says that 50 per cent of all the students interviewed frequented the pubs and drank at least once a week. And 25 per cent of the 50 per cent who drank once a week would drink during the day at lunch hour. Then they would return to the schools. I say to the members of this House, that is a practice that we have to stop.

Secondly, Dr. Reginald Smart of the Addiction Research Foundation stated on page 3 of his book, The New Drinkers, and I quote: "However, it would be difficult to make a strong case for changing it back to 21 again." He means the drinking age. "It will, however, be argued that raising the age to 19 may overcome the most pressing problem which involves drinking by high school students during the day."

Also in September 1977 we received the report of the select committee on highway safety. Members know this report was written by the members from all sides of the House and every member on this committee, except the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Breagh) agreed the drinking age should be raised to 19 and they gave some very good statistics why. They felt, and they stated in their report, that the amount of alcohol-related incidents as far as traffic collisions were concerned had increased very substantially. I believe the figures were that in 1967 approximately 1,000 of the alcohol-related accidents in the province of Ontario were caused by young people from 16 to 19 years of age. But as of 1974 I believe that total had risen to over 5,000. This was 37 per cent of all alcohol-related accidents in the province.

Fourthly, I have done my own survey in the great riding of Essex South. I certainly know that the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Rhodes) knows that the good people of Essex South do think on their own. I can recall when he was down in my riding before the election—and he was making cabinet ministers before people were elected. It didn't work, did it?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You are wasting your time.

Mr. Ruston: You are the one who should stay home next time.

Mr. Conway: That is the kiss of death.

Mr. Mancini: When I put before the people of the riding of Essex South the question of whether the drinking age should be raised, 79 per cent answered yes, 19 per cent answered no, and approximately 1.5 per cent were not decided.

[1:00]

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, probably the most comprehensive and the most influential report, as far as I'm concerned, was done by the hon. member for Mississauga North (Mr. Jones), and I would like to commend the hon. member for his fine work.

Mr. Conway: We thought it was a cabinet appointment.

Mr. Mancini: Let me quote a few things from this good report. Let me quote some of the terms of reference. "To explore, document and summarize relevant data and public attitudes regarding alcohol abuse among the youth"—and this is the important part—"for the purpose of aiding the government of Ontario in formulating appropriate measures to curtail such abuse."

That's a pretty strong mandate. I would say that the member's cabinet colleagues have let him down.

On page three of the Jones report, we once again have the percentage figures for those 16 to 19 years of age involved, as drinking drivers, in traffic collisions. I've already given the House those facts.

I would now like to turn to page 10, paragraph three of the report: "In 1974, a Toronto high school study also showed that 25 per cent of those students surveyed drank as often as once a week, approximately eight per cent drink two to five times a week and 2.4 per cent drink every day." If these figures indicate a trend, the near future could reveal problems of an immense proportion regarding alcohol abuse and subsequent treatment requirements.

Paragraph four: "Since 97 per cent of the high school student population is 18 years of age or younger, and since the act of drinking among young people is predominantly a group activity"—and that's very important—"raising the age to 19 would virtually remove legal drinking from the high schools."

But just raising the drinking age to 19 is not going to solve all the problems in the high school. I realize that and the fine member for Mississauga North realizes that.

In view of that, some major recommendations were made to cabinet, and I would have thought that these would have been undertaken. I would like to read those four major recommendations because my bill will not mean a darn—it won't mean anything—unless these recommendations are implemented by the government of Ontario.

On page 10, recommendation 8: "The Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations should separate the legal drinking age from the 1971 age of majority." Very straightforward.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The hon. member has one more minute.

Mr. Mancini: Fine, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to say that all the hon. members can find those recommendations in the Jones report.

I would like to conclude by saying that I ask the hon. members of this House to give serious consideration to giving this bill third reading today in the same manner as the members of the House gave third reading to the bill introduced by the good member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. Johnson), which concerned advertising in weekly newspapers at election time. If the hon. members of the House cannot bring themselves to bring third reading of this bill today, I would ask that the bill be sent to committee of the whole House with the promise from the Premier and his cabinet that it will be brought before the members of this House before we adjourn at Christmas.

Mr. Riddell: I'd like to rise on a point of privilege just to clarify one matter. The member indicated that all members on the select committee, with the exception of one, voted in favour of raising the age to 19. I would like to indicate to you, Mr. Speaker, that when a vote was taken in committee a majority of members indicated they would like to see the age raised to 19, but not all members.

Mr. Mancini: On the point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry if I've offended any members of the committee. I withdraw my remarks.

Mr. McClellan: All of them?

Mr. Davison: I rise to offer, if I might some sober and temperate observations on the question of Bill 76. First of all, I would like to commend the member for Essex South for introducing this bill. I can see quite plainly that in his mind it will present a solution, or partial solution, to a very serious problem.

Bill 76 has now become for us the focus of a debate that is the result of six years of experience with the lower drinking age and is the result of a large number of reports and studies on the issue and concerns raised by many individuals and groups throughout our province. The debate, however, has to address itself to not one issue but three issues. The three issues are perhaps interrelated but, none the less, they are distinct.

Bill 76 addresses itself specifically to one of those issues, that is, the question of the legal drinking age. The other two issues are not contained in the bill but are rather the reasons behind the bill and its companion bill that will be coming up later. Those issues are the whole question of alcohol abuse in our society and the very serious problem of the drinking driver.

If I might put it another way, this bill seeks to limit the carnage on the highways and to combat alcohol abuse, in our high schools in particular and in our whole society in general, by raising the legal drinking age from 18 to 19. It would be helpful to members of the House if they would view the debate and the bill in that perspective. While limiting alcohol abuse and trying to stop the problems caused by the drinking driver are both worthy goals, that doesn't mean in itself that raising the drinking age is a worthy goal but rather a perceived solution for the other problems.

Whenever we as legislators consider, as we are considering today, repressive legislation, it's incumbent on us to ask ourselves if the perceived solution or the perceived good that will come about from this solution outweighs any negative aspects that could result from our decision. We have to ask ourselves are there any ways in which we can accomplish this goal.

Will Bill 76, if enacted, contribute substantially to solving alcohol-related problems in Ontario or in our high schools? Many believe it will and many believe it won't. I would like to share a couple of opinions with my fellow members in the House. In the Kitchener-Waterloo Record last week the Waterloo regional police chief, Syd Brown, said that raising the drinking age would do no good.

Mr. Lewis: You would quote Syd Brown in this House on that side?

Mr. Davison: I'm sorry, I didn't see my colleague from Scarborough West in the front bench there. I thought he'd sneaked out for a coffee or something.

Mr. Lewis: There are limits.

Mr. Davison: Then our dear friend, Mr. Brown, goes on to properly identify the problem as the abuse of alcohol.

While we're on the topic of studies, we've heard about a number of studies involving alcohol and young people and the lowering of the drinking age. Could I refer the attention of the member for Essex South to a study done by the Traffic Injury Research Foundation which said: "Lowering the drinking age has no discernible impact in traffic deaths among young drivers in Alberta, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and New Brunswick"? Finally, I bring to his attention the recent vote in the Prince Edward Island Legislature in which, by a free vote, the members decided to maintain the drinking age at 18. The Justice minister of the province said: "Prohibiting 18-year-olds from drinking is a means of finding a scapegoat and at the same time a way of allowing parents and the adult community to shrug off their responsibility in this matter."

The argument that I think has the most credibility is the argument that we will be able to remove alcohol from the high schools, from the hands of the students, by raising the drinking age, and a lot of attention is focused on the Addiction Research Foundation's 1976 survey. It's interesting to note, though, that that survey indicates that 86 per cent of high school students drink although less than 25 per cent are eligible to. From that study and from my own experiences, I can only conclude that the bill is much more likely to have the effect of criminalizing an activity that will continue to go on, rather than removing liquor from the hands of students.

I think that's a negative effect of this bill. I think there are some other negative effects. Unfortunately, some of the critics of this bill have been a bit simple-minded and have said things like, "An 18-year-old can go to war, therefore an 18-year-old should be able to drink," or they have said, "If an 18-year-old can get elected to this House, he would need to drink." Unfortunately that kind of ridicule—

Mr. Samis: If he didn't, he would be driven to it.

Mr. Davison: That's right. Those arguments serve to hide a real and serious consideration buried within, and that is this, what this bill says to 18-year-olds is, "You have shown yourselves to be irresponsible, and therefore we are going to remove the consumption of alcoholic beverages from your legal rights." If 18-year-olds are that irresponsible, then let's remove the rest of those rights that we grant with adulthood. Why should we allow those irresponsible 18-year olds to vote?

An hon. member: If they vote the right way it's okay.

Mr. Davison: Why should we allow that?

Mr. Foulds: Or to be Premier.

Mr. Davison: That's right. We should never allow that. It's a question of trust and, quite frankly, if we can't trust our young people what kind of future do we have?

Mr. Speaker, I want to bring two other things to your attention. In Ontario we have very strict laws governing impaired drivers, and they should be stringently enforced in this province. There should be a police crack-down on drinking drivers, and that would go a long way to reducing the numbers of accidents we have. If our laws aren't strict enough and if our penalties aren't stiff enough, then there are other jurisdictions that have stronger legislation. Let us follow their example, and let us implement that kind of legislation.

I also want to say that I would be in favour of a ban on all liquor advertising, especially that very subtle, very effective lifestyle advertising which is used so cleverly by the liquor industry. I think that would be a positive step and I think it would be a lot more effective in solving the real problem than raising the drinking age to 19.

In conclusion, the bill is, at its best, going to be of limited assistance in reducing alcohol abuse and drinking-driving. It shows what I feel is an unfortunate lack of trust in young adults and I believe it's a poor excuse for the kind of legislation we need to effectively combat the harmful effects of alcohol.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: I want to support this bill. Don't you deter me. You just be careful.

Mr. Jones: I join in the debate, Mr. Speaker, with a sincere recognition of the importance of the legislation proposed by the member for Essex South known as Bill 76. As I listened to the most recent remarks of the member for Hamilton Centre I sort of noticed the type of debate that unfortunately is tending to swirl around the purpose of this bill as proposed to the House.

Some of the discussions I consider to be irrelevant, such as the argument about people being qualified to serve their country in war. How long has it been since the young people of this province have been called to go to war?

[1:15]

Then there's the talk about the fact that young people have the right under the age of majority to vote and hold seats in this House. Indeed that's true, but I would just suggest to the member that it strikes me there's a very great difference.

If some were irresponsible in their voting—voting for the wrong person, I suppose, could have some harmful effects—but they don't become alcoholics, they don't kill themselves and they don't kill others. This is the heart of the issue, as I address the member's bill today.

I fully understand also that the problems of alcohol are not peculiar to the young people; they are but a part of an overall problem affecting all the many age groups. We recognized that in our report from the very outset in the studies that we did in the Youth Secretariat for the advice of government. I believe, though, as we debate this issue, it is important to remember that as legislators we have the responsibility to make our decisions based on those conditions that prevail today, not as they prevailed in 1971 when the age of majority was lowered and thus the reduction of the legal drinking age took effect. This House legislated in good faith then, and they must legislate in good faith now.

There are three major considerations, to my mind, as we approach this decision. I would ask that the members not let them be out of their minds as they approach this crucial decision today.

We know from the most recent study of the highway safety select committee that alcohol-related accidents is the largest single killer of young people under 25 in this province today. We can also look at consumption rates, and I am not going to bandy around a host of statistics, but the fact is that they are all on the increase. They have skyrocketed with young people.

Paramount, thirdly, I believe the effect—yes in our high schools, but indeed at even younger ages than that—the rippling effect so-called—has occurred since the age was reduced. Now younger and younger people are getting into very real problems with alcohol. Talking with ARF and other agencies that advises us, one of the most shocking statistics to my mind is the fact that no less than 16 per cent of the young people in our high school system in a study done in February 1977 were found to be drunk in the previous month.

Mr. Lewis: It says a lot about the school system as well—the stimulation and creativity of the school system. Yes, it's wonderful.

Mr. Jones: We were looking at the school system, and given some 613 young people in that system, that gives us a figure in excess of 100,000. Add to that the potential for tragedy of young people mixing drinking with their driving—as indeed do the other age groups, but particularly the young people as new drivers. I recognize that social pressures are complex for young people, perhaps as never before in our history.

In the Youth Secretariat a part of our study dealt with the pressures of future job insecurity, et cetera, and I know these concerns are very real. I would remind the member for Essex South, as he touched on the report that I had the privilege of presenting, that he should also look at the early stages of the report. There we made a statement that the Youth Secretariat of this government intends “to determine and develop many new initiatives focusing mainly on endeavours in the field of unemployment, career guidance and development, to help improve some of the basic causes that so often are manifesting themselves in young people being involved with alcohol.”

I see the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) here in the front row, and I don't know how he is going to vote on this occasion—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, yes you do. He will vote against the bill. He has got some principle. He is a principled fellow. He is not like I am—

Mr. Turner: Just as well.

Mr. Jones: —but he was the man who introduced in the last budget no less than $68 million of initiatives for young people addressing themselves to their concern about jobs and the need for experience as they look forward to that transition from school to work.

I am constantly amazed about how many people seem to forget just what this peer pressure, that is so often referred to in this debate, consists of and how it fits in with the proposal by this bill as it affects age. There probably is no ideal age, I would think. However, this has to be the one best suited for serving the purpose of helping alleviate alcohol consumption, as it curbs availability in the high school system. You will remember, as when we discussed the change of age in that Youth Secretariat report, there were also 32 recommendations. The age, as has been mentioned by other speakers, was but one recommendation. In answer to a couple of the comments I've heard, I can tell you that the government has initiated certain actions in and attaching to these proposals.

It started with some of the early policy decisions that have come forward. I need only mention such things as the baseball issue and the fact that the government obviously saw some of the effects it would have as it led on into young people's activities, in other parts of their social and, of course, their sporting activity.

Mr. Conway: Very selective judgement.

Mr. Jones: We have never said, from the first, in our report or recommendations that age in itself was a silver bullet and a cure-all to the very real problems that young people are having with alcohol.

But some progress is being made, including recommendations to introduce a probationary rather than a full licence to those between the legal drinking and driving ages, which the appropriate minister has brought forward to this House; the proposal to include photographic identification on driver's licences which, to my mind, will have to come; and the action by the then Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations to bring about the age-of-majority card—the only recognized evidence of age—for the purchase of alcohol at all outlets, has had an effect. From 3,000 cards in circulation, no fewer than some 80,000 have come about. To my mind, that's important in concert with the increase of age that we're talking about in this debate.

All the actions that we must consider need to be done in a very real, sober, reflective and responsible way. In my opinion, the knitting together of each of the various recommendations to strike that proper balance will give the maximum benefit to young people in helping with their alcohol problem as it relates to them. In each of these areas, and I say this scanning over the many recommendations and being familiar with how the government is moving on many—and yes, indeed, there are more that require our attention—there is a complex network of factors going back to the social problems of young people, indeed, in our society as a whole.

But as I said at the outset, given again the problems of today and the involvement of very negative things and the effect they can have on young people, and given what we want for these young people—who are, in my opinion, the most precious natural resource of this province—I'm urging my colleagues in this House to support this bill; I also say this in the context of being an advocate of youth in this province. I want them to have their focus straight, their attention unwavering so that they can attain their goals—with the assistance of the government—and overcome some of the unique pressures that exist for them today.

I believe, through today's debate, we can add one extra year—and a very crucial extra year—in which young people can accentuate the positive future that awaits them, and relieve a lot of that pressure and potential disaster that abuse of alcohol can bring to them in today's demanding society.

I will be supporting this bill, urging my colleagues to reflect most soberly and to recognize, as other speakers have said—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Jones: —that we must continue to push for this whole package of recommendations that the government has in front of it.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I was Leader of the Opposition in 1971 when this House voted, without any significant objection, to support the government initiative to lower the drinking age to 18. I was convinced then that it was the right thing to do. For that reason, I have had to consider very carefully my own personal position as I looked at the facts and figures associated with the result of that decision, and I am now prepared to support the motion put forward by my colleague from Essex South.

My conversion to that point of view took place in the select committee on highway safety when we were visited by a delegation from the Addiction Research Foundation headed by the chairman of a committee, Dr. Reginald Smart. The most vocal proponent of changing the drinking age was Dr. Paul Whitehead. In his researches, and in stating them to the committee he convinced me that a mistake had been made in 1971 and that we should not only rectify it but that we should do it without delay.

It is not my intention to quote from their report extensively, but just two paragraphs from the part that concerned me most deeply. I quote from page 13 of the submission to the committee by the Addiction Research Foundation:

"Extrapolating these figures to all of Ontario, we find that 4,450 automobile collisions would not have occurred in Ontario between August 1971 and July 1972 had the drinking age not been lowered. Other researchers have estimated that 28 persons would not have died in automobile crashes between August 1971 and July 1972 had the drinking age not been lowered. Our data suggest that the cost in lives is greater in succeeding years."

When these people said that to our committee, I realized that I could no longer justify keeping the drinking age at 18. These people were not basing their arguments on anything but the statistical researches which we fund from this House and which we have funded over a number of years.

The Addiction Research Foundation is a world-class organization. As people concerned with highway safety visited our committee, they always referred to that foundation as the kind of facility that they wished they had in their jurisdiction. Well, we have it here, and we have been paying large sums of money to pay for its research and to get its advice.

Frankly, I have objected in the past that their advice seemed to be equivocal. But on this it is quite clear. They were saying that this law is killing young people and that the rate at which its depredations are exerted in the community is increasing and will continue to increase.

It is for this reason, as I have indicated, that my views are in support of the motion. But I am not so naive as to think that the passage of this bill will solve the problems; of course, none of us would be so naive. I would hope, however, that the members of this House who are coming in gradually to take part in the debate and take part in the vote, which we will have shortly, will do so on a basis of conscience, with the understanding that something more than a vote of this House is necessary: if we decide to go forward with raising the drinking age, we should not delay it in any significant way.

I believe the age should be raised. There is some argument as to whether it should be 19 or 20. As we know, the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton) has another bill before the House which would raise it to 20. The only argument for raising it to 20, in my view, involves the high-school situation. The report from the Addiction Research Foundation states—this is the only other quote that I want to give you from the report, Mr. Speaker; and I quote from page 14: "The lowering of the drinking age made the secondary school the prime link between licit and illicit drinkers." We can understand that. I don't have to explain it; I believe that is true.

For that reason, the second aspect of any program to reduce the terrible problems with drinking in general, and particularly in this age group, should lie with getting it out of the high schools if possible. For that reason,

I suppose serious consideration must be given to raising it to 20, not just 19. I believe that 19 would be sufficient; anything higher than that would mean we would simply be increasing the number of people drinking illicitly rather than coming to grips with the problem as we face it. But I am sure other people have other opinions than that.

It could be that a program—which the government undoubtedly is considering and may, in fact, be announcing some time in the near future—must have, as probably the second basis of its goal, to remove drinking from the high schools wherever it is possible. It is here that the connection with the very young people, under 18 down to 12 probably, takes place. If we can use the powers that are at our disposal, then surely we can accomplish something in that regard.

My colleague from Essex South said when this bill is approved—and I trust it will be or something very close to it—we must have a package that is entered into by a number of government ministries at the behest of this House, representing the people of the province. Raising the drinking age is simply the first step to correct mistakes that have been made in the past. The second must be to reinforce the proof of age regulations that we presently have. I think they are effective but they must be reinforced in every way we can through inspection and through the control we have over the retail outlets.

I also believe, and I have stated it in this House now for a number of years, that we can, through the powers that we have, remove the pressures from advertising, particularly television beer advertising, which are impinging on young people more and more. I have heard the arguments put by the advertising lobby that this has never been shown to increase drinking but simply to adjust brand performance. I cannot accept that. I think that that is a most cynical approach to this problem. We, as a Legislature, must take strong steps to remove that unjustifiable pressure from the advertising media, particularly on young people. We normally call it the quality-of-life style of advertising. This is surely the third step.

The fourth one is perhaps less clear and definite. I believe we can use our school systems much more effectively than we have in the past to assist the young people—and we are giving them now an extra year to make up their minds—on what modern drinking actually can be. It does not necessarily have to have the depredations in the community and in the young people that we have seen it does have. A properly constructed curriculum, something that is going to be used in every school and with all of our young people, should be the fourth part of an initiative taken by members in this House to attempt to control a situation that has largely got out of hand.

I close with one last quote from the report to the highway safety committee, on page 12: "We find the following increases in alcohol-related collisions among young male drivers. Alcohol-related collisions increased 162 per cent among 16- and 17-year-olds"—illicit drinkers—"339 per cent among 18-year-olds; 346 per cent among 19-year-olds, and 156 per cent among 20-year-olds. These increases are in marked contrast to the increase of only 20 per cent experienced by 24-year-olds, a category of people not affected by the change in the drinking age."

In summation, I say the statistics provided by the foundation have made it clear that a mistake was made in 1971 and that we can correct it, at least in part, by adopting the bill before us or something close to it. The bill before us, I think, contains the provisions which are fairest and most reasonable in this connection. Beyond that, a package of programs, regulations and intentions must form the policies, not just of the government but of every member of this House speaking for the whole community.

Mr. Young: As I rise to take part in this debate, I realize it is a difficult and very vexed subject, as there are those on both sides of the issue who feel very strongly and who talk in terms of saving life or saving civil rights. There are people with divergent points of view but all, I think, with sincere motivation. Some of us in this party believe this bill should be passed and others that it should not. So we have a division here, as we have, I think, in nearly all parties. But the fact is that the present problem arises right out of the attitudes of society itself.

Do the members remember, during the sixties, we had a real problem with the drug culture? Young people were getting high on all kinds of things. They still are to some extent, but in those days it was a very serious problem. We railed against that and we tried our best to find a way out of it. Finally what we did, I think, was to persuade them as a society that they should drop their drugs for the adult drug of alcohol, which they did with great enthusiasm. Then we lowered the drinking age from 21 to 18, and as a result of that we have a problem which became horrendous in this province and right around the world when this sort of thing happened.

I have in my hand a very definitive study which was done just after the first year of the lowered drinking age in several jurisdictions. This was published in the Journal of Legal Studies, in the University of Chicago Law School, done by several people, one of whom, Leon S. Robertson, some of us have met in the Institute of Highway Safety. This research looked into border states and Ontario, three of which had lowered the drinking age and three of which had not.

I just want to read two or three excerpts. "In the total number of drivers 15 to 17 and 18 to 20 involved in fatal crashes, the statistics rise and fall rather inconsistently in the three years prior to lowering the drinking age. After the law was changed, in both the 15-to-17 and 18-to-20-year-old groups it rose consistently." Then in the night-time and single vehicle crashes, again the proportions show inconsistency in the years just before the decrease in the age, but increased consistently after the change, and that rather sharply. Again in the single vehicle fatal crashes, the proportions involving 18- to 20-year-olds in law-changed states increased significantly, concurrently with the reduction in the legal drinking age in those states.

The conclusion of this study is this, that in this finding in a comparison before and after, the increase in accidents and death occurred not only among the 18- to 20-year-olds to whom the law change applied, but also to a somewhat lesser degree among the 15- to 17-year-olds when alcohol became available legally in the 18-to-20-year-old group. So they say that there can be little doubt that reducing the legal minimum drinking age in a society carries a price-increased fatal motor vehicle collisions.

That was up to the end of 1972. But as we all know at that time, according to all our investigations, the number of crashes involving drinking teenagers and the death rate among those people took off dramatically after that period, and now stands at 37 per cent of all accidents and is increasing at a very great rate.

What I want to say today is, as has already been emphasized, lowering or raising the drinking age does not have as much effect as we might think. But we do say—this is my point of view—that we should now raise it to 19, and along with that should come the package that has already been mentioned by at least two of the members here today.

This is only part of it. We must, of course, get rid of this slick advertising. I don't think any of us realized, when we lowered the age to 18, that the industry concerned with the sale and use of alcohol would move in in such a dramatic way as it did and, through the skilful lifestyle advertising, brainwash not only the teenagers but every youngster who is watching television.

This industry was building up in a whole generation an attitude that only by the use of alcohol could happiness, good times, all that's good in life, be attained, and the two became linked irrevocably in so many of our young people. When the time came when they could legally drink, and even before it, they were reaching out for that joy-giver, that happiness-broker, which was promising to them the great quality which life could give them. That has to be one of the steps that has to be taken.

The probationary licence which has been spoken about is essential. Let our new drivers earn their right to solo, to get a permanent licence. They need careful supervision during that period—supervision, as I said before in this House, which is sympathetic but which is tough, so that we have some assurance when they get their licences that they know how to drive and drive well.

Along with that should be a very intense stepping up of our driver instruction and the training of our driver instructors, as well as, in the third place, a very tough test at the provincial level when these people come to sit those tests.

Then I think our law enforcement agents have to do the thing which has been recommended by the select committee on highway safety: young people who are caught driving under the legal age should have the licence suspended for at least three months and then their probationary period extended perhaps by another year if the court so decides. In other words, there has to be a tough enforcement of that law.

Also, we must have the equipment in the hands of the police, the ALERT devices, the breathalysers, which can, on proper occasions, rule the person off the road when he does not have the full 0.08 blood alcohol content but he becomes dangerous, so the police with these devices can prevent an accident occurring. We think this is a vital part of this whole business.

The high incidence of drinking is from Friday evening sundown until Sunday morning some time—2 or 3 o'clock in the morning. That's the period when police forces should be out there and when there should be much more careful supervision, along with the ID cards, in the drinking locations, so that young people leaving the taverns are apprehended before they get out there and cause the difficulty.

I know that it's not only young people who cause accidents, but don't forget this—and this I want to stress—we give the young person the chance to drive at 16 and then a chance to use alcohol at 18. Unfortunately, starting at 16, his accident rate does not drop until it is down to the average until about 20, but it does drop significantly from 18 to 19. He's much more mature at 19. He can't handle the alcohol as well at 18 as he can at 19 perhaps, that's true, but also he can handle the motor car much better at 19 than he can at 18.

Mr. Eaton: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the principle of the bill of the member for Essex South, and that's the principle of raising the age at which a person can legally drink alcoholic beverages.

As you know, as was mentioned by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, I've introduced a bill suggesting the age should be 20.

My reason for doing this is an attempt to get the legal drinking of alcohol beverages out of the high schools. I know there are many who feel that raising the age to 19 will accomplish that, but if one follows the natural course of events through school to grade 13, there are many students who turned 19 between January 1 and the time they graduate in the grade-13 year.

I will therefore move an amendment to the bill in committee to bring about a vote on the age of 20 and give the members of the House the opportunity to vote on that age at the same time.

Mr. Riddell: Maybe we could do away with grade 13, though.

Mr. Eaton: My reason for going to 20 is not just to deprive those in that 18- and 19-year group the privilege of being allowed to drink alcoholic beverages, but it's to try to make it less available to those younger people who are getting it illegally. If those in the 18- and 19-year-old group can get it legally then, naturally, it's going to come in contact with the younger ages because of parties, et cetera, that they will be involved in together. The peer pressures to share with their friends under those circumstances are tremendous. I think this will remove that temptation.

Let us not kid ourselves. Some will still get alcoholic beverages illegally as they have always done, but I assure the House the incidence will be less. The fact that they still want to get it and will get it, I think, points out a far greater complexity of problems that we must face.

Many recognize there are other problems and are calling for action. The vast majority of people are calling for action simply by raising the drinking age. I believe we must address ourselves to some of the other complexities, the whys of the desire of the young people to want to drink illegally. Perhaps it's the lifestyle advertising that's been mentioned. I think we should take a look at it and see how we can control it. In fact, maybe it's more than just the advertising. It's been mentioned that if you watch some of the TV programs carefully, it's a normal thing to see a reference made during the program, "Let's have a drink."

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has one minute.

Mr. Eaton: The fact that some will knowingly provide alcoholic beverages points up a need to look at the penalties, to look at the enforcement and, probably, to look at the educational end of it. I know we have had much support to increase it to 20. The support comes from the school boards. I think they can take a role in the educational part of it.

In regard to the total area of alcohol, we must review many of the things involved, perhaps the age of majority. Those students who are responsible and who have handled the situation do not seem to object to the age being raised, and perhaps even the age of majority too. So I therefore ask you to support this bill, to support the amendment which I will put to it in committee, and to join together to get on with dealing with the other problems associated with it.

Mr. Speaker: There are two items of business before us at the present time.

Mr. Pope moved second reading of Bill 82, An Act to amend the Ontario Food Terminal Act.

All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye." All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

Mr. Speaker: I understand from the course of the debate that the pattern of voting on Bill 76 will not follow party lines. Therefore, I propose to alter our system of voting somewhat. As I put the last question, I will ask all members who are in favour of the motion or who are opposed to the motion to rise together and remain standing until the Clerk has called their names. It is my hope that this will avoid the possibility of confusion.

The House divided on the motion for second reading of Bill 76, An Act to amend the Liquor Licence Act, which was approved on the following vote:

AYES	NAYS
Ashe	Birch
Auld	Breaugh
Baetz	Breithaupt
Bennett	Bryden

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Ordered for third reading.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: Before the House adjourns for what I know will be a busy, but I hope a reflective, weekend for all members, may I draw to the attention of members concerned that all committee chairmen, the House leaders and whips are requested to meet with me in committee room 1 at 11:30 a.m. Monday morning to discuss the business of the House? I hope all of those mentioned will make themselves available.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, prior to the adjournment, may I now take this opportunity to discuss the business of the House for next week?

Tomorrow being the day of remembrance, we will pause to reflect upon the significance of those events.

Next week, in addition to the committee meetings which are well advertised on the notice board, perhaps we could go directly to the legislative program for next Tuesday, when we will do Bill 99, Bill 98 and Bill 70. If the House has dealt with those three pieces of legislation and time remains, it is understood we will then revert to the first order and discuss the budgetary policy of the government.

On Thursday afternoon, private members' business will include the bill standing in the name of the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) and the member for Durham East (Mr. Cureatz). The House sits, of course, Monday, Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 2 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1977

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. S. Smith: I will withhold my questions until the ministers arrive, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: That sounds pretty good.

Mr. Kerrio: I think we're wearing them down.

Mr. Nixon: Maybe we ought to adjourn for a little while.

ORAL QUESTIONS

USE OF MEDICAL DATA

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health has arrived in the House and I could direct a question to him.

Could the minister tell us whether he has any information to announce concerning today's story in the Globe and Mail about RCMP alleged access to and alleged use of OHIP data? Can he give us any indication of how such information might have been obtained, if indeed it has been obtained?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I intend to discuss this with the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) who, as you know, is the contact on such matters relating to the RCMP. But, from the information in this morning's paper, it is difficult to be certain of the period which is being discussed. If it were pre-1972, then of course that is pre-OHIP. It could go back to the days when a good portion, if not the lion's share, of the claims being processed in the province were, in fact, being processed by private carriers. In effect, what I am saying is the report is so skimpy in detail that it is difficult to know in any precise way what it is they are saying, but I will be taking it up with the Attorney General.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, again I would have asked this of the Attorney General had he been here:

Is the minister able to tell us whether his investigation, or the Attorney General's investigation, includes the ministry procedures by which information on psychiatric patients is sent to Statistics Canada, particularly those procedures in which, as the minister knows, OHIP numbers are taken from the admission and discharge records of persons in psychiatric units in general hospitals and actually sent, unscrambled, to Stats Canada, and until this year, the first 10 letters of the surname and the initials were also sent? Can the minister assure us, or can he look into, whether or not these procedures have been in some way responsible for the availability of information at Stats Canada, and whether it is that information which perhaps, among others, the RCMP has been able to get hold of?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think, Mr. Speaker, if that were the case, it would have been reported. But let me refer you—perhaps one of your staff can get it for you—to the submission which we made to the commission on privacy in July of this year wherein we indicated that for the purposes of statistical collection and dissemination, we are very careful not to transmit to Stats Canada any information by which the identity of the individual can be determined. I'm talking about current. I can't talk about previous. I'll only account for my own activities, but I think this has been the case, really, since quite a number of years into my predecessor's time.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: May I ask the minister what has happened to the inquiry or investigation or whatever it might be called which he launched into the apparent running through the OHIP computer, as a joke, of the identification of given diseases and the people who had been treated for them which would then be matched and obviously available for reasons analogous to those allegedly used by the RCMP?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, this is going back to last winter. The allegation, as I recall it, was that the VD file had been run on a weekend by some unauthorized person. I believe that was the allegation. My staff has checked the files all the way back through last winter and particularly for weekends, because that was the allegation. We can find no indication of unauthorized access to the VD information. The 50 million files of OHIP, and there are 50 million files on the tape, are being scrutinized. As well, we have the Ontario Provincial Police involved to assist in the investigation.

I indicated at the time that we would bring in outside computer security experts as required, and this we will do—

Mr. Lewis: But the minister hasn't done it yet?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —I don't believe we've got them on the job yet. I could be wrong on that, but I don't believe they are on the job yet—to try to pinpoint whether or not it did happen, and if so, how. First of all, if we can pinpoint who, if it has happened, we can take corrective action in that regard, and also as far as the system is concerned.

May I say that, given the concern I have about the VD program, and I think we all share this, we've got a long way to go in developing confidence among the people affected, particularly among the certain young groups affected. I almost hope that something did happen, because with all this hubbub it would be a shame if we found out that it did not happen, in fact, and that we have, through this process, discouraged people from coming forward and naming contacts and so forth.

Mr. Roy: I wonder if I could ask the minister if he will confirm, as Minister of Health, first of all, that any information, records and so on accumulated by his ministry is confidential, and under provincial statute it is not permissible to release any of this information, except for specific purposes? Secondly, can he assure the House as Minister of Health that this type of information is not released to any police agencies as a matter of routine, whether it be the RCMP or anybody else?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I can certainly confirm the former, and as regards the latter, my understanding of the statute and the advice of legal counsel in the ministry is that there are no provisions to release routinely, as the member says, any such information to any law agency.

Mr. Roy: Could I ask this further supplementary: Could the minister also give the House an assurance that there are no so-called paid informers within his ministry who are releasing this information?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I wish I could say that, but one never knows what individuals are up to. One only has to look at the flow of brown envelopes. As a matter of fact, a review of the security systems in OHIP had begun some time before the initial allegation appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail as regards the venereal disease files, and we are constantly reviewing them and trying, wherever possible, to update them to ensure that, even given oaths of confidence, oaths of loyalty and so forth, we have a reasonable set of checks and balances to ensure that information does not get out.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: I don't know if we have any information as to whether the Attorney General will be returning later. The House leader says he will be. I'll wait for him. Thank you. I'll come back in the rotation later.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition—the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Lewis: The New Democratic Party. You remember that party, Mr. Speaker. You have had a certain casual relationship with it from time to time yourself, sir.

Hon. Mr. Welch: He's trying to forget it.

Mr. Lewis: He's not doing badly.

FIBREGLASS EXPOSURE

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Minister of Labour if she has read the observations by Dr. Samuel Epstein about the dangers of exposure to fiberglass and the suggestion that it may turn out to be every bit as hazardous as asbestos on the testing we've done so far? Can I ask the minister, have we done any testing in the province of Ontario? Have we any sense of the number of workers who may be exposed to the substance?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge we have not done any specific testing within the government in the province of Ontario. I am not sure that there has not been some carried on through at least one of the educational institutions, but that I would have to check.

Yes, I have read Dr. Epstein's remarks. I was aware of this concern about two years ago, and there has been a study launched in the United States of a rather massive size, which is investigating those workers who have been directly involved with the use of fiberglass, in insulation particularly, which is ongoing at this time and the results of that have not as yet been published.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, is the minister satisfied that whatever standards have been set in the province of Ontario are being tightly monitored and met? Or have we a threshold limit value which we impose at least as a guideline?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I'm not sure of that, Mr. Speaker. I will have to check to be sure.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I too would like to wait for either the Attorney General or the Solicitor General.

OHIP OFFICE CLOSURE

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health. In the light of the fact that the Windsor OHIP office was considered the second most efficient and most productive of all OHIP offices in Ontario, and also that it was the birthplace of prepaid health insurance in North America—

Hon. B. Stephenson: Oh no it wasn't; AMS was.

Mr. B. Newman: —how does the minister rationalize the closing of that office?

[2:15]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would look at the information which was released, it's a simple matter that the London office has the capacity in terms of space and equipment to do the job for the Windsor area as well, whereas the reverse wasn't true. As the hon. member knows, a number of the staff at present employed in Windsor have been offered positions in London—

Mr. B. Newman: Not yet.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —or will be, to take up the slack. It is a straight cost-saving measure.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker, if I may: Did the minister consult with the Windsor and Essex county district health council before he arrived at a decision, or did he bypass the health council?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, this is one of the few things that would not come under the purview of any district health council. It's a straight administrative matter of the ministry.

Mr. Cooke: I would like to ask the minister if he consulted with the union and the management involved, and if he didn't, why didn't he consult with these people before he made his decision? Secondly, I'd like to ask the minister if he took into consideration the decrease in the service that will no doubt happen through this centralization of service. We all know what happened when the Workmen's Compensation Board was centralized, and that's exactly what we're afraid of happening here.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If it were the case that we were talking about closing all of the, what is it, 10 regional offices of OHIP—

Mr. B. Newman: You would save more money that way.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —that would certainly lead to the analogy with the WCB which the member is trying to portray. That's not the case at all. In fact, I have every reason to believe the opposite with regard to the allegation that the service will decrease. Given the distances involved and given the capacity already present in the London office, I have no reason to believe that the service to the individual patient, person, or to the practitioners will decrease. We will maintain the office with a small staff—I think it's five—to continue to disseminate information to both the public and practitioners, but there's no reason to believe that the service will diminish.

The head of the human relations branch did contact the union prior to the announcement going out. The hon. member is quite right in that there was not a consultation in the sense of saying, "What do you think? Should we do it?" The answer to that would be obvious. This is a matter in which the ministry is responsible for ensuring that wherever possible it restrain its spending. In addition to fairly significant reductions in staff over the last two or three years, mainly through attrition, we are looking at every branch of the ministry to see if we can't find other ways to save money and also maintain service.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the minister could table in the House information concerning the number of staff in London who handled 4.8 million claims as compared to the number of staff in Windsor who handled two million claims; and where he is going to save the $500,000? Finally, how does this centralization program compare with the decentralization program that the minister announced just before the election when he shipped all those jobs out to Kingston?

Mr. McEwen: They're not at Kingston yet.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Neither has the member for Frontenac-Addington been there recently.

Mr. Wildman: That would add a lot!

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The decentralization is still in effect. We are not pulling that back into Toronto or indicating that it will go to Kingston when the OHIP headquarters moves there in the next three years. It is still decentralized in southwestern Ontario. I missed part of the hon. member's question, but I'll pick it up from Hansard and give the member the information.

Mr. Speaker: One final supplementary, the hon. member for Essex North.

Mr. Ruston: How can the minister rationalize the closing of one of the most efficient offices when he has the staff and the manager from Windsor Medical, the founder of Medicare in Canada?

Mr. Martel: The CCF did that.

Mr. Ruston: It's the most efficient office the minister has and he closes it. He's got to be stupid.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: You don't have to be, but some days it helps.

I indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, that the London office has the capacity, in terms of space and machinery, to absorb the workload and the number of people who will be offered jobs from Windsor to go to London, whereas the reverse isn't the case—

Mr. Nixon: Even Frank Miller didn't do that.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —and the communication lines are such that it would be better, if we're going to try to save money, to pull back into London for southwestern Ontario rather than having the two.

Mr. B. Newman: What have you got against Windsor?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Nothing.

USE OF INFLUENCE

Mr. S. Smith: If I may, Mr. Speaker, reverting to my question of the Attorney General, was he quoted correctly in the Toronto Star when he allegedly said: "Obviously we were seriously contemplating the laying of criminal charges against Armstrong"? Did he have the evidence at that time that Mr. Armstrong had requested payment of $25,000 for what he told Mr. Davies were—and I quote again from that paper—"the savings made because you were able to proceed so much earlier than you originally had anticipated"? If so, if he did have that evidence, why did he not lay charges under section 110(1)(d) of the Criminal Code?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, this decision was made prior to my arrival in the office of the Attorney General but I'm relatively familiar with the file on the matter. The matter of charges was reviewed by most of the senior law officers in the criminal division of the Ministry of the Attorney General at 18 King Street East. It was their considered opinion not to lay charges.

I don't have their opinion in front of me at the moment, and I'm not going to attempt to trust my memory to paraphrase it, but I was satisfied, given the individuals who reviewed it separately. It wasn't a decision made by one or two individuals; it was at least three or four of the most senior people in the criminal division who reviewed the matter separately. They gave an opinion, as I recall, at the end of September 1975, that in all likelihood criminal charges would not succeed.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of a supplementary, I think the House might be curious, at least in some part, as to why the evidence was insufficient, could the Attorney General undertake to table in the House a copy of all the opinions he received from his advisers or senior law officers with regard to the decision as to whether or not to lay charges against Mr. Armstrong?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, I will give no such undertaking to the House. For many years it's been the tradition not to table opinions of law officers of the Crown, particularly as they pertain to criminal matters. Furthermore, in so far as this particular situation is concerned, again one must look at the facts and decide what facts have been determined and what facts haven't been determined.

I will say this to the hon. Leader of the Opposition. I will review the opinion again and see whether there is further information I can usefully advise the House in relation to it without unfairly prejudicing individuals who have not been charged or without unfairly prejudicing individuals in relation to which certain facts have not been established.

I want to emphasize the fact that this matter was reviewed very carefully by people in whose expertise I have the greatest confidence.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary subsequent to my leader's questions? First of all, would the Attorney General agree that there is no limitation period on the laying of such charges? Secondly, when it comes to opinions, I can understand that the Attorney General can't table them but would he not agree that one sometimes can get a variety of opinions about a certain conclusion in law on a certain set of facts? We all make mistakes, as he knows.

Third, since he has a new Deputy Attorney General, would he undertake to submit the facts to the present Deputy Attorney General for his opinion? Finally, what is it about the officials within his ministry and their great reluctance ever to lay any charges under section 110 of the Criminal Code?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't have anything further to add to what I have already said. I am satisfied that the matter was properly reviewed at the time. While I have great confidence in the ability of the new Deputy Attorney General, I am totally satisfied that the matter was properly reviewed and dealt with at that time.

Mr. Nixon: Would the minister not agree that it is of great importance that the members of the House be satisfied that they too are in possession of the information that is just now being made public through the articles in the Toronto Star, particularly since it involves the Treasurer, it involves the judgement of the Attorney General, both now and previously, as to whether or not a commission investigation should have been permitted to go on in Mississauga, and as to whether or not charges should have been laid? Does the minister recall this matter being raised in this very first estimates when similar questions were asked the minister and even at that time the information was not forthcoming?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't think I have anything to add to what I have already stated. I recall the Mississauga inquiry was the subject of some questions from the hon. member opposite, the former leader of the Liberal Party. I will review the decision that was made at that time and will advise the House, certainly prior to the end of the week, whether there is any additional information that should be made known to the members of the House in the public interest. I will endeavour to do that.

ACTIVITIES OF RCMP

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I too would like to go to the Attorney General on a separate matter. On the assumption that there may be some truth to the stories about the RCMP and the perusal of medical files, what in the world can the minister do in this province to ascertain whether or not there was such a shocking breach of confidentiality by the RCMP? Is there any way that that information can be elicited by him either by way of direct inquiry from the force or by way of initiating an inquiry on his own?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I have communicated a request to O Division, RCMP, in Ontario, to request a report from them in relation to the report that was contained in the Globe and Mail this morning. I have not yet had an opportunity of discussing it with the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) and I certainly intend to do that. As to what further action might be appropriate, I think we will simply have to await their initial response.

Mr. Lewis: I ask by way of supplementary and with a certain frustration, did not the minister himself feel dissatisfied in the assurances which the RCMP has given him on previous matters—and his colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. MacBeth), equally? How does one get to the heart of their activities as they affect the government of the province of Ontario, without making certain demands on them for the production of material? Can he do that as the Attorney General in this province? Can he demand it of them rather than going through the federal Solicitor General or Minister of Justice?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have no legal authority to require them to produce this material. Any information that I have elicited or requested in the past has always been forthcoming. Short of constituting an inquiry for that purpose, that would be the only way in which a provincial Attorney General could compel the production of any documents. But as I say, I think it's too premature to speculate as to whether that would be an appropriate course of action at this time.

[2:30]

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary: If the words attributed to the minister are accurate—I think the word was “distressed” at the reports—and if he is not satisfied by the information flowing back to him on his various requests about RCMP activities, does that remain a live option with him—the possibility of an inquiry as more of this comes to light and he is frustrated by the absence of specifics?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think that option is always a live option in these matters, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: If I had asked him if it was a dead option, would he have answered the same?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would probably have said it was not a dead option.

QUEEN STREET MENTAL HEALTH CENTRE

Mr. Duksza: A question for the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker: Will the minister confirm that there are now 54 fewer certified positions in the complement at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre, and that 19 workers on contract have been terminated?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am sorry, I missed the last part of the question, but I got the gist of it and I will get the member the figures for the Queen Street Mental Health Centre; also, of course, the patient load as well, to see how they relate.

Mr. Duksza: I am sorry, I didn't hear the minister's answer. He didn't hear my question and I didn't hear his answer.

Mr. Speaker: He said he would get the information for the member.

Mr. Duksza: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware that the administrator of the Queen Street Mental Health Centre announced those things on Thursday morning?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: There were some layoffs in different parts of the ministry on Thursday, but I haven't got the list with me as to how many were in which parts of the ministry. I will get that information for the member.

HEALTH OF SENIOR CITIZENS; FLOODING AT NURSING HOME

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If I may, Mr. Speaker, I have two answers.

Last week the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) stated in the Legislature that each senior citizen in nursing homes and other institutions in the province receives an average six to nine medications per day. The hon. member's statement needs clarification, since the facts are somewhat different.

The Ontario Drug Benefit Plan reimburses pharmacists for prescription drugs applied to residents of the province's nursing homes and homes for the aged. From the claim status submitted after computerized reports are routinely produced, records show that for the six months ending August 31, 1977, residents of nursing homes and homes for the aged in Ontario received an average of 2.8 medications per person per month—or prescriptions if you will. These could be taken once a day, twice a day, or up to six times a day, depending on the reason they are being taken in the first place.

It is possible that there may be seriously ill patients who receive as many as six medications per day. However, the prescribing of medications throughout this province is the responsibility of the attending physician, and this is a matter of professional judgement.

The second question, Mr. Speaker: Last Monday I was asked by the hon. member for Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke) to look into an incident at the Greater Windsor Nursing Home, which I believe is in his riding.

I have done so and it would appear that while a sewer backed up on the floor of this nursing home, the results were somewhat less serious than originally suggested. No one at that nursing home slept in rooms flooded with six inches of raw sewage the night of November 5. In fact, as soon as water backing up from an overflowed toilet began to enter the only occupied room on that floor, the four residents were moved up to the main floor sitting room where beds had been prepared for them.

The nursing home administrator had difficulty in contacting the maintenance man, and since there was just a small puddle of water on the floor, the washroom was simply closed. By morning, however, the situation had worsened. The maintenance man called a plumber; some roots in the sewer system were removed and appropriate cleaning procedures were carried out in the washroom, the hall, and the room used for the four residents.

This incident has been thoroughly investigated and the site visited by both the local medical officer of health and the chief public health inspector in the metro Windsor-Essex county health unit, as well as by an environmental health inspector and the regional nursing supervisor for my ministry's nursing home inspection service.

Other than to suggest the administrator of the nursing home might have acted more promptly in correcting the problem and in advising the ministry, neither my staff nor the local health unit staff found cause for complaint.

We will register our concern about these matters with the licensee and will reiterate our requirements regarding notification to my ministry of incidents of this nature. Nursing home administrators are required by section 91-5 of regulation 406/76 under the Nursing Homes Act to notify the ministry promptly of all emergencies, such as fires, accidents and outbreaks of communicable diseases.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary: In view of the fact that many people who work in these nursing homes advise members like myself that there are many citizens in the nursing homes receiving a great deal of medication, more than what the minister has announced to the House today, would it be possible to have some of the minister's staff check the records of individual nursing homes to see for themselves if there are abuses?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: This would be one of the matters looked at during the nursing inspection of the homes. But certainly if the hon. member has any particular home or homes in mind, I would ask him to let me know and I'll ensure that that is done.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Health if, in his reply, he did state that these nursing home inspectors contacted the medical officer of health and the inspector? If so, is the information that he has given us today from those people? I might suggest that if it is, somehow the minister has got the wrong information, because his statement is totally incorrect.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Was that a question?

Mr. Lewis: Yes. How do you get such bad information in your ministry?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the staff of the inspection branch were, in fact, in touch with the medical officer of health, Dr. Jones. This was after several visits there and on-site inspections by our staff as well, as I mentioned in the answer.

If the member has information which is different from that, let him convey it to me, and short of making a personal visit—he knows I can't visit all these places—

Mr. Warner: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'll check out whatever additional facts he has.

Mr. Cooke: Final supplementary: I'd like to ask the Minister of Health why, when the environmental inspector went out to this nursing home, didn't he automatically contact Dr. Jones and the chief inspector? Why did it take me to have to call the London office to insist that they contact these people? Why don't they do their job properly in the first place?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the member may not know, it is not the responsibility of the local health unit to inspect nursing homes. That was taken away from the health units about five years ago.

Mr. Cooke: You've got nobody in Windsor. They are all in London.

MUNICIPAL PARKS AND RECREATION PROJECTS

Mr. Bradley: A question for the Minister of Housing, Mr. Speaker. The minister has indicated to municipalities that he wishes to see high-density developments taking place or being allowed, in order to provide low-cost housing. In the light of this fact, is the minister now concerned about the present practice of the Ontario Municipal Board of discouraging, vetoing or delaying public parks and recreation projects which would be considered necessities, rather than frills, in light of the circumstances with high-density housing?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I can't indicate whether or not the Ontario Municipal Board has, in fact, been taking this position. I have not received any indication from municipalities that they were at all concerned.

If the hon. member can let me have incidents in municipalities where this may have happened, I would like to look at it. But I'm afraid I can't comment on decisions the OMB may have made in various municipalities.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: It has been suggested to the Ontario Municipal Board by the provincial Treasurer or someone in the provincial government that it should be discouraging projects of a recreational and parks nature, that these are low on priorities. Therefore the OMB is forcing municipalities to advertise them, or it is rejecting them and forcing further information, a delaying tactic. This is the practice, I'm sure, across Ontario. It certainly is in the city of St. Catharines.

So I suppose what I'm asking you as a supplementary, as well, would be: Would you not consider these something other than a low priority where you have high density, in light of the fact that parks and recreation projects tend to discourage crime and social unrest? Would you not consider these more of a priority than the OMB is presently suggesting?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I think it goes without saying that most municipalities establish within their own communities what they feel is a fair ratio of parks and recreation facilities according to the population. In many areas where they are increasing densities, they will take into account the number of recreational facilities, the number of parks that they should have.

I can't comment on whether or not the Ontario Municipal Board has been advised, or it has been suggested to it, that it should place these on a low priority. I frankly had not heard that. I would hope the OMB would make its decisions based upon what is best for a particular municipality, not upon whether or not it has been told to put it on the low priority list.

Mr. Bradley: A final supplementary on this: If the minister were to determine that this is indeed the case, that on the suggestion of the provincial government or the Treasurer or someone of that nature, they are generally ruling that they should be low priority, would the minister undertake then to suggest to the Ontario Municipal Board that they should not be a low priority—if indeed that's the case?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, you may rest assured that I do not at any time make suggestions to the Ontario Municipal Board.

ACTIONS OF POLICE AT BURLINGTON

Mr. Deans: I have a question for the Solicitor General. Am I correct in assuming that the Halton police force and the police commission of that area have in fact now asked the Ontario Police Commission to investigate the allegations of brutality that have been emanating from a number of lawyers in the area? If I am correct in that assumption, would the Solicitor General undertake to have the police commission review not only those particular allegations, but also to review the comments of one Mr. Murden, who was previously a police officer with the force. Secondly, would he review other allegations which have been placed before the police commission in the Halton area over the last, say, four years to determine whether or not what is now happening, assuming it is borne out by the information that is placed before it, has not been a matter of practice and acceptable to the police force?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I have the reply to a question that the member asked last week that may give the answer to some of those questions.

Last Wednesday the member for Wentworth asked about alleged brutality by the Halton regional police force. There have been four cases of alleged brutality brought to the attention of the chief of the Halton regional police force.

One case was investigated by the OPP at the request of the Crown attorney. The finding was that there was no evidence to support the allegations and the Halton police were cleared of any wrongdoing.

Mr. Lewis: The police investigating the police. Very useful.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: The three other cases were investigated by the Halton police. One was found to be substantiated and has resulted in one police officer being charged under the Police Act.

The procedure for the handling of complaints as recommended by the Ontario Police Commission is in effect in Halton and is in fact contained in the bylaws of the force. Roy Murden, who was recently quoted in the press, spent some 10 years on the force, having joined the Oakville department prior to regionalization. He is now a civilian and is therefore not subject to disciplinary procedures under the Police Act.

The police authorities are not in possession of any evidence that would warrant criminal proceedings being instituted. The Ontario Police Commission and the Halton board of police commissioners are meeting later this week to discuss the whole matter. After this meeting the Ontario Police Commission will decide what, if any, further action will be necessary.

I think that last paragraph probably answers the first questions the member raised as to whether or not the OPC had been asked by the Halton police to conduct an investigation. They are meeting, as I say, later this week and we will see what comes out of that and I can report back to the House later.

Last Wednesday the member for Wentworth asked a supplementary question having to do with the suggestion that he had earlier brought to the attention of the Solicitor General some complaints about the Halton regional police force. We looked for them and didn't find that either in correspondence or questions in the House. So if the member will give me some further information I'll try to track that down.

Mr. Deans: Supplementary question, if I may: Will the minister consult with his colleague the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) and determine whether or not there should be an investigation into the allegations made by Mr. Murden—or the suggestions, I suppose—the confessions made by Mr. Murden that he engaged in fairly severe brutal methods in order to obtain for himself and for the police whatever it was that he thought his job was—an investigation either by the Crown attorney's office in the event that it is no longer within the jurisdiction of the OPC, or by the Ontario Police Commission, to determine whether or not there should be some charges laid or some follow-up?

Will he do this not only in the case of Mr. Murden? Will the minister also investigate complaints laid by citizens with the Halton police commission over the last four years to determine whether what we are seeing now is simply an opening up to the public of something that may well have been there for some long time?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: In answering the second question first: Yes, I'll be glad to review what kind of complaints have been laid against the police in Halton and see whether or not there has been a sloughing off or insufficient examination into those complaints.

Regarding the first question, I don't know of any evidence against Murden, other than his own admissions, which were in the press—

Mr. Deans: Don't you think that is interesting?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I do, and I am upset by them, of course. Again, it's his own word in connection with it. I read those reports after the hon. member drew them to my attention and, as I say, I was quite concerned that a former police officer would make that kind of statement.

In any event, if the police can be of assistance in gathering necessary evidence,

I will have them do so. But, of course, whether or not charges can be laid at this point will be at the discretion of the Attorney General and his staff.

ASSESSMENT EXEMPTIONS

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Revenue. In view of the concern that Ontarians feel about the conservation of energy and in view of the fact that it was reported last week that a Mr. Stan Cattroll was going to be assessed an extra $95 for insulating his basement, I was wondering whether the Minister of Revenue would consider exempting the insulation of homes from additional assessment?

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Mr. Speaker, our regulations and the Act itself have been amended to provide for those things which will be exempt under the Act, and the list is a very generous one.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Will the minister assure us that the installation of insulation in homes is going to be exempt so that we can put some truth in the matter that we want to conserve energy?

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Mr. Speaker, I think the member is misdirecting or not couching his question correctly. I think he is referring to assessment requirements, is he not?

Mr. Roy: The problem is not with the question; it is with the answer.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: If so, it does not come under income tax.

Mr. S. Smith: It has nothing to do with income tax. It's about assessment.

Mr. Foulds: We're talking about assessment. Put your hearing aid on.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary; the hon. member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the minister is in charge of assessment—

Mrs. Campbell: She doesn't know that.

Mr. Reed: Nor does she know what is on the list.

Mr. Epp: I would like to reiterate my question to ask her whether, in view of the fact that her officials are putting additional assessment on homes where people are insulating their basements and putting in insulation to conserve energy, she would consider exempting the insulation from the assessment portion of the home?

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Mr. Speaker, certain insulating materials now are exempt. I think the member is probably aware of that. As for adjusting the assessment for homes that now are insulated, I don't think that's true.

Mr. Warner: They should put the minister back in charge of Christmas cards. She did a great job there.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Algonoma with a supplementary.

Mr. Wildman: Could the minister indicate whether or not solar collectors are on that long list, the generous list of exemptions?

Mr. Roy: That's not a supplementary.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: That is away off the question, Mr. Speaker, but I will be pleased to answer. Quite a bit of equipment involved with the creation of solar heating now is exempt.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for London Centre with an absolutely final supplementary.

Mr. Peterson: In fairness, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. minister has the whole thing confused. I think what we are asking is about exemptions not for sales tax purposes but for assessment purposes. The original question was whether insulation materials would be exempted and the second question was whether renewable energy devices such as solar energy devices would be exempted for assessment purposes. What is the answer to that question, please?

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Under both statutes, certain equipment and insulating material is most definitely exempt.

Mr. S. Smith: Exempt from what? Assessment?

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: I said that earlier in response to an earlier question.

Mr. Lewis: Why don't you just say, "I don't know?"

Mr. Warner: I have a question of the Treasurer. Perhaps we'll have better luck this time.

TAXI REGULATIONS

Mr. Warner: Does the Treasurer realize that he has the opportunity to stop the pirating practice of over 200 cabs in Metro Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: He flies; he never drives.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Do I realize?

Mr. Warner: Yes.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No.

Mr. Warner: Okay, supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister realize that what is needed to stop the daily pirating practice by 200 cabs in Toronto, is a change in the Municipal Act, so that the municipality would have the right to license taxis at the point of pickup? Further, when the Treasurer told me in June this year that he would be meeting with the taxi drivers in July, did he have a particular year in mind, as they have not yet heard from him?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is "no"; to the second part, "yes."

Mr. Martel: Well, what year?

Mr. Breaugh: Which year?

Mr. Foulds: In the fullness of time.

Mr. Warner: July of 1977 has gone by.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the member might like to redirect his question to the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) when he is here. He has been examining that whole question.

Mr. Warner: And the Attorney General?

Mr. Lewis: Ask the Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Foulds: Ask her what year it is.

Mr. Warner: When they've got their act together over there, perhaps the Treasurer could indicate to me when he's going to meet with the taxi drivers and how he is going to solve the problem. They have been waiting almost two years now for an answer from the government.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat that the hon. member might ask that question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications, who may or may not have met with the taxi owners.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, they should leave you stranded at the airport.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: At any rate it seems to be his area of concern. I believe he's been having some discussions with the Minister of Transport for Canada on this subject.

Mr. Peterson: He doesn't understand about taxi drivers.

HALNOR HOUSE

Mr. G. I. Miller: I have a question of the Minister of Health: Can the de-tox centres or the rehabilitation centres expect funding in 1977-78 for the purpose of keeping them operating, particularly Halnor House in Simcoe? Can it expect funding for 1977-78?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I believe that Halnor House is one of those which has been receiving funding from the grants in aid committee of the ministry, whose terms of reference are very clear in that the maximum number of years for which funding is available is three, and Halnor House is currently in its third year. The purpose of this program is, of course, to allow such programs to establish themselves and to develop community sources of revenue, and, thereby, become self-sufficient.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister not feel that in the three-year period, such centres have been a useful function to the community and have cut down the cost to his ministry and particularly hospitals, and that they should have some consideration as far as funding is concerned?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I'm not familiar with the particular program at Halnor House. I haven't seen it; I haven't seen a description of it.

Mr. Martel: Oh, it's good.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: But I've explained the terms of reference under which moneys have been asked for and given. If the member would like to send me a letter explaining the circumstances as to why they either haven't gone about raising funds in the community or can't—unfortunately, far too often it's the case that they haven't—then we can take a look at it.

Mr. Haggerty: They need a lottery.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: There are many projects around the province which we have routinely been getting off the ground and which are now self-sufficient.

Mr. G. I. Miller: One more supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I think that Halnor House is getting considerable funding from the municipality, perhaps as much as 60 per cent. I'll certainly make sure you have the information made available to you.

Mr. Speaker: That wasn't a question.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Will he give it further consideration?

POLLUTION BY PULP AND PAPER COMPANIES

Ms. Bryden: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment: I would like to ask the minister to comment on a statement which he made in a letter to the former NDP Environment critic, Dr. Charles Godfrey, in regard to the government's record or lack of it on prosecuting our biggest polluters—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Where is he?

Mr. Conway: What happened to him?

Ms. Bryden:—the pulp and paper industry. The minister said in that letter, "To increase the scope and effectiveness of this area of control, I am recommending the amendment of our environmental legislation to provide wider scope for citizen prosecutions and class actions, as I have stated recently in public." I'd like to ask the minister when we can expect to see this amendment.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, that is still a possibility.

Mr. Foulds: You are retreating on this one too, are you?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Of course, anything we draft has to go to various committees and cabinet for approval.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, it must be very difficult.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I would expect we may hear something at the next session of the House.

Mr. Roy: How is the Dow prosecution coming?

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nixon: "The polluters are paying."

Ms. Bryden: The minister recently supplied me with a list of the prosecutions that have taken place since the cleanup order was placed on the pulp and paper industry in 1965, and they amount to about 10 convictions with fines as low as $100. Is he also planning to bring in legislation to increase those fines?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As the hon. member knows, it's the court that makes the decision as to the amount of a fine.

Mr. Roy: You make the laws.

Mr. Foulds: That's the level.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Our responsibility is to present a case in order to successfully prosecute anybody we lay charges against.

Mr. Roy: Like Dow Chemical.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As far as our present legislation is concerned, the fines are now $5,000 for a first offence and $10,000 a day on second offence, and we think that's adequate.

Ms. Bryden: One supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary.

Ms. Bryden: I understand that under the Water Resources Act, the fines are a minimum of $100 and it is still in effect.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We don't prosecute under the Ontario Water Resources Act; usually we prosecute for any offences that are set out in the Environmental Protection Act. The Environmental Protection Act includes just every possible offence—

Mr. Martel: You give a licence to pollute, George.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: So we haven't been using the OWR Act.

Mr. Foulds: You haven't been using any Act.

PSI MIND DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Minister of Health: My question deals with the PSI Mind Development Institute. Given that the last time—

Mr. Haggerty: Attorney General.

Mr. Sweeney: No, I am not dealing with the OPP investigation but rather with the health aspect of it. Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, but there was a misunderstanding there.

Given that the last time I raised this question, the hon. minister indicated he didn't have the legislative authority to deal with it—

Hon. W. Newman: You always make a speech. Why don't you ask a question?

Mr. Eakins: Good to have you with us, Bill.

Mr. Nixon: What did you have for lunch?

Mr. S. Smith: Does anybody have a question for Bill? Come on.

An hon. member: Go back to sleep and let him ask the question. Who woke him up?

Mr. Sweeney: What this has to do with agriculture I don't know—

Mr. Conway: Did somebody tell the minister he was a pale shadow of Bill Stewart?

Mr. Sweeney: —unless the Minister of Agriculture and Food plans to take the course. That's the only reference I can see.

Given that the Minister of Health did not have the legislative authority to deal with it in the last question, and given that the Ontario Psychological Association has now presented the minister with draft legislation that would give him the authority—

Mr. Speaker: I've heard three "givens." I haven't heard a questions yet.

Mr. Sweeney: —what does he intend to do?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'm going to do what I told the Ontario Psychological Association I would do, namely distribute that document in the near future, hopefully this month. That was my stated intention, to get the reactions of a number of people. I indicated to them a concern that the most serious problem in drafting that kind of legislation will be in the exemptions—for social workers, clergy, teachers, and the list could go on. But that will be distributed. Maybe they have found all the answers and there won't be too much adverse reaction, and we'll be able to move on it next year. But that's the process that we're going to be involved in.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. B. Stephenson: And make it a question.

Mr. Sweeney: Has the minister responded to the over 100 municipalities that have specifically asked that something be done about this institute?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I believe the point of the resolutions, letters and so forth, was that there be an inquiry. An inquiry is under way under the auspices of my colleague, the Attorney General.

[3:00]

Mrs. Campbell: Has the minister discussed this matter with the Attorney General to learn from him that it is the Ministry of Health which deals with allegations of hypnosis, as in this case, and that it is no part of the inquiry of the Attorney General's office?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That is not my understanding, because certainly one of the possible outcomes of the investigation would be a recommendation that charges be laid under the Hypnosis Act.

Mr. Swart: I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mr. Foulds: On coffee?

Mr. Swart: It's not on coffee. He completely fluffed that one. It's on another matter.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It's on tea.

Mr. Roy: That's right. You're right again.

POSTAL CODES

Mr. Swart: I'd like to ask the minister, because most people use the ordinary telephone book as a city directory, has he considered recommending to the Bell telephone company that it publish the postal code of its customers as well as their addresses in the telephone directory?

Mr. Roy: You don't have jurisdiction, but tell him yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: It really isn't an urgent question.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary to that?

Mr. Speaker: It really isn't an urgent question.

Mr. Cureatz: You're excused.

MAPLE PARK SITE

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General. What influence did he exert in having the OMB hearing the Maple amusement park issue set its time of sittings to meet the convenience of the developers, even as far as sitting on November 11, Remembrance Day? Could he indicate to this House what private individuals' applications have had to be deferred because of the preferential treatment the developers of this park have received?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't know what the OMB has done in relation to this hearing. A firm of Toronto solicitors have communicated their concern to me to the effect that a month had been set aside for this hearing and then, part way into the hearing as I recall, they were advised that the time available to complete the hearing would be two weeks and not a month. I simply passed that concern, not directly but through my office, on to the OMB and that was the last I've heard of it.

Mr. Stong: A supplementary: I wonder if the Attorney General could account for the rapidity with which these hearings have progressed, particularly in view of the fact that the OMB refused to delay its hearing pending an application under the Environmental Assessment Act, notice of which was given two weeks prior to the commencement of the OMB hearings, as I understand it?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have no information about the progress of this matter through the hearings. I wasn't even aware that it was being heard by the OMB until this firm of solicitors communicated their concern to the effect, as I've already said, that originally a month had been set aside and the time had been abrogated. That's all I know of it at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

ANSWERS TO WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I wish to table the answers to questions 30 and 31 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix, page 1821.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply.

Mr. Chairman: As I recall, when the committee adjourned the Attorney General was just beginning to reply to the critics' remarks. Does the Attorney General have any comments?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, Mr. Chairman, it wasn't my intention to respond at this time to the opening statements of the Justice critics for the two parties opposite. Matters they dealt with in general will be dealt with as we go through the estimates. It was not my intention to respond specifically at this particular time.

Mr. Chairman: There seems to be a fair amount of noise in the chamber. I wonder if the private conversations could be kept to a minimum.

On vote 1301, law officer of the Crown program; item 1, Attorney General:

Mr. Nixon: I would like to just ask the Attorney General for an opinion on a matter which seems to be cropping up in the House more and more frequently, and that is the contacting of the Municipal Board, particularly by the minister's office—either his or other ministers' offices—to assist the Municipal Board, let's say, in timing its hearings.

I presume there's nothing wrong with a private member's contacting the Municipal Board on behalf of a constituent, yet it seems that it's an emerging concern the way the ministry—not just the AG's ministry, but all the ministries—feel free to contact the Municipal Board either directly, or as the minister just said in answer to a question, indirectly, to assist it in its scheduling of matters which may be important to the minister or important to people who contact him.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: You don't have the same privilege as an ordinary MPP.

Mr. Nixon: Of course you do, but you have to remember that you are not ordinary MPPs, and when you do so as the Treasurer or the Minister of the Environment or the Attorney General there may just be a slightly greater indication to the Municipal Board that it might adjust its timetable.

It was interesting to hear the response of the Minister of Housing on a very similar matter when he said, "I do not contact the municipal board." Now, certainly the Treasurer made no bones about the fact that he wrote a letter of policy to the Municipal Board on the acquisition, or, let's say, on the establishment of a plan around Barrie. There was some criticism that, in fact, the Municipal Board at least should have had a chance to review the situation without a letter from the chief planner of the province being deposited with it, essentially telling it what the government wanted it to do.

Of course, a private member's got an opportunity to contact the municipal board on behalf of a constituent. Does the Attorney General see any difference between a private member's doing that and a minister of the Crown? I see a difference.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: More indirectly.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think it depends on the context of the communication and, of course, the nature of the communication itself. As the member has just stated, and I am sure as a private member he himself has communicated his concerns to the OMB on behalf of constituents, I certainly make it my position not to express any concerns on behalf of any specific litigants in relation to the matters to be determined by the OMB.

I think the provincial Treasurer is in a different position when it comes to a government policy in relation to planning. This matter was reviewed by the courts, by the divisional court, and the propriety was upheld.

I can't recall at the moment any specific communication I have had, other than the one that was just referred to. If there have been others, they have been very few and far between.

A firm of solicitors may communicate with me and say, "Look, a month had been set aside for this hearing and we have assembled all our experts and there is a great amount of expense involved in presenting our case. At the last moment we are told that the month that had been set aside has been reduced to two weeks. You know, this hardly seems fair." As the minister in charge of the administration of the board I simply pass the concern on through my office to the administrator of the board.

I think similarly, if there were a complaint in relation to a matter being unduly delayed, as often there are in relation to the disposition of criminal trials, I might well expedite a criminal trial in the public interest. The member's leader had a great deal to say in this spring about expediting hearings before the Ontario Municipal Board that were related to construction projects which were being delayed. Certainly it was agreed on all sides that it was in the public interest to expedite some of these hearings as the results might be relevant to needed jobs.

So, in response to the question, it depends on all the circumstances. As the Attorney General I certainly am not going to make any communication directly or indirectly with the Municipal Board that would suggest I favour one side or the other. But when it comes to mechanical problems, such as time that has been set aside for a specific hearing, I think as the minister responsible for the administration of the board I have some accountability to the public. When members of the public have some concern to express about the administration of the board, I feel it is my responsibility to respond to those concerns in relation to the administration of the board.

Mr. Nixon: I appreciate what the Attorney General has said. I have a feeling, however, that this is going to be an increasing problem for private members and ministers. I don't know whether we are in a position where we are looking for terms of reference; I hope not. It should be clear enough as to what the proper procedure is.

It seems to me that if—is it Mr. Shub, the chairman of the Municipal Board?—were to receive a communication from the Attorney General's office that the Attorney General was concerned that there might not be sufficient time to hear the application in that Maple business it would almost be improper for him not to respond and to satisfy the concerns of his administrative superior. Undoubtedly the Attorney General is a member of this House who has the responsibility, I suppose, to pass these on. But when he says "administrative superior," it is something more than just passing on a concern. It leaves all of us open to the problem that we were reading about on Saturday, whereby somebody might think that they can influence the timetable of such a tribunal as the Municipal Board.

This is a matter we are going to be concerned with, undoubtedly. It is going to be distasteful, I suppose, but we are going to be concerned about it. We are going to have to be concerned with it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am not quarrelling with the hon. member's concern, but again as we discuss this matter, I recall very vividly, back in the spring where the leader of your party was being very critical of the Attorney General of this province for not ordering the Ontario Municipal Board to do this, or to do that in relation—

Mr. Ruston: To speed up—speed up.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That's right, in relation to speeding up the hearing.

Mr. Ruston: But not their decision.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Well, if you don't understand that to be a pretty basic interference with the process—

Mr. Ruston: There is a difference. There is an awful lot of difference.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —then, you know, your lack of understanding is hardly relevant to the exercise of my responsibilities. Maybe you better talk it over with your colleague, because he obviously shares the view that I should be ordering the OMB—not asking how much time might be set aside but ordering them to speed up the hearing. Your leader felt I should be in a position to tell the OMB,

"Look, you are letting this thing drag on. You have got to speed up the whole process." And I said, "Look, I am not going to take a position that is going to interfere, or be perceived to be interfering, with the rights of any of the litigants before that body." Your colleague doesn't seem to understand that.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, this can become acrimonious, and it may. Surely we are going to have to discuss, on a slightly different plane than that—and this is the ideal place to do it—that there may in fact be a qualitative difference between expressing a concern right here in the Legislature for the employment level in Metropolitan Toronto, having to do with the fact that the length of time the Municipal Board hearings were taking could be seen by some reasonable people to be delaying the rate at which new construction was begun.

The request was made in this forum, which is very appropriate, and the minister appropriately responded. I don't think he was right, but he was asked as the administrative head of the Municipal Board to do something about it.

I ask the minister to compare that with receiving a call from somebody who is concerned with the delay in the hearings having to do with the Maple amusement park or whatever, and for the minister to say, "By George, that would be a serious matter," and doing what private members do—contact the Municipal Board and say, "Can you reschedule this?"

I would think that normally, from the basis of a private member, the only case I can think of personally is where someone has been denied a building permit or severance on the basis of local objections and it has gone to a Municipal Board hearing. I can hear the constituent on the phone saying, "If I don't get approval, I won't get my footings in before the frost." Then a member would try at least to get a ruling from the board. I suppose in principle they're identical but I would say to the minister, I suppose in not quite the same tone as has already been used, there is a qualitative difference, and he must perceive it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, I can see the qualitative difference, but I perceive it somewhat differently from the hon. member opposite. The illustration we were using in the spring was it was suggested to me that I order the OMB to speed up its hearings, which in effect could be perceived as stating to the OMB, "Look, you've got to hurry up the presentation of this side of the case or that side of the case." That, in my view, represents a fundamental interference with the rights of litigants.

I perceived it as being improper to accede to the wishes of the leader of the Liberal Party last spring. But when it comes to a rather straightforward situation when somebody communicates with the Ministry of the Attorney General and states, "Look, the OMB had told us that a month would be set aside for this hearing. We have all these experts who are here and who have come from great distances at great expense. We are told now that for some reason the time set aside has been shortened to two weeks." It wasn't a question of telling them when to schedule the hearing. It was simply a question that was passed on to the administrator of the board as a concern that had been communicated to my office.

I think that that is the type of concern that should be passed on, without commenting on whether a month had been scheduled or not been scheduled. I see a qualitative difference between that and ordering the OMB to hurry up a particular hearing in relation to it taking too long, "the litigants are too long-winded or their lawyers or their witnesses are."

Mr. Nixon: No. That is not right.

Mr. Roy: No. You are misleading the House.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That was implicit in what the leader of the Liberal Party was stating. He doesn't understand the process. I gave him the benefit of the doubt because of his lack of understanding of the process.

Mr. Lewis: You shouldn't have.

Mr. Nixon: Just one comment, then I'll let it rest as far as I'm concerned. The Attorney General has returned four times to the request by my leader that he take some action to speed up the Municipal Board hearing vis-à-vis the hearings on the plan for Toronto. As I recall it, there was no idea given by him or even indicated by the Attorney General at that time that we wanted to cut short the arguments, but that the hearings should be going through the holiday season; that the board should be meeting more than, I think, three or five hours a day on it; and that a word from the administrative chief in this responding to the views of the Legislature could expedite the hearing, without curtailing the arguments having been put forward, but so that the board would spend more time on it.

Mr. Lewis: I wanted to reflect for a moment publicly in this as well because we too pummelled away at the Attorney General. I can remember calling a press conference on the penultimate Saturday of the campaign in an effort to persuade everyone that the Municipal Board hearing should proceed instantly and that the Attorney General should order them to proceed. I found him wilfully intransigent in his refusal to direct the Ontario Municipal Board to proceed with the hearing.

I must say, as I read the stories over the weekend, and even when I thought of it at the time, it seemed to me one could put two interpretations on it. On the one hand, the reason we wanted it to proceed was the assumption that jobs would be created because projects would be approved. On the other hand, the projects involved specific developers. There was therefore the kind of invidious sense that we would be benefiting individual developers by insisting that the hearings be held and that jobs be created. Isn't that the way it always is?

When I read the stuff over the weekend, I wasn't comfortable about the Arthur Armstrong involvement, frankly, at all. But leaving that aside for the moment as a separate matter, I wondered about questions of impropriety and I must say that I can't see it. But what does occur to me in the discussion here is something that has worried me a little bit before. What does it say about the OMB, its chairman and its officers if we assume that whether it is an indirect call from someone who works for the Treasurer or someone who works for the Attorney General, they will then jump through hoops and reschedule hearings.

I have to make the assumption—and if I'm wrong, I'd like to know it—that the OMB is a relatively independent body that will sort out what is an inappropriate intervention on the part of an elected official—private member or cabinet minister—and what is a reasonable drawing to their attention of something that isn't fair or isn't working. I have to make that assumption. Otherwise, the OMB is just a fairly unlovely outfit.

I don't think I have ever had occasion to intervene, partly because I go around most of my life believing that people don't listen to me anyway, so that if I were to intervene with the OMB they wouldn't care. But I think that some of my colleagues of greater persuasion have intervened; they have gone to the board and they have asked that hearings be speeded up or that hearings be held or that something happens.

The former leader of the Liberal Party talked about guidelines, or maybe this wasn't the time to set things up. Maybe it is the time to set up things up. Maybe there is something that has to be said.

I want to work on the assumption, Mr. Attorney General, through the Chairman, that whether it is you or Darcy McKeough or the Premier (Mr. Davis) himself, that somewhere along the way these quasi-judicial independent bodies will exercise their own judgement and if it seems that your request for speed-up is showing partiality to a litigant—perish the thought—they will react accordingly. I don't know what your view is of the board, but I would have thought that that is the distinction one has to assume—that the board is a group of reasonable human beings who will not either be intimidated or pressured by pomp to speed it up. But obviously there is a great anxiety that that is not the case, that the mere administrative suggestion from the AG's office means that they shift everything out. I would worry about that. I would consider that more their fault than an intervention by cabinet.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think the remarks of the member for Scarborough West are very appropriate and I don't quarrel with anything he has said in those remarks. I think they have to carry on as quasi-judicial and therefore a fairly independent body. Certainly any intervention on my part or by any other minister of the Crown which would suggest that they favour the cause of one litigant or another in my view would be improper.

But we get into a very grey area, as the member for Scarborough West just pointed out in a very articulate fashion. Their concern during the last election campaign, and properly so, was for jobs—yet they were placed in some people's minds in the rather invidious position, as it might be perceived, that they were supporting developer applicants before the board whom they don't necessarily always sympathize with. But the developers and their applications were the vehicle for more jobs and I think that expresses very well the dilemma of any member of the Legislature, any political party, particularly ministers of the Crown—and I am very reluctant to give the Ontario Municipal Board advice as to how they should schedule their cases.

On the other hand, our whole system of parliamentary responsibility is based on the fact that there has to be some minister of the Crown here accountable to this chamber for the manner in which that board conducts its business. Whether it should be me, as it is at the present time, or someone else, there has to be someone here who is accountable to this chamber and through this chamber to the public for proper administration of the board.

This is a matter that has been of concern to me, not so much in relation to the OMB, because to date, in my view at least, it has not been a problem. But as I set out in our white paper which was tabled a year ago on courts administration, I have long been uncomfortable with the fact that the Ministry of the Attorney General is responsible for the administration of the courts, as a chief litigant before the courts. I find that an even more sensitive area, and it is one that I have stated publicly on more than one occasion, it's very much a part of the white paper that we tabled. All I can say is that I would welcome any suggestions from the members opposite that might help maintain the confidence of the public in boards like the OMB or, indeed, in our court system generally.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the subject has been brought up, I have to express very grave concern at the way that the OMB has been working. I want to make a couple of suggestions to the minister and ask why the government has been so slow in taking any effective action to clear up the difficulties which are created by the intrusion of the Ontario Municipal Board into absolutely every major planning decision which has taken place in our major cities.

Mr. Roy: That is not what we are talking about. That is not what is in this vote.

Mr. Cassidy: The fact is that as things stand right now the intrusion of ministers and political people into the work of a quasi-judicial body seems to have been accepted and yet that would not be acceptable in the case of the courts. I think we have put ourselves into an impossible position because of the undue nature of the authority that the OMB now has.

I would like to suggest to the minister the question that really needs to be raised and that he should be examining, in view of the difficulties and the delays that are being experienced with the OMB, whether the OMB's authority and jurisdiction on many of these planning matters should exist there at all. This is something he needs to study, of course, with his cabinet colleagues, but the fact is that the OMB has emerged as a consistent factor for delay. There is no provable evidence that it is actually improving the nature of decisions that are being made at the local level. Its existence undermines the concept of local autonomy.

Often its decisions are so delayed in time that a bad decision made locally which could have been turned around through the democratic process would have been better than a so-called good decision which has been made by the OMB, and the OMB's writ itself is not final because of the continual use of appeals to the cabinet from parties who are aggrieved and don't feel that they got what they wanted through the mechanism of the OMB.

I just want to say to the minister that the whole process is a shambles right now, an absolute shambles. It is holding up jobs here in Metropolitan Toronto. I was in Kingston this past week-end and talked to people there and found out there was a grave confrontation going on between the member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Norton) and the member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. McEwen), and even though he is a minister the member for Kingston and the Islands doesn't seem to be able to persuade the cabinet to overrule an OMB decision which awarded the location of a new shopping centre to Kingston township.

Whatever the political consideration may be, Mr. Chairman, that shouldn't exist. That decision should have been made locally in some way, rather than coming to sit here for month after month after month. It is now seven months since the minister for the area, the Hon. Keith Norton, said there would be a decision within a month or two. People in that area are agreed that a regional shopping centre should be built and that it should be built away from the centre of Kingston. They may be right or they may be wrong, but there is a consensus in the area in which almost everybody but the downtown merchants of the area agree.

The OMB was asked to look originally not at whether there should be a shopping centre at all but which location it should occupy. Years later, when there is a desperate need for jobs in that area, that decision is still snarled in red tape which has been created under a body which is controlled by this particular minister.

Mr. Lewis: You should send them a sharp reprimand and an order to get on with it.

[3:30]

Mr. Cassidy: But to go on from that, I would suggest that the problem is not intervening and telling them to get off their butts. That has grave weaknesses in it, because it means that politicians are telling a quasi-judicial body how to order its business. The real answer is to take the OMB's jurisdiction away, to whittle it down to cases where there is a severe difference of opinion, to have them focus only on the narrow aspects of our problem, rather than the broad ones. Take their jurisdiction over official plans and over things like the downtown Toronto plan away, and if you wish to put it at the political level, give approval to the Minister of Housing or to this minister. Do not allow the OMB to have this kind of jurisdiction; do not have this luxury of opulent public spending, with lawyers being paid $1,000 a day and developers spending tens of thousands of dollars for every day of hearings in order that they can try to make their property interest prevail over the democratic decisions that are made by a local city council.

I want to suggest finally that there was a brief period of time when it looked as though the OMB had changed its stripes and had become the protector of citizen interests. That was back in 1969 and 1970. It developed a tremendous reputation on the basis of a very few decisions.

Mr. Nixon: If they agree with your stand, they're okay.

Mr. Lewis: Well, of course.

Mr. Cassidy: The fact is that the body is used and misused by the representatives of property in order to try to make their interests prevail over democratic decisions made by local councils. I think it's about time we put those decisions back at the level of the democratically elected councils and not in the hands of an arbitrarily selected body, a body which is open to political influences, as we've been seeing in its scheduling, a body which has tended to lean consistently in favour of property, and a body which has been an inadequate vehicle for the application of provincial policy, when there are provincial policies to apply.

Mr. Roy: He is out of order.

Mr. Peterson: I want to bring up with the Attorney General a matter that I'm not very happy about bringing up in estimates, but I think it's necessary. It pertains to the administration of your office. I say to you with respect I don't like to do this, but I want to tell you I think from my experience as an opposition member of Parliament dealing with all of the ministries and all of the ministers, some in a personal way, some in a less personal way, I say to you respectfully that yours is the worst administered that I have personally come across.

I'm just going to cite one little example. I know there is a new deputy minister here and I'm very happy that he's here to hear just an example of a frustration that is not necessary and that in my judgement puts unnecessary pressure on the ministry. These kinds of things just should not happen.

I think you will probably be embarrassed about this little story, not that it's any great deal, but probably it happens far more often than you would be happy to know about. A Mr. Frank Little, who is the solicitor for Fanshawe College in London, wrote to you originally on June 18, 1976, about the appointment of a notary public for that particular institution. Apparently a lot of documents go through that need a notary's signature, so he wrote to you, assuming, I gather, it would be very much a matter of course and just a matter of routine. There were two or three letters from him to you. There was no response.

I ran into him at one point and he said, "Could you help me out?" I said, "Sure I'll try. Maybe you could send me a letter." He sent me a letter on January 28, 1977, over six months later, after no response from your office.

I wrote to you personally, enclosing a copy of his letter, asking, "Could possibly this routine matter just be handled?" There was no response until March 29. That's from, as I said, January 28. The response was addressed this way:

"Mr. David Peterson
"House of Commons
"Ottawa, Ontario.

"I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter regarding Mr. F. H. Little and his request to be appointed notary public. Mr. Little is already a notary public; he is a barrister, solicitor and notary public." It was to have someone else appointed. "I will forward your letter of recommendation to the appropriate officials of my ministry and assure you that Mr. Little will be given every consideration."

Mr. Lewis: Who signed it?

Mr. Peterson: Roy McMurtry.

Mr. Lewis: No, I'd better write your letters from now on.

Mr. Peterson: I understand that you have a lot of correspondence and you're a busy fellow and I was reasonably tolerant up to that point.

As I recall, a week or two after that I came to you personally in the House, as I frequently do with ministers, and I handed you copies of the correspondence to refresh your memory and I said, "Roy, could you please look after this or hand it to the appropriate person?" not wishing to embarrass you or involve you personally in it. But at this point I needed your help. I didn't hear anything. You said, as I recall, "Yes," or "Thank you," or something appropriate in the circumstances, but nothing happened. I wrote again on July 19. That's another four or five months later—again sending copies of all the relevant correspondence—asking if something could be done.

Eventually, I phoned David Allen in your department whom I knew from the days when he had an honest job, and he checked into the matter and the thing got going. It took roughly a year.

Mr. Lewis: You mean they used influence. One of the AG's aides moved in and used influence.

Mr. Peterson: Far be it from me to suggest that kind of unscrupulous behaviour.

I just use that as an example—and there is more—from my experience. Very rarely is it more than a week or two before I get a response from any minister.

You should not be burdened with this. You shouldn't have to do this. You are a convenient clearing house for a lot of these routine matters. I would ask you to give a little bit of attention to the administration of your office, both for your sake and for the sake of those members who sit opposite and who run into these kind of frustrations.

I hesitated to bring this matter to your attention but I felt that, in view of the fact that this was not an isolated example, you should know about it.

Mr. Lewis: In as public a way as possible.

Mr. Peterson: You may not choose to respond, but it's my judgement that this deserved to be brought out in public now. There's no excuse for this kind of thing.

Mr. Roy: He waited until the cameras were turned off. You're lucky.

Mr. Lewis: Resign.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I may be able to provide some additional details, I'm sure, before these estimates are concluded. Personally, I would apologize to the member for what appears to be something of a botch-up. At the same time I should say that I am confident that it's a relatively isolated instance. I'm not suggesting that there aren't others. I know, for example, that this year alone I've received some 13,000 letters. We're operating with basically the staff that my predecessor had but handling at least three or four times the volume of mail. That's not an excuse, as such, because it's our responsibility to increase resources if it's necessary in order to meet the demands of the public.

I have certainly indicated to the members of my staff, whom I happen to have a great deal of confidence in that Legislature correspondence be given priority. Certainly, as I travel about the province, for every complaint we receive—complaints like yours—we receive many, many compliments for the work done and assistance provided, not only from people in this chamber but throughout the province. But I want to assure the members of this chamber that the standing instructions are that any correspondence from members of this Legislature is to be given the highest of priority. Obviously, in your particular case, it was badly handled. But I really do believe, Mr. Chairman, that this is a relatively isolated example.

Mr. Peterson: In fairness, your autograph will one day be worth a great deal of money.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, I'll be brief. Relating back to the matter of the Ontario Municipal Board and the present process that we have, and realizing that the minister is aware of the fact that this process was under discussion in the Robarts report, does the ministry intend to make—or has it already made—submission to the Treasurer with some comments about the Ontario Municipal Board and its present functioning? If the minister has a submission, will it include suggestions of some alternatives? Would it, for example, uphold some of the recommendations of the Robarts report on this matter? Or if the minister is not making a submission could he give us some reasons why not?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As the member appreciates, we not only have the benefit of the Robarts report but we also have the Comay report which seems to sympathize with some of the views expressed by the member for Ottawa Centre. These reports are being considered by the cabinet as a whole. There are a number of ministries which are interested and affected by the operation of the OMB.

I should also like to relate, from my recollection, that insofar as the operation of the OMB is concerned prior to my time here and prior to the time of the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere, there was a select committee of this Legislature that reviewed the operation of the Ontario Municipal Board. It travelled throughout the province and—certainly, as I recall this report which I have not read recently but which I have read—the OMB received a great deal of support throughout the province. This allegation of undue interference with local autonomy was not a matter of great concern to the overwhelming majority of municipalities. The citizens of this province were very supportive, generally, of the work of the OMB. I think, in relation to these planning matters and financial undertakings of municipalities, it's absolutely essential that there be some uniformity and rationality on a province-wide basis.

I think that the OMB has been very successful in achieving this. Certainly, we recognize that the process can be improved and we are very carefully reviewing the reports which I've just mentioned. There are ongoing discussions in relation to the operations of the OMB and there probably will be some changes down the road. But this is a very important matter and I want to assure the members that it's under review by the cabinet as a whole. I think everyone is very concerned that the process remain a useful one to the citizens of this province and a credible one.

Mr. Warner: I'd like to just tidy up a couple of little points about that. In addition to the entire cabinet discussing the merits of the recommendations in the Robarts report, does your ministry intend to submit anything to the Treasurer, either comments on the Ontario Municipal Board, or other matters that are referred to in the report and have some direct relationship to your ministry?

I'm not clear as to what each of the ministries are doing. There are a couple of questions which I placed on the order paper but I know, for example, that the Ministry of Education is in the process of preparing material which it's going to submit to the Treasurer. What I'd like to know is what each of the ministries is doing.

I'm not particularly interested in a debate over the Ontario Municipal Board. We can argue about its effectiveness. We can debate the good points and the bad points. I'm not concerned with that at this juncture. What I want to know is how you are responding to the Robarts report—and yes, inherent in that is the Comay report. When I read over the Robarts report it seemed to me to be saying essentially what the Comay report was saying. I want to know if your ministry is responding in a defined way, to the Treasurer so that your particular innermost thoughts on this matter are being conveyed directly to the Treasurer of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, I can assure the hon. member that we will be and are in the process of responding to matters that have been raised by Mr. Comay and Mr. Robarts. But to reiterate and to emphasize, this is an ongoing process. There are many aspects of the operation of the OMB that are being reviewed, whether or not they were dealt with specifically by those two gentlemen.

Certainly, the ministry will be making submissions throughout this process.

Mr. Warner: A final question, if I could: When you have completed those submissions and they are made to the Treasurer of Ontario, will you then table them in the House so that each of us can have a look and have some idea as to what your thoughts are on the Ontario Municipal Board and other related matters?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, I don't expect that that will be done. Any documents being prepared are for the consideration of the cabinet. Whatever the decision of cabinet is, it is a decision I will support. I am not interested in tabling documents which at this particular stage will be for the use of my cabinet colleagues. I think it would be very destructive of the cabinet system if cabinet members were to sort of air differences which may or may not exist, and they obviously do exist with many of the issues that come up from day to day. It's certainly not an appropriate part of our system to table such documents.

Mr. Roy: I listened with interest to the comments and response from the minister dealing with ministerial intervention, more specifically with the OMB. First of all, maybe I should congratulate you on your latest appointment to the bench in Ottawa. I should mention this to you because for your interest the appointment of Judge Nadelle has received unanimous and universal approval by all people and all segments of the law apparatus in the city of Ottawa and by the press and so on, and you should be made aware of that.

We are hopeful that is an appointment that's going to be in the best interests of the administration of justice in the Ottawa area. When you can get a former Crown Counsel who has spent all of his practice actually as a Crown counsel, who receives universal approval from the members of the defence bar and criminal defence association and so on, it's some indication that things are looking up for the Ottawa bench. It's important because I think you are aware of the problems we had there. I thought I should mention that to you before I get into some of the other factors.

I do want to make comment on your interchange with the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk and the comments by you about my leader in relation to the OMB and this type of thing. I appreciate that there's a fine line between intervention and non-intervention with these so-called quasi-judicial bodies. Unless I am wrong, I always understood one of the purposes or the guidelines of the OMB was it must follow government policy. I thought that was one of the things it had to do. That's the first thing.

The second thing is, as you mentioned, it is a quasi-judicial body. There is some concern on this side of the House about that. We have seen in Ottawa where a minister shouldn't think of picking up the phone and calling up a judge and asking what is or is not going on in a case. When that has been done, we have seen the reaction. There is a difficulty as well with the OMB.

I want to make clear what my colleague, the leader of the Liberal Party, was talking about. The type of intervention was about the speeding up of a process, I understood. As the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk said, it related to the hours they were sitting or sitting during holidays and that sort of thing, which I really don't see as anything improper. I was surprised to get your comments because I don't think for a second my leader suggested you should say to counsel or suggest to litigants before the OMB to cut short their argument, cut down the number of witnesses or this type of thing. I don't think there was that suggestion at all.

What he was expressing basically was a concern that major projects were being held up by the bureaucratic apparatus or the delays or the length of time that that particular body was sitting. Surely that is fair comment, and is a worthwhile concern that he's bringing forward. I frankly don't see anything improper about that, especially when you are saying, generally, projects which are job-creating in themselves should not be delayed.

I see that as being different from intervening in a particular case. Again, I understand what you are saying. I didn't read the article in the Toronto Star, but if people have geared up for a particular hearing for so much time, have so many witnesses, and then are advised at the last minute there is going to be a change, I can understand their concern. These are difficult, especially when you have expert witnesses and this type of thing.

The problem with the OMB is—and that's where the fine line comes in—it is getting to a point where just being heard becomes sort of a large benefit, certainly an economic benefit. The delays are so lengthy in that tribunal just the fact one can be heard, or certain accommodations are made for one particular case, is something that can be extremely helpful. As I say, I haven't read the article, but the impression left with the public is, "I wish I could get a set-up like that, where I could call up somebody and be heard at a particular time."

I think the concern expressed by my colleagues is valid. I can tell you, I have often written to the OMB and asked, "When do you expect to hear this particular case?" or, "When do you expect to hear this other case?" I have inquired of them, but it is a difficult situation. It is something, certainly, that comes back to the rule in law justice must not only be done but must appear to be done. So it is important, especially when the high office of the Attorney General is involved.

The concern expressed by my colleagues certainly is valid. It is something we should reflect upon as to drawing up guidelines when we should and should not intervene. I wouldn't want to be the one who is going to decide to do that, because that would be nearly impossible. As members, as representatives of the public, we have a concern. You as Attorney General represent a constituency as well and you have valid concerns. So when you can and when you can't intervene becomes difficult.

I just wanted to make sure things are not taken out of context when we are discussing that sort of a principle. Things must be kept in a proper perspective. It comes back to your comment about the administration of the courts and the concerns you have about the fact the administration of the courts is under your ministry. There is also a concern that some people might suggest there is not the independence there should be.

But I just ask you this. If, for instance, the court process degenerated and did not serve the public, how does the public, if there is complete independence, gets its point of view across? Who does a citizen who is frustrated by the process go and see? He can't call up the judge; you don't approach judges. Who does he see? How does the public bring forward its concern? I was going to ask how do they bring forward some sort of pressure, but I wouldn't want to use that word when we are talking about the judicial apparatus.

Surely the legislative body, which we are, is the one best suited to reflect the opinions, the concern of the public. There should be some way whereby even the administration apparatus of the court is responsible or at least responds to somebody; that there is somebody over and above them to whom they are supposed to report to, to whom we can address ourselves to express these particular concerns.

I see quite a difference between that and intervening in a particular case, or making suggestions such as, "In all rape trials from now on we suggest sentences should be such and such a length of time." If we are in a mood to do that on legislation within our jurisdiction, we just have to pass laws. I can understand it is not for the Attorney General to start issuing that type of guideline to judges. That would be interfering with the process,

But for the Attorney General to express a valid concern about delays in the courts, or in fact what you have done, is valid. Wasn't it your ministry that released, sometime in mid-October, a report indicating on an average judges were sitting only 3.5 hours on the bench? I take it that was released by your ministry—I intend to come back to these statistics, Mr. Chairman. Surely the judiciary can keep their independence and still be responsible to a ministry, be responsible to us, who are, in fact, representatives of the public. We who represent the public should have some way to have some input and make suggestions to the Attorney General of the province as to certain administrative procedures which we consider to be delaying the courts, and changes that we can make in the courts.

I'm suggesting, in fact, it would not be a good idea to take away the administration of the courts from the Attorney General and just have them sort of quasi-independent. After that point how do I or other members of this Legislature express our concern if there is not a responsible minister we can sort of get at and make suggestions to about what we consider to be deficiencies within the process?

I'm really concerned about that, because I have all the confidence in the world in the judiciary. I respect the people who are named there. The appointments are getting better all the time and I think they are responding more to the need of the community. But the fact does remain, there is some insulation that takes place once you start calling somebody "Your Lordship" or "Your Honour" or whatever. There's something that happens to an individual, no matter how objective and how sensible he is, when you start putting him up on a chair higher than the rest of his colleagues and when he's sitting in judgement of others. That concerns me. It really does and there must be some way for those of us who are deeply concerned, to express that concern. We don't want to interfere in a particular case, but the fact does remain that the courts, the administration of justice, and the judges are there to serve the public.

It's not that long ago that a lot of judges had this all misplaced. They thought the courts were there to serve their convenience.

I'm sure you've experienced that with certain judges who felt you sat at hours which were convenient for them and you appeared in court when it was convenient for them. Whenever it became a certain time of the day, it was time to go home. That sort of thing happened.

We can't tolerate that. We can't tolerate that any more. I say by not doing so, we're not interfering. We can't be said to be interfering in the independence of the judiciary.

I want to make these comments because, frankly, I appreciate there's a fine line. It's a difficult role for the Attorney General to be playing. But I think some of these concerns we have need to be expressed, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Davison: I wanted to ask the Attorney General some questions in regard to his opinion of and his involvement with the Ontario Legal Aid plan. Would it be appropriate to deal with that under this vote?

Mr. Chairman: I will admit we do stray a little on item 1.

Mr. Davison: I noticed that.

Mr. Chairman: If he might have the proper staff here at that time, it might be a little better.

Mr. Davison: They're not very detailed questions, Mr. Chairman. They really are questions on which I would like the Attorney General's personal opinion rather than staff opinion. They're not detailed questions. They're not difficult questions.

Mr. Chairman: I'd like to ask the Attorney General if he feels it would be better to discuss Legal Aid under a different vote.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It probably would be a more orderly way to handle it, but I'm quite prepared to try to deal with these questions. We don't have, as has been pointed out, all our staff in relation to questions, but if they're of a general nature, hopefully I'll be able to respond to them.

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order, would you direct us to the item where Legal Aid questions might come otherwise? That is questions of a non-general and more specific type; is there a vote?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Vote 1302, items 1 or 2.

Mr. Nixon: Financial services?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Vote 1302, item 1.

Mr. Chairman: Item 1, yes.

[4:00]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We have all of the contributions relating to the Ontario Legal Aid Fund et cetera on page 17.

Mr. Chairman: Would the member for Hamilton Centre be agreeable to hold—

Mr. Davison: My questions are so brief I could have asked them by now, and I guarantee the Attorney General they are almost superficial. May I proceed?

Mr. Chairman: If they are that brief, go ahead.

Mr. Davison: Thank you. I am concerned about the Legal Aid establishment in Hamilton, I believe in one of our posh downtown office buildings. I am concerned about the inability of my constituents to get access to Legal Aid in terms of hours and in terms of Hamilton being a community in which many of the people don't use English as their first language. The hours problem perhaps bothers me more.

The Legal Aid office in Hamilton—I don't know if the Attorney General is aware of this—is only open Monday to Friday, 10 a.m. to 12 p.m. and 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. If a chap is trying to hold down a job, working in a steel mill or one of the other plants in Hamilton and he is not on shifts, it means he has to take time off work to go in there. Unless you are a businessman claiming for bankruptcy and have nothing better to do, I am not quite sure how you get access in that kind of a situation without causing some financial difficulties.

I am also concerned about the inability of the Legal Aid structure to deal with people who aren't comfortable with English.

I am concerned as well about the process of selection of the area committees in Legal Aid.

Mr. Roy: I thought this was going to be just a little question.

Mr. Davison: It is; it's a couple of little questions.

When I talked to the director in Hamilton, he assured me they had equal representation of lawyers and citizens. The little book, the annual report 1977, shows that equal representation is 10 lawyers and seven citizens. It may take 10 lawyers to equal seven citizens, but I notice that other areas didn't have that kind of representation but rather had representation only from solicitors. Perhaps the Attorney General could explain to me how those area committees are structured and what guidelines, if any, there are.

Finally, there is the question of recommending people to Legal Aid. Over the course of the past few months I have written to the Attorney General a couple of times seeking his advice on legal matters on behalf of constituents. He has advised me to refer them to Legal Aid; it then becomes my decision whether or not I pass his advice along to my constituents.

What I am concerned about is what advice he gives when one of my constituents might write to the Attorney General without having talked to me. Does his office explain to that individual that while the official Ontario Legal Aid Plan can be approached at such-and-such an address and the contact person is So-and-so, there are other places in Hamilton-Wentworth where that individual can get similar services? For example, the Hamilton Multicultural Centre and the Strathcona community project provide services under the auspices of the plan, I believe.

Perhaps the Attorney General could address himself to those concerns for a moment or two.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Dealing with the last question first, we would not necessarily know what other community resources there might be in Hamilton or another community in relation to providing legal services outside the Legal Aid Plan, so I would doubt very much that we would pass on that information. Our responsibilities really are in respect to the funding of the Legal Aid Plan, which in turn is administered by the Law Society. We do not administer the plan, as I think the hon. member knows.

I will certainly pass on the hon. member's concerns to the treasurer and the chairman of the Legal Aid committee of the Law Society, your concerns with respect to the matter of access. I think that's a very legitimate concern. I do not question what you said in relation to what the hours are in Hamilton, but at the same time we will try to find out for you what, generally speaking, are the hours in Legal Aid offices throughout the province. Again, this is a matter for the Law Society in the final analysis, insofar as the administration of the plans is concerned.

So far as the selection of the area committees, there is no firm rule of thumb. It states that they must be on a 50-50 percentage between members of the Law Society and members of the public. I think what the Law Society has attempted to do is to develop a reasonable balance on these area committees between the community as a whole and the legal profession.

I think in many areas it does work out to a 50-50 balance, but it is not an arbitrary rule of thumb, because again it is important to get people who are going to make a valuable contribution. Our experience has been that it is often easier to find people who want to make a genuine contribution within the legal profession, because of the nature of their work, than among members of the community as a whole.

Again, at this time, I want to state that a great many lawyers in this province contribute a great deal of time and effort to the administration of the Legal Aid plan and it would be very costly if we were to reproduce their contribution by public or civil servants. I just detected in your remarks a lack of enthusiasm for the participation of lawyers in the Legal Aid plan. I think we should recognize that many lawyers in this province have made a very substantial contribution, for which they have received no compensation whatsoever, to the administration of this plan in the public interest. I just think that this is the appropriate time. We are going to come back to this, but I just want to emphasize that fact.

Mr. Nixon: I want to pursue with the Attorney General the matter that was raised in question period today, and that is the advice given to him by the law officers of the Crown, on the possibility that it had been before the Attorney General's predecessor and must have been presented to him, on taking some action against the person named Armstrong who is referred to in the article in the Star on Saturday. I can talk about it more but I think the Attorney General knows what I am talking about.

I have no objection at all to the answer the Attorney General gave when he said he cannot make the advice from his senior officials public, because some might have advised prosecution and others might not and obviously it is for the Attorney General to balance the advice he received and to speak for the government as the chief law officer.

I do, however, think it is his responsibility to satisfy the community, and in the same vein the members of this House, as to why he took a decision under certain circumstances. Unfortunately or fortunately, depending on where you sit I suppose, the opposition members, like the members in the community at large, do not have access to information of this type.

The Attorney General may very well recall that just prior to the election of 1975 and afterwards there were many interesting events going on in Mississauga. There was no way whereby any information that we could count on was available to members in the opposition, other than through the newspapers. The minister may recall that Mississauga, by action of the council, established under a section of the Municipal Act a judicial inquiry as to the sources of certain problems that they had somehow observed in their own area. We couldn't find out what those problems were.

Now we read in the Toronto Star on Saturday that this person named Armstrong was supposed to have contacted the Treasurer of Ontario (Mr. McKeough) and asked the Treasurer to contact the Municipal Board to expedite a hearing having to do with an approval for a certain development in Mississauga.

We've already discussed as to whether or not the Treasurer should have done anything in that regard, and we realize in the minds of some members at least there is a problem there that faces the members of the ministry as well as private members, although there is—we believe, or I believe—a qualitative difference. But when we understand that this person named Armstrong billed the developer for $25,000 indicating that he had used his influence to procure this valuable favour for the developer named Davis, was it? —Davies. Sorry, I didn't mean to bring any coughing spells on you.

The minister indicated he had looked into this very carefully and had got the best advice that was available to him from his senior colleagues, and that his predecessor decided to take no action and that he decided to take no action.

The member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) has already referred in the question period, along with my leader, to the fact that there is a clear section in the Criminal Code making it a serious offence, a criminal offence, even to indicate that you have political influence for sale, and this person evidently had sent a bill for $25,000. When the minister indicates he had good advice not to take action, and then said he would not give the information to the House that had been given to him, I can understand why he wouldn't want at least to table those opinions. But it's just not good enough to think that this is going to fade away. We're going to have to have some more information.

It was a big political issue in those days. It may be again, but in a sense it's clearly two years old. The municipal administration has changed out there and it might have been on that very basis. I'll tell the House, the mayor and some members of the corporation were considered to be ineffectual, a bit naive, and maybe they were in these matters. The action, or perhaps the lack of action of this government, in allowing a hearing before the divisional court which was brought by certain members of council and citizens in Mississauga, resulted in getting the hearings or the investigation quashed, if that's the correct term in that connection.

The judge who had already been appointed—the Attorney General may recall—had in a letter indicated that, from the hearings that had already been undertaken, he felt there was reason to continue the investigation. We were told in the House that the judge was being disciplined by the senior judge for indicating in his letter that that was the case. It may have been an action was brought against him, as I recall, for contempt of court. It was a very serious and mixed-up matter, particularly to us as members of the House.

It was raised in the House a number of times and I recall after much of this settled away, in the Attorney General's first estimates, I happened to be there much as I am today, taking some interest in it, but in no way a leading interest and asking the new Attorney General about that matter. It so happened that the member for Mississauga East was also present and joined in the discussion. I can remember being quite reassured, although no further information was forthcoming, that the government had taken a reasonable position in connection with this. But we are not provided with any of the information. It was a major public situation and now it rises again.

I guess what I'm asking the Attorney General is to appreciate our—my—position in a matter like this. It is not possible to allow it just to sink once again below the calm waters of the Mississauga mill pond. We are going to want to know specifically why the Attorney General or his predecessor did not take specific action in response to the specific case that was described in Saturday's Star. I do believe we should expect, as members of this House, to be able to peruse at least some documents, even if it is just the opinion of the Attorney General put before the House as to why no action was taken at that time.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It might surprise the former leader of the Liberal Party that I was also a candidate in that 1975 election and was not aware of any political issue relating to Mississauga. As a matter of fact, I do recall there were some questions directed to me in relation to the inquiry generally. At no time, interestingly enough, was any question directed to me, prior to today, in relation to criminal charges in respect of the individual you've just mentioned.

Mr. Nixon: I never heard his name until I read the paper.

Mr. Roy: We didn't have the information. That's normal.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't know what information had been made available to the judicial inquiry. Certainly the members opposite were not totally without their sources in relation to that inquiry.

Mr. Nixon: There is probably a misunderstanding in that direction.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Be that as it may, I did not have occasion, and I'm just happy to clarify the record, to consider until this past week even the fact that a decision had been made, as I recall it, in relation to that one individual. It was not something I recall directing my mind to at any time because the matter was never raised. I might have seen something in a file. I might not have. I have no recollection of it, but certainly the matter was raised.

The representatives of the Toronto Star came to me. I spent considerable time with them indicating to them, with the assistance of the file, what had transpired so far as the laying or not laying of criminal charges, because they obviously had devoted a great deal of time to it. It's not a question of allowing it to, or hoping it will, sink below the surface. The decision to prosecute was made, as I've already stated, by senior officers of the Crown, reviewing it independently.

Mr. Nixon: That would be that a recommendation not to prosecute was made by them, was it not?

Hon. Mr. Murtry: Obviously, the police had come to them for advice. At this juncture, I also want to make it very clear that the police at all times were free to lay any charges. I think this is very important to understand that in the process in this province, unlike some other provinces, the police are free to lay charges without consulting a Crown attorney. Indeed it may often be their duty to lay charges.

Mr. Roy: In most obvious cases they do.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Also, an individual might well approach a justice of the peace, such as the man Davies might approach a justice of the peace, and seek to lay a criminal charge. There are a number of routes through which criminal charges can be made. I do know, as I said earlier, that the senior law officers of the Crown were consulted in the matter. The decision was made and the recommendation was made to my predecessor that in their view charges would not likely succeed. That did not bind the hands of the police or anyone else, so far as laying charges go, but that was the advice that was received, as I recall, back in September 1975.

I don't recall today, having reviewed the file, all the details of it. I made it quite clear to the members of this House I would like to review the matter before determining what is going to be in the public interest, balancing the public interest with the rights of individuals to be protected against allegations that might be unfounded. Therefore, you can appreciate, and I think the member does appreciate, the sensitivity of these issues in discussing any opinions that have been given with respect to the laying of criminal charges. That was our interest in the matter. It was to be advised as to whether there was any evidence of criminality that might warrant the laying of criminal charges.

So far as the inquiry itself was concerned, the divisional court struck down the inquiry, if I might put it that way, in layman's terms, on the basis as I recall, that the court used the expression "denial of natural justice," but I want to emphasize the fact that it was still within the authority, as I understand it, for the township council in Mississauga to reconstitute the inquiry, which it never chose to do.

Mr. Roy: I didn't think they had jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, it was the manner in which they framed the inquiry, and the divisional court made it quite clear that it was free for them to reconstitute the inquiry. So far as the judge was concerned, I don't recall any event that could be properly or fairly described as disciplining the judge. I know that the judge did suggest that at some point in time—and this was made public and the question was asked of me in this Legislature—certain information had come to him which, notwithstanding the decision of the divisional court, warranted a further inquiry.

Mr. Nixon: It wasn't a suggestion. It was written in a letter signed by the judge.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: All right, we'll say it was written. I don't recall the form in which it was communicated. I believe I gave the answer in this Legislature some time ago that upon learning that fact I wrote the chief judge of the county court and indicated it was my view as the Attorney General that if the judge did have information that would warrant a further investigation insofar as the possibility of criminal offences was concerned, then it was my respectful opinion, as the Attorney General of the province, that the judge had a responsibility to communicate this information to the Ontario Provincial Police.

I received a reply from the chief judge, Judge Colter, some weeks later stating that he had discussed the matter with Judge Stortini and Judge Stortini said that he had no information other than what was contained in the files. These files were reviewed by the Ontario Provincial Police in order to determine, first, whether there was any evidence of criminal behaviour or, second, whether there was any evidence which would warrant a further investigation. Their conclusion was that there was not.

At the request of the solicitor for Mississauga—I should say the request of the Mississauga council, because the resolution was passed by the council and was communicated to me by the solicitor, requesting the return of all the documents to the Mississauga council. That was, in fact, done.

Mr. Nixon: How did you get them?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As I recall the sequence of events, the judge and his counsel caused the documents to be delivered to an official in my ministry. It was at that point that we arranged to have the Ontario Provincial Police review all of the documents because of the interest and because, quite frankly, of all the rumours that were flying about. I remember Inspector Pelissero of the Ontario Provincial Police was in charge of that investigation. He and his staff reviewed the documents and made a report.

Mr. Roy: What did the report say?

Mr. Nixon: One other thing that I would like to ask in this connection is that the Attorney General indicated that, with the reporters from the Star, he'd gone through the file quite carefully indicating why his predecessor had not taken action against Armstrong.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That's not quite what I said.

Mr. Nixon: No, but that's the impression I got. One of my problems is I can't understand why you didn't take action against him. If he had billed the developer for $25,000 for using his influence to have the Municipal Board speed up the hearing—I mean, there has got to be something we don't know, maybe quite a bit.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The matter we just referred to is one of a number of matters that was of interest to the journalist from the Toronto Star. At this moment, I don't recall all the facts in relation to the bill that was purportedly sent from Armstrong to Davies.

I am told—and I don't know what I recall from the newspaper report and what I recall from anything I may have seen in our file—there was a suggestion by Armstrong that he felt he was owed some money as a result of an alleged partnership. I gather there was no effort to collect the money. To what extent this $25,000 was related to any information or any assistance he had provided Mr. Davies, I just don't simply recall all the details at this moment. I will attempt as I indicated earlier in the day to secure sufficient details to assist the members of this House as to why this opinion was arrived at.

Mr. Roy: Can I make this comment to the Attorney General about the few matters raised by my colleague? Section 110 is a section that some of us are quite familiar with. This dates back to the famous Fidinam situation. Mr. Chairman, I say to your predecessors—and I guess the present Attorney General was not then in the House; Mr. Bales was the Attorney General at that time and—

Mr. Lewis: The documents were probably left in the chairman's office.

Mr. Roy: Probably.

Mr. Lewis: Everything ends up in the Rotenberg file.

Mr. Roy: In any event, Mr. Chairman, I had occasion at that time to review very carefully section 110. I can tell you there have not been many prosecutions under that section. I frankly don't know why.

But I can say to the Attorney General, we had raised quite a fuss at that time. This was a situation where a gift of $50,000 was made to the Conservative Party through the intervention of Mr. Kelly. You will recall at that time—certainly my colleagues will—the thing that was interesting there was when the Swiss company made a request of the Canadian subsidiary to find out what the money was for, there was a Telex that said: "$50,000 to Kelly re contract WCP"—the Workmen's Compensation Board building. So there it appeared to us to be a prima facie case of a gift, and the reason for the gift, and so on.

The Attorney General at that time, my colleagues will recall with great reluctance, said he saw nothing wrong with that, that he wasn't going to investigate. But then he changed his mind a couple of days later and said, "Transfer this to the senior law officers of the Crown." They gave an opinion, which was provided to us at that point, why they felt that there was not a prima facie case and why prosecution should not go forward.

Mr. Nixon: Everything was okay, they said.

Mr. Roy: As I recall, the problem with that particular case was the veracity or the validity of the telegram. It was alleged that the telegram did not reflect what actually took place—this was done by some junior official down the line at the Fidinam offices. As I recall it was Clay Powell who prepared this opinion and we were supplied with a copy of his opinion as to why a prosecution should not take place.

[4:30]

When you get this type of intervention, where somebody makes an approach and something happens which gives weight, the date is set and that, and then he bills for it, it sounds like a pretty strong prima facie case of an offence under section 110 of the Criminal Code; I don't know what subsection it is.

This is not the first instance. We have had the Fidinam case, we have had this case. You will recall during this election there was an inquiry and we'll get to that one later on. But there is a royal commission, isn't there, looking into another dump site?

Mr. Nixon: It hasn't been very active yet.

Mr. Roy: This happened just at the start of the election, as I recall.

Mr. Lewis: Though if this Mississauga stuff had come out in September 1975 we all would have walked the high road while you went under.

Mr. Roy: That's right, that's right. He would be asking me questions, and I would be turning him aside with impunity.

Mr. Nixon: A royal commission would still have been having hearings.

Mr. Roy: We would have established royal commissions all over. But in any event, I want to say to the Attorney General there is a precedent for being provided with an opinion, once you are given facts which seem to establish a prima facie case, especially when it is as touchy as this. The role of the Attorney General is difficult. I say with great respect, your predecessor, Mr. Bales, and I don't want to unduly malign him as he's not here, originally did not perceive the importance of his role as chief law officer for the Crown. It didn't strike him at that point on Fidinam that there appeared to be something which was not correct, which required his intervention as chief law officer for the Crown. It was not his role, for instance, to look at the fact it was the Conservative Party involved and that he should be careful. I am not making that suggestion to you.

But because of that situation, he did refer to his officials and he did provide us, when a decision was made, with an opinion of the law officers.

With regard to your comments if the Crown attorney or his officials say they don't think there is much sense prosecuting, that in their opinion you require certain essentials to prove an offence and they don't think you will be successful, the police generally follow that. And I don't think a Crown attorney who was under the impression there had already been an opinion from the ministry the charge would not be successful would show too much enthusiasm for the police going ahead and prosecuting a charge, knowing there had already been an opinion that the officials didn't believe they would be successful.

You are right, of course, it is always open to the individual involved, to a lay person, to make a charge, or to deposit information to a justice of the peace. But again, one has to be careful in these matters. I can recall in Fidinam there was some suggestion that I go ahead and lay a charge, or swear out an information on the evidence heard. But I didn't want to use the courts for what appeared to be partisan political purposes. We must be careful about doing that as well.

Generally speaking, the opinion is exceedingly important, because the police will follow it. That's why they in fact come for an opinion, especially under section 110 of the Code. This is not a break and enter charge where the essentials are relatively simple. Under that section it is difficult, as there is not that much jurisprudence under that section of the Criminal Code. So it becomes important the public understand why it is, given these facts, there was a suggestion charges not be laid.

Mr. Cunningham: If I could just ask a couple of questions. One of my questions, Mr. Minister, revolves around a letter I believe you were privy to, directed to you by the judge. It's the allusion I get from a press report, I guess dated November 28, 1975; you think the letter you received from the judge was at the direction of Martin Dobkin, mayor of Mississauga. Of course, I appreciate how the press make mistakes, but you allude that this letter was written at the request of Mr. Dobkin. The implication would be that it was the view of the mayor of Mississauga, not the view of Judge Stortini, that further investigation be warranted.

I would like to ask you, just to start, on what basis you make that assumption? Are you of the view that a judge in any jurisdiction would write such a letter, given the fact that there are a lot of political overtones to this whole discussion and there will probably continue to be? Do you think that a judge in any jurisdiction of this country would write a letter with that kind of political motivation in mind, and, in fact, undermine his personal integrity to that effect? That's a question I'd like to ask you right now if I could.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Simply, my response is I have nothing more that I can, I think, usefully add at this time to what I've already said about this matter.

I've indicated to the members opposite, insofar as the Armstrong matter is concerned, that I would attempt to assist them further with respect to why that decision was arrived at. Insofar as the role of the judge who is conducting the inquiry is concerned, I don't think there's anything further that I can add to what I've already said.

Mr. Cunningham: Sir, if I may, I'd like to pursue this. I don't want to belabour the point, but I'm basically asking you a somewhat simple question. You'll pardon me, I'm not a lawyer and I suppose I don't have these skills necessary to extract an answer from the hon. Attorney General, at least in a legal fashion. But I'd like to know if you are of the view that a judge in any jurisdiction, especially in the province of Ontario, would write a letter with the political motivation inherent and the implications that you make, at least in your press account of November 28, 1975?

Would you not have to accept on face value that in the intent of the judge's letter there was some sincerity, some real concern, or are you really of the view that this was a politically motivated letter and that he was motivated entirely by the mayor of Mississauga?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: At no time did I attribute any political motivation to the judge, and indeed, when I learned of the letter, I took the course of action that I've just outlined. That was to write to the chief judge of the county court of the province of Ontario, indicating our interest in what additional information may be available in order that the Ontario Provincial Police might investigate it.

At no time did we attribute or intend to attribute any political motivation on the part of the judge who was conducting this inquiry in Mississauga. We took his letter seriously and responded in the manner which I've just outlined.

Mr. Cunningham: Why, may I ask, would you say—and I'm quoting here from—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think I can shorten this thing up. I have no intention of commenting further on some photostat of a press report, Mr. Chairman. If you want me—

Mr. Cunningham: I'll send it to the hon. Attorney General. He can examine it himself. I'm sure he has a file on it.

I want to ask you one more thing. The basis of my question is this: As a legislator in this province, I am concerned about this. I am concerned about the efficacy of an individual's making a representation, or at least holding himself out to have some great power, some great influence, with regard to the Ontario Municipal Board or any other governmental agency. The fact that that individual may have obtained some consideration for that draws me to personally conclude that charges should have been laid.

What I'd like to know from you, Mr. Attorney General, is this: Would you share with members of the opposition parties your report from the OPP so that we might judge for ourselves just to what extent this has been properly investigated?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, I have no intention of doing that, Mr. Chairman. It would be totally improper for an Attorney General to table police reports in this Legislature and it would be very much against the public interest to do so.

Mr. Roy: I wanted to say, Mr. Chairman, on item 1, of course, I appreciate that it's difficult for you to know the range of that item, but when we're discussing the Attorney General, the general office, there are a number of matters, of course, that fit with difficulty.

I yield the floor to my colleague, the leader of the NDP.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I just want to speak for a moment, a minute and a half, to the Attorney General in the presence of his officials.

Because this item started off so badly for you, with that evisceration of your administration by the member for London Centre, I thought I should at least correct the record. I want to say with only half-tongue in cheek that when my life and limb were in peril over the summer months and early fall and I turned to various police forces in Ontario to seek succour and comfort, I had great difficulty. But when I turned to the Deputy Attorney General the response was instantaneous and very much appreciated. It persuaded me that I had much to approve of and to appreciate in the administration of justice at the most senior level.

I am talking very elliptically but it is at least understood by those who are here in the House. I just want it on the record to say that if any of us in this Legislature have fear for our physical presence, just put yourself in the hands of Roy McMurtry and all is relatively well—indeed, in the hands of his officials as well. I want specifically to thank the Deputy Attorney General on this occasion.

Mr. Roy: I am not sure what my colleague, the leader of the NDP was referring to. In any event, any flowers thrown in that direction, considering the nature of that office I suppose, are well deserved. I do want to mention to my colleagues here that we still have a date, do we, on Wednesday afternoon in the court?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We still have a date but we may have to adjust it.

Mr. Roy: I would hate to see you backing out from this challenge. There will be no physical violence of any sort.

When we get into some of these items it becomes difficult, when we discuss certain questions of general broad policy, to know exactly where to fit these items. I do want to discuss one of the matters and I would like the opinion of the Attorney General on this.

You may recall when I made my opening comments I referred, I suppose to a certain point with tongue in cheek, to some of your comments on some of the matters I was concerned about in your tenure of office last year. One of the comments I have been concerned about was you mentioned something about a possible padlock law for Ontario, to make owners of premises responsible for the activities going on on these premises. This was spurred on by what was going on on Yonge Street in the city of Toronto, the fact that many establishments had been allowed to be set up which, it boiled down to, were obviously just fronts for prostitution. I am referring basically to all of the rub parlours which had been set up on Yonge Street. I suppose they weren't only rub parlours; there was a whole variety of things, nude encounters and photographs and the whole thing.

There were certain comments made which are of concern to me. I can recall when I first got here in 1971, Yonge Street was relatively tame. In the short period of four or five years the situation changed. I suppose it was in line with the libertarian approach existing in society that on the basis of civil rights you weren't interfering with certain activities and with the freedom of individuals to do what they pleased. All at once you had all these establishments mushrooming on Yonge Street.

Then there was the unfortunate incident involving a young man for which people are now up before the courts, this alleged murder of a young individual. Panic set in.

I am always afraid of justice in those circumstances. When the pressure becomes somewhat untrammelled, when you get an incident of this nature, which gets caught up and where politicians want to get in on the act, statements are made, actions are taken and suggestions are made by leaders of this community which sometimes are disproportionate with what they're trying to control or the end they are trying to meet. Statements, in fact, which sometimes are pure hysteria.

I'm concerned about that because we've worked a long time to establish a system of justice in this province and in this country, and which in my opinion is second to none in the world, including the safeguards for individuals and the whole process. In fact, we're spending time now looking whether the process sometimes doesn't happen to be an impediment to justice, rather than a vehicle.

In any event, we have all this process set up. Then you get incidents like the press and the untrammelled enthusiasm of local politicians getting in on the bandwagon to talk about the vice and sin going on on Yonge Street. Some of the statements made at that time, I thought were something I should raise and get your comments about. One of them was your suggestion that owners should be made responsible. I could see the concern and danger of something like that. I think you recall the Globe and Mail had an editorial which was somewhat critical of your approach about that. I must say as an aside, I found the local politicians somewhat cynical and I suppose I should put that on the record. I don't want to unduly malign people who can't defend themselves here in the House—

Mr. Wildman: Don't say anything about the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Roy: —but they're public officials and I suppose if they feel I am saying something that is not warranted they have their platform and I have mine. But I want to say the local officials here, who were in power during all the time these things were going on, and the parlours were being set up, and everything else didn't do much. It was under their administration. It was not as though they were new boys and it was a new administration coming in and they were going to clean up the city. These same fellows allowed the situation to deteriorate. All at once they reacted just as though this had sprung up overnight. Then, at that point, many of the individuals who had been crying for civil rights and the liberty of the individual were the first ones who were prepared to run roughshod over the liberty or the rights of certain individuals implicated in that.

I don't intend to name names, but I found it interesting, for instance, that even some of the left-wing members of that council all at once, when the situation got carried away, were among these individuals.

Mr. Gaunt: Sewell.

Mr. Roy: Sewell would be one of them who was saying, "Hey, look what's going on. Certain steps should be taken." I could recall the mayor during the time most of these establishments set up. If they were so concerned, they had laws in existence. In my opinion the enforcement of these laws may have well curtailed some of these activities. But nevertheless they wanted extra powers.

The chairman of Metro, Mr. Godfrey and the mayor, David Crombie, and a controller from Etobicoke, controller Winfield Stockwell wanted to have a meeting with the Attorney General of Canada. I think the suggestion was made that at this meeting they wanted to convince the Attorney General of Canada to amend the Criminal Code to sort of give a local option to various municipalities to control nudity. One of the local options Metro wanted here in Toronto was total prohibition and legislation to deal with the nude industry. That was a comment that was made at that time.

It struck me, where are we going? Are we going to start having a Criminal Code whose enforcement is going to depend on local options? That, for instance, what the local elected officials in Toronto decide is nude is not permissible, whereas it's permissible in Hamilton and it's not permissible in Ottawa and that sort of thing? I'd like your comments about that sort of statement because it bothers me to no end that statements like that are made.

I want to know if you agree with me that the Criminal Code of Canada in an area as difficult as pornography, nudity and so on is something that maybe should be left at local option, because it seems to be so dependent on whatever the community standards happen to be in the month of November 1977 in Toronto. Does the Attorney General agree with my feeling on this, that when we're dealing with criminal offences, the Criminal Code is not something that should be compromised or that it should be left up to some local official to decide whether or not this is a criminal offence in his area or not a criminal offence? Does he agree that the Criminal Code should have universal application right across this country?

There is, of course, a great danger in leaving it to locally elected officials to decide whether a particular offence should be an offence in fact in an area because, as I say, there should be some responsibility on the part of the judiciary towards a community. On the other hand, I feel that to leave the responsibility to decide what is a criminal offence on locally elected politicians is not a good idea either.

I must tell the Attorney General as an aside the reason this bothers me so much. I don't know if he watches a tremendous program on television on Sunday evening at 7 on CBS. It's called "60 Minutes," and some of the programs are excellent. Last night they had one on the chief of police of Los Angeles.

Mr. Samis: Not San Francisco?

Mr. Roy: This individual makes Hitler look like a left-winger, actually. What I found interesting was some of the things he was doing—

Mr. Mancini: I'd vote for him.

Mr. Roy: Well, my colleague had better not—

Mr. Foulds: On a point of personal privilege, Mr. Chairman, a comparison of left-wingers and Hitler is a bit much, even in the Justice estimates.

Mr. Roy: What I found interesting was that this fellow, this chief of police of Los Angeles—

Mr. Wildman: Remo says he would vote for him.

Mr. Roy: —was saying openly that he wanted to be the governor. He was going to run for governor of California. He took pretty right-wing positions on all sorts of things; one of the more interesting ones was that he's got a real campaign against gays in the area of Los Angeles.

Mr. Wildman: Does he drink orange juice?

Mr. Roy: He wrote a letter to the present governor, Gerry Brown, saying to him in the letter something to the effect of "Dear Gerry, I'm glad to see you've now got a girlfriend. I hope your parents are proud of that. I'm very happy for you. Congratulations." He was sort of leaving the impression—but this is from the chief of police of Los Angeles to the governor, against whom he's going to be running in the next gubernatorial election.

Mr. Samis: Imagine if it was the chief of police of San Francisco.

Mr. Roy: It comes back to the fact that we've got a good system of justice here, and I wonder whether the minister would say whether he's against that sort of option when it comes to criminal offences.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I certainly would be opposed to any local option in relation to the criminal law of this country. Obviously the criminal law must be applied uniformly, not only throughout the province but throughout the country. To me, the suggestion is absolutely unacceptable that an activity would be considered a criminal offence in one part of the province and not in another. I think any statement in support of that would have to be dismissed as rather foolish at the very least.

The member for Ottawa East attributed to me some statement favouring a padlock law throughout the province. I want to set the record straight. I don't recall using that expression, "padlock law," at any time.

In the aftermath of the Emanuel Jaques killing there was understandable public outrage in relation to this very vicious deed, particularly as it appeared to relate to the extent to which Yonge Street had deteriorated in recent years. Certainly during various exchanges of views with members of the public and members of the media I did volunteer the suggestion that one of the things we would have to look at would be the degree of responsibility which should have to be accepted by the owner of premises in relation to the nature of the activity that was being conducted therein.

For example, the position that was well known on Yonge Street was that one outfit would be closed down and they would, perhaps, start business in the same premises under a different corporate shell. I think we would all agree in relation to this matter that the defence of "See no evil, hear no evil," should not necessarily always be open to landlords. Certainly, a part of my participation in the public discussion was to throw out the thought that there may very well have to be some responsibility on the part of landlords who should have some knowledge as to the nature of the activity that's carried on within their premises.

Actually, what I was ruminating about turned out to have some basis in law already, because upon review of the Disorderly Houses Act counsel for the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto—formerly counsel with the Ministry of the Attorney General—found existing authority. As a matter of fact, I believe that we may have suggested that that Act might be relevant. As a result, counsel did apply to the court and, following convictions of certain individuals carrying on business in certain locations, certain places were closed pending the posting of some sort of bond. Certainly, a great deal has been accomplished.

The extent to which one should attribute knowledge of a landlord, who may be an absentee landlord, to the nature of activity carried on within a commercial premises is, of course, a very difficult subject. At all times, when responding to these questions, I made it very clear that these are problems that the public as a whole must consider in the matter of how far we are prepared to go. I, for one, am very careful not to encourage any of the hysteria which had developed to some extent in the wake of this very terrible killing.

At the same time, I have to pose options—as I have in the past—that the public must consider in relation to this matter. We're still considering some of these options as we prepare some amendments to the Municipal Act which will give municipalities greater authority in determining the nature of the development or the character of the commercial enterprises that are carried on in one particular location or not.

This, of course, is of great concern to me because we must be, at all times, concerned with legitimate rights of individual businessmen. We have to balance those rights with the rights of a community to have some say, through their elected representatives, through their licensing powers as to whether or not they're going to have whole blocks of nothing else but nude encounter parlours or whether or not a community should have some authority to control the nature of the development that occurs within its core, in particular.

I think all the municipalities in Ontario are very concerned about it. I, for one, don't favour the concept of combat zones where you should, in effect, rope off a certain area and say: "Everything goes in that area but we'll try to protect other neighbourhoods." These are very difficult questions and there are no easy solutions. The Legislature will be asked to address itself to some of these questions when this legislation is introduced in the next several weeks.

Mr. Roy: That is very interesting—your comment about combat zones, as you call them. They are hardly that. I have had limited travel you know but I have always got to pay my own way, as you know.

[5:00]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: You'd better get on the Ombudsman select committee.

Mr. Roy: Yes, I still want to pay my own way.

Mr. Nixon: They haven't gone away yet.

Mr. Roy: I am not sure when you mention the question of combat zones that that is not something at which our so-called God-fearing communities in Ontario should be looking. I have seen Amsterdam; I have seen other cities where there seems to be an element of control over that sort of thing.

I distinctly had the impression about Toronto that what affected the local politicians was not so much the activities that were going on on Yonge Street, but that they were prepared to tolerate that until it became too obvious. It became just too obvious and then they said, "Go away." If they could have wiped this out and the same activity was going on some place else without anybody knowing about it it would have been much more tolerable.

It's part of our puritanical background in this province, but I just wonder in a large metropolitan centre—and I don't want to be the one who sets policy on this sort of thing for the municipal officials—whether somewhere along the way, some generation within this country is going to make a decision. As you know, prostitution under the Criminal Code is not an offence. Prostitution in itself; the soliciting of it is. Basically what happens is people with a lot of money never get caught where the solicitation is not that obvious.

What I wanted to say was that we seem to be able to go so far in our laws and not go far enough. You mentioned you looked at the problem in relation to drugs, marijuana and that sort of thing. Again, for all intents and purposes, it's a rubber stamping process in our courts. The courts have realized that possession of small amounts of marijuana for one's own use is not something you should throw people in jail for.

I prosecuted in that field back in 1969 and realized that it was a social problem rather than a criminal offence, and yet our legislators in Ottawa are not prepared to take away the criminal aspect of it. Yet people are ending up in the courts and the large majority of them is getting absolute discharges anyway. Why are we burdening the courts with that sort of process?

I suppose the same applies to pornography and prostitution. The problem with that is that it's such a volatile thing. One year people are prepared to close their eyes and the next year, depending on the circumstances, people get all excited about it, so obviously some options will have to be looked at to deal with that problem.

You know, it's like pornography. We have discussed it and we have talked about this, but basically it's a question of why don't we do as we do on films? Control it. You just control it; don't try to stop it. If you stop it, it just goes underground. Then it's probably a worse evil in the sense that the minute it's underground, you get organized crime becoming more involved with it. They can operate with impunity, and the stuff gets around anyway, so what you try to do in the area of pornography and all that sort of thing is control it.

The concern is for our young people, that at least they should be able to make up their own mind at the right age without being pressed into that sort of atmosphere or had that sort of material thrown at them. We do this with films—we say certain films are for certain ages and that's how it is controlled. The same thing should possibly happen when we get into things like pornography, prostitution and things of this nature.

Mr. Nixon: I don't know whether this is any kind of a useful contribution—

Mr. Wildman: Probably not.

Mr. Gaunt: I am sure it will be.

Mr. Nixon: —but the minister might be interested to know that I made a personal inspection of the Yonge Street strip today at noon and in broad daylight. I was returning from buying an Air Canada ticket for my sainted mother, who will be leaving for Florida in the near future, God willing, and I thought, "Well, I'll just walk back up there." And even for my Protestant, puritanical repressed sensitivity—somewhat similar to the Attorney General's I expect—once I got past Cinema 2000 there really wasn't a thing that much different from the Yonge Street of 20 years ago.

Maybe they have moved, but they are certainly not hanging out of the upstairs window—as they say they were. So something almost miraculous has happened there. The only really grievous part of it is that such a spectacular catastrophe had to trigger the clean-up of that situation.

I don't know what's happened to all those fancy movie houses and body rub places and so on. But from the vantage point of a provincial—from out of town—and I presume that they were designed to interest just such people—it would be pretty hard to find anything very exciting other than the regular run-of-the-mill movies—which are probably bad enough—on the Yonge Street strip.

I thought the minister might be interested in this up-to-the-minute report.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am very interested, although I suppose it deprives me of an excuse for taking the tour that I had planned tonight.

But, seriously, a lot has happened in the past several months. I think the up-to-the-minute tour as described is not indicative of the way it was three months ago. I think the activities of special counsel hired for Metropolitan Toronto; applications under the Disorderly Houses Act; the fact that we appointed a special prosecutor for offences under the Criminal Code to expedite these cases through the courts; the fact that the police have been active to the extent that several hundred criminal charges have been laid against people on Yonge Street in the last several months—I think these have had a salutary effect in returning Yonge Street, if not precisely to the pristine glory—

Mr. Nixon: It's even more pristine.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —of 20 years ago, but in getting things a little better under control I think that activity has been warranted.

Mr. Chairman: If there are no further up-to-the-minute reports, shall item 1 carry?

Mr. Roy: I have a number of concerns to raise with the Attorney General on this item. I think that some of these are difficult to pin down as to which vote they should come under.

One of the things that concern me as well—and that's not brought on because we are hearing about all that is going on in Ottawa—wiretapping and the listening devices being found in various offices. You will recall we had a discussion, was it about a year ago? I suppose it was more than a discussion—the debate in the House about the police intercepting a communication between a lawyer and his client. This had taken place, I think, in Perth, Ontario, where a criminal lawyer was interviewing his client in jail—the only place he could interview him because the client was charged with murder at that time. He was advised, through a matter of luck or some stupidity on the part of some official, that in fact they had this lawyer on tape. It came out and there was an admission made at that time by the police.

The Sault Ste. Marie case was a different matter, the lawyer there at that point was a suspected individual. What happened in Sault Ste. Marie is that they put a tap on the phone and they got everybody else's conversation on it.

But these matters point out the danger or the wide scope of this wire tapping legislation. I continue to express some concern, as that legislation is the type of legislation which, if not controlled, if we don't keep an eye on it, may get away on us. I appreciate this is a federal matter, but certainly I think you understand you can get to your colleague Basford up there and make certain representations about the type of criminal laws we have on our books here.

One of the things of concern is that case here in Ontario involving a fellow, a businessman from Guelph by the name of William Zudik. I've never spoken to the individual, I'm just reading press clippings and I'm reading editorials about the individual.

What happened is this individual had notification that his phone had been tapped as the Criminal Code requires the law enforcement agencies to do, 90 days after a tap had been removed from his phone. This individual was a businessman. He got one of these notifications from the Attorney General's office in February that his phone had been tapped. However, he was not charged with a criminal offence afterwards and hasn't been able to find out the reason for the wiretap. He's never been charged, he doesn't know why, and he goes out of his way to try to find out what has happened.

He makes an application before a Supreme Court judge and gets a good Supreme Court judge, certainly one who's had a reputation of interpreting the law quite liberally. The Hon. Mr. Justice Patrick Galligan states under the law he's not entitled or permitted to know why his phone has been tapped.

This is one instance, and I've had other instances of individuals who come along with this document which is called a notification. I've had another situation—and I don't happen to have the file right here—where an individual got a notification saying, "Your phone has been tapped," but his phone had been tapped under the name of Mr. X and his name was Mr. Y. He was never able to find out why his phone had been tapped.

It bothers me. It bothers me when you're a citizen of this province that your conversations are being overheard, your telephone is tapped for I don't know how long, maybe 90 days. It may have been longer, but they overheard all of your conversations and you're not even told why. Certainly that is a basic denial of the fundamental rules of justice, as I see it.

In my opinion the law should be changed to allow an individual to be told, whether it's in private or otherwise, because as Mr. Justice Galligan said, under the present law there was no way. All the information, the evidence, leading up to the giving of the authorization is secret and you can't get at it.

So I'm saying to the Attorney General, I wish he would make some representation whether he agrees with me; some concern. Because the enforcement of that legislation of course is under, I think, his ministry. I think he reports under this legislation.

An individual, a citizen in this province, where there is no evidence he's committed a criminal offence, has his basic right of privacy trampled on for a period of, I don't know, 30 or 90 days, and the law enforcement agencies have heard everything he's said for that period of time.

I want to emphasize to my colleagues here a wiretap is not just a search warrant where you're going into a home on a particular occasion to look for a particular object. A wiretap is carte blanche to overhear every conversation, whether or not it's relevant to the offence that is the subject matter of this tap. You can overhear everything.

And yet an individual who is attempting to find out something which most people on the street would consider to be very reasonable—"If you tap my phone police officers, would you just tell me why?"—can't find out why.

I am concerned and I would like to hear the Attorney General's comments about that particular case and whether it should not be in the best interest that an individual should be told under some circumstances. I know there have been amendments. I think the 90-day period now has been extended, but nevertheless I feel we should look closely at that law, not to allow that sort of situation.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think I share many or most of the concerns that have been expressed by the member for Ottawa East in this area. He will recall when there was some issue in relation to interceptions of telephones that might be resorted to by lawyers or solicitors, I expressed my concern at that time in relation to the lawyer-client situation. I provided the member for Ottawa East with the detailed, and I think, with respect, very carefully thought-out instructions I have issued to all of our agents who have the authority to seek these wiretap authorizations in order to avoid as much as practical the danger of intercepting a solicitor-client type of conversation. And I am sure I discussed it with the member for Ottawa East and we developed these guidelines which have gone out.

In relation to a very serious issue that is raised by the Zadik case, I might say that a number of lawyers have expressed their concern to me about the present state of the law including, as a matter of fact, my own lawyer brother. I would like to comment, as has the member for Ottawa East, about the problems that can be created for somebody who, out of the blue, receives a notification that they have been the subject matter of a wiretap. The danger, for example, that this notification may fall into somebody else's hands. I mean, in the case of Mr. Zadik, he chose to make it public. He decided to attempt to obtain this information through the legal process.

I think Mr. Justice Galligan's decision was absolutely correct. Under the law—and the law was very clear—there was no authority to reveal this information. Indeed I, as Attorney General, would be committing an offence if I were to reveal the reasons for the wiretap. But the danger of what this might cause to somebody who receives this notification exist. They may have been suspected of criminal activity or I suppose it is conceivable they have just been a possible victim.

The danger of it falling into somebody else's hands exists. I mean, it's a piece of paper. Somebody else may get hold of it in the normal course of events, and of course believe that his friend or neighbour or relative is perhaps a dangerous individual or somebody that may be suspected, at least by the police, of being engaged in criminal activity.

I just want to indicate to the member for Ottawa East that I share his concerns in this area. As a matter of fact, I have established a committee in my ministry to review this aspect of the legislation and I have asked them to consider the possibility of recommending amendments to the federal government in order to alleviate the undoubted hardship that is caused to certain individuals under the present state of the law.

Mr. Roy: If I might just continue on that point, I thought the response of the Attorney General in respect to the matter I raised in relation to this defence counsel was very good. I think I told you that certainly if the guidelines are followed that is something. I don't know many jurisdictions that have them and I would have hoped that the Attorney General of Canada would look at these guidelines and maybe do something with them, like putting something like this into his legislation.

I appreciate your response to my question about the Zadik case. The one point I want to make to you is that the area of mistake is something that's of concern. As I mentioned to you, I have a Mr. X who came to see me. He'd received a notification that his phone was tapped, but the police were not intending to tap his phone but to tap Mr. Y's phone. In other words they had obtained the authorization for Mr. Y, but tapped Mr. X's phone. He was in a similar situation where he just couldn't find out why. That gives you some idea of the abuses that can happen under that section.

I don't know if this should be investigated or whatever, but you recall you issued guidelines on the intercepting of lawyers' conversations, because of the great concern that police do not trample on the basic right of an individual to have, and retain counsel. Of course, if the police are sitting in on a conversation that is an abridgement of, or a trampling on that right.

People or defence counsel not only in Ottawa but in other major centres have this paranoid feeling and I don't know whether it's only an obsession. I don't do that much defence work—I used to do quite a bit of it, but I have not done very much since 1971—you're always a bit paranoid. You're wondering are the police listening in on your phone and I'm sure you've had that expressed to you. If you've got a serious conversation or it's very important, I won't do it from my own office phone. I will go down the street and do it from a pay phone. I always felt that they were somewhat paranoid.

That was prior to your guidelines because of what the police were doing prior to your guidelines. I'm not sure that that's all been solved and they are in fact following the guidelines. I just make this comment; it may be a gratuitous comment because I don't have any evidence that they're not.

What the police were basically doing was they'd get an authorization to intercept Mr. X's conversations and then they would intercept everything, whether he was talking to his lawyers, his priest, his doctor—everybody else. And many defence counsel ended up on the tapes because he'd be calling up his lawyer about certain things.

It's been reported recently in Ottawa that certain defence counsel are still convinced that their phones are tapped on a regular basis. They claim that certain information the police have can only be obtained if the police are intercepting their conversations with their clients.

I was called up about it to discuss it with the press, and I say "I'd hate to have any evidence of that. I'd be very concerned." It would mean the police felt counsel were committing a criminal offence; or the police were not following the guidelines of the Attorney General, which I consider to be very serious; or, they were involved in illegal wire taps and breaking the law, which is a very serious offence. I'd hate to think that the police would do that, especially with all the controversy about police breaking the law we've heard about in the last while.

The latest report I have on it, is in the Ottawa Journal of November 11, 1977. A story there by Peter Gibbs states: "A middle-level policeman has confirmed criminal lawyer Pat McCann's suspicion that his department had illegally wiretapped the lawyer's office phone to gain information on a client, he claimed." The story goes on—I suppose, about another lawyer whom we both know in Ottawa—"Ottawa criminal lawyer Dan Chilcott revealed last week that a representative of the police department had informed him that it had bugged his office phone. Chilcott said he complained like hell, but got nowhere."

This is of concern—Mr. Chilcott, as you know, is a member of the Ottawa Police Commission and Pat McCann is a defence counsel. Although I raise these issues I don't want to start getting involved in sensational things. The fact remains it's very difficult to prove—very difficult to prove—because of all the provisions as to secrecy and confidentiality of information under the Criminal Code for obtaining taps.

Allegations like that are made—and according to one lawyer it has been confirmed by the police that this, in fact, has happened. According to the information that's in this story apparently the police did it illegally—illegally in the sense that they didn't have an authorization, but I don't think it would be illegal to not follow your guidelines, although I wish it was. I'm concerned about that sort of thing. I suppose possibly I'm a bit paranoid, although when I was called up about this I said, "I can't think that police would be doing that on a regular basis. I think some of these counsels are a bit paranoid."

But apparently many of our confreres in the criminal bar, whether it's in Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa and so on, live in that constant fear, because wiretapping is now such an easy process. It's such a wide sweeping type of tool on the part of police that a lot of these counsels think it's abused.

I'd like to ask the Attorney General, would you look into this? Would your ministry look into this and further investigate this? Because when you get a lawyer who says publicly that a policeman has confirmed that there was an illegal wiretap that's evidence of a criminal offence if that report is accurate.

Certainly this is something that should be looked into. The police need certain powers and they've been given these powers. But if we continue hearing evidence that it's being abused that the police are not following your guidelines, for instance, or are breaking the law, obviously it's going to undermine the whole process.

Certainly it's of concern to people like myself when I read reports of this nature.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, I was unaware of those reports. I'm very distressed by them. Particularly, it really puzzles me that a member of the Ottawa Police Commission would take the position publicly that there is nothing that he could do about it in relation to the activities of the force he has the responsibility to administer. I think it is a very serious situation and I certainly will be prepared to pursue this matter because it is, as the member for Ottawa East points out, a criminal offence for anybody, police officer or anybody else, to engage in illegal wire-tapping.

Prior to the Protection of Privacy Act in 1974 there was even less protection than there is now, because there was no law governing wiretaps in this country. So I think in one respect we have advanced since that time; now the police are bound by a criminal statute. While that is no guarantee that it's not going to be breached, at least it is progress.

But getting back to the matter that's been raised by the member for Ottawa East, it might be helpful to me if he could give me copies of those news clippings and I'll pursue the matter.

Mr. Roy: I will give a copy of this to the Attorney General, I do want to say this in fairness to the member of the Ottawa Police Commission. When he states, "He revealed that a representative of a police department had informed him that it had bugged his office phone, Chilcott said he complained like hell but got nowhere." You realize it could in fact have been another police force. In Ottawa, we have a situation whereby we still have five or six different police forces. He's a member of the Ottawa Police Commission, but there's Gloucester, Nepean and Vanier police forces and the RCMP and the OPP's in there, so in fairness I don't know to which police force he was referring, but I'll send the Attorney General a copy of this.

Mr. Foulds: I just want to raise a question or two with regard to the very interesting matter the member for Ottawa East has raised. I don't see any item under the votes for wiretap services.

[5:30]

I assume your ministry is notified every time a legal wiretap takes place. I'd like to know how many such wiretaps have taken place in Ontario in the last year?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We are the authorized agents for obtaining wiretaps in Ontario. It must be done through us or the federal Crown counsel in relation to matters within their jurisdiction of drug offences.

We do publish a report every year outlining the precise number of wiretaps, the nature of the offences for which they were obtained and, indeed, the results to the extent which we can give, of the investigations. This report, which is published in the Ontario Gazette every year, is available. I can facilitate the member in obtaining a copy of this report.

I think our most recent report is scheduled to be published. It either has just been published or is just about to be published, but we do file this report every year. This is, of course, a requirement.

Mr. Foulds: Do you have any estimate of the success of this kind of operation? That is, how many of the legal wiretaps instituted result in prosecutions? Do you have any idea how many of those would not have been successful if you had not wiretapped? Is there any way of estimating that?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The last part of the question is a very difficult one to answer but, as you know, the provisions of the wiretap legislation provide that an authorization should only be given if other methods of investigation are not succeeding. In other words, it's not simply an alternative. It's permitted when there are affidavits to the effect that other methods of investigation have failed or are likely to fail. There is that last resort aspect built into the legislation.

I don't have the figures in front of me but I can obtain copies of the last published report for the member. Certainly, my recollection is there is a very large number of charges laid in relation to the number of authorized wiretaps. Our experience is far different in this jurisdiction than, for example, in the United States. It's quite popular for people to comment on the experience of the United States among those who oppose the legislation, stating that relatively few prosecutions result.

I would think it's fair to say—I'd prefer to have the figures—a very substantial number of charges are laid in relation to the number of authorized wiretaps and a very substantial percentage of those prosecutions end in convictions.

Whether or not it would have been possible to obtain a conviction, or whether a conviction would have been obtained in the absence of a wiretap is impossible to demonstrate with any degree of accuracy. But the reports we do publish every year indicate, in my respectful view, the wiretap authority is a necessary authority and it has produced very significant results insofar as success is concerned.

I think one must appreciate that commercial crime, organized crime and criminal activity generally have resorted in recent years to much more sophisticated tools for carrying on their illicit activity. The so-called major figures in criminal activity attempt to insulate themselves from what's going on in the street, as it were, by operating through intermediaries. It's my personal view, having been well aware of the very legitimate concerns that have been expressed and are being expressed here this afternoon in relation to wiretap authorization and the interference in privacy they represent, taking all of these very legitimate concerns into consideration, wiretap authority, capacity and resources are absolutely essential, if we are going to maintain any reasonable level of effective law enforcement.

Mr. Foulds: My question rises out of part of the answer the Attorney General gave. He said that the wiretap authorization could be obtained only when it was fairly clear, and I am paraphrasing, that successful prosecution was likely to fail otherwise.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Investigation.

Mr. Foulds: Sorry, right. How do you evaluate such a judgement? Who gives that judgement? Whom do you ask? Isn't there a danger that someone who is not on an investigative trial might become obsessed with the case and, therefore, likely if not bend the evidence, to put undue emphasis on the necessity for such a wiretapping? How do you counterbalance against that?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Perhaps I might be able to assist the member for Port Arthur, firstly, by referring to the section of the Criminal Code, section 178(13)(1) which says: "An authorization may be given if a judge"—and it must be a superior court judge—"to whom application is made is satisfied that it would be in the best interests of the administration of justice to do so and that

(a) other investigative procedures have been tried and have failed,

(b) other investigative procedures are unlikely to succeed or

(c) the urgency of the matter is such that it would be impractical to carry out the investigation of the offence using only investigative procedures."

A superior court judge must be satisfied that the requirements as laid out in this section 178(13) have been met. This is done on the basis of affidavit evidence. You have, in effect the sworn evidence of a police officer. I personally think this is probably as good a protection as you are likely to achieve through legislation insofar as this judicial supervision of these wiretap authorizations is concerned.

There is no guarantee at any time against abuses by police officers who are going to act illegally—if they are prepared to swear a false affidavit, for example, for which they would have to pay the consequences if found out. There is no guarantee that that cannot happen. There are no guarantees anywhere, I guess, in the nature of human affairs, but what the federal government is attempting to do is establish an administrative mechanism through the Criminal Code which is going to provide as much protection as can be provided by any type of permissive legislation.

Mr. Foulds: The minister read that section of the Criminal Code, and I may be incorrect here, but if there are no other conditions, all of those terms seems to concern themselves only with the possibility of the accumulation of evidence. I would assume that to satisfy a judge there must be at least some evidence already; you have to have some reason for suspicion. Does that also have to be presented to the judge in the sworn affidavit by the police officer? As I heard you read that section of the Criminal Code it didn't appear to me that such was the case.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: A judge must be satisfied that there are specific offences which the police have reason to believe have been committed or are being committed and these specific offences must be identified. There is this overriding provision that they must be satisfied that it is in the interests of the administration of justice, and the application—I perhaps should have read to you section 178(12). I think it would have been more helpful for you if I had gone back and read what the application for the authorization must contain. That would have provided the answer.

It must be in writing to a judge of the superior court, "and shall be accompanied by an affidavit which may be sworn on the information and belief of a peace officer or a public officer deposing to the following matters, namely (c) the facts relied upon to justify the belief that an authorization should be given together with particulars of the offence. The type of private communication proposed to be intercepted" et cetera. I am sorry, I should have read that to you at the same time that I read the other section.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to make a comment about the appointment of the deputy minister before I lost the chance to do so. I particularly want to indicate to the Attorney General, and anyone who might be listening, how pleased I was at the appointment of H. Allan Leal to this important position. I am sure this has already been referred to by my colleague, the official critic, but I feel that his qualifications are certainly undoubted and his experience has been excellent, and of course productive as far as the community in general is concerned.

I feel that his outstanding qualification, of course, is that fact that he graduated from McMaster University, which may or may not be the reason that he was selected for this important office. Not everybody here might know that he has very recently been elevated to the position of chancellor of that university, and so we are very fortunate indeed to have his services. I hope that they continue for a long time, and that certainly as the government changes there will be no doubt about those continuations. Will there be, Allan?

I wanted to raise just two matters under this vote. It has come to my attention from a Crown attorney in a jurisdiction to the west of here that it has concerned him and some people that he works with that the temporary absence program of the Ministry of Correctional Services seems sometimes from his point of view to be difficult to justify. After an elaborate prosecution and a conviction, almost within hours the individual convicted to a sentence in some correctional facility will be walking the street, tipping his hat to the Crown attorney and even to the judge. It seems that while everybody here wishes to keep our jails and detention centres as clear as possible, there would be a tendency for an example such as this to do some damage in the community where people will follow these cases.

I believe there was one example where there had been a very serious assault in a parking lot of some public place; where the conviction had been registered and the sentence had involved assignment to one of the correctional centres, but the individual who had been sentenced was out on the street within a few hours. This was general talk among the young bucks in the area, and it came to me from a number of sources.

I just wonder if the complaints in this connection have been registered with the Attorney General and if there is something that we as a Legislature might do to moderate that situation.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Firstly, I'm sure the Deputy Attorney General should like me to convey to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk his appreciation for the very kind remarks that he has placed on the record of this Legislature. I must say I personally was very delighted when it became known to me that the Deputy Attorney General would be prepared to take on his very important responsibilities.

Although I didn't go to McMaster University—

Mr. Nixon: That's evident from time to time.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —I did have the benefit of the Deputy Attorney General as a former law-school teacher of mine and, as a matter of fact, as my former hockey coach—

Mr. Warner: That's the source of your problem.

Mr. Roy: You should have spent more time on hockey.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: In dealing with some of these rough characters across the aisle, I feel one needs to have that sort of assistance.

But, of course, I am personally delighted with his appointment.

Turning to the matter of the TAP, the temporary absence program, I can't reply too specifically, of course, as this matter does not come within my ministry. Personally I would be unhappy with respect to people, of whom it had been established that they had vicious propensities for them to be suddenly convicted and then released into the community.

I think the program must be used with caution with violent offenders. There are exceptional circumstances and some of them come to mind but, in fairness to the individuals, I shouldn't mention them specifically.

I also am aware of cases where heretofore responsible and respected members of the community, family people, have been convicted of commercial criminal activity involving white-collar crime of one kind or another. I know those people sometimes are allowed back into the community on a limited basis, at least to be able to work at their job during the daytime. Generally speaking, I think it is very much in the interests of the community as a whole that people in that position continue to support their families rather than have the families placed on welfare.

For people in that position, the fact that they have been convicted and sentenced to a period of incarceration, often entailing the loss of professional status, involves enormous humiliation to themselves and to their families. The actual incarceration in some of these circumstances is relatively minor compared to the personal humiliation that is involved.

When it is possible to return these people to the community, at least to the extent where they can continue to support their families and continue to be breadwinners, I think I would generally support the principle of that program. If the hon. member has any specific cases about which he's concerned I'd be pleased to take them up with the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea). But I don't think I can give a more specific response than I have done.

Mr. Nixon: You have had no complaints from the people in his offices across the province about this matter?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I should have responded to that. I was just thinking as the question was asked I can't recall any of my Crown attorneys having raised the issue with me and I am sure I would have recalled if they had. They might have raised it with other members of the ministry, the director of Crown attorneys for example, but this complaint has not been brought to my attention before. I am quite prepared to pursue it, because I would be concerned if Crown attorneys feel somewhat frustrated by this program after conducting a well prepared and vigorous prosecution and my concern is equally expressed so far as the members of our judiciary are concerned.

Mr. Roy: I would like to put a comment on record. You will recall, Mr. Attorney General, the case of an individual who was considered dangerous to the community being released because his sentence was completed and someone, I am not sure but I think it was the former member for High Park, Morty Shulman, raised the fact this individual was back in the community and was considered dangerous and the police were, in fact, monitoring his activities. I thought it was around Peterborough or some place in that area.

Mr. Nixon: It was raised by the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt).

Mr. Roy: It may have been raised in the House. But what I recall is the present Minister of Correctional Services saying he was very concerned about this individual being out in the community and in so saying, he appeared to be somewhat critical of the system which allowed this individual, when there was some evidence of a dangerous propensity towards sexual offences on young people, to be in the community. And as the parole board chairman said at that time, it had nothing to do with parole. The man finished his sentence.

What I felt was unfair was the present Minister of Correctional Services attacking the system which allows an individual like that to be released and in fact attacking your ministry because if there was evidence this individual was a dangerous offender, why was he not prosecuted under the dangerous sexual offender provisions of the Criminal Code, which is the responsibility of the Attorney General's office of the province and not of the federal government?

I just thought at the time of his comments—whether you got them or not—if that minister felt as strongly as he did about the individual, why steps were not taken by the Attorney General's office of this province, if they felt they had that sort of evidence, to see he was prosecuted and the weight of the law applied as it is set out in the Criminal Code to deal with that dangerous type of offender.

What I am trying to say basically, is you can't have it both ways. One minister is critical, saying he is there to defend the community when he is part of a government which had the responsibility, if this individual was a dangerous sexual offender, to prosecute. I don't know if you are familiar with the case.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, I am familiar with the case, Mr. Chairman. I think the member for Ottawa East is familiar with the procedure after a conviction and before sentence and application is made under section 688, as it was—it has been recently amended—to have the person declared a habitual criminal or a dangerous sexual offender as it used to be.

The difficulty was this person simply didn't qualify under that section. He was convicted of an assault causing bodily harm and was not convicted of a sexual offence. It involved a young child. It sounded like a very serious case and I think he received a four-year prison sentence for it. It involved attacking a young child in a public washroom.

There was no evidence that the child was sexually molested, but the child was beaten and suffered a fractured nose. I believe it was in Belleville, because I asked for a report under the section of the Criminal Code. It was not open to the Crown attorney to seek an order declaring that person a dangerous offender.

Whether or not it would come under the amendments—I'd have to look at the amendments as they only came into force on October 15. But there were some unique aspects to that case.

Mr. Roy: Why is everybody getting excited about this individual? From what you're saying it appears the incident did not seem to have a sexual overtone. It was an assault causing bodily harm case and his background did not reflect a consistent pattern of assaults with sexual overtones. I'm just wondering is this thing being blown out of proportion?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It may have been blown out of proportion. I think there was one previous conviction, almost 20 years earlier, which did involve an indecent assault. There was information that this person did have propensities considered to be dangerous. Obviously that was very much a part of the press reports.

I don't know at this moment where that information came from—whether there was any psychiatric report, or presentence report, that may contain some of this information which might have been submitted to the court at the time of the sentencing, I just can't assist the hon. member now.

But I do know that the offence for which that individual was convicted did not make that person a candidate for the provisions of the then habitual criminal section of the Criminal Code.

Mr. Chairman: Shall item—

Mr. Nixon: No, I have a point. Well, okay, you want to adjourn? Fine.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

Answers to written questions were tabled as follows:

30. Mr. Grande—Inquiry of the ministry:
(a) During the last fiscal year, how many Wintario grant applications has the ministry received from private clubs and/or organizations? How many of those applications have been accepted and funds “committed”? What is the total amount of funding which has actually been received by those clubs?
(b) During the last fiscal year, how many Wintario grant applications has the ministry received from private profit-making organizations? How many of those applications have been accepted and funds “committed”? What is the total amount of funding which has actually been received by those privately-owned organizations (Tabled October 27, 1977.)

Answer by the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Welch):

(a) During the last fiscal year 1976-77, 10 clubs and/or organizations initially perceived to be private submitted applications for Wintario assistance. Six were rejected; four received conditional commitments (including additional conditions relating to accessibility and public participation). No funds have yet been paid to these clubs.

(b) During the last fiscal year 1976-77, eight organizations perceived to be private profit-making organizations submitted applications for Wintario assistance. Five were rejected; three received conditional commitments (including additional conditions relating to change of status to non-profit). No funds have yet been paid to these clubs.

31. Mr. Grande—Inquiry of the ministry: Will the Minister of Culture and Recreation table the following information: 1. the number of Wintario tickets sold for each draw from the inception of the lottery to the end of June 1977; 2. the amount of funds “committed” for the fiscal years 1975-76 and 1976-77 and from April 1, 1977 to the present; 3. the amount of funds for the above-noted fiscal years that have actually been paid out to Wintario grant applicants? LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL (continued)

On vote 1301, item 1, Attorney General:

Mr. Chairman: The Attorney General just informed me he will be here in about one minute.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate your indulgence.

Mr. Nixon: I neglected to mention in our discussions before the dinner hour I was also rather pleased with another appointment the Attorney General had made, that is, in his information officer. I don't see him under the gallery; it's easy to miss him actually. He may be coming in. Ah, he's arriving now.

I just wanted to congratulate the Attorney General on the appointment of Mr. David Allen to the position of information officer. Is that correct? I don't know whether he has special responsibilities for dealing with the problems of the individual members, but I have found him most accommodating any time I've called. Fortunately, I don't have to call the ministry very often, for which I'm thankful. But I must say that he is very attentive in assisting in that connection.

I'm not just sure why the Attorney General feels he needs an information officer, since all his predecessors have been able to carry on their duties without one.

Mr. Roy: And he's been doing a good job himself.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, actually he must be getting very good advice from some direction because of the excellent information he's been able to convey. I thought, since I'd taken the time of the House to mention it on another matter, that it would only be fair to indicate I feel Mr. Allen is indeed an asset to the staff. Frankly, we miss him from the press gallery. As Elmer Sopha used to call these appointments an elevation to a minor Valhalla, in some respects I'm sure Mr. Allen is enjoying the harp and wings.

I want to ask, however, a specific question of the minister. It was prompted by the presence of one of his prosecutors under the gallery. I don't see him here tonight either—oh, yes, I see him very much in evidence. Can he give us a status report on the famous Hamilton dredging trial? What's happening over there? Is it going to be permanently delayed?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: First of all, dealing with Mr. David Allen, his correct title actually is director of communications. I might say for some period of time it was recommended to the Ministry of the Attorney General that there be a communications office as there developed an increasing interest in the court system and the administration of justice. I might put it this way. Because of the sensitivity of the ministry in dealing with criminal prosecutions and the necessity to carry out our responsibilities without partisan political considerations—

Mr. Nixon: That goes without saying.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —we did not have a director of communications until we were satisfied there was a candidate who possessed the intelligence, the capacity and the sensitivity of Mr. David Allen. I'm very delighted that he was available.

Mr. Nixon: That's why you haven't had one all of these many years.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I can only speak for the two years I've occupied this post.

Mr. Nixon: I knew he was good, but—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: For not quite a year and a half, we were without any director of communications whatsoever.

Mr. Nixon: You never know what you are going to need him for.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think it is important that we have someone of Mr. Allen's talents because of the very legitimate interest there is in the public in relation to the administration of justice. There was a time, perhaps a few years ago, where there wasn't this great interest. The courts functioned without much public scrutiny. I think part of the reason for that was the case flow the courts had to handle 10 years ago was very small compared with what it has to handle today.

There are a number of very legitimate concerns the public has with respect to the administration of justice. I think it's in the public interest that we have talented people in the communications field who can assist the ministry in telling the public what we are doing and how we are spending the taxpayers' money. I just wanted to indicate that I share the views of the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk as to the wisdom of the appointment of Mr. David Allen. I just wanted to reiterate that we're very happy to have him.

Mr. Nixon: Perhaps you'd permit a question just before you go on to the other matter. Do you agree with the contention evidently of one of the surveys done on behalf of the government as a whole that the communications and information jobs in the individual portfolios ought to be consolidated, so that there be a communications and information office that would be available to the ministries as they were needed? In that way, Mr. Allen's tremendous talents could be put to the service of some of the minister's colleagues perhaps who need them even more than he does, like the Minister of Revenue (Mrs. Scrivener) and people like that whom he could assist in the course of his duties.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There may be some overall wisdom in this recommendation, but insofar as the Ministry of the Attorney General is concerned I don't think it would be in the public interest to participate in a pool in relation to the distribution of information.

As to the dredging case arising out of the Hamilton activities and other activities involving dredging contracts, the trial date was originally set in September and the Crown was prepared to proceed at that time. However, several of the accused had appeals pending before the Supreme Court of Canada. There were two branches of appeals, one dealing with an application for leave to appeal, and the other with appeal as a right, having to do with habeas corpus proceedings. It was rather technical in view of the fact that no one was in custody. Because of the fact that these matters were pending before the Supreme Court of Canada, Mr. Justice Parker ordered that these matters not proceed while these matters were pending.

I'm just advised that the final appeal, and some of these appeals have been dealt with, will be heard by the Supreme Court of Canada. I'm advised by Mr. McLeod, who is the assistant deputy minister now and who is also in charge of the prosecution in this case and will be prosecuting the case, that December 20 has been set as the date to dispose of the final appeal.

I might say that this is a case in which the Chief Justice was requested to set an earlier date because we felt it was in the public interest to proceed with this long outstanding matter as quickly as possible. I'm further advised that the Chief Justice of the High Court, Mr. Justice Evans, indicated that in view of the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada within the past week had set December 20 for hearing this appeal he would now be prepared to set a trial date, perhaps even this week, so the trial would commence some time early in the new year.

Mr. Roy: While we're dealing with this item hopefully a lot of the matters can be covered at this time so we'll not have to go into them as we proceed down the estimates, if you will be patient with us, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nixon: A slight delay.

Mr. Roy: No. I don't intend to offend the rules quite that obviously.

I'd like to ask the Attorney General a question about his timetable in relation to the establishment of the French language in our trial process. I've been one who has been talking about this for quite some time. I was pleased to see the establishment—I shouldn't say the establishment but the privilege given to francophones in this province in a limited way to have their trials in French in the lower courts; even though it's done really by goodwill and the fact that everybody is prepared to accept it and nobody is opposing it. I still question the legality of that whole process—in the sense that there's a law objecting to it. I've said repeatedly that what is required is an amendment to the Judicature Act.

I'm told, by looking at certain schedules, that you're proposing an amendment to the Judicature Act this fall. I would like to ask you, when can we expect to see that amendment?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The member for Ottawa East is quite accurate when he relates that we have indicated our intention to amend the Judicature Act this fall. As you know, we have established an advisory committee to work with the ministry on these amendments. They have been meeting and my most recent information would indicate that there will probably be some legislation ready to be introduced, I would think, by the end of November. I would expect that I would be able to advise the member for Ottawa East within the next week of a more specific date since I know of his interest in this matter.

Mr. Roy: I don't particularly want to get into the legislation. As one who has looked at this for some time I understand that there may be problems from a practical point of view in not having certain restrictions or certain guidelines in the usage of French. I'm looking forward to seeing the legislation and I trust the Attorney General will give us some background material on this to support what I expect to be the nature of that bill.

I don't know what you have in mind, but I'd certainly be prepared to make some positive contribution to any legislation of this type and I would hope that consultative process would continue.

I do want to say something, though, about the committee the Attorney General has set up. In the past, of course, I have encouraged rapport with the province of Quebec to benefit from the experience in that province in conducting trials bilingually in their courts for 100 years. Certainly it's an advantage; I think they can offer some contribution.

I was extremely pleased to see a committee had been set up to look into the implementation of this whole question, but I do want to say that I have received some criticism from the legal profession in the Ottawa area about the composition of the committee. I don't have the names of the members in front of me but, as I recall, there are people from the Law Society of Upper Canada, counsel from the Quebec bar, some counsel from the province of Quebec. It would appear that the only person on that committee who seems to reflect the francophone fact in this province is Pierre Genest—is there another one? Who would that be?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Pharand from Sudbury.

Mr. Roy: I see. But the point I wanted to make, and the criticism I have received, is that in view of the fact that the largest proportion of francophones are in the Ottawa area, I suppose, and since that's where the largest number of lawyers are, if we are going to make the program work—I am not saying it must work only in Ottawa but certainly that's where it is going to have the highest profile—it may well be a good idea to have someone representing the bar from Ottawa on that particular committee.

I think it would be helpful in view of the composition of the bar in that area and in view of the fact that in the long term a high proportion of the cases, if they are going to proceed in French, will certainly be in that area.

For instance, I would suggest that the president of the Carleton County Bar Association, a Mr. Belanger, has been extremely helpful in assisting in the implementation of the process that we have now. He has the confidence of the faculty of law and, as the minister knows, the faculty of law as such is participating in this and will be offering a French program. I was in court the other day and I was impressed to discover they have already printed a bilingual lexicon, which is of great assistance to counsel and to those of us who still go to court occasionally and don't know the proper terms in French.

I am suggesting that someone from that area, whether from the faculty of law or from the bar, could make a contribution. There was some surprise expressed by the members of the profession in that area that none of their members had been appointed to that committee. I wasn't aware that Pharand was on it. The only one I seemed to recall was Genest. Is the committee closed now or is there any chance of getting anyone else on it?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, it's not a closed committee. As a matter of fact, we in the ministry are free to consult with whomever we want. I agree with the member that Mr. Belanger sounds to me like an appropriate individual to consult.

The history of this committee is that I requested the batonnier of the Quebec bar to recommend three of their members to sit on the committee; at the same time I requested the treasurer of the Law Society to recommend three members in order that the practising bars of the two provinces would be represented. We added Mr. Pharand to the committee.

This is, as I say a working committee at the present time, but I want to assure the member for Ottawa East that we will continue to consult with practising lawyers who we feel might have a useful input in relation to resolving this matter in the most effective way possible.

Once the cabinet has decided on the nature of the legislation to be introduced, I will certainly endeavour to give the member for Ottawa East as much notice as possible prior to introduction of this legislation. We will, as we have been trying to do with other legislation, have a good compendium prepared to be tabled with the legislation. I would hope I personally would have sufficient time to discuss the matter with the member for Ottawa East before we proceed to debate the legislation. I would think somewhere throughout the process we would be able to ensure the input of any members from the Ottawa area who will be able to make a contribution.

Mr. Roy: In the Throne Speech at the opening of the federal Parliament, there was some comment about certain amendments they are going to bring forward to the Criminal Code to allow the use of French in criminal trials. I take it the amendments to which they are referring involve the empaneling of juries. Is there anything else you know of in the Criminal Code which prevents one having a trial in French in this province, apart from the provisions of the Judicature Act?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, it is my view an amendment to the Criminal Code was appropriate in order to arrange for mixed juries, or perhaps bilingual juries in Ontario, in view of the specific provisions in the Criminal Code that now exist in relation to jury trials, or mixed jury trials in the province of Quebec and the province of Manitoba. The viewpoint has been put forward that the necessary provincial legislation, without accompanying federal legislation, might leave it open to someone to challenge the trial on the basis of the selection of the jury or on the basis of the fact the Criminal Code is silent in relation to any mixed juries or French-speaking juries in the province of Ontario. I don't necessarily share that view, but I think it is important the federal Criminal Code be amended.

I haven't heard from the federal Minister of Justice yet as to his specific proposals. He has indicated to me he intends to consult with us. The consultation process has not yet begun, but there are many aspects to this legislation and, as I say, this is something I expect we will be spending some time on in the Legislature, hopefully before Christmas.

Ms. Bryden: I think it was back in 1973 the government, by an amendment to the Law Society Act, ended the bonanza to the banks whereby they did not pay interest on trust accounts. Since the proceeds of that measure go into a variety of functions of the ministry, I thought it was appropriate to raise under this first item the question of whether the minister is monitoring the amount of money coming in and what interest rates are being paid by the banks on the lawyers' trust accounts.

From reading the Act, or the amendment that was brought in in 1973, the rates are to be set by the trustees of the body that receives the money, which is known as the Law Foundation of Ontario, and the money is then to be disbursed, three-quarters to Legal Aid and the balance to be divided among legal research, legal education, and law libraries.

In 1976 about $4 million or a little more came in, but I would like the minister to let us know if he knows what rate of interest was paid for each year since the amendment was made, that is the years 1974, 1975, 1976 and the current year; whether the interest is paid on minimum monthly balances or on minimum daily balances, or on what basis it is paid. This is a matter of concern to us here because the more money that comes in through this interest charge, the more we have for these four purposes for which the money is to be used, and the less we need for Legal Aid and other things of that sort.

Also, I don't think we should be permitting the banks to pay an interest rate considerably below the market rate for similar deposits. Therefore, I think we should be monitoring very carefully these interest rates and seeing whether they are going up as interest rates rise, or whether they are adjusted on a periodic basis or very infrequently. So I wonder if the minister could comment on what is happening in that regard?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't have those figures in front of me, Mr. Chairman. I will endeavour to obtain them from the Law Society. Of course, it's a matter between the Law Society and the Law Foundation and the chartered banks.

Shortly after I became the Attorney General, I suggested to the then treasurer of the Law Society and to the Law Foundation that they seek to increase the amount of interest payable on these trust funds. To my knowledge there has been no increase within the last two years. I know it's a matter that is being negotiated, and I'll attempt to advise the member opposite before the conclusion of these estimates just what the rates of interest have been since this agreement was entered into with the chartered banks, and whether or not there has been any increase, and also the manner in which it's calculated.

Ms. Bryden: I don't quite understand the role of the Law Society in determining these interest rates. I know that they appoint three of the members to the Law Foundation of Ontario which receives the money, and which is given the power under the Act to approve the interest rates. The government only appoints two members to that Law Foundation, which does give the Law Society an extra voice over the government. But I don't see that the Law Society as a body should be involved; it seems to me, it's the foundation that sets the rates.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We're dealing with the practising legal profession and the Law Society of Upper Canada just happens, Mr. Chairman, to be the governing body of the legal profession. Any arrangement in relation to interest on trust accounts would have to be negotiated by the Law Society or through their creation. Certainly, the Law Foundation was established pursuant to an agreement with the Law Society of Upper Canada.

It's true that the Law Foundation does administer the amount of these funds, most of which goes into Legal Aid. It was a role for the Law Society to play fundamentally but they agreed to create this body, this legal entity known as the Law Foundation.

At no time, I want to emphasize, does one penny of this money go to the provincial government. The money all goes from the trust accounts to the Law Foundation and through the Law Foundation directly to Legal Aid, which of course is administered by the Law Society of Upper Canada. Then there are amounts set aside for law libraries, scholarships and whatnot. But 75 per cent of the money goes directly to Legal Aid. It's not funnelled through the government.

Ms. Bryden: I can understand that the money does not go directly into the coffers of the government, but of course every penny raised this way reduces the amount of money the government needs for Legal Aid and for law libraries and law research and so on.

But the 1973 Act, chapter 49, sets up the Law Foundation of Ontario. It doesn't say it is set up by the Law Society of Ontario. It is a public body set up by a public statute and it is given the power to approve the interest rates the chartered banks will pay on the trust accounts of lawyers. This Act is the one that requires that lawyers keep a trust account in a chartered bank and that the chartered banks pay interest on it.

I still cannot see that the Law Society should have a say in what rate of interest is charged. It seems to me it is the Law Foundation, a public body set up by this Legislature, which decides on those rates. I am just questioning whether the minister should be monitoring more closely what that foundation is doing and, if we think it is not acting promptly enough in raising interest rates, we should consider amending the legislation.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As the member herself has pointed out, we do have two out of the five members of the Law Foundation. The other three, or the majority, are appointed by the Law Society. To that extent you might say the Law Society has effective control over the operation of the Law Foundation, but we do have two representatives on the Law Foundation.

I have indicated, as I mentioned a few moments ago, my personal desire or request or suggestion, if I might put it that way, that they attempt to negotiate a higher rate of interest. I understand the Law Foundation has attempted to do that. My information at the moment is they haven't met with too much success but I will attempt to find out where the matter stands and so advise this Legislature.

Ms. Bryden: One final question, does the minister have any rough idea of what is the current rate of interest that is being paid on the trust accounts?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would prefer to get the figure rather than guess. I do know, as part of this whole issue, the banks thus far have been able to present a pretty persuasive case in relation to the very significant accounting problem there is in relation to this fund. The rate of interest, considering the accounting that has to be done in relation to all of these lawyers' trust accounts, would of necessity, be a fairly low rate of interest. I doubt it is above four per cent, but I will check on that.

Mr. Sargent: Would you advise whether the royal commission on Metropolitan Toronto was under this vote?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: All royal commissions would be under item 5.

Mr. Worton: Come back later.

Mr. Chairman: We are on vote 1301, item 1.

Mr. Sargent: That is the Attorney General.

Mr. Chairman: Right.

Mr. Sargent: He is the Attorney General.

Mr. Elgie: Who are you?

Mr. Roy: Try it again.

An hon. member: Is he as good a hockey player?

Mr. Sargent: Does he want to speak for the commission or do you want to get down to commissions later on, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: We should be there very shortly, I would think.

Item 1 agreed to.

Item 2 agreed to.

On item 3, policy development:

Mr. Roy: I just want to make a comment before we let the Attorney General off that easy on item 3. I suppose my frustrations would be best taken out on your colleague to your right, the Premier (Mr. Davis). When I see in this vote we are going to spend something like $490,000 on policy development, which in my opinion is necessary, and then I see in the Justice policy field that ministry is going to spend $463,000 on what is supposed to be Justice policy as well, I am just wondering what the correlation is between the two.

I would have thought, just as a simple-minded person, that if we were going to spend this kind of money, $463,000 on Justice policy, that Justice policy would have been the responsibility of the Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. MacBeth) and not be spent in the policy development of the Attorney General's department. Maybe the Attorney General has some explanation that that's the relationship between the two. I really don't know.

But it does give me an opportunity to say again in case I might miss out on the $463,000 vote on Justice policy—it may happen that I won't be around—so let it be recorded for posterity, as I've been saying since 1971, what a useless institution I think that Justice policy is. Not your policy development within your ministry, but I'm saying the secretariat for Justice policy, just like the secretariat for Social Development policy, is something that was theoretically in somebody's mind. It seems to me to be somewhat inconsistent that we should be spending this kind of money on policy development when we are supposed to have a ministry that's supposed to co-ordinate all these ministries and get involved in policy itself.

Co-ordination was supposed to take place. The flow chart looked good on paper. We were going to have everything work in a logical fashion and we were going to have this Justice policy field and policy was going to be made here.

If we want evidence that it's not working the evidence is here in this vote. We're spending something like $490,000 on policy development within this ministry. I do want that put on the record. I know it's not this minister's responsibility to defend the Justice policy field. It seems to me that if we wanted further evidence of how that ministry—I'm talking about Justice policy—is not necessary we have it here.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Of course, I'm not in a position to speak on behalf of the policy secretariat. We have a very able Provincial Secretary for Justice who will be dealing with this matter later on. But insofar as the policy development branch of this ministry is concerned we really have four areas of responsibility.

The first is research and analysis of all aspects of the administration of justice in Ontario. Second is a continual review of the approximately 130 statutes administered by this ministry. This includes initiating proposals for reform and analysing suggestions for reform from the general public, from other ministries and members of the Legislature as well. Certainly I would hope it has been the experience of members of the Legislature in their concern about various problems that we've always tried to provide assistance where reasonable in relation to these many statutes.

Third, they're responsible for developing the legislative program in the ministry, by setting out and evaluating the range of government options for decision-making by the justice committee of cabinet, and by cabinet, leading to the creation, working in conjunction of course with the legislative counsel, of draft legislation.

Fourth, last but not least, they are responsible for advising the Attorney General and the Deputy Attorney General during the legislative progress of a bill.

Quite frankly, I would like to see a larger complement than we presently have in relation to policy development. I think the contribution that is made by these people to the administration of justice and all its aspects in the province of Ontario is very considerable.

That is what the general responsibilities are of the policy development branch of the Ministry of the Attorney General.

Mr. Roy: The book gives what their function is—and a necessary function in view of the fact you've been spending all this money in past years on law research. We should be doing something with all that law research. That's the area to go into. It's a question of policy.

If you propose a vote now to transfer this $463,000 from the Justice policy field, abolish it and give it to you in your policy development area I would support that move. I feel it's playing a necessary function, but it does give me an opportunity and I know the Attorney General's in a difficult position to agree with me on being critical of a ministry when he's a member of the government, but the fact does remain we feel $463,000 is being wasted on the Justice policy field.

Mr. Sargent: You want $490,000 this year for research, review of statutes, reform, et cetera. What are you doing about the fact a few months ago two alleged wrongdoers, neither of whom was carrying a gun, were shot in the back by policemen? What kind of reform are you doing with regard to the powers of policemen to shoot undefended people in the back? I'd like to ask you what's happened to the two policemen who did that.

Insofar as your reform and research under this department goes, our courts are clogged, our jails are overcrowded and 80 per cent of the cases involve plea bargaining without giving the accused a proper trial. Is this what you're spending $400,000, or half a million dollars for, to bring about rights in this regard? You can talk for hours about all of the great things your department is doing but it's basic principles of justice that are affecting the ordinary man; shooting an unarmed man in the back, or the man, as my colleague from Ottawa East said, who pleaded guilty because, even though he was innocent, he wouldn't have to spend six month in jail, or whatever.

These things are my concern as a taxpayer. You ask us for half a million dollars and you've probably been getting that kind of money for years and we still have archaic laws which are persecuting our people. These are the gut issues. Tell us why you want half a million dollars.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: First of all, on the incident referred to which allegedly involved police officers shooting individuals, I have absolutely no knowledge whatsoever of the incident referred to by the member for Grey-Bruce. Secondly, as the member, I think, knows, the police forces in this province are not administered by the Ministry of the Attorney General and these funds would not involve policy development in relation to our police forces in the province. This, of course, would come under the Ministry of the Solicitor General and I assume you would have taken that up with the Solicitor General when his estimates were in the House preceding my estimates.

The issues related to the problems of many cases in the courts, which the hon. member refers to as clogging of the courts is, of course, a matter of serious concern and a great deal of attention is paid to this problem in the ministry. Our white paper on courts administration tabled a year ago was the product of a lot of work by people in the policy development of the ministry. There are certain proposals in that white paper that go right to the heart of the administration of the courts in this province, which has a great deal to do with relieving the pressures on the courts.

The member's colleague, the member for Ottawa East, referred to this earlier. He indicated some concern about taking the administration of the courts out of the Ministry of the Attorney General because of the issue of accountability. I think some of the issues he raised are very legitimate ones, but again this is just an indication of efforts that are being made by the policy branch of the ministry.

In the material that has been supplied to the members we have set out a great deal of information in relation to the work of the policy development of the ministry. I may have different page numbers. I will be quite happy to take the time, if this is what the hon. member wants, to discuss what the policy development branch of the ministry does.

In the notes on estimates that we have supplied the members of the Legislature, pages eight, nine and 10 deal with the activities of the policy branch of the ministry. I don't think it would serve any useful purpose for me simply to read or recite material that is in the hands of the members of the Legislature. But even a brief or superficial perusal of those pages would indicate that the people responsible for policy development in the Ministry of the Attorney General are indeed fully occupied and, I think, making a significant contribution to the administration of justice in this province.

Mr. Sargent: Going back, it's unbelievable that the chief law officer of this province would not know that a man who was suspected of having used a wrong credit card ran away and was shot in the back by a policeman. It's shocking that the minister didn't know that. I'll send him the clippings on it. In fact, he should have that in his files if he knows what's going on. That happened in Toronto.

Mr. Martel: What's the matter with you, Roy?

Mr. Sargent: The government comes up with all kinds of reports. Someone asked me if I had read one of the reports I received last month; I said, "Hell, I can't even lift them, the reports you get here."—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: They don't fit in your airplane.

Mr. Martel: You need a bigger plane, Eddie.

Mr. Sargent: Regardless of the fact that the government is spending $500,000 on reports, the bottom line is that people are still being treated unjustly. Look at all the high-priced brass in front of the Attorney General; each one of those fellows is making more than a member of the Legislature. They laugh at us. They think we're clowns because we are making peanuts and they're making twice as much as we are. They're supposed to advise the Attorney General, who leans on them to feed him the reports he talks about. But the bottom line is that the average man on the street is not getting justice in this province, and the Attorney General knows it. He leans back and says, "We've got reports that say we're looking at it." Hell, they've been doing that for 34 years under the Tory administration. The Attorney General sits there, smugly arrogant and aspiring to be the Premier of this province, saying: "We have reports." I say: "Baloney." Why doesn't he take some action and get justice for the ordinary guy in this province?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Considering the source of the comment, it's pretty hard to take it seriously because, in the two years I've been here, the member hasn't demonstrated for one moment that he takes his job seriously at all.

Mr. Davidson: That was a cheap shot.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, it's absolutely correct.

Mr. Sargent: At least I'm not a phoney; I'll tell you that.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As far as I'm concerned, the people who have built the administration of justice in this province over the years have made a contribution—

Mr. Sargent: You and your phoney police commissions.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Sure, we have problems with the administration of justice. We recognize these problems. But the fact of the matter is we have a system of administration of justice in this province that is second to none in the world. If the member were a little brighter, he would realize that.

Mr. Sargent: Now we're getting down to the bottom line. Talking about policy, we'll show the Attorney General how much justice we have in this province. If the minister wants to put the gloves on, I'll face him any time, either in the House or outside the House. He's such a hotshot, but we'll get to him.

Mr. Gregory: Don't get mad, Eddie.

Mr. Sargent: You are the man who okayed the setting up of the court for the inquiry on Ronto. Right? You okayed it as the Attorney General? And you allowed, Mr. Minister, the court, the judge in charge of the inquiry, to subpoena Mr. Nixon, Mr. Peterson and myself and three members of the NDP the day before the election to give evidence on the Ronto hearing. This was engineered by your friend, your buddy, Mr. McKeough, a $2 million tax exemption and you get into bed with these people to use the courts to harass us the day before the election.

Somewhere along the line—if we had the powers in this House to get you on the stand to find out how you and McKeough can get into bed to steer such a deal through in this free society. You can use the court to play politics—and don't you talk to me about my sincerity in this job. At least we are not phoney like you are.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't really have to respond to questions such as that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sargent: I didn't think you would. You haven't got the guts.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: And I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, if we are going to continue in any orderly way, that perhaps the member for Grey-Bruce might consider what his role is in relation to these estimates and if he is just simply going to use this chamber for communicating gratuitous—

Mr. Sargent: You started it, Roy. You started it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —insults, I don't think we are going to make much progress.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I would point out to all the members we are dealing with item 3 which is the policy development item of the Attorney General's department. The member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: I would ask the Chairman's guidance. I want to talk about the construction of the courthouse in Sudbury and I am not sure if you want to bring that under planning and research and analysis or under some other particular vote. I thought it would be under the main office, but I would ask the Chairman's guidance on whether the Attorney General wanted to discuss that particular item.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Under 1306, Mr. Chairman. That is the vote, courts administration.

Mr. Martel: I wasn't sure if the expenditure would be made with respect to construction and so on under main office or in that particular item. That's all I am looking for.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think that would be the appropriate vote.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: We will hold the item then to discuss under vote 1306. The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: I wanted to raise with the minister the question that the city of Windsor is attempting, through the Minister of Municipal Affairs and also through your officials to have a change made in the Municipal Act that would enable the courts to increase the fines on those who leave ignition keys in their cars. The city's whole intent in this is to reduce substantially the number of auto thefts which are a direct result of negligence on the part of the owner of the vehicle who inadvertently, or otherwise, leaves his keys within the car.

The city is asking for an increase in the fine from a minimum of $25 up to $100. I understand you were supposed to assist the provincial Treasurer amend the Municipal Act or consider amending the Municipal Act so that such a penalty could be levied by the courts. Would you care to reply, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I assume what the hon. member is referring to is a municipal bylaw, because I don't believe there is anything in the Highway Traffic Act that makes it an offence.

Mr. B. Newman: No, it's a change to section 363, paragraph 8, of the Municipal Act in which you or the provincial Treasurer was prepared to consider Windsor's suggested amendment, but he was going to review it with your ministry.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: What I will do is take that under advisement and I will get back to the hon. member before the estimates are concluded. I just don't have any information about that at the present time.

Mr. B. Newman: I would appreciate that, Mr. Minister.

Item 3 agreed to.

On item 4, law research:

Mr. Roy: I just have some brief comments on law research. I notice over the past years we have spent on an average something close to $500,000 a year on law research. We have had many reports and we have had very capable people working on the question of law research, the Ontario Law Reform Commission and so on. We have reams of volumes.

I don't intend to repeat speeches I have been making on this for four or five years about all the great suggestions that have been made. You could close the door on law research, on the Law Reform Commission, for the next 10 years and probably still have a lot of work ahead of you just catching up with implementing the recommendations that have already been made by a succession of reports and a succession of chairmen of the Ontario Law Reform Commission.

I would like to know from the minister what area are they directing themselves to. What areas are we looking at? I don't like to say this, because I am one who feels the law has got to be vibrant and responsive to the needs of the particular community, but what concerns me is what happens. I have seen it happen, not so much at this level but certainly at the federal level, where they look at a whole succession of reforms within the law and the first thing that happens is they seem to be in some measure insulated from what the community is prepared to accept.

A succession of recommendations are made which clearly the public is not prepared to accept. The point I am trying to make is that the public mood is changing so quickly. There is a trend now to go back to old values, to solid principles that have been applied for many years and are tried and true. People are less prepared to hazard into a field of major reforms, so we must be careful when we are going into the question of law reform that the people in that field looking at law reform are not being bypassed by the community or by what the community is prepared to accept.

I am suggesting that this has happened to the federal Law Reform Commission, especially in the criminal field. They made all sorts of suggestions as to what should be an offence, what should not be an offence and the type of penalty that should be imposed or not imposed. Frankly, many of their recommendations will never see the light of day because the public is just not prepared to accept those sorts of recommendations.

The Ontario Law Reform Commission has been looking basically at the civil field. Some of their major recommendations have been accepted and certainly have improved the law. There was such a long way to go in the area of civil law as contrasted to the criminal field. In the civil field, we were so far back that there were major changes to be made. Could you tell me what they are looking at now? Do we have any idea what specific things they are looking at now in the field of law?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have a fairly extensive list here. I might say, first of all, that the record of the Ontario Law Reform Commission since it came into being, I think about 1964, has been a rather impressive one in relation to the number of recommendations that have been implemented by legislation in this House. This fact is not as widely known as it should be. As a matter of fact, I recall discussing this very issue with the former chairman of the Law Reform Commission, Mr. Justice McRuer, a year or so ago. It was his regret that there was not more known about the success of the Law Reform Commission in having such a large number of its recommendations actually implemented by the legislators who sit in this chamber. As a matter of fact, this is a project that hopefully will result in a little history of the work of the Law Reform Commission. I say this because again this is an area in which I think this province has really provided a lot of leadership.

[9:00]

I've had a number of discussions with members of other law reform commissions throughout the Commonwealth. They're very familiar with the work done by our Law Reform Commission and I think it would be unfair to suggest they are not in tune with what goes on in the public sector.

As you know, the three members of the Law Reform Commission are practising lawyers and we now have a former Chief Justice of Ontario, who has had some 30 years of experience in applying and interpreting the law as a Supreme Court judge as vice-chairman of the Law Reform Commission.

Briefly, on page 12 of the notes on the estimates, there is reference to an activity brief which indicates the work of the Law Reform Commission and what they have pending for the year 1977-78. It's a pretty extensive program.

The Law Reform Commission was originally handed as well some problems that deal with the professional organizations. There are a lot of issues in relation to jurisdictions between various professions such as the architects and the engineers, the public accountants, chartered accountants and examination of the role of the legal profession. This project was commenced by the Law Reform Commission and then a separate commission was established to continue the work because there was some criticism from the other professions we had a commission made up solely of lawyers making this determination.

We restructured another commission headed up by the former chairman of the Law Reform Commission, now the Deputy Attorney General and added Dr. Stefany Dupré and Dr. Corry, the former dean of the Queen's Law School. They're working very hard in relation to a number of these issues.

I'm not sure if I understand specifically the question from the member for Ottawa

East insofar as adding anything to the activity brief set out in the notes on the estimates.

Mr. Roy: Maybe I could be more specific here. I apologize; I haven't seen the items. I wanted to know what area we were getting into now, because I had certain concerns about certain areas that should be looked at.

I'm very pleased to see, for instance, the Law Reform Commission is looking at the law of property. I've said this before, I suppose in one of my opening speeches in the House and I'd better make it again before I become a member of the establishment or get my QC or something.

Mr. Nixon: It's coming up, by the way.

Mr. B. Newman: Be careful or you may not get it.

Mr. Roy: I'd better make the observation again while it's still fresh and it was so obvious to me. I'm very pleased to see the Law Reform Commission get into that; the law of property.

Maybe I've got a natural dislike for property as one of the few subjects I failed in law school, and I always hated real estate but I could never understand in the technological age we have now, why it was necessary, in every property transaction in this province, for somebody to chase down to the registry office and get out all those documents and start looking through them to follow the title. When we can microfilm whole libraries, when we can microfilm a variety of other things, it just struck me that was a system propagated by the lawyers for continued income. And I will probably have two partners who are going to tear my head off when I get back to the office some time later in the week.

But basically, it struck me it just didn't make sense in 1977, or back in 1971, every time a piece of property was transacted, you had to go down to the registry office and pull out the documents, review them all and go through that title search. Why couldn't you just press a button to say, "Your title is good," or "It is not good," or "Here is a problem," or whatever?

I appreciate that can only be as good as what you feed into the computer, but I am very pleased the Law Reform Commission is looking at this. I am not sure they are looking at this area, but I would hope they would look at this because it strikes the ordinary lay person that with all our technology it just doesn't make sense in transacting titles today, we should have to go through this whole process.

They are looking, as well, at the question of enforcement of judgement debts. Of course, that is something that is sorely lacking. We will certainly need some suggestions in there. Sometimes our courts just don't work in that area and it only works when an approach is taken by way of collection agencies who start making phone calls late at night and start threatening little old ladies and things of this nature. They are the only ones who seem to have any success.

The other thing that is interesting is the question of product liability. So I look forward to some of these recommendations, but I would make this final suggestion to the Law Reform Commission. You talk about them looking at professionals and the relationship of one profession to the next. You know, somebody should be looking at what is going to happen down the way if we keep pouring out the number of lawyers we are doing now. I said in my opening comments and I did not get your response, but I repeat it again, the only thing limiting the number of lawyers—in Ontario, at least; I don't know about any other jurisdictions—is the number of seats in that classroom, in every law school. What is happening, of course, is the law schools are intent on having every seat filled because they are paid so much per student and the more students they have, especially at the post-graduate level, the more money they make. It bothers me when I see some of these people within the profession who have difficulty even getting articling positions now, who have difficulty setting up practice. What happens when these lawyers start, especially when you have that combined with a Legal Aid system where people start hustling certificates?

I find the Law Society somewhat insensitive on what this does to a profession and the community. Is there not any concern? Maybe some of us who express concern are overly paranoid about this, but I wonder when you get too many people out there and you hear comments now about the hustling going on around the jails and the hustling going around the courthouse and the ambulance chasing that is going to take place.

Mr. Nixon: It is called competition.

Mr. Roy: Sure it is called competition, but it reaches a point where, especially where you have a Legal Aid system it is really open to abuse. It is fine when you have competition and the client can get something done cheaper in one place than in the other, but what about when it is Legal Aid paying and the lawyer can stretch out the proceedings and get more money for proceedings? You know, I just wonder.

Mr. Nixon: We ought to get back to that fee competition.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, I thought we might get back to the question raised in the member's opening statement. I did not intend to simply ignore that, but I think it is a very difficult problem for the Law Society to limit or reduce the number of lawyers who are being called to the bar or law students who are being called to the bar in any one year. Obviously, the number of places now available in law schools in the province has increased dramatically over the past 10 years in particular. But that notwithstanding, Mr. Chairman, the simple fact is only about one in five applicants gets admitted to a law school. I may not be precisely accurate on that, but it is something like that. It means a very large number of our young people who have university degrees, under the existing system, are prevented from going to law school and at least having the opportunity of competing. Consider the fact of the enormous demand to get into law school, only a relatively few people, although it's still about 1,000 a year recently, are being called to the bar. It still represents a very small percentage of young citizens of this province who would like to have the opportunity to practise as lawyers.

I certainly wouldn't recommend any reduction of that number simply because of the fact that it is more difficult now to get a job or to earn a living than it was five years ago. I think we're into a very sensitive area if we suggest, that in order to keep down the type of competition that may be leading in certain cases to unethical conduct. We reduce the number of people who have been called to the bar. That is one way of attacking the problem.

I would like to think that the more effective way of attacking that problem is by making sure that the Law Society is ever vigilant in relation to maintaining professional ethics. I would hope for the 1,000 people a year who are being called to the bar in this province, if they do not necessarily stay within the legal profession as practising lawyers, there'll be many other opportunities that will avail themselves.

Certainly this has been a problem of concern to the Law Society of Upper Canada in recent years. At the moment they haven't come up with any easy solution. But I for one would not support at this point in time any sort of artificial cutback on the number of places presently available in law schools of the province.

Mr. Nixon: I feel constrained on this very item to express a concern that the costs of providing legal services don't seem to be in any way affected by the number of competent lawyers anxious to do the work. Of course we find this in the teaching profession, in the medical profession, and right across the board. Those of us who believe in the supposed old fashioned rules of supply and demand have certainly had our eyes opened in this regard, because it just does not apply. I don't know what the Attorney General can do about it, but it does bring to mind something that we have already talked about to some extent and that is the role of the Municipal Board in this very matter.

It comes to mind because I have in my hand the ruling of the Ontario Municipal Board regarding the annexation of parts of the townships of Innisfil, Vespra and Oro to the city of Barrie. Without talking about it in detail, I would simply draw the minister's attention to the very impressive lineup of stellar legal talent that all gathered in the city of Barrie to argue before the Municipal Board.

I think it would just be enlightening if I read this list, when we talk about the cost of legal advice and counsel with respect to some of the actions of the government. The counsel list is on part of two pages and is headed by James F. McCallum, QC, O. J. Rowe, QC, and John G. Chipman for the city of Barrie; John Sopinka, QC, and William Bogart for the township of Innisfil; B. S. Onyschuk and R. R. Arblaster for the township of Vespra; Collin Campbell and David S. White for the township of Oro; Robert Lawrie for the county of Simcoe; J. J. Carthy, QC, and R. K. Webb, QC, for South Simcoe Estates; Robert W. Macaulay—who never worked for anything less than $75 an hour five years ago, God knows what he charges now—and R. K. Webb, QC, for Abbey Glen et al; Allan S. Blott and N. J. Pepino for Paramount Development Corporation; Dennis H. Wood for Joyce L. Woods and 70 ratepayers; Douglas K. Laidlaw, QC—he's appeared in this building frequently—for Rice Construction Company Limited; Peter Petropoulos for A. DiPaola, A. White and H. Hicklings;—

[9:15]

Mr. Lewis: At least the clients can afford to pay.

Mr. Nixon: —David T. A. Hogben for Beau Bar Development Limited; T. C. Marshall for the Treasurer of Ontario; Roger G. Oatley for J. Stollar Construction; Peter H. Howden and Anthony A. Peckham for Emery Miller; David F. Smith for Golden R. Campbell and ratepayers; David R. McGregor for Susan Haddow; D. J. Sugg for Taurus Developments and others; Allan Leibel and E. A. Goodman, QC for Star Bush Holdings and Coventry Group Limited—I don't know what his hourly rate is; Edwin J. Myers for E. Hodge; I. M. Reid for the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs—they had good coverage there; and William J. Leslie for J. Fran Enterprises Ltd. and Wilmore Limited.

I didn't count them up, but probably it is as impressive a galaxy of legal stars as you could gather this side of Philadelphia, and probably even better than that.

The first paragraph in this report says: "This is an application by the city . . ." et cetera; at the outset of the hearing the board was informed that the city would not present any evidence to support the annexation of one portion. I simply draw to your attention, Mr. Chairman, it was an application for a large annexation. The first meaningful paragraph says: "The board was advised by letters from the Hon. W. Darcy McKeough that as a result of the report of the Simcoe-Georgian area task force development strategy, Exhibits 4 and 5, it was government policy that the board should order the annexation of an area that would provide for a population of 125,000 by the year 2011."

While we're worrying about using up all the legal talent, it seems to me a sort of a futile approach that we establish the Municipal Board to hold supposedly open hearings with the idea that their decision is going to depend on the merits of the case, and then from a person who was well represented by two of these lawyers, they simply say—I mean it is inherent in their statement—that they're going to have to award the annexation anyway. The rest of it is justification for this little piece of land and that little piece of land. It really must be frustrating to anybody concerned, as I find it frustrating here, even to think of the costs of the legal representation, all of those great minds sitting around at these hearings when in actuality the outcome was simply dictated by the chief planner.

We discussed this before. I wasn't objecting to his making his statement to the Municipal Board, but if we're going to use the Treasurer as the chief planner of the province, which he is by Act of this Legislature, then why not let him plan and not go through this very misleading and expensive procedure? Has the minister any comments about that or does he feel this procedure is still valid and useful in our society?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think the procedure is useful and valid. I don't wish to comment on that particular decision of the OMB because I have reason to believe it will be before the courts of this province and that legal galaxy, to which you've just referred, will be further employed—

Mr. Lewis: Check their per diem.

Mr. Nixon: And here we were worried about using up their time.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry—perhaps in an application before the divisional court in relation to the judgement of the Municipal Board in this matter. It would perhaps be inappropriate of me to comment further in respect of that particular judgement.

Mr. Ziembra: I would like to ask the Attorney General when we can expect a reform of our present system of fines, as the Law Reform Commission had suggested so long ago. The Law Reform Commission suggested we could follow the Swedish model and base our fines on ability to pay.

What we're doing these days is operating debtors' prisons. A $200 fine to someone on welfare may as well be $2,000 or $20,000, they can't pay it. I've heard of a number of cases of young people winding up in jail and not being able to meet the bail—the parents are not willing or not able to meet it—and a young person was abused and brutalized until someone came to his rescue. What I object to is the kind of chequebook justice that exists now.

The Law Reform Commission has suggested that a fine should be based on a day-fine system of one per cent of an individual's annual wages to be equivalent to each day he would have to serve in jail. In other words, someone who was earning $5,000, if he ended up with 30 days, would pay 30 times five or $150, but someone earning $20,000 would pay 30 times 200 or $600. That seems a lot fairer than the system we have now.

It has been reported that 66 per cent of our native peoples are in prison simply because they can't pay their fine. Debtors' prison indeed; I wonder when the Attorney General is going to move in this direction.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: First of all, we're dealing here with some basic judicial discretion. No Attorney General can direct the courts what to do in this respect, but we are moving very much into a fine option system.

Certainly community work orders are part of this proposal, and we support the view adopted by the federal Law Reform Commission that people should be given the opportunity of working out a fine rather than being incarcerated. We believe that incarceration for non-payment of fines should be absolutely the last resort and that every other alternative should be explored. Community work orders are one avenue we are pursuing.

All I can say is that I share the general concerns of the member for High Park-Swansea, but there are some other matters dealing with bail as well. Certainly most of the criticism my ministry deals with is in relation to the relatively easy availability of bail since the implementation of the Bail Reform Act. I'm not suggesting that there aren't people who still are retained in custody because of their inability to raise bail, but I think those cases have diminished somewhat dramatically. Most of the criticism I hear is about the easy availability of bail for allegedly or purportedly dangerous offenders.

Mr. B. Newman: I wanted to raise with the minister a question I originally asked him on April 9, 1976, in relation to lie detectors. If the minister can recall, at that time there was a problem with some municipal employees in the city of Windsor when several of them had to take lie detector tests. Has the ministry now any set policy on the use of lie detectors? If it has, would he spell it out for us?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'd hoped we might be introducing legislation this fall on the use of lie detectors in employment situations. The matter has been reviewed by the Ministry of Labour and I'm optimistic that legislation will still be developed prior to Christmas. It has not yet reached the stage where it has been considered by cabinet.

There are a number of people in private industry who have indicated their desire to make representations to the government before we pass the legislation. It's been suggested that the use of lie detectors or the polygraph machine is a necessary adjunct of an effective operation. I personally do not agree, but I will try to advise the member further, again before these estimates are concluded, as to just what stage we are at. Certainly my stated intention in this Legislature, to recommend to my cabinet colleagues that we proceed with some legislation in this area, still stands. I hope that we will hear something further of a concrete nature before Christmas.

Mr. B. Newman: I certainly hoped to hear from the minister, because when I asked the question on April 9, 1976, at that time he replied that he would look into the Windsor situation and report back to me. That was 19 months ago, and there still has been no report forthcoming from his ministry. I hope the minister works a little more expeditiously when it comes to introducing legislation.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: When the question was first asked and answered, my first response was that this was a matter that I was confident would be dealt with in some detail, firstly by the report of Mr. Justice Morand into police practices in Metropolitan Toronto. I think it was some time after that that Mr. Justice Morand released his report and we were awaiting that report, as I have already suggested, because the use of the polygraph machine was a very significant aspect of that public inquiry. But I appreciate the member's frustration and we'll try to move along with the matter.

Mr. B. Newman: I thought the minister would have looked into the Windsor situation in particular and then reported back on it, but apparently other things come between that answer.

Mr. Sargent: About a year ago, on November 25, 1976, talking about law reform, the Attorney General was quoted as saying: "New instructions will be given to judges and Crown attorneys that wiretap authorizations not include bugging lawyer-client conversations except in extremely rare circumstances." What has been done in this regard?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We discussed this a little earlier today when I think the member for Grey-Bruce was absent from the chamber. This was a matter of some discussion between the member for Ottawa East and myself. We were talking about the guidelines that were sent out to all Crown attorneys in the province who had authority to seek wiretap authorizations. They are carefully structured guidelines, a copy of which was provided to the Liberal justice critic, and which were directed to avoid the interception of any solicitor-client communication except in the most relatively rare circumstances. It is something we have directed our attention to.

The instructions were circulated some months ago and I think it was agreed by the Liberal justice critic that they were a good set of guidelines and hopefully will avoid any interception of solicitor-client communication.

Mr. Sargent: That just shows I don't know much about the legal setup. I thought it was the judges who controlled the wire-tap laws in this province. Is that not true?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The procedure is for an authorized Crown attorney to apply to a superior court judge for an authorization. The judge must be satisfied, according to the criteria that have been set out in the Criminal Code, that it's a proper case for a wiretap. But included in the judge's order, at the request of myself and my ministry, the Crown attorneys have been instructed to request that the wording of the authorization will be such as to avoid, wherever practical, the interception of any communication between a solicitor and his client.

[9:30]

Mr. Sargent: In this regard, a bar association was told that judicial control over wiretapping is a joke; that police can choose the judge needed to authorize wiretaps. Does the minister see any way around this?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That allegation was really, I think, somewhat irresponsible. I am aware of the article to which the hon. member refers. We know that Supreme Court judges, for example, have established their own duty roster in this area. The Chief Justice of the High Court has made it quite clear that various judges will be available at any particular time. So a Crown attorney will appear before a particular judge, depending on the rotation. The rotation of judges is, of course, within the control of the judiciary through the Chief Justice of the High Court, so it makes it very difficult to embark on any judge-shopping as suggested by the article to which you referred.

Mr. Sargent: Do you furnish an annual report of the wiretaps? How many were there last year? Have you given that out yet?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Before dinner I said the annual report was about to be published, I didn't think that it had been published. In the report we set out the number of authorizations that we applied for; the number of authorizations granted; the nature of the offence for which the authorizations were sought; and, as well, the number of charges that have been laid following these authorizations. This is quite a complete report.

To assist the member for Grey-Bruce I will furnish him this week with a copy of last year's report while we are awaiting this year's report, so that he will have an idea about what is included in the report.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you very much, Mr. Minister—and the number of convictions obtained too.

What would the minister think about reform in the wiretap law? For example, where no charge is laid, the party involved has no right to see the data from the wiretap. What kind of justice is this when it is a one-way street?

They can charge a man, they can tap his home or his business, he is not convicted yet he can't see the information. What kind of a law is that? What kind of justice is that? It is a one-way street.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: This is a matter that was raised initially by the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy). We took some time over it.

Mr. Sargent: I am sorry, if it has been dealt with it is okay.

Mr. Roy: I just want to make one comment. I know we discussed the question of wiretapping before, but it is something that could be considered within policy or research or whatever.

I just want to make this comment to the Attorney General in reference to the remarks of my colleague from Grey-Bruce about the question of judge-shopping and that sort of thing.

I don't know who made that statement. I suspect it was probably some defence counsel here in Toronto and I could just visualize who it might be. I am not considered to be a radical by any stretch of the imagination, but I have expressed this to the Attorney General before. One of the reasons I got so exercised about the Perth situation, about tapping the defence council who was in to see his client on a murder case, was that I was clearly under the impression, and that's been confirmed, that many of our judges who are supposed to be the safeguard between the citizen and the police requiring the use of that wide-sweeping power, were in fact rubber-stamping these applications, they weren't really going into it.

I've been advised that judges are looking at these applications more closely, but I don't have any doubts that there is some judge-shopping going on in spite of the fact that there may be a roster. The Crown can tell or will know who's on the roster on a particular day and will wait, and will not go before one judge or another judge.

The same goes on in county towns where authorizations are obtained from county court judges. There is some judge-shopping going on. How you can avoid that I really don't know.

For instance, is there any record kept of a refusal by a judge? I suspect there should be. Is there anything stopping you, if you get a refusal from judge A, from going to judge B to obtain a particular authorization? That statement made by my colleague may have been wide-sweeping and may have gone too far, but there is some measure of concern that judge-shopping can take place.

We have to be ever vigilant. I have great faith in the judiciary, but the judiciary, frankly, in this field needs to have the cases of abuse brought out to alert them and bring to their attention that sometimes authorizations are given for one purpose and may end up being used for another purpose. They are our only protection in all of this. They have a very heavy responsibility. If you get a perception out there in the public that the judges are in fact just rubber-stamping these applications, I think the whole administration of justice suffers.

Mr. Sargent: I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman. I gather my colleague wasn't satisfied with the answer regarding the accused being found not guilty although he was tapped. What is the minister's answer for that?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I was going to respond to the member for Ottawa East. I was just consulting with one of our senior Crown law officers here, because it's been my understanding that we have never gone to another judge after having been turned down by one judge.

What normally happens is a judge may send our agent back for additional information but our recollection is, and we can't be 100 per cent certain but my source would have a pretty good idea if this had happened, our recollection is that there is no case where we have been turned down by one judge and gone to another. However in that event, the policy would be to advise the second judge we've been turned down by the first judge.

Mr. Roy: But you see one of the problems on that point. As I recall looking at the statistics—that was back last year and I haven't seen the more recent ones—less than one per cent of the demands have been turned down, I think, across the country.

I don't know what your record is, but I appreciate you have very good Crown attorneys and very good personnel within your ministry right across the province. I've worked within it, I know something of it, and as much credit as I want to give them, they're not that good. They're not 99 per cent. I wouldn't think they were that good, so as to get just one per cent refusal or maybe less.

That's why I was concerned to say that it appears to me, just looking at it on the surface, that the judges in fact are just granting these as a matter of course. It may well be that you're right, the reason you've got such a high percentage of authorizations granted is that you may have to go back two or three times for the one authorization. A judge says, look I need this, or I need that; I need more information on that. In fact when he's sending your fellow away to bring back more information he's not turning him down, he's just saying get more information before you're granted this; I don't know.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to clarify my position now. This won't take a minute. A principle is involved to my mind. Could you see my good colleague from Ottawa in the legal fraternity? You all run the biggest crap game in the world. The people are in the middle all the time. Most of this hocus-pocus going on back between you and him is understood but as the lead paragraph in this news item states: "A Guelph man who was told earlier this year that his telephone had been tapped was told by the Supreme Court of Ontario yesterday that he has no right to see the information that led to the wiretap."

There was no charge laid. Now what right have you, as the Attorney General, to okay this, which you did.

The Attorney General shakes his head; you mean you did not?

Right then, where do we talk about reform. Who do we talk to about reform? What can you do about it?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: If I may be permitted, Mr. Chairman, the answer I gave earlier to the member for Ottawa East is, first of all the legislation of the federal Parliament of Canada absolutely prohibits or precludes me as an Attorney General, or anyone else, from revealing any information with respect to the circumstances related to a wiretap. If a provincial Attorney General gave out this information he could be charged with an offence under the federal legislation.

Now I am concerned, as I indicated earlier, about the problem raised in the case of—Mr. Zadik, I think it was—the decision of Mr. Justice Gallighan whereby a citizen suddenly receives a notification he has been the subject of a wiretap and may have no reason, may honestly have no reason, to believe he could possibly be the subject matter of a wiretap authorization.

We are concerned about it. We are in a position to make representations to the federal Minister of Justice, as is any provincial Attorney General. The matter has been drawn to my attention in relatively recent weeks and I think it is a matter of legitimate concern. I have asked my senior law officers to review the matter to ascertain whether we cannot come up with some suggested amendment to the Criminal Code, some proposal I can make to the federal Minister of Justice to alleviate the situation, because I agree it can be a very unhappy situation for somebody who may be totally innocent of any wrongdoing. Particularly, as I said earlier, if his child took this notification outside and it fell into the hands of a neighbour or friend who as a result suspected this person had been involved in some sort of criminal activity just by reason of the fact the authorities were able to make him the subject of a wiretap.

We are concerned about it; we are reviewing it with a view to deciding whether or not we can make any useful suggestions to the federal Minister of Justice.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Minister, thank you. If you cannot do this, if you don't go to Ottawa and pound the table and say we want this done, it is the end of the road for our free system. If this can happen to a guy it is the end of the road in our system if we cannot do anything about it.

Mr. Foulds: Along the same lines as have been recently raised, I first of all want to thank the Attorney General's officials for getting me the annual report of 1976. I am curious about the large number of applications for legalized wiretapping occurring in bookkeeping and conspiracy to make book. Is that because that seems to be an activity where there is suspicion organized crime is involved; this happens to be a large area of concern?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Bookmaking is an activity which produces very substantial funds into the coffers of organized crime and obviously the nature of the bookmaking industry does require the use of telephone lines to some extent; it's therefore an area in which I think one would expect the police, assisted by Crown attorneys, to seek a fairly large number of wiretap authorizations.

Mr. Foulds: In 1976 I gather there were 312 applications for legalized wiretaps and, as a result, there were 357 people arrested. Those seem to be the figures that come through in the report. What bothers me is that doesn't give a good sort of percentage of winnings, so to speak. Does the Attorney General know how many of the individual wiretaps resulted in multiple arrests and how many resulted in no arrests? There's also a category where intercepted information was used but not adduced, 132; what does that mean?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: First of all, the report that we publish annually in the Ontario Gazette is required by statute. The contents of that report are governed by statute, section 178 of the Criminal Code. We are of the view that there could be a better reporting system; that it could be improved on. As a matter of fact, we are working on recommendations to the federal government in order to make the annual report that is published more edifying to those who are interested in this matter.

Mr. Foulds: Perhaps understandable.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: And, hopefully, at the same time understandable.

Mr. Foulds: I notice that three of the interceptions occurred in motor vehicles. Were those telephones in motor vehicles?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Not necessarily.

Mr. Foulds: What would they be? How does one intercept a communication in a motor vehicle?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: One could place an intercepting device, commonly known as a bug, in an automobile to overhear the conversation.

Item 4 agreed to.

On item 5, royal commissions:

Mr. Roy: We're going to spend $1,251,000 on royal commissions. Which ones are going now, just to keep me up to date what's happening?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: With respect to royal commissions, and in response to something that was said by the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) earlier, the role of the Ministry of the Attorney General in royal commissions is simply to provide some of the mechanical assistance that is necessary.

We do not have any control whatsoever over the conduct of a royal commission. That, as I know is appreciated by the member for Ottawa East, is solely within the control of the commissioner, who in most cases has been a Supreme Court judge, but not necessarily. The role of the Ministry of the Attorney General is to assist the commissions with respect to finding facilities for the conduct of their hearings, including office space, necessary support staff and mechanical resources that may be necessary for them to carry out their responsibilities.

I think it's important to reiterate that the commissioner, who more often than not is a judge, has the right to appoint his own counsel and the commissioner has the conduct of the inquiry. It was alleged that the government had something to do with the subpoenaing of certain witnesses who were candidates in the last provincial election before a royal commission one day prior to the last provincial election. That matter would be the decision of the judge who is conducting that, together with his counsel. With respect, it is impugning the integrity of our judiciary to suggest that it is not totally independent of the government in conducting these inquiries.

We've had a royal commission on Metropolitan Toronto, the Robarts commission. That concluded recently. The Toronto Jail inquiry has still not reported yet. That was Judge Shapiro's commission. The LaMarsh commission has reported. The commission on Algoma University, I believe, has reported. We know that the North Pickering commission, headed by Mr. Justice Donnelly, hasn't reported. It's heard very little evidence to date.

Mr. Roy: That has got to be a fiasco.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We have the professional organizations study, headed up by the Deputy Attorney General and Drs. Dupré and Corry.

Mr. Roy: Which one is that last one?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That's not a royal commission as such, but it is funded under that item in the budget for royal commissions. The ones I've just referred to are all those that are pending. There's a waste management commission and a commission into pensions, but there's been no request for funds for these latter commissions I've referred to.

Mr. Roy: What about Williston? Doesn't he have a commission?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: He has a committee but it doesn't come under royal commissions. It comes out of the general budget of the Attorney General.

Mr. Roy: Whom do you pay? You wouldn't pay the counsel?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes.

Mr. Roy: Take Judy LaMarsh; now that's an interesting commission.

Mr. Foulds: There is not enough in the budget for her alone.

Mr. Roy: Who would pay Judy and the other two people? Of course, Judge Beaulieu was a judge, so he'd be getting his regular salary. Who would pay Judy and Scott Young?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It would come through our ministry. All of these salaries would come through our ministry. We handle the mechanical details, including paying the commissioners who are entitled to a salary. The judges do not receive a salary for serving.

Mr. Roy: Can you help me? For instance, in 1976-77 there seemed to have been a jump there in the estimates for commissions. It's up to $3 million. This year we're going back down to $1.2 million, that's the estimate. Sometimes there's a difference between the estimate and the actual.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There invariably is.

Mr. Roy: In 1975-76, the estimate was $620,000, that was the estimate that we voted on. You actually ended up paying $2.7 million. You were out by $2 million. I understand that's not your fault, I'm not being critical, I just find it somewhat strange.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: If I may respond, all we can do at best is make a wild guess. That's the one item which is totally out of our control, because we have no control in the ministry over what commissions are established during the course of the fiscal year.

It's impossible, obviously, to predict from one year to another what commission may be established by cabinet during the year. At best, we concede we can only make a very rough guess because the establishment of the commissions has nothing to do with the ministry.

Mr. Roy: But they're paid through your ministry?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, they have to be paid through some ministry. Because of the nature of the Ministry of the Attorney General, and because of the judicial or quasi-judicial role of these commissions, I suppose we're the appropriate ministry to fund these commissions. But we have no control over the commissions being established, and therefore it's impossible for our people to predict accurately what the figure will be unless we're just plain lucky.

Mr. Roy: Then let me ask you this, while I'm on this, if my colleagues will bear with me: Considering you're the one paying out the money, who is accountable? How am I going to know how much Judy was paid over the last two years out of these funds? It's coming through your office, I take it I must go through your ministry.

I've always wondered about that. How am I going to get, as a representative of the people, to ask certain questions about the moneys that are allocated for certain commissions, and more specifically that commission on violence on television? Are you in a position to give me a breakdown of how much that commission cost; how much Judy was paid; how much Scott Young was paid and that sort of thing? What were the expenses? Give me a breakdown of that one particular commission at least?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: One vehicle where you could obtain this information would be through the standing committee on public accounts from which this information would be available; and during our estimates we should be able to obtain this information as well.

Mr. Roy: I appreciate that you'd get the information if I started being nasty with you about that particular commission; you're not the one who had anything to do with the policy of establishing it, it just happens that a commission is created by the Premier and you have to follow along and pay out the money as needed after the commission is established. The only other way we can get at it is through public accounts, and that sometimes is not as effective as getting to the minister, for instance yourself, the Attorney General, and really being critical and saying: "What is going on?" You then get back to whoever has established the commission and say: "Look, I got hell from the members about this particular commission here."

In other words, it's a question of accountability. It becomes difficult to draw the line as to whom we should be questioning about this. So possibly before the estimates are over—you were looking at a sheet of paper, maybe you're now in a position to tell me how much that commission has cost and how much Judy has been paid.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The total cost of the commission—it formed part of three fiscal years—the total as of September 30, 1977, over these three fiscal periods, was $2,130,688. That may well be in your notes on the estimates. I'm not sure whether it is or not.

Mr. Roy: No.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't have any further breakdown than that. We can obtain this for you.

Mr. Roy: Pardon me? I don't know how much Miss LaMarsh was paid over those three years.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We can provide you with that information, although I can't at the moment.

Mr. Foulds: I want to proceed with a different commission. Presumably the Hartt commission funding comes under this vote.

[10:00]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: This is actually one commission that will not be funded through our ministry. I think it may be because of the size of the commission and the length of time during which it will be sitting and making its findings. I would imagine it was thought better to fund it through the Resources Development policy field.

Mr. Foulds: This I find most peculiar. The Hartt commission was set up under the Public Inquiries Act, if I am not mistaken; and since the ministry expended more than $2 million on Judy LaMarsh, why the reluctance to accept the responsibility for the Hartt commission. Was that a cabinet decision?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am not reluctant at all, but by reason of the nature of the commission and its broad terms of reference—I don't even recall how the decision was arrived at—and the involvement of the Resources Development policy field and the resources of these various ministries that will be involved, it was obviously thought appropriate, because of the very nature of the Hartt commission, to fund it and administer it through different ministries.

If they had asked us to do it, we would have assisted. Of course we would have. But I think one has to look at the nature of the commission. It was just thought more appropriate to fund it through the Resources Development policy field because, of course, this was the area in which Mr. Justice Hartt was going to be conducting his inquiry in that field. In retrospect I suppose one could have said, for example, that maybe we should have funded the LaMarsh commission through the Ministry of Education or the Ministry of Transportation and Communications.

Mr. Roy: You really had a problem with that one. There was no jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There is no obvious formula for this. In the past, given the nature of the commissions and the manner in which they are conducted, normally the commission—not the LaMarsh commission, but other judicial inquiries—they sit in one location. In the Ministry of the Attorney General we like to think we have some degree of expertise in helping establishing a commission, which does require the apparatus similar to that that is used in a courtroom and, for convenience, we have taken on that responsibility in the past.

The Hartt commission is rather a unique commission and it didn't surprise me to learn, actually for the first time, that it was not being funded through our ministry.

Mr. Foulds: May I just follow this up? I find it quite fascinating. It might be unfair to the Attorney General but I assume that this is the first inquiry or the first royal commission that has not been funded through the Attorney General's office and he just became aware of that tonight.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It's not the first one. The Porter commission isn't funded through our ministry either. I think we are dealing with a very lengthy inquiry. Quite frankly, until a few moments ago I never directed my mind as to whether it was funded through our ministry or not, because obviously our ministry had very little if anything, to do with the establishment of the Hartt commission. So whether it would be funded through our ministry or not, quite frankly, at best would be of academic interest to me.

Mr. Foulds: Surely the Attorney General would agree that one of the fundamental questions before the Hartt commission is in fact the legitimacy or the non-legitimacy, for example, of Treaty No. 9, Ontario being a signatory to that document. I would assume that the Attorney General would have more than a passing academic interest.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have a great deal of interest in the Hartt commission. As a member of this government, I am totally interested in the Hartt inquiry, but as to which ministry the funds go through to finance it, I have said that matter was really of very little interest to me. The activity of the Hartt commission is of enormous interest to me.

Mr. Foulds: I would like to point out that the Hartt commission is involved not merely in the examination of resource exploitation, but there are some very real and important legal questions that I would assume your ministry would have an interest in that need to be examined by that commission.

I would assume the Hartt commission is going to establish at some point a fairly formal, court-like procedure in which you indicated your ministry had some expertise. Are you telling me that Mr. Justice Hartt has not consulted with your ministry about that, about the kinds of hearings they will have further down the road? Are you telling me that from your memory as a cabinet minister and as the Attorney General you were not consulted before the decision was made by the government that funding would be through some collective agency that you are not presently aware of?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I really don't know what the hon. member is driving at at all. Whether Mr. Justice Hartt has consulted with me personally or not, if there was any assistance available in the ministry, of course we would provide him with the assistance.

The terms of reference of the inquiry were, of course, of great interest to me as a member of the government. The setting up of the inquiry and the terms of reference were of great interest to all members of the cabinet.

As to whether we actually funded it through ministry A, B, C, D or E, I must admit that has not been of great interest to me at all.

Mr. Sargent: The minister implied that I should respond regarding my statement that the royal commission on Ronto, that they used the courts, he implied that the courts were being impugned. Well I think at this time and place it is fitting that we have a commission investigating a commission.

Mr. Warner: You should be on it.

Mr. Sargent: Royal commissions are nothing but another political slush fund. They have been defined by others much more knowledgeable than me as designed to bail out the government, to pigeon-hole an issue that might be embarrassing to the government. They put it on the back burner for a long time.

We wanted here in the opposition to make a deadline of six or seven months on the Reed Paper scandal, but as the minister says it may last for years. That's good for the government, it takes the heat off them.

It was a scandalous thing to say the least. Here we had $620,000 a couple of years ago, and now it is $3 million. It could well be $5 million the way the government is stalling certain things that might be embarrassing to the government.

So far as the minister's statement in regard to the Ronto affair is concerned, he said that I was impugning the courts. There was a $2 million tax exemption promised by the Treasurer to Todgham and the Ronto commission was set up, geared to take the heat off the government, the timing was set so that it wouldn't hurt the government. Here very briefly are the steps involved.

A promise by the Treasurer, $2 million for a friend. He passes the ball to the bagman, Mr. Goodman, who carries the ball.

Mr. Foulds: Carries it very well, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Sargent: The minister, Mr. Meen, resigns; the reason for giving the exemption was a $10 million profit, which was represented as a "hardship." That was the reason they gave the grant exemption, because the $10 million was a hardship.

The inquiry was to finalize three days after the election. The Treasurer had hidden from this House the fact he was the guy that set up the whole deal. He did not come forth and tell the House during all those months, that he was involved in it.

That was the blockbuster. That came out three days after the election. It appeared in the Globe and Mail on June 14, five days after the election, the fact that he was the man that set up the deal. All this was revealed after the election. Do you wonder why I say who called the shots for the timing of the commission?

Mr. Deans: How about the subpoenas?

Mr. Sargeant: I'm getting to that.

Mr. Deans: You're getting to that? Okay.

Mr. Sargent: Who called the shots for the timing of the Ronto inquiry to come out after the election? Did you ask the opposition did they want it before? No. It certainly wouldn't be the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) or the leader of the opposition (Mr. Smith) you asked. Was it the Premier or you? Who asked? Did the judge ask you when you wanted this hearing to go on? Did they tell you when they wanted to finalize it, to have the results come out in the paper the day before the election?

I can tell you if this report came out in the Globe and Mail on June 14 had come out on June 7, the Treasurer would not be in that seat where he is today, and that is a fact. And you say to me I'm impugning the courts.

Mr. Justice Cromarty was the man in charge of the commission. I don't know where he got his instructions, but certainly the timing was a very important factor in these hearings. We in the opposition were elated. We were not then the official opposition, but we were all elated at the fact that this was going to happen before the election.

Somewhere along the line the judiciary got in bed politically with somebody, and I will not take that back.

Mr. Lewis: No, but anybody else would have to.

Mr. Sargent: I will not take that back, because if I am wrong, you prove me wrong.

Mr. Deans: It is a very serious statement.

Mr. Sargent: Certainly it's a very serious thing, but this is a serious business when you have the political party in some kind of a quasi-relationship with the courts. That's why I think I will not go along with the minister that I am impugning the courts.

In fact, if you were doing a very realistic job, you would investigate for us how this could happen, this kind of timing. It certainly was not a coincidence in my mind.

I'd like the minister to explain how this can happen in a royal commission.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I will be very brief. I regret very much the member opposite would use this Legislature and any immunities and privileges that may be contained therein to lodge a totally irresponsible, unfounded attack on a distinguished member of our judiciary. I say to him it is simply a very cowardly act.

Mr. Deans: Could you tell us why they issued the subpoenas in the last week and announced it? That really did make me wonder, I confess.

Mr. Sargent: I wonder how far the Attorney General thinks he can libel a member of the opposition when he tells the facts that are here, as I've told them. I think that's very cowardly of you to make that response when I ask you to tell me how this thing could happen. You don't know how to answer my questions and so you call me a coward.

All my life I've been in politics and I have never been afraid of anybody else in my whole life. I am not a coward and I'm willing to take the consequence of what I said tonight. As for calling me irresponsible, I am not the man who went about this province saying we should sell marijuana and pot from the liquor stores. I am not the man who said that.

You talk about responsibility. Don't you call me a coward or call me irresponsible, in view of the fact you haven't got the guts to stand up and answer what I've asked you here.

[10:15]

Mr. Deans: Can I ask one question on this topic? Maybe the Attorney General could advise me of that one point. Why did the commission feel it necessary to issue subpoenas to the opposition members to appear when they would willingly have come had they simply been asked to appear? He must admit that it's a little much to take, in the middle of an election, to read in the paper that you have been issued with a subpoena to appear before a commission on a land deal where there were some suggestions of impropriety. I was explaining for days afterwards that I had nothing to do with it, that all I was was a member of the committee sitting in for somebody else.

Mr. Lewis: He barely got 55 per cent of the vote.

Mr. Deans: I mean, I only got 60 per cent of the vote as a result of that. I had a big majority looking me right in the face when, all of a sudden, this subpoena was issued. Why would they not just ask us to appear? Maybe the Attorney General doesn't know the answer, but it struck me as very odd. That's all.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't have the answer to that. A judicial commission is conducted entirely at the discretion of the commissioner and his assistants, with the assistance of legal counsel appointed by the commissioner. As to whether they choose simply to issue an invitation or to issue a subpoena, it is a matter that is totally within their discretion.

I would think that it might well be appropriate simply to invite members of this Legislature to appear at a particular time. But it is not unusual to issue subpoenas. The timing of it, again, is totally within the discretion of the commissioner. I just cannot comment any further than that.

Mr. Deans: I have very little to add to it but, first of all, it struck me as odd that no one from the commission even bothered to contact me in advance. That is the first thing. I would have thought, having sat on a number of inquiries, that it was normal for the counsel to contact people who they thought might have information, to determine first of all whether it was worthwhile dragging them in at all; to see whether they had any information at all.

The second thing is, elections being what they are, they are particularly sensitive and can be swayed by any number of irrelevant and inconsequential things.

Mr. Lewis: Like nationalization, for example. A real red herring.

Mr. Deans: For heaven's sake, I got a telephone call at 7 o'clock in the morning to talk about this subpoena that I had been issued with. I knew absolutely nothing about it. During the election campaign I showed up down there at the inquiry offices—

Mr. Lewis: When you should have been canvassing.

Mr. Deans: When I should have been canvassing. Right. That's why I didn't get 65 per cent. I went in there and I was under oath. They asked me if that was my name. I said, "Yes, it is." They asked if I represented the riding of Wentworth. I said, "Yes, I do."

"Do you know anything about Ronto?"

"No, I don't."

"Oh. Have you anything to add to what has been said?"

"No, I don't have anything to add."

"Do you have any direct, personal knowledge of any of the undertakings?"

"No, I haven't." And they said, "You are excused."

Mr. Sargent: You were a big help.

Mr. Deans: And for that they gave me $25, I think.

Mr. Roy: You are lucky. You only get $6 in court.

Mr. Deans: But $25! And, honest to God, it could have cost me my seat in the House. It was ridiculous. It was very badly handled.

I realize the Attorney General cannot do anything about what happened last June, but the next time they do it, it might not be a bad idea just to find out if the people they are subpoenaing in the midst of an election campaign have any information, to begin with, before the public gets the wrong impression of the whole damned thing.

Mr. Lewis: It does sound a little strange.

Mr. Roy: Do you know who the counsel was for that?

Mr. Deans: He was a very kindly old gent who ought to have retired years ago.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: Regarding the point made by my colleague from Grey-Bruce and the member for Wentworth about this idea of subpoenas, I find it interesting as well that they should only be issued to opposition members and not the government members, and the timing—

Mr. Deans: They may have been issued them too.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't know that that's so.

Mr. Roy: In being critical of that, surely one can make comment without being critical of the judiciary, and it may well be that it might be a good idea to try to get some explanation from the counsel. It may be the counsel who decided to proceed in that fashion. In the process, surely we are entitled to be critical of that approach because it may have been the counsel who made the decision to proceed in that fashion at that particular time.

One can be critical of a certain procedure taken by a particular counsel in a commission without in any way being critical of the judge who presided with the commission. As often happens, the conduct of the case is left up to counsel. He's the one who decides how best to proceed with such matters as who should be called, when they should be called and that sort of thing.

Before we get off commissions I did want to make another comment. I said to you, after I'd asked about the LaMarsh commission and the fact that the LaMarsh commission cost $2,130,688 over those three years, that I found it interesting. When you were discussing the Hartt commission, you said you were not particularly surprised. The LaMarsh commission really had no place to go other than your ministry because there was no jurisdiction in any other ministry on the question of communication really. I suppose they had no place to send it but your ministry.

I do want to make this comment about that commission. I hope we'll never see again, when money is so tight in this province, that, for what I consider to be for political purposes prior to the 1975 election—

Mr. Conway: No, really I don't believe it.

Mr. Roy: —the Premier (Mr. Davis) of this province would establish a commission of inquiry to look into a subject matter that was beyond the responsibility and control of this province. I think that was absolutely ludicrous. It was just political posturing. That's all it was.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, no, it wasn't. We were wrong. It was a good idea.

Mr. Roy: Sure, it was a good idea from the political point of view for the Premier.

Mr. Lewis: No.

Mr. Roy: We've got enough commissions going around this province, making all sorts of recommendations within the field of the jurisdiction of the provincial government, which are not implemented, without getting into a field of federal jurisdiction which not only will we not implement but we cannot even implement. There's no way; it's not within the jurisdiction. I say that the money that was spent for that particular commission, in my opinion, was something that was a waste. I think it was used strictly for political purposes.

I know you had nothing to do with the establishment of the commission and the payment of moneys and everything else.

Mr. Conway: The Tories are trying to whitewash the man from Glad. You know that.

Mr. Roy: When I look at how tight money is, and some of us will be discussing court-houses later on and court facilities and things lacking in the administration of justice, when we see $2,130,000 wasted as it has been here, I'm saying there are other priorities in this province which on the long term would have been much more beneficial than spending it on that.

Mr. Lewis: I want to add a footnote to this. I want to come back to an exchange I had with the Attorney General briefly at the question period. I have a feeling one of the few judicial commissions of inquiry which could really be justified in this province at this time—and I don't denigrate Hartt or Porter for a moment; I think they're both splendid—would be a judicial inquiry into the activities of the RCMP in the province of Ontario.

I want to put it to you that there are two anxious things about what's happening now. One is the almost unbelievable attitude of Messrs. Cafik, Fox and Basford—never mind Pierre Trudeau. I am really beside myself at the wanton indifference they have to the civil libertarian nature of Canadian society. I have always believed as a democratic socialist—and the party on my immediate right will have to forgive me for this—that Liberal philosophy is terribly quixotic and expedient when it comes to civil liberties. I have always believed as a democratic socialist that there is a direct philosophic tie between the incarceration of the Japanese-Canadians in the Second World War and the proclamation of the War Measures Act in October 1970, and that it is characteristic of small "I" and large "L" liberal philosophy to engage in those kinds of things.

I want to tell you that even I have been surprised and shocked at the responses of the Foxes and the Basfords and the Cafiks, the rationalization of illegality, for the sake of some security of the state, and I don't want to overdo it. I don't even know exactly why I'm speaking on it except that it's been rising in me all week and all day, particularly after reading the stories on the weekend.

I just don't believe that the Attorney General has a smidgen of such an outlook in terms of his view of the way this society operates. Surely he must find it offensive that the Solicitor General is saying now, it is reported in tonight's edition of the Globe and Mail, that the medical records would be used as threats against those who threatened the security of the state; Basford getting a standing ovation in Vancouver for talking about the RCMP and the need to protect it; Norman Cafik, whom I hear on the radio, drawing analogies between a wife who might haemorrhage at 4 o'clock in the morning and her husband driving 80 miles an hour and thereby breaking the law to take her to hospital with what has been revealed over the last number of weeks about what the RCMP has been doing. It is just a shocking abrogation of the civil authority. It drives me wild, this kind of stuff from federal cabinet ministers. Frankly, I would have thought, I say to the Attorney General, that maybe there was a point in the province of Ontario to find out exactly what had been going on among those who headed the security service of the RCMP in this province, because I don't get any sense of defence on the part of the federal cabinet. I just get a sense that they wash their hands of it completely. It's as though we were back to the atmosphere of October 1970 all over again.

I guess the other part of it which truly bothers me is, maybe not the complacency, but the passivity and pessimism in the Canadian populace that these things somehow have to go on; that there is a rationale for them; that there is a gang of dangerous subversives always about, about whom we must be eternally vigilant.

Do you know that in this extraordinary democratic country of ours, with the exception of the madness and pathology of that handful of FLQ in 1970, there is not a subversive inheritance in this country? It's one of the few countries in the western world where there is not a group of dangerous heretics and subversives. We have managed to fashion a political and trade union process through which dissent is normally expressed without the needs to go to the extremes of violence or subversion.

We have our quotient of pathetic Maoist-Marxist-Leninists and right-wing groups as well. Those are pathological things. They are not ideological phenomena. Many of us have dealt with them in our political life. To think that the RCMP will spend its time probing such people and using methods extending from break-ins to the scrutiny of confidential medical records, really makes you wonder. And think of the insidious consequence it has in society.

I was saying to my colleague from High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziembra) tonight—you will forgive me; all of these kinds of ramifications just tumble one after the other as I think about them—when the member for High Park-Swansea revealed the doctors' gross billings from OHIP, the medical profession practically went berserk. When it is revealed in the public press that there may be confidentiality of records destroyed by the RCMP in the pursuit of using medical material to threaten or intimidate individuals in Canada, there is not a peep from the medical profession.

All of these things sort of add up in my mind to a kind of insidious complacency and indifference to what is going on.

Do you know what tops it all off, if I may end on this note, Mr. Chairman? I now read in the national newspaper of Canada that Bette Stephenson was investigated by the RCMP. She was questioned by the RCMP because she had a visiting Russian doctor stay at her home. Now, is that paranoia or is that not paranoia? I would never accuse Bette Stephenson of what you might call left-to-centre leanings. As a matter of fact, I wouldn't even accuse Bette Stephenson of leaning, let alone in an ideological direction. Yet she says—and she says, I suppose, with a certain impish delight—that she's the only person in her ministry who has ever been cautioned or talked to by the RCMP.

That is the extent of the deterioration of the civil libertarian fabric which we have so excellently developed in this country. I'm just really bothered by it and wanted to get it off my chest and say to the minister that if there are grounds along the way for believing that the McDonald commission inquiry in Ottawa is not doing the job, then it may well be worth looking in Ontario, through our judicial process, at what the devil the RCMP may have been up to all these years, because it is doing enormous damage to the values and the balance of values in Canadian society.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there any further discussion on this item or can we carry the item?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Then it will be held over.

On motion by Hon. Mr. McMurtry, the committee of supply reported progress.

On motion of Hon. Mr. McMurtry, the House adjourned at 10:31 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1977

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

NEWSPAPER REPORT

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of personal privilege regarding an article that appeared in the York-Durham section of the Toronto Star yesterday wherein a member of this Legislature misled the press.

The article contained remarks attributed to a member of this Legislature, and I spoke with the reporter yesterday who confirmed that the statement, contained in the article was, in fact, made by the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong). I am sorry he is not in his seat today. He was notified by my office that I would be rising on this point of privilege.

The article reads in part: "Al Stong, MPP York Centre, who sits on the Justice committee, said in an interview that the private bill regarding Georgina is being sponsored by Bill Hodgson, MPP York North. Stong said that he is concerned about whether or not the bill should proceed when a court action is pending and said that the MPP for the area, Bill Newman, MPP Durham-York, should be called by the committee. Stong said 'Newman is not presenting the bill because I suspect he wanted to stay away from it because it is so controversial. Although Newman is the Agriculture minister, he could still present a private member's bill like any other MPP', Stong said."

Mr. Speaker, I further checked again with the Clerk's office and, as members of this House know, as a cabinet minister I am not permitted to introduce a private bill. The member for York Centre, who is also a member of the bar and a member of the Justice committee, might have checked his facts before providing the reporter with misleading and incorrect information. Not only did he provide incorrect information, he took it upon himself to present what he thought was my position. In doing so, he has cast aspersions on my character.

Mr. Deans: Oh, sit down for heaven's sake.

Mr. Martel: You will go up in the eyes of everyone, Bill.

Mr. Deans: This is an abuse of our time. Boy, are you getting thin-skinned in your old age.

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have been inundated by calls from my constituents and the press requesting a clarification, and I have tried to set the record straight. Unfortunately, this article has already appeared and it would be virtually impossible to have it corrected before the private member's bill is heard this Thursday, as the weekly papers have already gone to press.

I would ask that the member for York Centre produce an apology for saying what he said in the York-Durham section of the Toronto Star, which was incorrect.

Mr. Nixon: Are you supporting the bill or not? What is your position?

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

RECREATIONAL TRAILS

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, today I'm tabling the final report of the Ontario Trails Council. Earlier today I arranged for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Smith) and the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) to receive copies shortly after the report was presented to me.

The Ontario Trails Council report is the result of an order in council two years ago which created a citizens' advisory committee to look into the issues surrounding recreational trails and to make recommendations to my ministry for an Ontario trails program, including research requirements for the program, legislative changes required, a policy framework and an implementation program which would describe the roles of all levels of government, conservation authorities, trail clubs and other interested groups.

The report presents 90 recommendations which call for some form of government action. The public responded very well to the efforts of this council. Over 300 written briefs were presented by interested groups and individuals at the 13 public meetings of the Trails Council. I understand that more than 2,000 requests have been received for a copy of this report.

I want to compliment the members of the Ontario Trails Council and the council chairman, Mr. William Coates of Guelph, who is present in our gallery this afternoon, for a job well done. Their report has not only posed some interesting questions for the government, but provides a wealth of knowledge on the issues of trail use and trail users within the province.

My ministry will be reviewing the report and co-ordinating the government's response.

ORAL QUESTIONS

REED PAPER

Mr. S. Smith: A question to the Minister of Natural Resources, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister confirm reports that the Reed Paper proposal is now a dead issue, that the Reed company has decided not to go ahead with the building of its proposed plant, irrespective of the findings of the Hartt inquiry? Can he, in commenting on this, tell us, if that is a fact, whether he has any proposal for some other plant, or whether he will make the timber available in that area for other existing plants? Exactly what are his proposals with regard to that 19,000 square miles or so of timber?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have not been told by the Reed corporation that it does not intend to proceed. I have read, as I'm sure others have, a copy of a statement made yesterday by its senior vice-president before the Hartt commission. I have no inside information. I have talked to the president of the company and I have not been told by the president of the company that it does not intend to go ahead.

Mr. Lewis: Which president?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. MacIver. I want to tell the member I am allowed, as anyone else here is allowed, to read a statement of that kind and come to my own conclusions. That statement said it did not think the project was economically viable today. I assume that means the company may not wish to proceed.

Mr. Martel: Sounds like blackmail.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Since we had at least two or three years of hearings under the Hartt commission, we had the Environmental Assessment Act, if applicable, to consider, and most certainly we had environmental matters to consider, design and a whole series of things, I would say that even if that company were proceeding today with its intent, as it was originally supposed to do, it would be several years before anything would actually be started. Markets change dramatically. We are going to do our homework in this ministry as agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Good.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We will do the forest inventory. We will have the information available. Mr. Hartt will be proceeding with his study. When all those things terminate, if there is a willing person or company and the conditions are right, I certainly will be looking for a person to do it.

Mr. Lewis: Pity we didn't start that way from the outset, isn't it?

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: While the minister is looking at this proposal afresh, given these developments, will he be talking to the owners of existing mills and those who might be interested in smaller-sized, more manageable contracts, rather than one contract for the entire area of timber? Will he be able to report to the House at some point on the feasibility of developing that resource, but doing so with great care for proper management, as might be maximized in having smaller areas rather than the whole 19,000-square-mile site?

Mr. Lewis: That is what the Hartt commission is doing.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I spent a good part of this morning talking to the mill operators of this province. My immediate problem is to keep them in business with their existing mills. Let us not lose track of the fact that the world is overproducing pulp and paper at this present time. We have lumber mills in Ontario closing down in some places today simply because they can't dispose of the chips that are being produced as pulp production is down. So we have an immediate short-term problem very similar to that in the metals business. In the long run, I can only tell the hon. member that it is unlikely any new pulp mill could survive on less than the product of the entire range.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Did it cross the minister's mind in any way, shape or form, that the statement by Reed and the campaign that seems to be escalating in the newspapers with regard to the tough times the pulp and paper industry is facing is part of a pressure game to persuade the ministry to cut back on proper forest management?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, luckily I don't have a Machiavellian mind like my colleague opposite. I honestly do believe the pulp and paper industries are in trouble today because of world oversupply.

Mr. S. Smith: Of course they are.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I honestly do realize that Reed Paper is losing $20 million this year.

Mr. Foulds: How much did they make in 1973?

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's always "What did they make before?"

Mr. S. Smith: Socialist paranoia.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I do not believe that this is a negotiating move by the company to force our hand.

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Energy, if I might: Can the minister explain how it was that Ontario Hydro authorized commencement of work for Bruce heavy water plant D on January 16, 1974, and work was carried on since January 1974. In view of the fact that the then Minister of Energy's (Mr. McKeough) policy statement of July 1974, some six months after work began, stated, and I quote, "The government has deferred decisions regarding the Bruce heavy water plant D pending further recommendations of the Ontario Energy Board expected later this year," and in view of a statement in the Legislature in April 1975 by the previous minister (Mr. Timbrell) stating that the government was "committing construction on the plant now"—there was an announcement of construction at that time, how do things get started and how are they approved between Hydro and the Energy ministry?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition asked a series of questions. The chairman of Hydro has now responded to those questions in writing and they have been delivered to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: Yes, that's a fact. It's because of the fact that I have these that I'm asking a supplementary question: Since I am told by the chairman of Hydro very clearly that Bruce heavy water plant D was authorized for commencement of work on January 16, 1974, and yet the former Minister of Energy (Mr. McKeough) announced deferring of that decision five or six months later and then the previous minister (Mr. Timbrell) issued an announcement in 1975 of the beginning of that plant, how come all these announcements are being made afterwards when work started in January 1974?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I think that's a matter that the Leader of the Opposition discussed with the chairman of Ontario Hydro.

Mr. Nixon: You are supposed to be in charge of policy.

Mr. Kerrio: Why don't you say you can't answer the question?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: If there is further detail or explanation that he requires in addition to those conversations and in addition to the very lengthy response to the—I believe it was 12 questions—

Mr. Deans: Why don't you just say you don't know?

Hon. J. A. Taylor:—then I'm sure that he'd be happy to supply that. If the hon. member wishes me to pursue that or if the Leader of the Opposition wants higher profile in connection with this matter and wishes to take it up with the select committee, I'm sure he can do that as well.

Mr. Deans: But you should know.

Mr. Roy: It is obvious that you don't want to answer.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: Who has the senior political status in this province around matters dealing with energy? Is it the chairman of Hydro or is it the minister?

[2:15]

Mr. Warner: Hydro runs the show.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker I think that the leader of the third party should not confuse energy matters with—

Mr. Lewis: With Hydro, I know that.

Hon. J. A. Taylor:—a specific corporation dealing only with the area—

Mr. Sargent: Answer the question.

Hon. J. A. Taylor:—of electrical energy which has its powers and its duties—

Mr. Warner: Why don't you do us all a favour? You don't know what you're doing—you should resign.

Hon. J. A. Taylor:—explicitly expressed in an Act of this Legislature.

Mr. Lewis: To whom does the chairman of Hydro report?

Mr. Foulds: The minister doesn't seem to know.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: The member should know that. Of course he reports to the Minister of Energy in this House as always, absolutely.

Mr. Lewis: He reports to the minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The supplementary has been asked and answered.

Mr. Reed: Supplementary: Does the minister not feel that the people of Ontario deserve an answer? That's why this question was asked in this House.

Mr. Warner: The chairman of Hydro isn't here.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: If the member is suggesting that his curiosity manifests the curiosity of the people of Ontario then—

Mr. Reed: If you don't know, then say you don't know.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: What do you mean?

Mr. Speaker: Does the member want an answer to the question?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I wish the member would get together with his leader. If he got together with his leader and reviewed all of that material, including the two contracts and the answers to the questions, he wouldn't be asking these questions today in the Legislature. He has all of that information.

Mr. Lewis: I have a question related to this. Does the minister not realize that in the succession of questions and answers, what is emerging is not so much what happened at site B or at site D but who has the final authority to determine energy policy in this province? Does he not realize that by his answers he seems to be surrendering to the chairman of Hydro an authority which vests in the Legislature and in the minister himself?

Mr. Warner: Right on, he runs the show.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the leader of the third party is obviously confusing the overall energy policy of this province—

Mr. Lewis: No, I'm not.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —with the matter of two contracts at Bruce.

Mr. Makarchuk: Are you taking mind-diminishing drugs?

Mr. Warner: We are going to buy the minister an electric chair.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: There's no question about that. It's not a question of surrendering energy policy and the member knows it.

Mr. S. Smith: I have a final supplementary. Regarding this contract for heavy water plant D, can the minister explain why it took until November 3 of this year to sign that contract, when in point of fact it differs in almost no way—only in the fee and the schedule—from the actual contract signed over two years ago for B? Why the delay? What has been the resistance in getting this contract signed? Why has it taken over a year and a half to actually get this contract for D signed when, in fact, it differs in no detail at all from B?

Mr. Deans: Bette, you'd better start helping him again. He is getting in trouble.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Oh, I doubt that.

Mr. Lewis: You weren't told.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Again, Mr. Speaker, this is precisely the question that the Leader of the Opposition asked the chairman of Hydro.

Mr. Deans: You don't know.

Mrs. Campbell: Why don't you get the chairman of Hydro in and ask him?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: He explained the process. As a matter of fact, he explained the history—

Mr. S. Smith: I asked that question of the chairman.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —the commercial practice in terms of going from A, which the same company built, to B, which is precisely the same type of plant, and then on to D.

Mr. S. Smith: I know the answer to that.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: If the member is looking for publicity and high profile why doesn't he—

Mrs. Campbell: Don't you start.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This line of questioning is getting us nowhere.

Mr. S. Smith: That's for sure.

Mr. Deans: The line of answering is getting us nowhere.

OHIP OFFICE CLOSURE

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a question of the Minister of Health? In view of the quite remarkable response within the Windsor community of disappointment, frustration and anger to the precipitate closing of the OHIP office, will he reconsider his decision?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it is not a total closing and, no, I'm afraid I will not reconsider.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: How can he possibly, in the name of saving dollars, close down that Windsor OHIP office and shift the claims processing to London when in the year 1976-77 the Windsor office processed 40,000 claims per employee and the London office processed only 27,000 claims per employee, and particularly inasmuch as the field services for both Lambton and Kent were done out of the Windsor office in addition?

Mr. Peterson: Stop picking on London, right now.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could set the record straight: In 1976-77 the Windsor office processed two million claims with a staff of 51. The London office processed 4,800,000 claims with a staff of 128. That does not work out to be a difference of 27,000 to 40,000. The Windsor office has a slight edge but it is just that—a slight edge.

Mr. Ruston: It is more efficient.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Given the savings of $500,000 that will accrue in the move to London, the staff in London will be able to handle the volume very well for that entire part of southwestern Ontario.

Mr. B. Newman: If the minister is going to use such an argument, why doesn't he close up other offices in the province, concentrate all of his facilities, all of his claims here in the Toronto area, and save a lot more money?

Mr. Deans: Don't suggest that. He will.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will be pleased to take that suggestion from the official opposition as notice.

Mr. Deans: That wasn't very clever.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We don't think that it would work, though. As you know, we are trying to decentralize out of Toronto.

Mr. S. Smith: It's a logical extension of what you are doing in Windsor.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Consistency and inconsistency, from the member's point of view, depends upon what he wants to do with it.

Mr. Speaker: Just ignore the interjections and answer the supplementary.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I would be pleased to, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. We are going to move the head office of OHIP out of Toronto. This is not a centralization. It will still be decentralized away from Toronto but, for southwestern Ontario, effecting some savings. As I recall, during debates that were going on during the month of May leading up to the election on June 9, the points coming from the Liberal Party were that we should be looking at every aspect of government for possible economies. This we are doing and this is one of them.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister of Health has closed Riverview hospital in Windsor and now the OHIP office, does he have any plans to close anything else down in Windsor?

An hon. member: What have you got against Windsor?

Hon. B. Stephenson: How about Windsor itself?

Mr. Lewis: Did you hear that? "How about Windsor itself," said the Minister of Labour while the Minister of Housing (Mr. Rhodes) nodded.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You have been broadcasting too long.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have a suggestion that we close about four riding offices there.

An hon. member: Call Tory headquarters.

An hon. member: Don't tempt us.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I reiterate that it is not a total closing of the OHIP office. It will still be maintained for inquiries from the public and from practitioners. The background to the Riverview unit of the Windsor Western Hospital—and Riverview is not a hospital—is a matter we have discussed many times.

Mr. Bounsall: Has the minister any idea—

An hon. member: No, he hasn't.

Mr. Bounsall: I must wait until he finishes his reading, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister any idea of the number of claims that come from Windsor area residents for treatment in Detroit because of the specialized treatment and facilities in that city, claims which they personally bring in to that Windsor office for processing? It's a situation which does not arise in the London office and a situation that's very important to the delivery of the OHIP services and doctors' payments in the city of Windsor. Finally, is he aware—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Bounsall:—that there is now, with the planned consolidation of his OHIP office space in London, a shortage of space for those employees already there, let alone those he plans to offer to shift from Windsor?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, just to answer the last point first: The indications from my staff in OHIP are that there is sufficient space and sufficient machinery and so forth in London to pick up the extra load.

As regards the first point—no, I am not aware of the volume but I am sure that of the two million claims processed by that office, I doubt if that kind of claim would account for more than a small fraction of one per cent. You certainly wouldn't use that as the basis of a decision not to go to London, and because of that not save $500,000 a year. I understand there is a postal system in Windsor which also connects with London, and those claims can be mailed to London.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Treasurer: Do I take it the Treasurer noticed that the single largest component, I believe, of the announced increase today in the consumer price index was property taxes for the first time in a very long time? In the circumstances would the Treasurer reconsider altering his present position on the Edmonton commitment, which he appeared to repudiate?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the second part of the question is no. The answer to the first part of the question is that I had noticed that. I don't quite understand, since these are Canadian figures, why property taxes come into the Statistics Canada figures at this point in time. Tax bills in Ontario generally had been known, and many of them would have been paid, much earlier in the year. Whether this increase is the influence of other parts of Canada or whether they bring them all in during this month, I simply don't know.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, surely the Treasurer recognizes that this is an accelerating problem in Ontario as the municipalities bear the burden of the provincial financing. And since it is now hitting the home owners so dramatically that it figures in the cost of living, is there not some way in which the Treasurer can cushion the burden by way of supplementary estimates or supplementary contributions to the municipalities?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to find out that the leader of the third party recognizes that taxes are part of the cost of living—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, terrific!

Mr. Warner: The Treasurer is causing them to rise.

Mr. Lewis: They are now identified.

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—that whether they are personal income taxes, whether they are sales taxes, or whether they are property taxes, they are a part of the cost of living. That's a tremendous leap forward on his part.

Mr. Lewis: Thanks so much. By way of supplementary, has it occurred to the Treasurer that if he had saved some of the money he squandered on Haldimand-Norfolk, Edwardsburgh and Minaki, he would be able to give the municipalities of Ontario what he originally committed himself to?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, when I go to bed at night, I sometimes worry about some of the things that the member has mentioned—

Mr. Sargent: I'll bet you do.

Mr. Warner: You should.

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—but inevitably I get down on my knees and thank God that the people of Ontario haven't listened to all his hare-brained schemes.

Mr. Lewis: I am glad the Treasurer gets down on his knees to someone—anyone.

Mr. Speaker: Order. A supplementary by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Lewis: Let the Treasurer name one.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Nationalizing Inco.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, don't be so silly. You've destroyed the province of Ontario and now we're paying for it.

Mr. Foulds: The Tories nationalized Minaki Lodge.

Mr. Martel: Look at Hydro.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, does the Treasurer not accept that by putting the burden of growth on to the property tax—

Mr. Speaker: Will the member for Sudbury East and the member for Port Arthur just try to restrain themselves?

Mr. Lewis: Have you seen what the member for Sudbury East is wearing?

Mr. Speaker: He looks like a chairman of the board; I wish he would act like one.

Mr. Lewis: He is a Deans supporter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Foulds: And he is going to Winston's tonight.

Mr. S. Smith: Does the Treasurer not accept that municipal finance at this time in Ontario is in serious difficulty, and that by putting the burden of additional expenditures largely on to property tax, we are actually getting to the point where we are beginning to interfere with some of the fundamental social aims of the province—some that I know he shares; such as home ownership and allowing some of the elderly people to stay in their own homes.

Would the Treasurer not undertake to give a commitment that means something, rather than the Edmonton commitment, to the municipalities of Ontario so that he can put some firm lid on the property tax increases and give them a share of other revenues in a way that they can count on from year to year and so that we don't lose track of some of the fundamental social policies which I suspect that even he in his heart shares with the rest of us on this side?

[2:30]

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I don't accept the premise on which the question was asked and if the member would consult with any number of tables, he would find that property taxes as a percentage of household disposable income in this province have been dropping rather dramatically over the last 10 years, and that the facts as the member would have us believe them are simply not so.

Mr. Cassidy: They were, but they're going up now.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Not the percentage.

BAR ADMISSION COURSE

Mrs. Campbell: My question is addressed to the Attorney General. Having in mind that the chief law officer of this province is concerned about the intellectual quality of legal education, has the Attorney General read the report in the Globe and Mail of this morning? Has he any comment on the awful scene at the bar admission course? What does he propose to do about it?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker; I have no knowledge of the article to which the hon. member has referred.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Haven't you read the Globe this morning?

Mrs. Campbell: Then, Mr. Speaker, I would invite the Attorney General, who I think is probably the only one who hasn't read it, to read it and perhaps comment as to whether or not he would like to see intellectual excellence rather than a sexist bias on behalf of the instructors in the bar admission course.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Without reading the article, I can agree to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Campbell: The Attorney General agrees there shouldn't be hockey violence. What does he agree should be done about this kind of sexist education? What is he going to do about it? Or does he care?

Hon. W. Newman: They would take you off the ice.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary: I wonder, while the Attorney General is taking this serious matter under consideration, if he would give us a report on the admission course, the kinds of instructors that are there, the types of textbooks that are being used, the particular textbooks that are being used, that were called by the paper "sexist oriented." Perhaps he could tell us what he intends to do after having investigated those textbooks and the instructors who are used at the course.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have not agreed to investigate, as the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere states, the bar admission course. If he has any specific concerns in relation to textbooks that he really feels should concern the Attorney General of this province, then I'll be happy if he brings them to my attention.

DAY CARE

Mr. Breaugh: I'd like to ask a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. There have been a number of reports in the media lately concerning day care provided in private home situations with, in some instances, rather large numbers of children in a private apartment. Is the ministry aware of that and is the minister considering any steps that might regulate that?

Hon. Mr. Norton: The present legislation already provides for the regulation of day-care services where more than four unrelated children are present on the premises.

It has been brought to my attention through the media that there have been reports of incidents where apparently there has been service provided in breach of the legislation. I have instructed members of my staff to investigate. In fact, in one case they have been in contact with the person from whom the story originated, but were unable to get substantiating information. That does not mean the matter has been placed to rest. We have laid charges against persons operating an illegal day nursery and that matter is now proceeding.

Especially if these operations exist in a setting such as an apartment building, it's sometimes difficult to detect that. But wherever we hear any indication of it, we follow up on it immediately.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. I know he wouldn't agree to this last week, Mr. Speaker, but I wonder if he would agree this week, that as long as he is going to restrain the growth in a necessary service like day care he is going to have bootleg operations.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I wouldn't necessarily agree with that, even this week. I would point out to the hon. member that within the province of Ontario at the present time, and I think our ratio is probably better than elsewhere in the country, we provide day-care service—

Ms. Gigantes: On what grounds do you say that?

Mr. Warner: Ridiculous.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —to about 15 per cent of the children of working parents. But the bulk of the service provided in day care, care for children in this province, is provided by the parents making private arrangements with friends, neighbours or family.

Ms. Gigantes: Totally inadequate.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You may think that it is inadequate. I happen to believe there is still room for parents to make certain decisions with respect to the care of their children.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It is not inadequate. I used it for years and it is not.

Mr. McClellan: Spoken like a true bachelor.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would think it presumptuous of me as the minister in this portfolio to assume that I could make the kind of rash statements that the hon. member has made, that children whose parents may be working are necessarily at risk. I disagree with that. I think parents in most cases are quite competent to make decisions with respect to the care of their children.

Mr. Foulds: Why not give them an option?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would point out that in many instances there is a choice available.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You take care of your own kids.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Although we are not in a position to provide publicly supported day care services for all of the children of working parents, I would go so far as to say I don't even think that is a desirable objective. Our first priority is to help those people who are in need.

Ms. Gigantes: Two hundred and fifteen spaces this year.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Look at the total number available in the province.

HARTT COMMISSION

Mr. Hennessy: I would like to ask the Minister of Natural Resources about a statement that was made yesterday by Mr. Justice Patrick Hartt. He said he intends to move the inquiry down to the southern part of Ontario; it was a northern inquiry as far as I am concerned. The statement made was that there is more political influence in the south, and that the south should take care of the problems that exist in the north. This I disagree with very strongly, being a member from the north.

I would like to know why Mr. Hartt is moving his inquiry down to the southern part of Ontario when the whole inquiry concerns the northern part of Ontario. I don't think any inquiries from the south are moved up to the north.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Let me assure the member that Mr. Justice Patrick Hartt is not taking any direction from me, nor should he.

Mr. Roy: You are not going to call him up?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I can only say that if, in his wisdom, he feels he needs to talk to people in southern Ontario who may wish to express opinions about the north, he is certainly free to do so.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Can the minister tell us how the royal commission is being funded, as we found out last night it was not being funded through the Attorney General's department?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think I need to have somebody in the legal department of government, or the Chairman of Management Board answer that question rather than me.

Mr. Sargent: Only $2 million? Let it go.

Mr. Foulds: Can I redirect the question?

Mr. Speaker: If there is a minister prepared to answer.

Mr. Foulds: The Chairman of Management Board?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The question that was asked a moment ago?

Mr. Lewis: Who pays for the Hartt commission?

Mr. Foulds: Yes, funding for the Hartt commission.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The amount will be shown in the estimates of the Ministry of the Environment.

CORRECTIONAL OFFICERS

Mr. Reed: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Correctional Services: This is a three-part question. Is the minister employing female guards in all-male prisons, and is he employing male guards in all-female prisons? If the answer to either is yes would he not consider that some of the duties these guards are asked to perform are not an infringement of the personal privacy of the inmates?

Mr. Roy: It is tailor-made for you, Frank.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, firstly, I am very proud of the fact that we have more than 125 female correctional officers dealing in what I think would reasonably be regarded as all-male institutions, and doing a remarkable job. We have a unisex ministry.

Secondly, for many years, ever since the opening of the Vanier Institute for Women, there have been male staff there. There is a difference between what generally would be regarded as an all-male and an all-female institution—

Mr. Roy: You are right again, Frank.

Hon. Mr. Drea: —in that a female correctional officer can work three shifts in an all-male institution, whereas a male officer is not allowed to work the third shift, or the sleeping shift, in a female institution.

An hon. member: That's sexist.

Hon. Mr. Drea: To the second part of the question, Mr. Speaker, the only comment I would make is that the same deterrent that the hon. member is trying to put in front of female correctional officers in male institutions applied when Florence Nightingale tried to bring nursing into the twentieth century.

Mr. Lewis: You are not doing too badly, fellow. Not badly at all.

Mr. Reed: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: While appreciating the minister's quest for equality, first of all does he not recognize that the differences in functions in male and female prisons are an obvious recognition of discrimination? Would he not consider that some of the functions that these female officers are asked to perform are not an infringement of the personal privacy of the inmates?

Mr. Foulds: Like what?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Such as?

Mr. Reed: Such as guarding them while they are performing their personal ablutions?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, obviously there is a difference between males and females.

Mr. Martel: Right on Frank, right on.

Mr. Philip: When did you find out, Frank?

Mr. Lewis: Thank God the school children are here.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I regard females who are specifically trained for an occupation in the year 1977 to be professional people. I regard them in exactly the same capacity as I would female doctors. We don't preclude female doctors from administering to male patients. We do not preclude the vast majority of our nursing staff, which traditionally over the years are female, from ministering to male patients. As a matter of fact, most of the male patients are profoundly grateful that they are there.

Mr. S. Smith: Why don't males work the third shift? They are professionals.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Certainly in no way, shape or form am I going to turn back the clock and say that we are not going to employ females as on-line correctional officers. We are the only ones in Canada who do so. We are going to employ more. I will tell the House in terms of guarding the inmates' privacy, there are certain functions that are not performed by female guards, such as the original skin search when a person is admitted. But in terms of being on line—and they are on line, even on the midnight shift in places as tough as Millbrook—there is no difference between the functions they perform and the professional manner they carry them out, and in what a psychiatric nurse in Penetang does.

Mr. Lewis: Well done.

Mr. Conway: There really is a future leader over there.

Mr. Lewis: Now, if the Attorney General handled the bar admission course question the way the Minister of Correctional Services handles institutions.

[2:45]

Mr. Davidson: Supplementary: Would the minister not agree that the present system as it is practised today is far more beneficial than detrimental to the system? And will he tell us when he plans to hire more female guards in order to look after the needs of the institutions that exist in the province—be they male or female?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, if I could just appeal to you for a moment, for about the fourth time, I would appreciate it if correctional officers were referred to here as correctional officers rather than guards, which is a very outdated title.

Two things have happened upon the introduction in the past year of female on-line correctional officers. The reason I say "on-line" is that I want to differentiate between the female correctional officer and the female person who is watching over a female inmate. The first thing that happened was that the language has improved enormously inside. Two, the personal hygiene among males has improved enormously with the introduction of female correctional officers. Three, in general the rowdiness in the cell corridors has diminished remarkably.

As a matter of fact if you want to go back in history in this province, Mr. Speaker, they have had the same impact upon the jail system as the integration of the beverage room—they cleaned up the act.

Mr. Foulds: Let's not carry that parallel too far.

Mr. Roy: How would you know that, Frank?

Mr. Reed: Being an expert on both.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I never drank beer.

Mr. Martel: Tonic water, Frank?

Hon. Mr. Drea: The hiring practices in a ministry are a matter of talent, a matter of experience, a matter of qualifications, and we have unisex hiring as we have unisex work performance.

Mr. Reed: With all of this equality that is now before us, why are male correctional officers not allowed to work the third shift?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I believe it has been traditional. It probably came when the Vanier Institution was opened some years ago. The mere presence of males in a female institution was regarded as somewhat radical. I think falsely, but necessarily, there is a concern that during the third shift, at which time the inmates would be asleep, there might be some attempt at a violation of their personal integrity. I regard that as absolutely no threat, but the public and a great many people who are associated with female institutions do.

The present system at Vanier is no hardship. Most of the male officers are in administrative capacities anyway and they just simply don't work the third shift. The female staff who are in the preponderance there do work the third shift. I think it's something that has to be looked at in the future, but I personally see no harm in it. I think that males in that atmosphere can be just as professional as females when they are on the line between midnight and the dawn rising hour.

HOSPITAL CUTBACKS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Health—is he not still there?

Mr. Roy: Sure he is.

Mr. Cassidy: He's hiding.

In view of the reports that are now circulating—

Mr. Roy: You're not going to make much of a leader if you can't see.

Mr. Breaugh: You should know, Albert.

Mr. Cassidy: He's a retiring type.

In view of the reports which are now circulating in Brockville and in Kingston, is the government considering a closure of the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital? Is it also considering giving the OHIP headquarters to the Chairman of the Management Board's riding rather than the Minister of Community and Social Services' when this headquarters is transferred to eastern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Neither rumour is in any way founded in fact.

Hon. Mr. Norton: He knew that when he said it on the radio in Kingston.

Mr. Lewis: Until it happens.

Mr. Cassidy: Since 16 casual employees have been laid off in Brockville and since 27 more are being given on-call notice after January 7, can the minister say what is the fate of 200 further employees who it is said will be laid off at the end of the fiscal year?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I don't know by whom it is said, but I don't have any such plans. The member knows last week we did terminate the employment of a number of contract staff in five or six of the psychiatric hospitals. But I repeat, and I suspect the member knew this—it's certainly been made very clear by the local member for Leeds (Mr. Auld)—there are no plans to close the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital. The plans to move OHIP to Kingston are going ahead.

LANDLORD-TENANT DISPUTE

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General: Would he advise why his ministry, through the director of public prosecutions, overruled a decision of a local Crown attorney and laid a criminal charge against an individual for what is basically a civil dispute?

Mr. Roy: Good question.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Wait till you hear the answer. Here is a good answer.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I assume that the question relates to a matter that the hon. member spoke to me about recently. I requested that he forward me a copy of the summons so that I could identify the matter about which he was concerned. Today he has delivered me a copy of the summons and, Mr. Speaker, through you, I wish to assure him that I will attempt to obtain particulars of the matter about which he is concerned.

Mr. Roy: Could I ask a supplementary?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Sure.

Mr. Roy: Oh, does the hon. member for Huron-Bruce want to go first? I don't want to cut off my friend.

Mr. Speaker: That's awfully decent of the member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Foulds: That's why you didn't make it as a leader, Albert.

An hon. member: Alphonse and Gaston.

Mr. Gaunt: May I ask the Attorney General if he would consider that a landlord who cuts off the hydro and water because the rent isn't paid is deserving of a criminal charge?

Mr. Roy: Yes, as a matter of policy, let's have it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think I should be more acquainted with more of the facts before I respond to that question.

Mr. Breaugh: That's never stopped you before.

THUNDER BAY COURTHOUSE

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Government Services: What steps is his ministry taking to rectify the disaster of a provincial courthouse that he got lumbered with in Thunder Bay which has, after three years, a leaking roof, an artesian stream running through the nine cell blocks in the basement, and three inches of water as a usual condition in that courthouse?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Good, a built-in swimming pool.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Is that fresh water?

Mr. Roy: Move it to Ottawa. It would be an improvement there.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I believe that we are making improvements to the building and charging them against the lease.

Mr. Deans: What do you do about the stream?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Swim in it.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Could the minister find out whether the building is salvageable, or whether it might not be better to terminate the lease—

Hon. B. Stephenson: You have no imagination. That is what is that matter with you.

Mr. Foulds: —with John H. McCormick and Group Building Systems Limited, inasmuch as the company has never lived up to the terms of the contract, and has never paid the subcontractors, and has delivered a shoddy piece of workmanship that is just not usable?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Yes.

Mr. Foulds: A final supplementary: Can we find out how much the ministry is currently paying per month?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Yes.

Mr. Deans: The inquiry is already on stream.

NON-PROFIT HOUSING

Mr. Roy: I have a question of the Minister of Housing, having to do with the long-standing dispute between his ministry and the city of Ottawa over the city of Ottawa non-profit housing: Can the minister advise the House whether he intends in the very near future to bring this dispute to a conclusion and subsidize to some measure the city of Ottawa non-profit housing, which is this year, as the minister knows, facing a deficit of half a million dollars? If the minister will not subsidize it, does he realize that some of the rents for some of these tenants, mostly senior citizens, are increasing to the tune of between 100, 150 and 170 per cent and, in fact, some of these people will be paying 30 per cent of their revenue for rent?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I have already communicated with the mayor of Ottawa. We've had ongoing discussions and an exchange of correspondence concerning this matter. I think, as the hon. member is aware, the particular problem is shared with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and we have discussed with it how we could go about being of extra assistance to the non-profit housing units in Ottawa.

I have communicated with the mayor of Ottawa as to what the formula would be. That has been agreed to by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in order to be of assistance. Quite frankly, I was under the impression that what we had submitted was acceptable and that it would be worked out to handle most of the problem that the member has just mentioned.

Mr. Roy: I have a supplementary. In view of the fact that this matter, at least according to the city of Ottawa, has been a long-standing dispute with his ministry over three, four or five years, when does the minister plan to make an announcement that there has been a solution?

Secondly, how much money are we talking about? What solution has the minister proposed to help subsidize this deficit faced by the city of Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that I should discuss the contents of the proposal I have made to the mayor until such time as he has responded and has accepted that as a solution to his problem.

I think the hon. member is well aware that the situation we're facing in Ottawa is one where, quite frankly—and I'm not attempting to be difficult about this at all—part of that problem, if not all of it, has been created by the inability of the management of the units in Ottawa to keep up with the times.

What we are trying to do now is to make sure that these units do not become totally subsidized as public housing but that the tenants in them will receive the assistance they need according to their incomes. I believe it was at the recommendation of the city of Ottawa—I'm sorry; not the city of Ottawa, but the housing management company—

Mr. Roy: The city of Ottawa non-profit housing authority.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I wanted to draw the distinction between city council as opposed to this group. They themselves were looking very seriously at increasing the percentage of income in those units to 30 per cent. When the mayor responds to the proposal we've made and, I emphasize again, it has been agreed to by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, we'll get on with the arrangements and make the announcement.

Mr. Roy: Could I ask one final supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: The final supplementary.

Mr. Roy: Would the minister undertake to press this matter with the mayor and with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation since some of these tenants are facing this increase as of January 1, 1978?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The hon. member is quite correct. I'm aware of that and I think that since this matter has come to my attention—and I'm not aware that it's gone on for four or five years—

Mr. Roy: It has.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: —but since it's come to my attention, I think we've made considerable progress. Understandably the mayor of Ottawa, quite properly on behalf of his community, grabbed for the whole ring. I must say to you, sir, with all respect to the mayor, he didn't get the whole ring. But I think we've worked out something that is satisfactory and will be settled, I hope, well before that deadline.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: No, that's enough supplementaries.

TOW TRUCK LICENSING

Mr. Philip: I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Is the minister aware that the licensing and legislation committee of Metro Toronto council is meeting today to deal with the proposal to license tow trucks? If so, would the minister care to make known his initiatives at the provincial level in this area?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't aware of that particular meeting of the Metropolitan Toronto Licensing Commission to consider the licensing of tow trucks within Metropolitan Toronto. I would have to say that is a position I would support and I'm very pleased to hear they are taking this initiative. I hope they follow through with it because I've given serious consideration to the possible provincial licensing of tow trucks.

The needs vary so greatly within the province of Ontario that it is my opinion, and I believe the opinion of the government, that the licensing of tow trucks should be carried out at the municipal level where it is deemed by that municipality to be necessary.

Mr. Philip: By way of a supplementary, is the minister aware that the two associations of tow truck operators, namely the Automobile Trades Association and the new Association of Independent Tow Truck Operators, favour provincial rather than municipal licensing? In the light of the possible Metro initiatives, would the minister care to tell us which of the seven recommendations regarding tow truck licensing found in chapter six of the report of the select committee on the highway transportation of goods, he is prepared to implement, and when?

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the select committee on transportation of goods, there are some 300 recommendations—or some very large number of recommendations. Since we received the committee report, the ministry has been actively reviewing and preparing information with regard to the implementation of many of the recommendations in that particular report. I will be bringing forward amendments, changes and implementation procedures for many of those recommendations in due course, but I am not prepared to say at this moment exactly what our response is going to be to those seven specific recommendations.

Mr. Cunningham: Supplementary: Would the minister not agree, given that the tow trucks in question leave the various regions and travel quite freely throughout the province, that it would be more appropriate to consider provincial control rather than municipal control in this matter?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, that is not my opinion certainly at this time. I realize there is some degree of long-distance tow truck service, but I hesitate to suggest that tow trucks should be licensed by the Highway Transport Board and that there should be the necessary proven public need and necessity. In most cases a tow truck gives a local service. In larger municipalities, I think the tow truck industry should be regulated municipally as are taxis and there should be some minimum licensing requirements in the licensing, but not just a case of licensing for the sake of licensing. I have asked my ministry to do some work on preparing a sample bylaw that would be available to municipalities as a guide if they wish to regulate tow trucks in their municipality.

Mr. Philip: In coming to these conclusions, has the minister met with the two trade associations involved and has he sought their opinions beforehand?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I have certainly met with one of the associations the hon. member mentions. At that meeting, I found those in attendance were very much not necessarily of the same opinion. I believe there is some difference of opinion in the industry.

RECOVERY OF HYDRO MONEY

Mr. Sargent: I have a question of the Minister of Energy. Is the minister aware of a very concerted effort on the part of Hydro to recover a large sum of money, in the area of $240 million, from the Ministry of Government Services?

Mr. Worton: It's not much if you say it quickly.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: No.

Mr. Sargent: Could I ask a supplementary then to the Treasurer? Is he aware of the fact that there is $240 million between Government Services and Hydro and that there is a very concerted effort to recover this money? Is the Government borrowing money from Hydro?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No.

Mr. Sargent: As the Treasurer, the minister then says he doesn't know about a $240 million advance from Hydro to Government Services?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary to the Minister of Government Services: Is he aware that his ministry owes Hydro $240 million?

Mr. Makarchuk: Try the Minister of Correctional Services. He'll give you an answer.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, could I have the member repeat the question, please?

Mr. Sargent: Is the minister aware of Hydro's effort to recover $240 million from his ministry?

Hon. Mr. McCague: No.

HOSPITAL CUTBACKS

Mr. Deans: I have a question of the Minister of Health. Can the Minister of Health produce the analysis and the studies which his ministry must obviously have done into the efficiency and the patient-staff ratio and also the staff functions at the Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital, which brought the ministry to the conclusion that it could afford to have a drastically reduced number of staff available in order to meet the needs of the patient population, both now and in the future?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, as I hope the hon. member knows, the reductions which were recently announced in the psychiatric hospitals are all in the contract area, and basically all in services.

Mr. Deans: It doesn't matter.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The direction that was given to staff in reviewing the program was that direct patient care was not to be affected and this is certainly the case.

Mr. Deans: A supplementary question: How can the minister claim that when, in the case of the Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital at least, there will be two doctors who will not be continued on staff or on a consultancy basis and—

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has expired.

Mr. Deans: Oh, has it? Well that does pose a problem. Can the minister produce the analysis and the studies that brought him to the realization that he could do without these people?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the hon. member knows, the estimates of my ministry are presently before the social development committee. If he would like to appear there, I would be glad to discuss it with him and involve the staff who are doing the analysis for me.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

Before we get to the orders, I think the hon. House leader would like to make an announcement.

VISITORS

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I thought I might take advantage of the attendance at the moment to draw the House's attention to the visit on Thursday afternoon to the Legislature of His Excellency Giulio Andreotti, President of the Council of Ministers of the Italian Republic.

The President will be here and a guest in the Speaker's gallery at about 3 p.m. Thursday, following which the Premier (Mr. Davis) is having a reception for the President in the Lieutenant Governor's music room to which all members of the Legislature will be invited, in order to meet with the President.

I thought that since the House will not be in session tomorrow, we should draw attention to the fact that His Excellency will be here at about 3 p.m., near the end of the question period. I hope most members of the House will be here to greet him.

Mr. Nixon: I would also want to draw to your attention, sir, that an old friend of ours is in the gallery this afternoon, the former member for Sault Ste. Marie and Attorney General, Arthur Wishart. I often think how desperately he tried to keep Green Stamps from Ontario, and as soon as he left we had Wintario which is now paying us $80 million a year.

OHIP OFFICE CLOSURE

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, I wish to give notice under section 27(g) of the standing orders that I am not satisfied with the response of the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) to my questions asked today and intend to raise the subject matter on the adjournment of the House tonight.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to give notice under standing order 27(g) that I am dissatisfied with the answer the Minister of Health gave to my supplementary question, and I would like to discuss it this evening.

STANDING PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. Breaugh from the standing procedural affairs committee presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following application for a private Act and finds the notices, as published, sufficient:

City of Chatham.

Mr. Breaugh also presented the committee's resolution which was read as follows and adopted:

That since the present session has been so brief, it has not afforded the House sufficient opportunity to assess provisional standing orders. The committee therefore recommends that the experimental period be extended for another whole session.

INCOME TAX DISCOUNTERS ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved second reading of Bill 99, An Act to regulate the Discounting of Income Tax Refunds.

Mr. Nixon: There's been considerable concern for the last five years that a number of these discounters in Ontario have been charging inordinately high rates of interest and frankly I am very glad indeed the minister has decided to take action to bring these under control.

I suppose it might have been at least a consideration that the practice simply be outlawed. But the provision of this bill requiring the discounter to pay 95 per cent of the value of the income tax rebate to the applicant means there would be an interest rate of five per cent on the amount, which certainly is not inordinate. I would also think it would effectively drive the discounters out of that business, which is something I believe is to be desired.

I suppose there are some individuals who might not find it convenient or even possible to get loans on the basis of an expected income tax rebate from normal sources. But it's difficult really to think of the circumstances where, if they had a receipt or a statement based on their income tax return indicating a payment was coming, they could not get a loan based on that from some legitimate source. So for that reason we intend to support the bill.

Mr. Davison: I intend to deal with second reading of Bill 99 at some greater length than my colleague from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, although I also rise on behalf of my party to say we will support the bill.

Bill 99 represents very badly needed legislation to protect consumers in Ontario. If I didn't know better I'd wonder why someone hadn't thought of introducing this bill before. Knowing better though, I must say I'm very impressed, if not with the current minister's position, and if not with the details and specifics of the bill itself, then by the very speed with which the bill has been brought before the House: first reading last Tuesday; second reading; committee; probably third reading today.

It took the current minister's predecessor several months to say, "No, it's impossible." It's taken this minister only a week to bring the bill into the House and probably get it through. It now appears that what was last winter and last spring impossible, unconstitutional—what have you—was in fact merely inconvenient for the government at the time. For our friends opposite, politics remains the art of the minimum. Not until they're pressed into the corner will we get legislation to protect consumers.

I first had this matter brought to my attention last February when a number of constituents came to my constituency office to complain about these practices. After looking into the matter, talking to people from municipal, federal and provincial levels, I was rather surprised to find out there wasn't any legislation. I think perhaps it would be a useful exercise if members of the House understood exactly what these rather sophisticated loan sharks are doing.

It's not a very nice activity they're involved in. These businesses take an individual's income tax information and then provide a hasty and at times, inaccurate, estimate of what the client's rebate will be. The client may then sell the full return for a portion of the refund. That portion is usually received in immediate cash, although there are cases where that isn't true. Power of attorney is then signed over to the service and the individual never sees the actual amount reimbursed by the government. Any error, unintentional or otherwise, could add a substantial windfall profit to the discounter without the knowledge of the client.

There's no standard fee taken by these firms. It most often, though, is in excess of 40 per cent of the refund, depending on the amount of money involved and depending on the degree of risk as determined by the service. If we would choose to look at those fees as interest rates, compounded annually, then it's quite possible to conclude some of these fees amount to interest rates as high as 2,000 per cent. Indeed, the government should be congratulated for moving to stop this practice.

When I brought the matter to the current minister's predecessor's attention in February 1977 I pointed all of this out. I also pointed out to him that the people most vulnerable to these services are those in such dire financial straits that immediate cash is necessary. I felt what these businesses were doing was an inexcusable exploitation of a rather desperate and economically desperate segment of our community.

The minister replied to me that month, saying he was aware of the problem and, wholly unsolicited by me, then launched into some rather bizarre comments about Quebec and about the whole question of federal-provincial jurisdictions. The response of the minister does not form part of the record of this House, Mr. Speaker. I would like, with your indulgence, to make it a part of the record of this House. I think it reflects the real attitude of this government and should be on the record. I'm quoting from a letter dated February 21, 1977, over the signature of the former minister, the member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman):

"You may not be aware that the whole field of interest is exclusively a federal jurisdiction. It is in fact so exclusively federal that not even the province of Quebec challenges the clear jurisdiction of the federal government to regulate interest rates. Because of that situation, the provinces have for the past two years been urging the federal government to enact legislation to control this kind of abuse as well as loan sharking and government cheque discounting.

[3:30]

"In response to the province's urging and as a result of their own research, the federal government has introduced the Borrowers' and Depositors' Protection Act which is currently being studied by a parliamentary committee in Ottawa. The measures contained in that Act may very well completely curtail the activities of these companies which concern you and us.

"We did try, about a year ago, to claim jurisdiction but we were told in no uncertain terms by our legal advisers that we could not because of our limited jurisdictional capacity.

"We have examined the transactions in terms of the Business Practices Act and have concluded that we have no authority under that legislation to proceed against these companies."

He goes on, at some length, to consider the possibility of actions being taken under that most famous of Acts, that modern Act, the Unconscionable Transactions Act. If hon. members will recall, this was his initial solution to the problem of rent control.

I don't intend to raise it further, but I might make a footnote with the current minister that while he's on this current crusade, he might also consider the question of those people who discount government cheques. I think perhaps the minister can make a note of that and perhaps next week introduce legislation that we can pass the week after, to prevent that kind of practice.

I was not totally satisfied with the minister's response at that time but, in all good faith, I accepted it. It wasn't until I did some further research in the matter that I found out that several provinces in Canada had enacted legislation to prevent this same kind of abuse. I wrote back to the minister in March a very strongly-worded letter in which I wanted to know from him exactly why he had put that forward in such a fashion to me. I just couldn't believe that it had been a deliberate attempt on his part, or his staff's part, to mislead me. I wondered about the competence of some of his senior staff in not keeping themselves abreast of what was happening across the country.

The minister penned another of his odd responses to me, this one on April 5, in which he pointed out that he was deeply disturbed. At the time I agreed with him. However, he then was able to find another argument why the provincial government shouldn't move into this field, and that was again by going back to the Borrowers' and Depositors' Protection Act. At this time, I was pressing him very strongly because I was concerned that we get legislation in Ontario before the April 30 deadline so we could have stopped the needless suffering that went on during the last tax period. The minister replied to me and I quote from his April 5 letter:

"We are all aware that there is now far too much legislative and administrative overlap between the two senior levels of government. Federal-provincial roles must be re-examined and rationalized. The case of the discounters is as clearcut a starting point as we will find. We have asked for, and the federal government is enacting, a law that will deal with them. It flies in the face of all reason for the province to take concurrent, constitutionally questionable, prohibitory action just as the federal legislation is coming into place."

As the minister knows, as I know and as many members of the House know, you can very well wait a long time for legislation of any kind to come from the federal government so that it wasn't a very reasonable argument at that time.

I raised the question of the constitutionality on other occasions with the minister. On March 31 I raised it in the House along with my colleague from Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) and my colleague from Riverdale (Mr. Renwick). Again, the minister insisted that it was totally unconstitutional, that his staff assured him it was totally unconstitutional.

I hope that the minister will allay our fears by telling us in the debate today that he's talked with the Attorney General, or he's got another opinion from his staff or an outside legal opinion. Because we wouldn't, of course, want to do anything that was unconstitutional.

There are a couple of aspects that aren't really dealt with in this bill that I would like to draw to the minister's attention. One is that the experience in Manitoba has shown us that bringing forth this kind of legislation should force about 80 per cent of the discounters out of business, leaving around 20 per cent. However, it's quite conceivable that in Ontario, as has happened in other provinces, we will force them all out of business.

These discounters, shady and shoddy as they may be, do in fact provide a service that some people demand, some people require. I think it's incumbent upon us, as legislators in Ontario, to understand that. While what I am about to suggest doesn't require legislation, I hope the minister will pay some attention to it. I have talked to him privately about it before. What I suggest is the possibility of Ontario following the example of the Hon. Saul Miller, the former minister in charge of this matter in Manitoba, when he established, within his ministry and within the regional offices of the ministry, an individual who was identified as being available for counselling in this matter and who could sit down with a person in need—in desperate need of this money immediately—and recommend an approach whereby that person could, with the government, go to the credit unions of Manitoba and apply for a loan.

While we are also on the figure of five per cent; five per cent is, of course, in fact 20 per cent when you consider that the average length of time for a return is three months. At 20 per cent these discounters will be making considerably more than a credit union or a bank, or God forbid even Avco and other finance companies. So I think there would be room in Ontario for the ministry to actively encourage a counselling system that would put the needy person in contact, through the auspices of the ministry, with a credit union or another financial institution from which—I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Five per cent isn't the interest rate.

Mr. Davison: Okay, I will explain it again for the benefit of my colleague.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is a discount, it isn't an interest rate.

Mr. Davison: Five per cent is to be considered as five per cent of the refund. If the company only lends you that money over the average period, which is three months, you then have to multiply by four to find the interest rate. It's the principle of short-term borrowing, so in most cases you can consider the five per cent fee to be a 20 per cent interest rate.

I hope the minister will take that suggestion seriously and do something to be of assistance to those in our province who aren't in as good a financial position as the minister or I or his fellow members may be in.

Another matter I would like to raise with the minister, to which the bill doesn't address itself but for which there is certainly a need, is the question of the way in which these companies operate in terms of business practices. I think there are some areas that perhaps don't properly belong in this Bill 99 that have to be looked at.

One that has concerned me is the question of the power of attorney agreements the discounters extract from their victims. I have before me a copy of an agreement with Shield Tax Services Limited, which is another name for Instant Tax Services, and it's on the prescribed government form for power of attorney. The particular constituent who brought this to my attention was, I admit, not the most sophisticated of people. He told me, after he saw a copy of it, it was a different agreement to the one he signed. There was in fact no date on the agreement.

Be that as it may, if the date was put on by the company later or if the date was on when the person signed it, the point of concern is that this individual signed the agreement on February 28, 1977. We would assume that under normal circumstances the information would go off to the tax department and National Revenue and that within three months or so the refund would appear and everything would be settled.

There was really no need for the power of attorney to extend from February to past June or July. This document I have—and if the minister is interested I could give him a copy as long as he would keep the name confidential—had a date of December 31, 1978. The spectre that raises is that having once signed that, not really understanding it and not being fully aware of what it meant, you may never see your income tax again for another two years. I hope the minister will take that into consideration.

There are a number of other points I want to raise. Specifically I want to talk about the provisions in the bill found in sections 4 and 11. Although I will deal with them at some length, I think perhaps it would be most appropriate if I dealt with them during the committee stage.

Let me say in conclusion it is very nice to see this bill because I know if we pass it we will at least in some way give the consumers of Ontario the kind of protection they need. It just would have been a great deal nicer if we could have seen this bill several months ago.

HERITAGE LANGUAGE PROGRAM

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing another member on this particular legislation, I want to inform the members that, pursuant to standing order 28, the members for Downsview (Mr. di Santo) and Oakwood (Mr. Grande) have filed the required notice of their dissatisfaction with the answers to questions posed to the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) on November 10 concerning the heritage language program. The member for Downsview will be called at 10:30 and the member for Oakwood will be called at 10:40. Further to this, the member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall) will debate his question with the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell).

Mr. Blundy: I have read over this bill and I am prepared to speak in support of it.

I would like to mention a rather interesting happening. On November 8 I was going to ask the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations what he was going to do about this injustice that was happening in the province of Ontario. On that very day the minister stood up and said he was going to introduce legislation to correct these injustices. At that time, obviously the minister and I were thinking along the same lines as far as this particular matter is concerned.

I want to say that I think the situation should have been corrected some time ago. I know it is a custom that has been going on for some time in the province, particularly in the Metro Toronto area, I am informed. Even though it is a little late, it is good legislation, I believe. Many of the people who have used the services of one of these discounting firms are people who are most in need of protection in the province of Ontario. This bill is going to provide them that protection, at least to some extent.

Most people who have an income tax refund coming to them and receive notice of it can go through the conventional borrowing institutions and get money if they wish. Many of the people who perhaps are not as aware of this or who are not as prepared to go to the conventional lending institutions have gone to these discounters and have been really ripped off as far as interest rates and service charges are concerned.

So I believe the bill is going to correct this situation and I will support the bill in all three readings.

Ms. Bryden: I also welcome this legislation but wonder why it took so long. I think I can see three reasons for the delay which is typical of the kind of activity we get in the consumer protection field from this government.

The first reason for the delay was an attempt at the usual Tory response of buck-passing to Ottawa—"Let's see what they'll do"—even though people continue to be ripped off during the period while the long negotiations go on, rather than putting a stop to it and later on seeing if negotiations could bring in a federal Act on this problem.

The second event that appeared to push the legislation along was the explosion of activity this year in the field of instant tax refunds. A great many of the operators in the western provinces moved east when the western provinces put a stop to their exploiting activities. So in Ontario we had, I understand according to some newspaper stories, about 40 of these instant tax offices open. There were an estimated 62 across the country and last year the Department of National Revenue estimated $8 million of refunds were cycled through the instant tax offices and about 50 per cent of this was sheer profit.

So that when you get a situation as glaring as that, the government appears to listen a bit more to the requests for some regulation of this particular abuse.

The third thing that happened was we had a change of minister and I think there must be some significance to that, perhaps, because the previous one—

Mr. Grande: Slightly, slightly.

Ms. Bryden: —was convinced such legislation was unconstitutional, even though none of the Acts in the other provinces have been challenged.

Mr. Foulds: He is just a short, thin Sidney Handleman, that's all.

Ms. Bryden: It seems to me if you always retreat behind the constitutional argument you seldom get any action. But anyway, after these three events occurred, we finally have got some legislation. I welcome it at this late date.

I don't think there's any doubt about the need. There have been stories in the paper of the kind of people who apply for such refunds. Generally, they are people who either have difficulty obtaining credit or are uninformed of other places where they could get credit. They are often in very dire financial circumstances, are desperate for instant cash and so are very vulnerable to this kind of exploitation. For that reason they need protection and they need protection fast, because last year, according to a survey done by the Toronto Star, there was an average of 300 per cent charged on these refunds. The Star reporter went to six shops. He had a $500 refund coming to him; they offered him figures varying from $250 to $350, but the average was about $300, which was 60 per cent of the refund coming to him. But that is just an average. Certainly across Canada there have been instances where a much higher percentage was taken.

There is no doubt of the need for protection for the rather vulnerable group that needs instant cash and tends to go to these kind of loan sharks who are posing as tax-return preparers.

As was stated by my colleague, the member for Hamilton Centre, we do need more counselling services from the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations to let people know about alternative credit sources. We also need more community banks of the kind that the Royal Bank is operating in the east end of Toronto. There is one community bank there that is attempting to provide credit for people of modest income. We need more of that kind of credit service and that kind of information available to people.

Generally we need a regulation of the whole tax-return preparing service industry. I notice the minister in his bill is attempting to plug a possible loophole which these services might resort to; that is, instead of taking a large discount on the refund, they will put in a large fee on the service. He says no "unreasonable charge" may be made by the service. The bill is rather indefinite as to what is a reasonable or unreasonable charge, and I find the legislation a little murky in this field.

I would like the minister to clarify what happens if a person thinks there is an unreasonable charge. For instance, can he complain to the minister? Or does he have to institute a prosecution and the judge will decide whether the charge is unreasonable? Also, if he complains to the minister, can the minister order a reduction in the charge and a refund to the taxpayer? Or does that have to be done through a court order, with a judge making the order for a refund of the amount charged?

I notice that section 10(2) allows a judge to order a refund of any amount owing to the taxpayer, but it is not clear whether that is just the amount of the refund that comes in after the event when the refund was more than was anticipated, or whether that would also allow a judge to order payment of what he considered the unreasonable part of the charge.

Another area that is a little murky is the question of how the taxpayer collects the excess when the refund is larger than was anticipated. The legislation provides that excess, of course, must go to the taxpayer, but it is not clear whether the taxpayer has to go through small claims court to get it. In many instances it could involve fairly small amounts and probably would not be worth going through small claims court.

I wonder if the minister should not consider licensing tax return services so that in the event they do not pay these small amounts to the taxpayer, their licence could be cancelled or suspended until such payments are made.

The same licensing could also be used to enforce the question of what is reasonable and unreasonable if that is to be decided at the discretion of the minister.

Those are two areas that I would like the minister to clarify and possibly to consider whether the Act should be amended to make them clearer.

Those are the only points I wanted to raise. I only add that I hope this piece of legislation is not a single swallow that makes a spring but that we will see more consumer protection legislation of this sort.

Mr. B. Newman: I would like to make a few comments concerning Bill 99, An Act to regulate the Discounting of Income Tax Refunds. In my humble opinion, the bill's title is misleading because it does not solely cover income tax refunds. When we look under section 1, we see that in addition to income tax refunds, there are unemployment insurance refunds available, Canada Pension refunds, and refunds under any Act of Canada, Ontario or any other province. An individual may not realize that he has the opportunity of using this piece of legislation in an attempt to get refunds, whether it is solely income tax or not.

I would appreciate a reply from the minister to my comments concerning the title of the bill. I also think that in view of the fact that the services did mushroom in the previous year, as a result of limiting the amount that the individual could collect to five per cent of the overpayment, the numbers that may go into this type of a business will be extremely limited. I think that even though they may be limited, there are so many other areas of refunds that an individual could be entitled to that a good approach might be the licensing, as has been mentioned by the previous speaker, of the persons who are going to engage in this type of business.

There are other comments I could make, but many of them have been made by previous speakers. I would like to bring to the minister's attention that the constitutionality of this type of legislation was a great concern to his predecessor. One of the reasons why he refused to act was that he claimed we had no authority on the provincial level to act or to pass legislation.

The local newspaper was so concerned that they even editorialized; they would like to know who is actually correct. Is the minister correct? Or was his predecessor correct? They mention on—I think it's November 9, 1977: "Sidney Handleman, the Consumer Relations minister at that time, agreed that discounters' activities were"—and I am quoting—"almost a criminal offence, but rejected any steps to curb them on the grounds that any regulatory Act would have been completely unconstitutional."

So it is kind of strange now that the minister's predecessor thought it was unconstitutional and yet the minister maintains it is not unconstitutional. We certainly think and hope he is correct in his assumption, because we would like to see this legislation passed and become effective quite quickly.

Mr. Grande: I rise to support this legislation and, as many other speakers prior to my standing up have said, certainly it is long overdue. It has been, as a matter of fact, for two or three years. The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations has had ample evidence in his hands sent by me and many other members of this Legislature saying to him: You need legislation to curb these fly-by-night type of outfits that really take unsuspecting people and make them pay a tremendous amount of interest for a service that will perhaps only cost, at the highest, about $5.

I really don't understand why ministers of the Crown, when they have all this evidence at their disposal, keep on stalling, and do nothing in terms of alleviating the problem. I want to say to the minister that perhaps the reason why he finally did bring in this legislation is because, well, he fumbled the coffee prices. Clearly the minister says in his own words, on radio, on television, all over the place, that he's the minister who is going to come down like a ton of bricks to protect the consumers. In terms of coffee prices, the bricks have fallen and certainly have crumbled.

[4:00]

Mr. Warner: A ton of feathers.

Mr. Grande: Let me say to the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that I'm willing to put one little tiny piece of Humpty Dumpty together again, in terms of this legislation. If he will continue to bring in legislation which addresses itself to a need that has been evident for years, then I will certainly do my part to glue another piece of Humpty Dumpty.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You're a good guy.

Mr. Grande: I want to read some communications between myself and the previous Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations regarding this particular problem. The first communication was on May 7, 1976.

Some of my constituents approached me and said, "We're paying a tremendous amount of money to get our income tax filled out and they're asking us for 30, 40 and 50 per cent on our returns." At that time I sent a very nice letter to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and I said, in essence, "This has been brought to my attention; look into it; investigate it"—it was a particular company on Yonge Street, Instantax, I think it was. I said, "Investigate it." As a matter of fact, I ended very nicely by saying, "I would appreciate it if your ministry could look into this matter at your convenience."

Certainly, he did—at his convenience. He did answer the letter though, perhaps rather quickly, on March 31. I want to read that letter in totality because the different reasons why the minister stalled in this particular legislation are certainly outlined in that letter.

It says: "The ministry is aware of this and similar operations. Officials visited the 592 Yonge Street location prior to its opening and have been observing it since that time. Although certain aspects of the company's activities are morally distasteful, investigators have found no evidence that any legislation has been contravened.

"The organization previously operated in Vancouver where it was studied by the British Columbia department of consumer services and ministry officials have been in contact with our BC counterparts as an aid to our investigation. As you may be aware, federal and provincial authorities are currently discussing a new bill tentatively called the borrowers' protection Act. Our experience with companies such as Instantax will provide additional input with regard to controls on lending.

"I trust this sheds some light on the situation. If I can be of any further assistance please do not hesitate to call on me."

I did call on him again because the letter he wrote was totally unacceptable to me. If a minister of the Crown tells me that certain activities are morally distasteful and is not willing to bring in any kind of legislation to rectify that situation then I say to that minister, "What on earth are you doing in the government?"

This letter did get me a little angered, so I wrote back to the minister saying: "Your answer has raised many questions in my mind". This letter was written June 15. "You say that your ministry officials have visited the outfit and have been making observations since prior to its opening. I wonder, Mr. Minister, if you could provide me with a report of the observations your officials have made?" By the way, I never received any report of that. "You say in your letter that you find certain aspects of a company's activities morally distasteful, but no legislation is being contravened. Then clearly this situation calls for some type of new legislation to stop this legal loan sharking."

I continued with explaining my constituent's problem, and said "to his credit my constituent did not make use of the services of Instantax. But how many people did make use of Instantax? How many people have been exploited by this fly-by-night outfit?"

I ended the letter by saying, "Mr. Minister, I urge you to look more seriously into the problem, do a thorough investigation and bring in legislation as soon as possible in order to prevent the exploitation of poor working people in this province by this and any other outfit that might crop up next year at income tax time."

Nothing took place other than the minister being interviewed by, I guess, the Toronto Star. The story read: "Sidney Handleman, Ontario Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, has been pressing the federal government to make such operations illegal." He was quoted as saying, "They'll give you 80 per cent of your refund," he said in an interview, "but if you figure it out, it comes to 500 or 600 per cent interest per annum." Now, he had all this information. He had all the information before him, but clearly he did not act.

Mr. Lewis: It takes the young Grossman to act.

Mr. Grande: Suddenly, the last letter—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The older one might have too.

Mr. Lewis: Must be nice to be your father's son. I've never had that experience myself.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How do you like it? It's better to start over here though.

Mr. Grande: The last communication I had with the minister was on June 28, when he said—and he injected his own opinion, I suppose, rather than that of his officials: "It must be borne in mind legislation cannot be introduced to control every aspect of human life." I never asked him to introduce legislation to control every aspect of human life, Mr. Speaker. All I was asking him to do was address himself to a real problem that exists, and the minister continued to refuse. Now comes the new Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations—and I use the analogy of Humpty Dumpty who, once he had fallen, in order to set himself upright, introduces this kind of legislation and good for him. I hope, with the fears expressed on this side of the House that this legislation is legal, the minister has looked into it and he has assurances from the Attorney General the legislation is indeed legal.

Mr. Samis: Don't use him as a source.

Mr. Foulds: His record is not too good.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa East.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If he agrees with me, I'm in trouble.

Mr. Samis: That's right.

Mr. Roy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to make a few comments about this Bill 99, in support of the bill and in support of my colleague, the member for Sarnia, who made certain comments. I was interested as well in the comments made by the member for Beaches-Woodbine.

I've got to tell you, Mr. Speaker, as I see all this legislation coming in at this level and at the federal level, both the federal ministry and this ministry in charge of the protection of the consumer, there is a prime example of sometimes how the constitution, the Confederation, of this country doesn't work, the conflicts that exist and the total and absolute confusion for the poor citizen down there who can't understand the difference in jurisdiction from one level to another.

First of all, the minister's predecessor was probably right on the constitutionality of this type of legislation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am okay then.

Mr. Roy: And of course, for political reasons, a minister comes in and says, "I'm going to bring on new vim and vigour to the ministry. I'm going to bring something forward."

Mr. Lewis: Just trying to resuscitate the family name, that's all.

Mr. Roy: Yes. "We're going to bring something in and the way we're going to get around the constitutionality, because matters concerning interest are federal jurisdiction, we're not going to mention the word 'interest' in this bill and we're going to talk about"—as the minister does in this bill—"95 per cent of the amount without the word 'interest.'" I may be wrong, but I don't see the word interest mentioned at all in this legislation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Clever, eh? Clever.

Mr. Roy: I see some of the minister's officials there smiling and shaking their heads in agreement.

It's unfortunate we have to bring forward legislation in this fashion because there's no doubt in my mind this type of legislation dealing with this subject matter, especially when the whole sphere of activity we're trying to control is basically within the income tax field, is in federal jurisdiction. There's no doubt in my mind the legislation, which is necessary, and I think all of us can agree on this, should have emanated from the federal level. I really don't think there is any doubt about that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As always.

Mr. Roy: It's unfortunate the initiative was not taken at the federal level because then we would have a uniform law right across the country setting out and dealing directly and specifically with the problem instead of proceeding in the fashion we are. I don't want to be unduly critical of the people who were involved in the drafting of the legislation. They're trying to do their best basically in a bad situation. They're trying to draft a piece of legislation which will serve the purpose the minister has in mind without looking down the road and seeing their legislation challenged in the courts. That's basically what they're trying to do.

Often in the process we are coming forward with legislation which is more or less not acceptable. I shouldn't say not acceptable—confusing to the public. I suppose it can't be helped because, especially during the late 1960s and early 1970s, there was great competition on the part of various levels of government to move into the field. The municipal government was involved in this as well. In municipal elections promises were made to do certain things and municipalities brought forward bylaws. Then provincial government pressures were brought on, especially in the consumer field.

This ministry was created in 1967 and the federal ministry was created some time earlier. We have competing fields of jurisdiction moving in trying to solve a particular problem. Unfortunately, because of political pressures or because pressures are being felt more at one level than at the other, one level of jurisdiction moves in and sometimes or very often it's not the right level. We have confusion in that field. I have no reservations in saying it would have been a lot better if we'd had federal legislation right across the country dealing with the question of interest, which is the federal field and dealing with the question of income tax, which is basically the problem and which again is in the federal field.

I can only suggest that the new Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations seems like a very adaptable individual. He's one who is very flexible.

Mr. Samis: And ambitious.

Mr. Roy: The new federal Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, as they call it—heck, one has to be a lawyer just to be able to understand the right names in the ministries—Warren Allmand, should be a fellow with whom this minister can get along.

Mr. Samis: Let's see how long he lasts.

Mr. Roy: Get the act together to deal with the problem so that there are no conflicting jurisdictions. I can mention others. For instance, consumer protection legislation is questionable as well. There is also the question of the Combines Act dealing with advertising and trying to control the professions to some degree.

Another problem is that the consumer field is relatively high profile. Unfortunately, what has happened—and I can say this again without reservation—is at the federal level many promises have been made about specific legislation which was supposed to come forward to deal with a particular problem. They've had such a switch of ministries at the federal level and at the provincial level as well. This minister is probably the fourth or fifth since 1967 in that ministry.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Number eight.

Mr. Roy: He says he's number eight. One can see it's tough to get the act together, if during that same period of time at the federal level there were probably eight as well. It's very difficult to co-ordinate matters when we have changes in ministries. [4:15]

I can understand to some degree why the minister has to move in with this as other provinces have with their own legislation. I don't know of any cases where, in fact, their legislation has been challenged. I don't know if this legislation was patterned after that of any other province. For the consumer, and I am trying to speak here for the consumer, all levels of government should attempt to have something that is neat and cohesive, and represents their jurisdiction within their field. I hope in the future this will happen.

I understand the problems. I sit here in the opposition and I ask "Why don't you get your act together?" That's my job. I am here to point out these matters. I do so with a certain amount of frustration when I see competing fields of jurisdiction moving into one area and not moving into another area. The whole process is extremely confusing to the consumer.

Heck, if the members think it's confusing to the consumer, it's confusing even for the courts. It's confusing for the courts. The courts are saying they are overburdened with different cases and different pieces of legislation. I think some day the whole system will topple over. All those law books, all those statutes, all are going to fall on and hurt somebody. You know, the system is all going to come down. We are legislating ourselves into wild abandon. I just feel, unfortunately, it is because various levels of government are not prepared to accept their responsibility.

In the process of drafting this legislation, as has been pointed out by the member for Beaches-Woodbine, your section 4 is a section that leaves a lot to be desired. I say respectfully, and I don't want to be unduly critical again of the people who helped draft this legislation, it goes on to talk about what is an unreasonable charge. I would just like to ask the minister and possibly he could respond, how does one get any satisfaction if there has been an unreasonable charge? Is one charged under this section if their charge has been unreasonable? Is one charged under the section when he in fact charges more than 95 per cent? It is far from being clear how one proceeds.

I thought possibly the minister was going to correct this by way of regulation, but then again, let's not have too many regulations. That's the other field, Mr. Speaker, where we are being somewhat overburdened. Just all those big blue books we see in the province, all those regulations which we never hear about but which exist and which confuse the issue overburden us. I am not sure the minister can even go ahead with his regulations to say how one complains. Does he complain to the minister? Is that how he gets back what he considers to be an unreasonable charge?

I don't know whether it was open to the minister and whether his advisers told him maybe it might have been open for him to set out what a reasonable charge is. When you are talking about "consideration shall be given to the time spent" and "the complexity of the return" and all of this, I suppose we could have talked about a fee for service on the basis of hours, so much per hour. I don't know whether it was open to the minister.

What I am trying to say is if we are passing legislation we should attempt to try to make the role of the courts, or the people and the judge who is going to try to interpret this, as simple as possible. In other words, we shouldn't try to hide our intention behind certain words or ideas which aren't all that clear. I say to you, section 4 is not clear, first of all, as to how you apply it and how the taxpayer under that section is able to get any remedy.

The other section which I find helpful is the fact that every discounter must give notice. I say, okay, it's important that you put up a notice but frankly, I hope with this type of legislation there won't be any discounters around to put up any notices. If any of them can operate under this section, he's going to back off once he reads section 10, subsection 4, where the minister shifts the onus of proof. I could make a very emotional speech about the rights of the individual and the fact that under this section we are saying to a person, "It is going to be up to you to prove that you did not authorize, permit or acquiesce to this contravention." That is quite a heavy burden we are placing on an individual.

I don't have any particular sympathy for the people who are in that field. In fact, I can say with great satisfaction that because of the June 9 election I had the opportunity of moving one of these people out of his premises; I took it over for a headquarters, which is great.

Mr. Samis: Better than a body rub parlour in Vanier, Albert.

Mr. Foulds: They couldn't tell the difference, before and after.

Mr. Roy: That's right. Any time you want to be critical, just look at the percentages in Ottawa East. There was a change for the better in the riding of Ottawa East once their sign came down and mine went up.

Having made these few comments—and I do so with a certain amount of reservation about the process that I am observing—I think back to the comments of certain of our newly appointed chief judges in this province, who are saying to the Legislatures and to the federal Parliament and to the municipalities, "Please, you are sending enough legislation our way." Their job is tough enough, not in the sense that we don't have the right to do what we are doing, but somehow in this country if we could get all our acts together and have something that was more cohesive and within the respective field of jurisdiction, I think the person who would really benefit would be the consumer, who, in fact, we are trying to protect.

Mr. Samis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks on this bill. First of all, I must say I was interested and somewhat amused by the comments of my colleague from Ottawa East on the bill. He says we should place reliance on the federal authority for legislation of this sort. That is an authority, I think as we have just discussed, that has gone through umpteen consumer ministers—it's a cabinet post that has been relegated to the political limbo, I think, of Science and Technology, and is for recent washouts in the cabinet. It's a cabinet portfolio that can't even bring in a competition bill in this country. They have been trying for six years or so to bring in a competition bill, supposedly to regulate or at least control monopolies, cartels, and provide some degree of healthy competition in the economy. They can't do it. So there is no sense placing any reliance on them, because they obviously can't come across.

Mr. Roy: I didn't place reliance on them; I said they should have done it.

Mr. Samis: I wouldn't look to them either, whether it is reliance or looking to them.

Secondly, I must say I don't share the ambivalence or the legalese concern, I would classify it as, that the minister has for intervening in this area of the marketplace. There are certain times when the minister must intervene to protect the consumer, period, because the inherent nature of the operation is unacceptable, and this is one. I wholeheartedly support the intervention, not with the idea of having total control over the marketplace, not with the idea of wanting to regulate or strangulate every small entrepreneur, but to protect the rights of the consumer from unconscionable profits and exploitation.

I welcome the bill and I will support the bill wholeheartedly. I have mixed feelings about the timing of the bill. In my deeper, darker moments I would ascribe to the minister the anguish that he probably had to overcome from his coffee fiasco, the political credibility he had to restore brought this bill at a very opportune time for his ministry and, obviously, to suit his ambitions. Regardless of that, I am glad to support it and I hope this is an indication of things to come from the minister.

I recall reading his speech to the Better Business Bureau where I think he volunteered to summarize in one word his philosophy towards the ministry; he used the word "activist," which I would wholeheartedly welcome in contrast to his predecessor. Although I hope he doesn't conceive of activist as merely being a referee as he is described in a football game. I don't consider that to be very activist, but that's beyond the scope of this bill.

I welcome this bill because it represents such a drastic contrast to his predecessor who was an absolute laissez-faire Neanderthal when it came to the question of consumer rights. In fact, my colleague from Hamilton Centre gave me a copy of a letter that outlined some of the views of the former minister, and I will just read into the record one paragraph in reply to a query from my colleague.

He says, and I quote: "Despite the low volume of complaints, the unconscionably high discount and related 'tricks of the trade' are unacceptable to us." This sentence I would really emphasize: "In our view they ought to be prohibited and not merely regulated, even though some other provinces are attempting the regulatory approach. We doubt that the regulatory legislation will be of any practical value in Ontario's metropolitan areas." That is obviously the political epitaph of one Sidney Handleman, and one that we can do without, and one that none of us lament on this side.

I want to pay particular praise to the member for Hamilton East for his efforts in raising this in the Legislature. I would think that if he didn't make a public issue of it and if he didn't help to build up public pressure and focus on the injustice and the exploitation in this field, that we may never have had this bill in the first place. So I want to put on record my degree of recognition for the work done by the member for Hamilton East on behalf of the consumers, not only of his riding, but of the whole province.

It's the member for Hamilton Centre, I'm sorry. It's such a large party now, we have trouble remembering.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They can both send it out to their constituents.

Mr. Samis: My own personal attitude towards the actual business being affected by this legislation is that for a couple of years this was, I suspect, a problem essentially in the metropolitan areas of Toronto, Hamilton and some of the other larger cities.

But I noticed for example, in my own riding last year that we had the active burgeoning of one of these operations and I suspect if you went around Ontario to smaller, medium-sized, communities, these tax discounters have now wormed their way into virtually every community where they figure there is a profit.

My attitude is that these people are essentially exploiting the misery and weakness of some of our citizens and that frequently their profits are unconscionable. I hope when this bill is passed—and I would support speedy passage of the bill without any major delays—the consumers of Ontario will be informed of their rights.

I'll tell the minister one piece of legislation I thought was a fairly progressive piece of legislation by one of his many predecessors—the Business Practices Act, which did a lot to improve consumer affairs in this province. I dare say if you went outside this Legislature and stopped 100 people, Mr. Speaker, you would be lucky if you found two at the very most who had ever heard of it and one who even knew what his rights were under such legislation. And I would say that for this government, for this political party—that it is an extremely progressive piece of legislation. But what good is it if nobody knows what their rights are in the first place?

This is obviously not an Act that affects nearly as many people, but I would hope that the minister would take some initiative to publicize, for anyone who wants to continue dealing with the remaining discounters, what their rights are as a result of this bill. Because we can pass all the bills and all the laws we want, but if people don't know and realize and understand what their rights are, they will frequently be exploited and taken advantage of regardless.

So the tougher the minister gets with these birds the better it will be for all of society, and I would fully support the principle of the bill and its speedy passage and implementation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I don't think it would be very useful for the House—although it may be instructive for some of you—if I engaged in a long dissertation explaining and defending my predecessor. However, I think the remarks of the last speaker, the member for Cornwall, make a good point in referring to the very progressive Business Practices Act we have in this province, which, he neglected to say, was brought in and passed by my predecessor, the member for Carleton. That speaks volumes, it seems to me, about his contribution in the field of consumerism in Ontario.

Mr. Samis: It was the then member for Niagara Falls. It was John Clement.

Mr. Foulds: John Clement. Come on, get your ministers straight, Larry.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: With regard to the particulars of the Act before us, I think we should look at the circumstances surrounding last year's discussion. Of course, the Legislature didn't sit for very long last year—sorry, this current year, but the last tax year.

Mr. Samis: I wonder why.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think we came back at the end of March and we sat for a week or two, didn't we?

Mr. Foulds: You're the government.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This was the same period of time during which the letters were being exchanged between the members of the opposition and my predecessor. My predecessor was making some very good points at that time, points made by the member for Ottawa East this afternoon.

One of the differences, of course, is the fact that we have had some more time this year, since that exchange, to look at some different approaches which may alleviate or eliminate the constitutional difficulties that were foreseen last year.

We have, we think, come up with something that we didn't have last spring, and that was a bill which we believe will stand up constitutionally. That is a major difference. This government doesn't believe in passing pieces of legislation which can be clearly and willy-nilly overturned by the courts. Legislation of that sort is legislation which does nothing but clutter up the law books.

Now we have something we think will work. That is a big difference, and that opened the door for us to bring forward today's legislation. As well, much talk has gone on today about the Borrowers' and Depositors' Protection Act, the long promised Act by the federal government. I do want to say that it has become very clear, just in the middle of this year, what with the change in ministers and the obvious shift of that bill to the back burners at the federal level, that indeed we can't wait any longer, that indeed the Act isn't going to be coming forward. So when we find ourselves at the stage at which we have a bill we think will work and is constitutional, and where we see the federal government is still not moving into the field, the conclusion was arrived at that the government must bring in the legislation. I should point out it is substantially the same government as was in office last year, when a different conclusion was reached on the basis of the constitutional difficulties we faced at that time.

A lot of the points raised by some of the speakers today will more properly be dealt with in committee. I understand the member for Ottawa East and some others don't plan to be around later tonight for committee stage, so they wanted to deal with it clause by clause at this stage. However, I would like to make a couple of points.

The member for Hamilton Centre talks about the matter of discounting all other government cheques and why don't we move into that field. I would point out to him firstly that most of the other government cheques he is talking about are indeed immediately cashable. They are totally liquid. There is no reason to discount them. They can be taken to a bank and cashed for face value. You only run into this situation where you have a clearly defined, vested amount of money owed to you by government, and therefore it becomes a potential discount item. That isn't the case with most other government cheques.

Secondly, and in any event, section 1(c)(v) says that a refund means "the amount which an individual is entitled to receive as a grant or refund under an Act of Canada, Ontario, or any other province." So even if there were a market for these other governmental cheques, we think they are covered by this Act.

He also raised the matter of counselling. Our ministry, he suggests, should be more available for counselling people throughout the province. We are always anxious to move into areas where we feel more consumer counselling is required. While I will have another run-through at the availability of the various services available, I think I should point out that there are very many counselling services now available. Firstly, through the referees in the small claims courts throughout the province. Secondly, through the federal bankruptcy offices throughout the country. Thirdly, through the credit counselling branch of the Ministry of Community and Social Services which liaises with municipal welfare offices to provide these services.

That seems to me to be a fairly wide range of credit counselling facilities. I suspect, in fairness, they may face some of the problems that my ministry faces and which I face in a lot of consumer areas—that is, getting people who may require counselling to be aware of the service and to come forward and ask for it and utilize it.

However, I think it is fair. I will have a look-through and satisfy myself with regard to the availability of those services and just see what we can do to increase consumer protection in that specific area.

I can't leave the comments of the member for Hamilton Centre without saying I would have hoped that last year, when he exchanged communications with my predecessor, he would have been a little more restrained in his remarks. He commented that he thought "either a deliberate attempt has been made to mislead the member for Hamilton Centre, or your staff is ignorant of what is happening in the other provinces to such an extent that it suggests an unbelievable lack of competence."

I think any intelligent analysis of the constitutional problems surrounding legislation in this area would leave one, even one who is not a lawyer, open to understand that there are substantial matters of constitutional disagreement on this subject.

Mr. Swart: We only got it now because of pressure by the member for Hamilton Centre.

Mr. Makarchuk: There has been no change in the constitution.

Mr. Davison: He wasn't aware.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Look, I'll tell the hon. member opposite what has changed; we have had some more time to work on it in more detail and come up with a bill that approaches it a little differently.

Mr. Makarchuk: Because you didn't work on it in the first place.

Mr. Swart: We should have had the bill nine months ago.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Even today the hon. members have heard the member for Ottawa East, who I suppose is a lawyer of some repute—

Mr. Samis: And fallible too.

Mr. Foulds: Of what kind of repute?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —and there are plenty of other lawyers who still take the view today that there are constitutional difficulties. I don't happen to agree with them. I clearly don't agree with them; I wouldn't bring this forward if I did agree with them. But the fact is that there is a substantial body of opinion that says it is unconstitutional.

Mr. Davison: The fact is that it is in place in five provinces and has never been challenged.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The fact is that there is a legitimate and substantial disagreement on this subject in terms of its constitutionality.

Mr. Makarchuk: The fact is that you're hiding behind the constitutional skirt.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: For any particular person to suggest that a conclusion reached by any lawyer, on one side or the other—and I'll tell my friends opposite that I have a fairly substantial brief in front of me from a firm of solicitors, arguing at quite some length that the bill, as I and my staff have drawn it, is still unconstitutional.

My point is that I don't think it would be any more proper for the member for Hamilton East or anyone else to call that firm of lawyers incompetent or ignorant than it is to say the same of any of the lawyers who have reached the same conclusions as my staff and I have at this time.

Mr. Davison: I simply referred to their lack of awareness of legislation in the other provinces.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think members of this assembly ought to show a little bit more respect for those who are doing their best to provide legal opinions for the government and for the people of this province than to suggest, when the members of this assembly disagree with the conclusions they have drawn on difficult constitutional matters, that they are ignorant or incompetent.

Mr. Makarchuk: Probably both.

Mr. Foulds: Lack of knowledge is not necessarily a slur.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As to the question of power of attorney, which was raised by the member for Hamilton Centre. I want to say that if he knows of instances in which there was no date on the agreement and other matters were left out of the original documentation, then it may amount to a fraud; it may be a crime—and appropriate remedies are there—or in fact, if there is any defacing on the face of the document, anything that indicates that it is irregular, then indeed the bank which is being asked to cash the cheque pursuant to the power of attorney would not and should not be cashing that cheque pursuant to the power of attorney. Those instances, one at a time or individually, should be dealt with either through the criminal courts or by the people accepting those cheques.

One would think that that particular abuse, which is open not only in this area of course but everyone who has power of attorney, isn't really that wide. I might say that I certainly don't defend people who take it for a longer period of time as in the case cited by the member for Hamilton Centre—some 22 months—but the fact is that if the power of attorney refers to the specific refund coming at that time for the return filed in March 1977, then presumably the power of attorney would affect the refund coming for that particular year—

Mr. Davison: That is not the case.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —because, in fact, the cheque would not come from the federal government for the following tax year, the one we are coming to, unless the person had gone back and signed a new direction to the income tax department to send the 1978 cheque back to the same tax discounter, at which time the tax discounter could use the same power of attorney.

My point is that they can sign it for as long as they want. It is only useful for the particular purpose outlined on the face of the power of attorney. If a cheque comes in to him that he can use in that fashion, if the member's constituent doesn't want to use the service again, even if we didn't succeed in getting this legislation into place, or if the tax discounter stays in business, then the constituent simply need not direct that the cheque go to that discounter, in which case the power of attorney will be useless in the hands of the discounter.

I should correct the record. In no way, as the House can tell, do I have any sympathy for the tax discounters. The member for Beaches-Woodbine however suggests that 50 per cent of all the money coming out last year from the federal government was sheer profit. In fact, all the information we have is that the average discount was 40 per cent; therefore even if it all was clear profit the maximum would be 40 per cent. But I would hope that she'd get the figures in order so that there wouldn't be any misunderstanding about the extent of the problem and the lengths we're going to correct it.

The member for Beaches-Woodbine also made some comments with regard to section 4, and I would invite her to pursue that with me in committee at a later time. That member and one or two other members referred us to the approach of licensing. That's an approach which, I have made quite clear, I shy away from—in this and other fields. Licensing brings with it a lot of government bureaucracy. In the end result we would have more people on the public payroll. I'm not sure it would be any more effective; in most cases I think it would be less effective.

Indeed the consumer would be out on the streets looking for people who had been licensed and therefore had some sort of apparent certificate from government to carry on business, which may give them more authenticity. The average person walking down the street, wondering whether he should take this step, would find the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations had indeed issued a licence to the tax discounter. That gives me severe problems and it is something I don't want to do, quite frankly.

Even if we have that sort of licensing legislation in place, sooner or later we would have to flesh that in by saying, "This is what you can do, you people who have registered with us pursuant to our new Act, and this is what you can't do." We're going to have to end up coming back here and setting out the types of rules and regulations we're setting out here today.

If the response we hear from the streets is any indication, the problem will be entirely resolved when this Act passes, in that they'll go out of business to a large extent. Those that stay in business will not constitute any sort of a public menace, in my opinion, thus obviating the need for any licensing or registration scheme.

The member for Ottawa East has raised a very legitimate point—that is, that various levels of government are moving into the same area and enacting certain pieces of legislation which sooner or later overlap. He was suggesting that perhaps there is potential for duplication—too many laws and so on. We share that concern. That's a very real concern. I should mention to the members present that I will be discussing this very matter with the federal minister at some stage over the next few months. I think it's an important concern.

If the federal Act had been in place we wouldn't be bringing this one on. If the federal Act does show up sooner or later and is sufficiently tough, as ours is, then we would come back to this assembly and ask for the repeal of this legislation. I for one do not want to have legislation standing on the books in the name of my ministry which is not needed and is no longer exercised. I don't plan to have any legislation with reams of regulations, also referred to by the member for Ottawa East, which is not used or enforced. The House may have my assurance that I'll be pursuing some of those concerns outlined by the member for Ottawa East this afternoon.

Finally, I should refer the members to what I think is a key part of our Act. That is the fact that we have built into this legislation something that I will be looking at more and more as time goes on, and that is the right of the courts to order restitution in the event of a prosecution. I think that's very important. It's in section 10(2) and that sort of thing, it seems to me, is one of the keystones of good consumer legislation where practical. We'll be looking at all pieces of legislation in this way. We think that's a very important highlight of this piece and I would hope the members would especially agree with us on that section.

[4:45]

I appreciate some of the comments made by the members today in this debate. The Act does conform to my ministry's general desire to deal with consumer matters and shift a little bit to make sure our emphasis in consumer matters is taking in that area of consumers most in need of protection and yet often the least capable of acquiring legal assistance because of financial problems to solve their problems on their own. We hope to protect those who are less well off, those who are sometimes a little more desperate for money than one would expect. We are going to make sure our legislation, whether it deals with tax discounters or whether it deals with products, is pointed towards that particular group so that those people who can least afford to protect themselves and are least able to protect themselves are protected by this government.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS ACT

Mr. Ashe, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McKeough, moved second reading of Bill 98, An Act to revise the Municipal Elections Act, 1972.

Mr. Ashe: I'll be very brief in my remarks on Bill 98 at this stage. This bill embodies the further recommendations of the joint election committee of the Association of Municipalities of Ontario and the Association of Municipal Clerks and Treasurers of Ontario for amendments to municipal election procedures, as well as the recommendations of approximately 200 municipalities responding to Bill 49, the predecessor bill, over the summer and into the fall.

Many changes and new proposals have been incorporated in this new bill. The most significant is the change in the municipal election date to the second Monday in November with the December 1 commencement date for municipal councils. With the assistance of the joint election committee, we have been able to adapt the election process to the earlier date without any deleterious effect on essential procedures. We believe this time change is the earliest possible within the constraints posed by these procedures.

Two innovations in the bill include an amendment to dispose of the use of a poll book at municipal elections. A less time-consuming process has been devised which will be particularly beneficial where vote recorders or voting machines are being used. Secondly, the requirement that the preliminary lists be posted in each polling subdivision has been replaced by the provision that at least two copies of the complete preliminary list will be posted in conspicuous public places in the municipality.

A further amendment I'd like to mention deals with handicapped electors. The legislation has been amended to permit any handicapped elector to have a friend assist him in voting. Also the language of these sections has been modernized. Several other changes are procedural adjustments designed to complement the change in the election date.

The remaining changes depart from proposals in Bill 49 and return to the existing provisions in the Municipal Elections Act. The latter reflect strong municipal opinion favouring some of the existing procedures regarding such matters as the polling hours, advanced polls and recount procedures. As we get into further clause-by-clause discussion, I'll be referring more specifically to those last few items.

I am confident that the bill now before the Legislature represents to the greatest possible extent the consensus on appropriate and workable municipal election procedures.

Mr. Epp: I rise to speak to Bill 98, formerly known as Bill 49, which is an Act to revise the Municipal Elections Act, 1972. The amendments proposed are significant because they help clear up problems evidenced for some years now, particularly in most recent years, with respect to municipal elections.

These are problems which municipalities encountered throughout the province of Ontario and for which they ask clarification. Maybe it's just as well in the case of Bill 98, the government did consult with municipalities, particularly the Association of Municipalities of Ontario and the Association of Municipal Clerks and Treasurers of Ontario which jointly presented briefs to the government with many recommendations, of which a number have been accepted.

We commend this change in posture considering the lack of consultation the province had with the Edmonton commitment, and the fact now, with Bill 98, they have had a considerable amount of consultation. We also commend the new direction the government is taking with respect to consulting with municipalities.

We know the government didn't honour the Edmonton commitment when it announced its transfer payments for 1978. This change is welcomed by this side of the House.

I'm optimistic the government will benefit, and indeed, everyone in Ontario will benefit by this new consultation procedure. Let me say my party will support this bill in principle. We believe it has merit. We believe it is a step in the right direction and we believe the government of today has tried to deal with some of the problems municipalities so well articulated and drew to the attention of the government, particularly to the members on the other side of the House.

I also want to express my thanks, at this time, to the members of the Association of Municipalities of Ontario and the Association of Municipal Clerks and Treasurers of Ontario. This group met jointly on numerous occasions and gave a number of the recommendations to the government. In addition to that, the parliamentary assistant has mentioned over 200 or so briefs were presented to the government, representations made from municipalities. I believe this input is going to be reflected in the kind of bill that comes out after its debate in this House.

There are a number of other items to which I want to speak this time. We believe the election date should be moved ahead as has been indicated. We feel the government is moving in the right direction by having the second Monday in November as the election date.

Mr. Foulds: It's still not early enough.

Mr. Epp: Unfortunately, the technical aspects of preparing for the election date are such they can't move further ahead at this time. However, we welcome a change in the election date to an earlier date if this can be proved workable.

I think particularly now of 1974 when we had a snowstorm in Windsor and the election date was the first Monday in December. They had numerous problems which they had difficulty overcoming—

Mr. Foulds: My heart bleeds.

Mr. Epp: —and there was great consternation at that time with the inability of the municipal officials—

Mr. Foulds: We had a blizzard in Thunder Bay last Thursday.

Mr. Epp: —to deal with that kind of situation. I also welcome the emergency powers designed to be given to the clerks of the various municipalities so they can deal more adequately with and during an emergency situation.

There are a number of other items in this bill. I don't want to speak to all of them because we're going to have an opportunity to speak during the clause by clause discussion. However, I want to say of one of the amendments that is going to be introduced with respect to the three consecutive hours for voting, I believe this is a welcome change because in both the federal and provincial elections people have a chance to have time off from their jobs for at least three consecutive hours. I believe if we are to encourage the people of this province to vote in municipal elections, then this should have also been included in this Act. I regret that it wasn't. My party will support that amendment when it comes forward.

Another item that's going to be discussed and at which we are going to be looking very closely, is voting hours. I know that a number of municipalities would like to see longer hours afforded to the voters. There are other municipalities that would like to keep the hours from 11 a.m. until 8 p.m. We will indicate our support for one of these measures later on in the debate.

We will support Bill 98 in principle. We will, however, introduce one amendment which we believe is essential for the sake of fairness and equality. We hope to get the support from both sides of the House on this amendment. I am, of course, alluding to sections 12 and 13 of the proposed bill. There are no other countries in the world that give preferential citizenship to certain immigrants when they come into the country. We believe this assembly should be consistent with that kind of outlook. As you know, the federal government has enacted certain changes in its legislation to accommodate Canadian citizenship as the only criterion for voting in a federal election. We believe this is the proper attitude to take.

That's all I want to say at this time except that we keep our options open on discussions of the various clauses when they are discussed in the committee of the whole.

Mr. Swart: We in this party think this bill is an extremely important bill, or it ought to be an important bill. It's a very major piece of legislation. We attach real significance to it. I don't share all the views of the member for Waterloo North in the consultation the government had relative to this bill. I will go into that a little more fully in a few minutes.

At this time I must say that although we consider this bill a very important piece of legislation it doesn't appear to be true of the Treasurer of this province. For over two years, he has never appeared in this House when a municipal bill was before this House. I suggest that if this bill doesn't warrant his appearance what municipal bill could?

Mr. Warner: Where is the Treasurer? Where is he hiding?

Mr. Swart: This is no reflection on the member for Durham West. I just think maybe it should be that if a Treasurer can't be bothered—

Mr. Warner: Just covering in the corner.

Mr. Swart: —dealing with municipal matters, then perhaps the government should have a Minister of Municipal Affairs. Surely, Mr. Speaker, if there is any place that the Treasurer should be, the most important place where municipal matters can possibly be discussed is in this House. Yet he is never here.

This is a whole new Act with some 127 sections that we have before us. It takes up some 63 pages and it is the first major change in the Municipal Elections Act since 1972. In addition, the Treasurer had, or could have had, the assistance of a very able municipal group, the Association of Municipalities of Ontario and the Association of Municipal Clerks and Treasurers of this province, which was re-established in June, 1976, really for the very purpose of this bill. He had, or could have had, excellent advice on it.

[5:00]

I say at the outset that this bill fails as a bill of real reform because of three things. Firstly, the Treasurer, because of his economic views, couldn't break with the outmoded policies and procedures of the past. He is firmly rooted in the past of 30 or 40 years ago; if he had not been, there could have been very substantial changes made in this bill.

Let me read into the record what the editor of Municipal World had to say a year ago on the subject of municipal election reform in this province. I think everyone in this House recognizes that Michael Smither, the editor of Municipal World, is at least as competent as any other person in this province on municipal matters. He said this:

"To understand the delay in reaching a solution to the procedural problems of a date change it is necessary to first recognize the existence of a historical philosophy developed in the earliest election procedures in this province and continued in the latest statute enacted in 1972. Simply stated it is a projection of the orderly manner of conducting life in an agrarian society with its sow, grow, reap methodology, which requires each step in a procedure to be fully completed before commencing with the next step.

"The second major obstacle"—I am still quoting from this article from Municipal World, September, 1976—"to be overcome is the apparent continuance in the new legislation of the village pump technique of communication, long since disregarded by the public generally, yet still adhered to lovingly by draftsmen of municipal legislation. However, if these sacred cows of municipal legislation are consigned to the Queen's Park legislative abattoir then an opportunity arises to approach the problem from a totally different perspective. The procedures can then be examined with the realization, first, each step in the procedural process does not necessarily have to be completed before the next one is commenced; and, secondly, by making full use of modern communication techniques steps of questionable value can be eliminated."

I suggest that in the amendments that we will be putting forth, we are endeavouring to assign those sacred cows to the Queen's Park abattoir. I say to you the minister still puts his faith in those sacred cows.

I also want to say that the minister cannot break either with his deep-seated view that municipal government, and thus municipal elections, are not nearly as important as provincial or federal. He may pay lip service to the theory that municipalities are equal partners, but he has never, ever, shown in his actions that they are.

This shows up in a number of ways. For instance, today it has already been mentioned by the member for Waterloo North the minister has never bothered incorporating into legislation a clause which would require that a person voting in a municipal election should have time off. He proposes in this legislation, as has been the case in the past, that the hours for voting in a municipal election shall be shorter than in the provincial or federal elections. He has held them all these years at the time of the year you wouldn't normally hold provincial or federal elections. Of course, there is no election expenses Act or disclosure Act, as is the case both provincially and federally.

Certainly to him, municipalities and municipal elections rate second to those of the province and of the federal government.

The member for Waterloo North stated he's glad to see the change in posture and the consultation of the government with the municipalities. I suggest to him that if he examines the facts of the situation, including those leading up to Bill 98 and Bill 49 he would find any greater degree of consultation and faith with the municipalities is largely a myth.

In fact, the lack of consultation and the action of the Treasurer of this province was almost insulting in the procedures leading up to this bill.

I have a statement before me which was given by the Treasurer of Ontario on April 15, 1977. I won't read it all, but it says: "At the PMLC meeting on March 11, I indicated that cabinet would be considering a paper outlining some of the major issues concerning a rewriting of all or part of the Municipal Elections Act. Cabinet has now concluded its discussion and consideration on some of these major issues and I am now able to report to you cabinet's decisions on the following proposals: Election date—"

They intend to change it from the first Monday of December to the third Monday of November. They talk about the mandatory second advanced poll. The provisions with regard to when the newly elected councils take office, was to remain the same. One item after another pertaining to the forthcoming Municipal Elections Act had been determined.

The significance of this, Mr. Speaker, is this document was released on April 15, but the report of AMO-AMCTO, the committee which was set up to study and make recommendations to the government, was not released until some time in July. Before that committee had a chance to finish its deliberations, the Minister of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs brought in a white paper to state what was going to be done with regard to municipal elections. I say that isn't exactly playing the game with the municipalities in this province.

Let me read what they said in that report pertaining to this. This is the report which is dated July 1977, "Final Municipal Elections Report," prepared by a joint AMO-AMCTO committee on municipal elections. I might point out there was no preliminary report to this one either which he could have based his decision on, although I will say, of course, there were members of TEIGA on that particular committee and therefore he had an idea of what was going on.

But this is what it said, and I'm quoting from this committee report: "Before the committee could present its recommendation, however, the Hon. W. D. McKeough announced the following proposal to the April 15, 1977, meeting of PMLC."

Then it gives a table with all of the dates for all of the procedures that are going to take place in the municipal elections for next year. Then right under that table—this I quote again from this report: "The joint committee feels it is unfortunate that the ministry did not wait as had been previously indicated for the recommendations of the committee before announcing the above time table." Shades, I say, of the breaking of the Edmonton commitment and breaking faith once again with the municipalities. I have here the document called "Background" for September 1977. Let me quote from that about the feeling of this committee. It says that Ellen Kerr, a chairman of this committee, which was investigating the Municipal Elections Act and was to make reports, "expressed disappointment about the proposed change in election date; that the announcement was made prior to the ministry receiving the committee's report and was disappointed, too, by the lack of consultation with regard to Bill 49."

She advised that AMO would be submitting a further report on the terms of office. Mrs. Kerr highlighted the major points of AMO-AMCTO report and noted that the committee had considered the following item, but had not made recommendations.

In case there is any doubt left in anybody's mind about this consultative process, let me quote once again from the response of the joint AMO-AMCTO committee on municipal elections to Bill 49, an Act respecting Municipal Elections. This is dated August 1977 and contains this comment: "The committee is concerned, however, that the provincial government did not consult with the committee prior to the introduction of the bill."

That is a statement from the committee that was appointed to consider the Municipal Elections Act. You know why this was done? I am sure the members on this side of the House know why the Treasurer released his statement on April 15. It was because two weeks later they were going to announce an election and he wanted to show the people of this province, particularly municipal people, that he was going to do something in this field—at least, led them to believe so. He was willing to upstage the committee and bring in a report, subsequently a bill, without having the advice of the committee which was a major committee in this province to deal with the matter of municipal elections.

I say that is a shameful way to treat the municipalities and their organizations in this province. The facts are, of course, that that committee was composed largely of staff people in the municipalities. Once he had presented them with a fait accompli, their main objective then was somehow or other to make this work rather than openly explore other avenues and that is one of the reasons that we have an insufficient bill before this House today.

The improvements that appear in Bill 98 over Bill 49 were made only after the Treasurer was badgered by AMO and the PMLC; this is all on record. Bill 49 took a number of backward steps. They have moved back to the position where the clerk had to make the casting vote in case of a tie in an election. In 1972 they decided it was good policy and the municipal people agreed with him that it should be done by law, but they moved backwards in Bill 49. In Bill 49, they increased the lame duck period of council between election time and the time that they assumed office.

They had a provision there where the poll clerk had to be moved up to be the DRO, if for any reason the DRO could not act on election day. After badgering by the municipal associations, they changed some of these provisions in Bill 98 which we have before us.

The Treasurer even admits in one crucial area in his speech to AMO last August 23:

"Since the change in the municipal election date to the third Monday of November was announced, I've been getting two clear messages from individuals and municipalities alike. Either a change of two to three weeks is not enough, or there should be no change in the election date because it increases the lame duck period between election day and the time at which a newly elected council assumes office." If he hadn't proceeded without the advice of the AMO-AMCTO committee, he wouldn't have found himself in that kind of position.

We are going to support Bill 98 on second reading, firstly because it does make some small measure of improvement in some areas. But more important, because we want to get it to committee stage where we may hope to make some major reforms. I say here very sincerely, very frankly, it is our hope the government and the official opposition will give thoughtful consideration to our proposals.

We believe any new Municipal Elections Act should accomplish three things in principle. It should maximize the opportunity of everyone to vote. It should maximize the opportunity for persons to be candidates, to campaign, to have a quality of opportunity of election. And it should maximize the efficiency in elections; and the timing of the election and assumption of office should optimize the functioning of council. I doubt if anybody would disagree with those principles, but I ask all members of this House to consider the amendments that come before this House in light of those three principles.

For instance, if we want to maximize the opportunity to vote, we have it at a time of the year when the weather is reasonably good. It's easy to say people should go out and vote in the cold weather. They're not as apt to. Not quite as many will go out if the weather is bad than if it's good. Certainly in the middle of October the weather is much better than it is in the middle of November or in the first part of December.

We maximize the opportunity of getting people to vote if we make it easy for them to get on the voter's list. Again having hours and procedures on election day which accommodate the voters to the maximum degree maximizes the opportunity to vote. I believe the two-year term being continued, which we will support in the bill, again gives a greater accountability to the public and therefore is beneficial in the democratic system. Certainly we maximize the opportunity of people to vote if they have time off, by law, to exercise their franchise, and we will be proposing these kinds of things.

We maximize the opportunity for persons to be candidates and to campaign and to have equality of opportunity of election where we have nomination procedures which make it easy for them to become a candidate. It's why we oppose, and I think it's true perhaps of all parties in this House, the deposit system, where people have to put up $100 or $200 or whatever the case might be.

The time of year again affects the campaign and earlier in the year, in October, is a much better time to campaign than later.

I'm sure many people in this House have had some experience in campaigning in bad weather. You knock on the door. Somebody opens the door. It's cold there, it's just opened a crack and they make it very clear they don't want you to stand there letting in that cold, damp air. So it is much easier to campaign in the good weather.

The length of the campaign also has a bearing and we think the three weeks proposed by the government and carried on is a reasonable length of time. We also say with very real force there should be a limitation on expenses and there should be disclosure, if there's going to be any form of equality between candidates, even candidates with equal merit, if they are going to have some equal chance of being elected.

We suggest the maximum efficiency in elections, in the timing of elections and the acceptance of office, can be accomplished by the 45-day election period which is much better than the 63 to 70 days as proposed by the government.

Assuming office quickly after the election and well prior to the project planning and budgetary rush of January, February and March, will help toward the efficient operation of local government.

So, in all, we say our amendments will maximize opportunities to vote, for persons to be candidates, and maximize the efficiency of municipal operation as far as voting time and procedures can go in that area.

We therefore ask for very serious consideration of our proposals, particularly, and I say this to our friends on the right, because we've got a whole bill before us now, not just an amending bill, and we may not have this opportunity again for two or three or five or even 10 years. We should grasp the opportunity to make the major beneficial changes we can at the present time. By judiciously mixing the procedures of the old Municipal Act and the provincial Election Act we can make vast improvements over and above what we have in Bill 98 before us now.

I want to deal in general terms with some of the particular proposals which are necessary to carry out the foregoing principles. I think everyone would agree the election date is central to reform. A close second is the early assumption of office. As was mentioned by the member for Waterloo North, this bill is probably before us because of the storm on election day and the day previous to election in December 1974. That provided the incentive for the government and for the municipal organizations to start examining election dates and other election procedures. I think I can rightly say there is as yet, no consensus as to what the election date should be but our examination, and it has been done in some depth, indicates, firstly, Thursday is the best day of the week; secondly, mid-October is the best time of the year; thirdly, council should assume office on November 1; and fourthly, the fiscal year should remain as it is, from January 1 to December 31.

Let me deal briefly with why we think Thursday is the best election day. First of all, it conforms to the provincial date of the election. I want to point out that there was a committee that sat in this House which made recommendations on the provincial Election Act and they picked Thursday. If you look at the reasons for picking Thursday, they are as valid for municipal elections as they are for provincial elections.

They said: "Days on the weekend are not advisable because many people go away and, more and more, Monday is also becoming part of a long weekend for too many people. Therefore, they should stay away from the weekends."

I won't go into all of the reasons but they recommended Thursday. By law now, provincial elections must be held on Thursday. Not just for the purposes of conformity but because of the sound reasons that determine that date for provincial elections, we think that municipal elections should also be held on a Thursday.

It gives working days for both election officials and candidates immediately prior to election date. At present you have two dead days, Saturday and Sunday, before Monday's election day. If a candidate wants to get in touch with the clerk or an election official, they can't do so. There are always things that come up and as a person who has participated in 16 municipal elections, or something of that nature, I can tell you that it always happens. On Thursday you have the opportunity of dates prior to that to iron out any problems, get any information that may be required for the efficient conduct of the election.

I've already mentioned that it gets away from Monday. That's not just because sometimes it's a long weekend but also because sometimes Monday is a holiday. Inevitably, election day under the procedures in Bill 98 will fall on Armistice Day, and I'm sure the members would agree that will happen that the second Monday in November is someday going to be Armistice Day. Then you have to move that date, with all the confusion that it entails. If the government makes it Thursday it does not have to shift that day around to other days. So, for these reasons, we suggest that Thursday is the best day of the week for an election. I would just point out to my colleagues on the other side this was also determined by the Conservative government of this province, when they were dealing with the matter of provincial elections.

We have also looked very closely at election procedures, and the desirable time of the year to hold the municipal elections. We have decided it should be 45 days after Labour Day. Some members may note that this is slightly different to the press release which I put out early this fall, which called for the election day to be on the Thursday following the second Monday. There are three reasons why I changed that very slightly.

First, it gives a better opportunity for university students and others in post-secondary education to get on the normal voters' list enabling them to vote in the municipal elections.

Second, it gets away from some of the procedures which otherwise would have fallen on Thanksgiving Day.

Third, and most important, it gives a uniform time from the period when the procedures start, which is Labour Day, to election day. It gives a constant 45 days to set up procedures, which can be followed consistently from one year to the next. The proposals in Bill 98, of course, will cause a variation of 63 to 70 days and they cannot follow from one year to the next with the same consistency that you could if it were a regular period of time.

[5:30]

The middle of October is a good time of the year first of all, because weather-wise it will not inhibit the election. I suggest this is important, particularly to the northern municipalities in this province. The members may say there's not much difference in southern Ontario between the second Monday in November and October 16 to 22. Those of them who have had some experience in the north, and I haven't had as much as many of my colleagues here, will know that by the second Monday in November we can have pretty bitter weather that can inhibit the turnout of people at an election.

Mr. Roy: Speak for your area. In Ottawa, it is always nice. It is just like Camelot.

Mr. Foulds: But chances are better there.

Mr. Swart: It's rather significant that the provincial government, the government of this province, in the last 50 years has only called one election which was later than the end of October. Only one election and that was on November 22.

Mr. Ruston: Last week you wanted one December 24.

Mr. Warner: That was a matter of principle.

Mr. Swart: So there is some realization among the government itself that November and December are not good election months.

Mr. Haggerty: Tell us the date, Mel.

Mr. Swart: It should also be noted that among the other provinces in this nation, four of them have October dates, and six of them are October or earlier. Those four which have the October dates are Alberta, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia. Once again one can say in those three western provinces the weather gets pretty rotten in November and December. So it does in northern Ontario.

Mr. Roy: No, not at all.

Mr. Swart: We should give the same consideration to our northerners as the people of Manitoba and Saskatchewan and Alberta give to their residents in easing their getting to the polls on election day.

Mr. Foulds: Right on. Very sensible comment.

Mr. Swart: Secondly, by providing that election day—

Mr. Roy: And finally? No?

Mr. Swart: —shall be held in October, again I point out, that will be between October 16 and 22, it gives the opportunity for a new council to get budget and project preparation done ahead of the fiscal year. As a person who has spent some 21 years on municipal council, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Roy: Who is that?

Mr. Haggerty: That is too long.

Mr. Pope: Resign.

Mr. Ruston: I think you should have stayed there, personally.

Mr. Swart: —I am conscious of the value of that early planning both for projects and for budgets. But, Mr. Speaker you don't need to take my word for it. This year there was tabled—

Mr. Ruston: Tried to get out of there.

Mr. Swart: —a report of the royal commission on Metropolitan Toronto. Everyone knows who the commissioner there was, the former Premier of this province.

Mr. Havrot: Great man.

Mr. Swart: Let me quote what he says on this item: "The planning of the major expenditure programs of local public bodies begins well in advance of the beginning of the fiscal year. Ongoing expenditure programs continue, regardless of fiscal years or election dates, in municipalities the same way continuity prevails at federal and provincial levels during elections.

"In the present situation, it's typical for budget discussions to continue into the new fiscal year and final mill rates are often not struck until May. As a result, the flexibility of councils in setting budgets is reduced because nearly half the money is spent before final budget allocations can be made.

"Provincial grant levels are a major element in this uncertainty because they have usually been announced in the provincial budget in April, four months into the municipal fiscal year. Early announcement of provincial grant levels relieved this problem in 1976 for 1977. But with the present municipal election date, date of assumption of office, and fiscal year end, it is inevitable that budgets and mill rates will not be established until well into the fiscal year that follows an election."

Mr. Haggerty: What good is an October election, Mel?

Mr. Swart: It gives the opportunity of taking office on the first of November.

Mr. Havrot: Now that answered that question.

Mr. Pope: What about the enumerators?

Mr. Swart: "If the election date is changed to a time earlier in the autumn, the opportunity will exist to improve the capability of councils and school boards to make an earlier start on their budgets than is now possible in election years. This could be accomplished by changing the date of the assumption of office to two weeks after the new election date and leaving the fiscal year unchanged. Thus the elected representatives could be in office planning and budgeting for at least two months before the beginning of the fiscal year."

And recommendation 53 states: "The date for municipal elections in Metropolitan Toronto be advanced to the second week of October with councils assuming office exactly two weeks later, the municipal fiscal year to remain unchanged." I suggest that is very similar to what this party is proposing in the amendments which will come up some time this evening.

If we think that recommendation made by the former Premier of this province is an aberration then let me read the recommendation made by a former controller in the city of Toronto, Mr. William Archer, who did the report on the Niagara region. He says this: "There are more valid reasons than the weather, the proximity to the holidays and the separation of political advertisements from the pre-Christmas sale ads, for changing the election date. The commission recommends that the municipal election date should be changed to the first Thursday after the second Monday in October. The newly-elected council would take office on November 1 and hold its first council meeting in the subsequent week.

"The November 1 date for the new council to assume its responsibilities was selected to give this new council an opportunity to meet with the staff; form its committees; and begin the detailed preparation and examination of the financial budget and allocations for the following fiscal year.

"An additional advantage of having councils begin their terms on November 1 involves the regional councils." And there is some significance in what he says here. "The important position of regional chairman would be determined by mid-November, not by mid-January. In mid-January 1977 three regional chairmen in Ontario were elected for the first time, necessitating other changes in the composition of the councils.

"The new council would thus be able to give the approvals for financing and the physical work to be undertaken during the following year and get the paperwork cleared away in time to take full advantage of good weather in the spring. This would achieve more benefit than a longer term of office."

He says: "In Canada construction work is normally planned to start in the spring and to finish before the snow flies in the fall. In off-election years most of the budget work and planning is now done in November-December in order to get construction work started as soon as possible in the spring. Following an election, an earlier budget start would be a great advantage. Advance financial planning could be done every year."

I won't read the members the rest of it pertaining to that, except that he concludes by saying: "The whole object of the program recommended here is to facilitate the election process to make it easier for people to vote and to allow the new council to get down to real work as soon as possible after it is elected.

At least two months are necessary to plan adequately for new programs in the new fiscal year."

I suggest that the comments in both of those studies make very eminent sense.

Mr. Bradley: But not in other areas, do you agree?

Mr. Swart: It may come as a surprise to the member for St. Catharines and the member for Erie, but both of them live in regional Niagara.

Mr. Haggerty: You know what happened when you listened to Professor Mayo on regional government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Roy: Let him finish.

Mr. Havrot: Be nice now. If you can't say anything nice, be quiet.

Mr. Swart: Even the Treasurer has intimated all along that he would like to see an earlier date; that he is pushing for an earlier time.

Mr. Foulds: Where is the minister?

Mr. Swart: I am rather interested in the comments made by the parliamentary assistant to the Treasurer in his brief introductory remarks, and I would just like to quote almost identical ones from the Treasurer: "We have been able to adapt the election process to the earlier date without any deleterious effect on essential procedures. At this time, we believe this change is the earliest possible within the constraints posed by these procedures."

We don't simply accept that, and perhaps we can even go back a few years to prove that that statement really didn't stand up. Back in 1972, when the Municipal Elections Act was being discussed at that time, my colleague from Ottawa Centre made a specific recommendation that the election date should be moved ahead substantially.

At that time Mr. Arthur Meen said this—and I'm just giving his concluding remarks: "If you add up all these periods of time"—for the various procedures leading up to election day—"plus a time for advance poll, you wind up with the first Monday of December as the first practical time. So, if we do the enumeration, beginning in September, the only way in which we will be able to advance the date of polling, the actual election date, to a date earlier than the first Monday in December, say, for example, the first Monday in November, would be to start the enumeration process one month earlier." Then he goes on to talk about disadvantages of doing the enumeration in the summertime.

I just say to my colleagues across the House that if this statement was taken for gospel at that time, and we find out now that it is fundamentally wrong, how can we not be equally sure that the statement he makes here is just as wrong as this statement was back in 1972? The facts are that it is. The election date can be moved ahead, and fairly easily.

I would also like to read what the joint committee on the Municipal Elections Act had to say about this in the report which was tabled in July. They say this: "The joint committee agreed that October has often been referred to as a preferable month in which to hold municipal elections but has, however, realized that there are timing problems which make November elections more practical . . . The committee was agreed that the solution to these problems may be found if either the timing or method of enumerating were altered." That's exactly what we intend to do in our amendments.

I have already mentioned that we feel that a uniform time for the procedures to be carried out is preferable to the 63 to 70 days as is proposed by the Treasurer in Bill 98.

I should also point out that if we are concerned about keeping the interest of the electorate, and thus having them vote on election day, that a shorter election period does command greater interest. It is now so long between the time of enumeration, the time the candidates are nominated and the time they're elected, that the people forget there's an election on. A shorter, snappier election certainly commands more interest. In the period we propose there is, of course, a much better period of campaigning for the candidates.

For all of these reasons we think the mid-October date for local elections, with assumption of office on November 1, is far superior to the second Monday in November as election day. It will certainly better meet the principles which I have outlined.

In fact there's considerable support from municipalities for this mid-October date. They've been presented with a fait accompli by the government of this province. But if they had the opportunity to freely pass an opinion on the basis that elections were possible in mid-October, I suggest the majority of them would opt for October.

[5:45]

Many members will know that I sent out a letter and a press release about the New Democratic position on this matter. I got back a great number of letters, the majority of them in favour of the proposal. I am not suggesting for one moment this is a majority of municipalities in Ontario but the majority of the letters which I received, an amount of 30 to 40, did favour this proposal.

Let me read one or two. From the township of King: "Please find enclosed a copy of the resolution R13477." I want to read the rest of that letter. "The council of the township of King does hereby support the proposal of the New Democratic Party for the municipal election date to be on the Thursday following the second Monday in October." A copy of this resolution was sent to the Premier and the Treasurer of Ontario.

From the corporation of the town of Oakville: "We would advise that Oakville town council on October 3 endorsed the proposal contained in your circulated letter of September 20 dealing with the subject under reference," which was the municipal election day.

From the town of Caledon: "Further to your directive of September 20, 1977, regarding the Municipal Elections Act and Bill 49, we wish to advise that the council for the corporation of the town of Caledon endorsed your stand with regard to amendments being made to the Municipal Elections Act."

From Lion's Head: "Your letter concerning the date for municipal elections was read to council at their October 13 meeting and they are in full support of your proposal for moving this date to the Thursday following the second Monday in October with the new council taking office November 1.

"The proposed date by Hon. Darcy McKeough of the second Monday in November could still prevent problems weather-wise, even in the southern part of the province and most certainly in the northern part, and the exercise of changing the date could be futile. In addition, the two-month period of a new council to get their toes wet, so to speak, before taking the plunge seems feasible."

From the regional municipality of Durham by resolution: "that Mr. M. Swart, MPP, be advised that the regional municipality of Durham does not concur with the provincial government's proposed change in the time of municipal elections and further have requested Hon. Darcy McKeough, Treasurer of Ontario, to amend section 11 of Bill 49 to advance polling date to an earlier date."

Mr. Lewis: They should redraw the bill.

Mr. Swart: From the municipalities of Galway and Cavendish by motion: "that council support the amendments to the Municipal Act re municipal election dates as supported in an amendment proposal by Mr. Mel Swart calling for municipal elections to be held 37 days after Labour Day. Carried."

Finally, I have a letter from the corporation of the township of Longlac. This is a rather significant one because it expresses a view which is held in the north. "Thank you for your letter of September 20 and the attached press release. Council of the township of Longlac has considered the contents of these documents and has directed me to write you in support of your proposal to move the election date as far forward as possible. In our area the weather difference between mid-October and mid-November is considerable and the former is certainly better for campaign and election conditions. This apparently, has not been taken into account by the government and it suggests that we have another example of legislation designed for southern Ontario on our hands. Our thanks for your concern in this matter and good wishes for success in your proposed amendment."

Mr. Lewis: Where was that? Timmins?

Mr. Swart: That was the township of Longlac, northern Ontario.

Mr. Pope: Is that the only northern Ontario municipality that replied?

Mr. Swart: No, it is not.

Mr. Foulds: The member for Cochrane South had better get in touch with his riding.

Mr. Swart: I also have letters from the region of Niagara, Markham, Goderich and many others including others in northern Ontario, which I will show to you, Mr. Speaker. I suggest we do have a lot of support from municipalities. If they are given the opportunity of a free choice, they would go to that date.

Let me say one other thing here and I will endeavour to be through by the 6 o'clock deadline. I will promise to endeavour to be through by then.

Mr. Lewis: Don't feel pressed. There is lots of time.

Mr. Swart: We will present in our amendment and speaking to our amendment a step-by-step procedure, which I don't think anyone in this House can deny will be workable, for starting the enumeration the day after Labour Day in having the election between October 16 and October 22.

Mr. Lewis: Excellent.

Mr. Swart: In fact, I go so far as to say that the timing and the technique used in those proposals are substantially superior, less complex with less severe deadlines than what Bill 98 now proposes. I will be going through that procedure in the committee stage.

I just want to say the enumeration procedures we will be proposing will be what the Ontario government uses in the Election Act of Ontario. Re-enumeration, or special enumeration will enhance the ease of getting people on the voter's list who may have been left off. We will be suggesting the posting of the preliminary voter's list, which will be the enumerator's list, by the Friday after the second Monday in September and it will be posted in these polling subdivisions, as it is done provincially, so people can see whether their names are, in fact, on the voter's list and will have the opportunity of getting them on. We will be having re-enumeration and courts of revision up to 13 days before the polling day rather than the 17 days provided in Bill 98. The advance poll will be on Thursday, one week prior to election day, which is preferable to the Saturday proposed in the legislation.

All of us who went through the last provincial election know many people were going away and they did not vote in that advance poll because it was held on the Saturday and they were leaving on the Friday evening. It is much better to have the advance poll on a weekday rather than as a compulsory poll on the weekend.

We will be going along with the government in having nomination day three weeks prior to election day. We also think it's necessary to continue the opportunity of depositing nomination papers in advance of the final nomination day. I know there have been some requests from some municipal people there only be the one day. We think it's important there be other days, so they can deposit them ahead of time.

We will be supporting the continuation of elections every two years, because as I've already said it gives greater accountability. We will be supporting the proposal which you have changed, that the clerk will conduct a lot, if there is any equality of votes. We'll also give equality in the final section to the French. I think there was a Freudian slip in there which indicates French is a secondary language and we will be moving a slight amendment to give that some form of equality. We'll also be moving there be a supplementary nomination day. I can't understand why the government didn't pick that up. Municipalities now sometimes have to hold a full second election because they don't get enough people nominated to fill the offices on the regulation nomination day.

Mr. Haggerty: Don't have much faith in council.

Mr. Swart: They could very well have nomination day three days later and just carry on with the normal procedures saving all that cost to the municipalities and we will be so proposing.

We'll also be proposing the polls be open from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m. and we will provide in our amendment for submissive legislation, limiting campaign expenditures and requiring disclosure. I say as forcefully as I can, we need this municipally even more than we do provincially or federally. There are no political parties to finance the candidates at the municipal level.

Mr. Lewis: Great pity.

Mr. Swart: I like it that way and I think most people here do. But when you have a large municipality like Toronto, where are the funds going to come from to pay the campaign expenses of a serious candidate?

Mr. Foulds: The Tories subsidize their candidates.

Mr. Swart: A person who has a private source, or who has the opportunity to get it, certainly has a much better chance of winning the election. Ultimately, we want to go much further with an election expenses Act.

This measure will encourage candidates and I personally know of several people in Thorold and Welland who decided not to run because of the cost of the municipal election—quite a number of people over the years.

In conclusion let me say that we in this party are taking this bill seriously. Again I say it's deplorable that the Minister of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs doesn't take it seriously. He hasn't even been here in more than two years when municipal matters have been before this House. It's true to say that he considers municipal affairs in the order of his title: first Treasurer, then Minister of Economics, then Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. That ought to make him third but it doesn't, because he gives priority to intergovernmental affairs between the province and the federal government. I say it's time that there was somebody in this House giving more than their fourth-place attention to municipal affairs.

This bill can be a vehicle for enhancing democracy at the local level. With only 30 to 55 per cent of people voting, this Legislature must do what it can to increase participation.

Our proposed changes will, I believe, in some small measure accomplish this. Quite frankly, where we've had to weigh and balance ease of public involvement with some inconvenience to election officials, we have favoured the ease of public involvement. Without exception, our amendments will maximize opportunity to vote, to be serious candidates for office and to provide efficiency in carrying out responsibilities at the local government level.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the member for Fort William is next. Do you need more than two minutes?

Mr. Hennessy: No, I think I can say in two minutes what he said in an hour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then I'll recognize the member for Fort William.

Mr. Foulds: It took the member for Fort William more than two minutes to ask a question this afternoon.

Mr. Hennessy: It's an excellent bill. I think, coming from the north, I would know just as much about the north as this gentleman, who's probably never been there. All the municipalities up there were in favour of having the date moved up. The second week in November is very satisfactory.

An hon. member: No, it's not.

Mr. Hennessy: I received a lot of requests from the municipalities in that area.

Mr. Warner: Prove it.

Mr. Hennessy: It would not be a lame duck council to some extent by getting elected and assuming office as soon as possible. Many times when you were elected and had to wait six to eight weeks nothing could be done and nothing could be voted on. Everybody took that as a crutch, more or less, not to do anything.

It was a tough decision to make. I firmly support the ministry's request to move the date up and I think the gentleman showed a great courtesy for the next speaker.

The House recessed at 5:58 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1977

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS ACT (continued)

Mr. Speaker: The motion is for second reading of Bill 98, An Act to revise the Municipal Elections Act.

The hon. member for Essex North has the floor.

Mr. Ruston: I would like to say a few words with regard to this bill. I live in the area of Essex county which, a few years ago, was involved in a severe storm in December that disrupted the municipal election. Most of the municipalities in the county managed to conduct their elections on the day of the election, or finished the day after the election, without too much controversy.

Many members are aware, I'm sure, of what the city of Windsor did in conducting its election, which were later challenged in the county court. The actions of the elections officer, who was also the city clerk, were ruled valid by the county court. The decision was appealed in the division court, which also ruled the election valid.

It would appear from a layman's point of view, that in this particular case the judge had no alternative but to rule in favour of the clerk's conduct.

This was for two reasons. He could do nothing else under the circumstances. By the time it reached the division court, the council had been in office for about seven or eight months. If there had been an upset at that time there would have been complete chaos in the city of Windsor, through the school boards, the public utilities commission and the council. I would imagine that there wasn't any other decision the judge could have made which would have been correct. I don't suppose that anyone would want to be in the judge's position having to make that decision, because, no doubt, under the law at that time some things were done that were not according to Hoyle, but done due to the circumstances at the time.

One thing that concerns me about the Act is section 69, "Declaration of an emergency by the clerk." The actions of the clerk of the city of Windsor were comparable to those in section 69(3), which reads: "The arrangements made by the clerk under subsection 2, in good faith, shall not be open to question, or be quashed, set aside or declared invalid on account of their unreasonableness or supposed unreasonableness." This is a new part of the elections Act.

This might be difficult for the clerk at times, if there was to be such an emergency as that in Essex county. On the other hand, if the election date is moved up to the second Monday in November the probabilities of anything like that happening again are very remote and perhaps wouldn't happen in a 50-year cycle anyway.

There is no guideline set out that I can find which might guide the clerk. Apparently he must pretty well use his own judgement; of course, that's really what section 69 says. I suppose it would be pretty hard for anyone to challenge it and say that he was unreasonable. Most clerks have responsible jobs and I am sure they are responsible people, so I suppose it would be difficult for anyone wishing to challenge an election. On that basis, I think it might be very difficult to find that the clerk was unreasonable in what he did in an emergency.

In the system of challenging anything, you now go before the county court, but I wonder whether the minister or the parliamentary assistant, the hon. member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe), can say if there has ever been any thought in any of their discussions as to having this challenged by way of a notice of motion. I understand that might be less adversarial to some extent. I discussed this with a friend of mine who has been involved in these matters to some extent and he thought it would be a less adversarial system if there was some way of doing it in that way. But that's just a thought, and perhaps the parliamentary assistant might comment on that when he's replying to those who have spoken on the bill.

Another area of the bill which I think is better than the old Act is section 33, dealing with persons whose names have been left off the list. I don't want to get involved in discussing the bill section by section; these are some of the things that concern me in broad terms, but we can deal with them in detail in committee. My interpretation of section 33 is that you are allowed up until the closing of the poll to have your name added to the list by the clerk. This is of concern to me.

I can recall a number of years ago taking someone down to vote, without checking the voters' list. The person had lived in the municipality for 35 years or 40 years, I think, but when we got there we discovered the name had been left off the list. We went to the clerk and found that the name apparently never had been put on the assessment roll, so he could not give him a slip to vote. To this day, I think, that person has never voted in a municipal election and yet he is Canadian-born and has lived in Canada all his life. He was very concerned because he didn't think anyone would ever leave his name off the list. We all know, of course, that there is a list posted somewhere, but it is sometimes difficult to find. Most people, especially people who have lived in a community all their lives, just don't take the time to look at the list to see if their name is on it; this is understandable. People moving in, of course, quite often will inquire because they are concerned whether their name is on the list.

I think we have to make sure that if someone's name is left off by mistake or inadvertently that there is some way the clerk can put the name on the list even if they are not listed on the assessment roll, especially if we know that the people have lived in the community for a certain length of time. Certainly we don't want to deprive anybody of the right to vote; in fact, we must do everything we can to see that their names are on the list and they are not discouraged from voting.

Another area of concern is whether the requirement of 10 electors' names to be a candidate is enough. I don't know. Where we don't require any deposit or anything to run for office, I can see nothing wrong with having a larger number of electors to sign your papers to be a candidate. In a free democratic system, I suppose we shouldn't try to discourage anyone, but I don't think it would be much discouragement to anyone if we were to insist on 25 names. Again, it's a thought, and I hadn't thought of it as an amendment, but I am sure this must have been mentioned when the parliamentary assistant was discussing this with municipal officials. Perhaps he would have an answer that would be satisfactory.

I haven't got a great deal more to say, but there was one thing I wanted to comment on. The member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) gave a great speech here before the dinner hour. He was saying they should vote in October. I can see why his party doesn't have any farm people in the Ontario Legislature when he talks like that. He wants to have the vote in the second week of October. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, in Essex county and southern and western Ontario that is about the busiest time for farmers there is, taking off the crop.

The asphalt farmers down there just don't understand that you have to get your grain off in the fall of the year; it has to be taken off and you can't be running up and down the roads campaigning for reeve or deputy reeve or council.

Mr. Swart: You don't get your grain off until the middle of October? Boy, you are late up there.

Mr. Ruston: I am just surprised at that man, who wasn't in municipal politics for 21 years. Maybe they voted to send him here to get rid of him, I don't know. I am ashamed that man would want to deprive farm people of running for office and municipal council. And that is just what he was doing.

If he wants to have a vote in October in the cities and so forth, that's fine. I couldn't care less. You can have them the first of October or the end of September, it wouldn't matter to me. But I am telling the House, as long as I am a member of this Legislature I'll speak up. I don't care what party decides they want the vote to be early in October, they are going to have to fight against me. I'll tell you how long I can filibuster if I have to, Mr. Speaker.

I just wanted to bring a couple of those things to the members' attention, and I'll bring them up with the parliamentary assistant if he doesn't answer them in committee.

Mr. Foulds: What kind of irrational remark was that?

Mr. Ruston: What does the member for Hamilton Mountain think of that?

Mr. Charlton: I am somewhat pleased to see this bill here, because it does provide some useful changes to the Municipal Elections Act. Contrary to the opinions of our hon. friend down this end, I sincerely feel the bill doesn't go far enough in moving up the election date.

I feel very strongly the date should be in October, and in response to his comments about farmers and their ability to participate, I seem to recall a number of provincial and federal elections held in the fall, in late September, the middle of October, and late October. I haven't seen any great lack of interest or participation on the part of the farm community in those elections.

When we consider the election date for municipal elections, we have to consider the participation of the electorate in the municipalities. One of the things we have to take a serious look at when we are considering is the kind of turnout we have had in Ontario in municipal elections. It is a turnout that runs between 25 and 35 per cent on the average—and that's just pathetic. We here have to be doing as much as we can possibly do to see that record is improved, to help bring municipal electors into active participation in municipal campaigns.

The Treasurer has indicated on a number of occasions municipal elections can't be held any earlier than the date he is proposing in this bill because of the enumeration procedures. On a number of occasions I have worked in the municipal enumeration in this province and I am extremely familiar with the workings of that process. I find myself in a position of having to disagree very strongly with the Treasurer. Perhaps if he had ever worked in the municipal enumeration process he would know better. Maybe that is what he should do before making that kind of a decision.

Mr. Warner: He should go somewhere.

Mr. Davison: He should resign and do that for a living.

Mr. Charlton: Right. There is absolutely no reason at all why the enumeration procedure cannot be altered very slightly—

Mr. Martel: He has already left.

Mr. Charlton:—and accommodate a municipal election day right across the province between October 16 and October 22. I would like to speak briefly, Mr. Speaker, to the proposition of some minor changes in the enumeration process so we can accomplish a much earlier date for municipal elections.

[8:15]

It would be no great or difficult task for the assessment commissioners who now hold the responsibility for the enumeration to tack one or two days on to the field time of their enumerators, which now totals far less than two weeks, in order that those enumerators could type up lists of the electors in the municipality by poll in an identical fashion to what we now use in the provincial and federal campaigns. We have definite proof that the process works and is not excessively complicated. The assessment commissioner could then turn those typed lists over to the municipal clerk as a preliminary election list and then continue on with his procedure as now set out. Any errors that he finds in the original typed lists through the process of his input can be forwarded to the municipality in the form of revisions.

The clerks of the municipalities could quite easily provide special enumerators, as we do provincially and federally, to go through the process of picking up those people who inform his office they've been left off the preliminary lists. There is already provision under the existing Municipal Elections Act for the clerk to issue certificates to those electors who present themselves to him after the revision dates are over, right up to and including the eve of the election. There is ample provision to see that every elector who is in any way serious about voting in a municipal election can be on the voters' list and vote on election day.

In our caucus we have spoken to a number of assessment commissioners across this province about this particular proposition. It has been made quite clear to us by all of them we have talked to that there will be no great difficulty in providing those few additions to their procedure in order to make this process that much shorter and to move the election up into the middle of October. We had some suggestions from my colleague from Welland-Thorold that municipal elections should be held 45 days after Labour Day. This is a reasonable suggestion. It's not only reasonable but it's a suggestion we can achieve. The problem here, it seems to me is that there are far too many people hanging on to some very old and sometimes very questionable traditions.

The moving of the election date for municipal elections to the middle of October would do two things for municipal campaigns in terms of the electorate and of the candidates. It will give us an atmosphere and a circumstance in terms of weather conditions in which candidates can more easily talk to the electorate and the electorate will be a little more willing to listen to candidates, which hopefully will stimulate some more serious interest on the part of the electorate in municipal elections. There is far too little and it has become a serious problem in the municipalities.

There are a number of other points raised by my colleague from Welland-Thorold. There was the point about consecutive hours off work in order to vote. There was the point about spending limits in municipal campaigns and disclosure of the source of funds. Both of these items are extremely important. I would suggest their omission from this bill is tantamount to saying municipal elections are just not as important as provincial and federal elections. I think it's time we as legislators here decided that that just is no longer true, that the municipalities are as important, if not in some instances more important, than either the federal or the provincial level. The municipalities have got into programs and situations that make their function very important to the total picture of taxes that people pay.

If municipal elections are to receive the important consideration they should then they must be dealt with seriously in the same way that the provincial and federal elections are dealt with, by considering the things we have considered and are considering in terms of federal and provincial elections and federal and provincial election spending.

It was also suggested we should keep the polls in municipal elections open from 9 a.m. until 8 p.m., the same as we do provincially and federally. This bill provides for the hours to be 11 a.m. to 8 p.m., which is just another indication of how serious this government and our Treasurer are about the importance of municipal elections. They are relegating this process in the municipalities to second-class status.

As I said at the outset, I am very glad to see this bill here because it does provide some improvements. I would very sincerely request of all of the members that they consider very carefully all of the amendments that are put during the committee stage and consider them in the light of the real importance of municipal politics in this province.

Mr. Blundy: I am very pleased to be able to speak in this debate on an Act to revise the Municipal Elections Act.

Mr. Bradley: Is this the former mayor of Sarnia?

Mr. Conway: A fine one at that too.

Mr. Blundy: Having spent a number of anxious moments in municipal elections myself over the years, I am quite aware of some of the practices that I feel have been beneficial and some of the practices that have not.

Several of the speakers have alluded to the fact that we must do everything we can to make it easy and attractive for voters in a municipality to go out and vote. It is indeed a very important election for those people. Those people who are elected in a municipal election are going to be dealing with the bread and butter issues that affect the people daily. Therefore, it is very important.

When I was the mayor I used to tell people, particularly school children, when I was trying to impress upon them the importance of municipal government in their lives, that the government in Ottawa could fold up and most people would not even know it had disappeared until they did not get an income tax form.

Mr. Germa: Especially if it was Liberal.

Mr. Blundy: I used to say they could fold up down in Toronto and we probably would not know for several weeks either. But if the municipal government and those things they sponsor folded up here, they would notice it as soon as they went home because the toilet would not flush. It is really a very practical and very close thing to the people in the municipality.

Mr. Bradley: What are we all doing here, I wonder?

Mr. Conway: Is that true in Moonbeam too?

Mr. Blundy: The record of the turnout of electors in municipal elections over the years has not been all that good. I believe the changes in this Act—having been made, as I understand, in very close talks with the OMA, the PMLC and municipal officials, having been made in consultation with those people—that are being suggested are good and will help to make the municipal election more easily and readily used by the people in the municipality.

The matter of changing the election date from the first Monday in December to the second Monday in November is a step in the right direction. It will help to overcome very largely the very bad weather we have had, particularly here in southern Ontario. Traditionally, we do not have really bad weather until the month of December. After that almost anything, weatherwise, can happen. I believe we really could count on reasonably good weather. This is an acceptable date as far as I am concerned.

I want to speak very briefly about suggestions that have been made regarding the changing of the hours of polling. They are currently 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. I have found this to be very acceptable. One has to remember in a municipal election it is a very long day because it isn't as in a provincial or federal election where one may have three candidates or four candidates on one ballot to be counted. The election can almost be declared within an hour of the polls closing in a federal or provincial election, but in a municipal election it is not uncommon to have 60 to 70 candidates on the ballot on four or five ballots—certainly four. You'd have the council, the board of education, the separate school board and public utilities commission for sure, and possibly others. And yes, you may have some questions on the ballot as well. So it takes an extremely long time to count those ballots after the polls are closed. The people have to be alert to be able to do it correctly so there are no mistakes.

The idea of opening the polls at 9 o'clock in the morning is foolish, in my opinion. I have visited the polls so many times in the past and the action that has taken place before 11 o'clock in the morning, in years when the polls were opened earlier, was absolutely negligible. By 11 o'clock in the morning, you do see some of the elderly people, the senior citizens, coming out and I think that is ample time in which to open the polls. There are two advance polls provided so people who want to vote ahead of election day because of their commitments of work and so forth are able to do so.

I strongly urge that we consider the proposals in this Act, the changes suggested. I believe they certainly meet with the changes I had hoped to see in the Act and I know they have been done with the advice and the assistance of many long-time municipal people in the clerks' offices and otherwise; and who could know better than the people who have been doing this? Personally, I had hoped the bill would pass and I will certainly be glad to have more to say, Mr. Speaker, when it is considered in committee, clause by clause.

Mr. Warner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bradley: Resign.

Mr. Conway: The Bette Stephenson of the NDP caucus.

Mr. Warner: Hey, watch that. Do you know where the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) is, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Bradley: He has resigned.

Mr. Warner: It seems to me the minister responsible for this legislation should be here.

Mr. Haggerty: He should be here, right.

Mr. Warner: One of the things that bothers me as we go through this crowded session is the fact we are all under the impression we have to steam-roll things through here. We happen to be dealing with what I consider to be an extremely important piece of legislation; I would think important enough to attract the attention of the Treasurer at least, but certainly important enough to warrant a full discussion on the matter, a discussion which should include an examination of our attitudes about levels of government and forms of government.

It seems to me that for too long in this country, we have viewed governments on a level system, a hierarchy, with the federal government up on top, beneath it the provincial government, and somewhere at the bottom the municipal government. I reject that notion. I always have. It seems to me we have three forms of government, three particular avenues, no one of which is more important than any other, it's simply a different form of government. And do you know, that very basic point is missing in the philosophy of the Treasurer, as evidenced by the lack of consultation which was very well documented by my colleague and good friend the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart). I think he did a superb job of laying out, for all of the members in this House, the terrible litany of non-consultation that has taken place over a very long period of time.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, it is a very heavy-handed approach to the whole business of municipal politics and I, for one, am sorry the Treasurer sees fit to carry on in such a manner. It's not right; it's not the way things should be done.

[8:30]

I don't believe for an instant, as the Treasurer seems to imply from time to time, that municipalities cannot be trusted to manage their affairs properly; to manage the money and to run the affairs of the local municipalities in a fit way. Maybe I'm being unfair to the Treasurer, but that's the view that comes across, not only to myself but also to those elected municipal politicians.

Mr. Lewis: You can't be unfair to the Treasurer.

Mr. Warner: He's not here, so I can be as unfair as I like, I guess.

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer answers to only one person, as he indicated today.

Mr. Warner: Yes, that's true. It seems to me that it's not just the so-called Edmonton commitment which obviously has been abandoned, I don't think there's any pretence about that any longer; that commitment is meaningless, it doesn't exist.

Mr. Macck: What does that have to do with this bill though?

Mr. Lewis: Everything.

Mr. Speaker: That's not in this bill though.

Mr. Warner: That's true, but it probably should be. I'm wondering if what we're having in front of us is simply the benevolence of the Treasurer, what he declares to be benevolence, or is it really the result of consultation?

If the arguments which we have put forward are incorrect, I would like to hear from the parliamentary assistant, who I gather has been sent here to carry out the responsibilities of the Treasurer.

He should perhaps explain to us where we're wrong in our argument that consultation has not taken place; or if we are right how the Treasurer intends to change the process. What is the Treasurer going to do to bring about a better form of consultation? Those municipal politicians out there are not very happy with the way things are being done. They watched the Edmonton commitment being scuttled, and quite frankly what they want now in its place are some legislative agreements.

Mr. Speaker: Do I have to remind the hon. member that that's not a part of the principle of Bill 98?

Mr. Warner: No you don't, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cunningham: The member should read the bill.

Mr. Warner: In this particular bill, the government has decided on a definition as to who is going to vote, and the Liberals have an amendment to that definition. What bothers me is that we are not taking that portion of the bill and dealing with it in a separate, well-defined form.

The whole question as to who votes is a pretty serious one, and one which I suggest has a different kind of context in municipal elections than it does for provincial or federal voting. That is to say there is a very strong argument on municipal elections, in favour of allowing any person who has been here 12 months or longer the right to vote.

Mr. Cunningham: Abject nonsense. Can you vote in Britain? Can you vote in Portugal, or Italy?

Mr. Speaker: Just ignore the interjections.

Mr. Warner: If the member for Wentworth North wants to vote in Portugal, he can go to Portugal.

Mr. Cunningham: No, I can't vote in Portugal; that's the point.

Mr. Warner: We have disturbed your desert from dinner, I'm sorry about that.

Mr. Cunningham: I can't vote anywhere else but Canada.

Mr. Martel: Why don't you go back to sleep?

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, I didn't intend to reawaken the member for Wentworth North.

Mr. Speaker: Your comments now are just as irrelevant as the interjections.

Mr. Martel: Don't tease the bear, whatever you do.

Mr. Warner: No, I won't tease the bear. Had the member for Wentworth North been listening, what I said is that there is a very strong argument in favour of allowing those people who have been resident for at least 12 months, or longer, the ability to vote in municipal elections on the basis that everyone pays municipal taxes. Whether a tenant or a property owner, you pay taxes for municipal services—

Mrs. Campbell: Or a merchant.

Mr. Warner:—therefore you should have the opportunity to vote in a municipal election.

There is also an argument, a very logical, reasoned argument, that says perhaps you should restrict it to Canadian citizens or those of landed immigrant status. Since the federal government, and we agree, has always maintained that a landed immigrant has equal rights with a Canadian citizen, there are certainly reasoned arguments to be put forward on those grounds. What bothers me is that we have never gone through that kind of debate. You throw it into the bill, the Liberals attempt to toss in an amendment to satisfy whatever desires they have; and that's wrong.

Mr. Lewis: It's an absolutely asinine amendment.

Mr. Warner: I don't mean the merits of the amendment. I mean it's wrong that we should deal with it in such a superficial way. We need to deal with it in a separate, defined way. We need to take a very careful, reasoned approach to the whole thing. It's too important to be discussed in such a cursory way, by way of an amendment.

Mr. Bradley: Besides, you didn't think of it first.

Mr. Warner: No; because we did think of it first, we realized it was too important to be dealt with in such an off-hand way as tossing in an amendment an hour or so ahead of when we debate the bill.

Mr. Lewis: It is exactly the way the federal Liberals behave. You did it federally, but you couldn't get away with it provincially.

Mr. Warner: Yes, and no one would expect anything more from their provincial counterparts.

Mr. Cunningham: Abject, with a big A.

Mr. Warner: You know, Mr. Speaker, as I have been reminded by my colleague from Scarborough West, I recall very vividly the federal election of 1972 when it was suddenly revealed that the federal Liberals, unannounced, had decided they were going to take away the previous voting privileges of a segment of the population.

Whether or not it was a good thing is not the point. The point is it was done very slyly, unannounced, and caused a great disruption. It should have been dealt with properly. It should have been debated in a serious, open form.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, the government will consider very carefully the arguments put forward by my colleague from Welland-Thorold regarding the election day, because make no mistake about it the half measure offered by the Treasurer of Ontario is not good enough. Half measures are always good enough for Liberals but they're not good enough for people who want real reform in municipal politics.

The message has been coming through to the government on this bill about election day. It's been coming through pretty loud and clear. People want to go out to vote in October. They don't want to risk snowstorms, even in November, and certainly not in December in northern communities. They want to be able to vote in October.

I know the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) is aware of the feelings of the municipal politicians of Metro Toronto on the matter of voting in October. That brings me to a very serious matter as it relates to Metro Toronto, and perhaps the parliamentary assistant can give us some words about it. You have decided in the bill, contrary to what the majority of politicians of Metro Toronto want, that you're not going to have a three-year term. There may be some logical arguments that you can string together as they apply to the entire province of Ontario, and we may be willing to accept them, but I would like to know on what rationale you base not having a three-year term as it would apply to the large urban centres such as Ottawa, Hamilton, Metro Toronto and others. Because as you are well aware, the complexities of municipal affairs in these urban centres require some long-range planning; they are of a magnitude which demands a prolonged period of time, and two years simply isn't good enough. If the government is determined it's going to stick with the two years no matter what anybody in Ottawa, Toronto or Hamilton says, no matter what Mr. Roberts says, or anyone else for that matter, then I would like some indication tonight as to whether you are going to change your mind when it comes to the legislation pertaining to Metro Toronto which you're supposed to be bringing in sometime in the spring of 1978.

If the government doesn't have any answers, then is it at least saying we can have a full and open discussion with those large urban centres? While it may be in the best interest of a lot of rural municipalities to have a two-year term, perhaps it is not in the best interest of the large urban centres. I would like to know what's wrong in allowing those urban centres, which so desire it, to have the opportunity of setting a three-year term.

The proper thing is that each of those municipalities, such as Metro Toronto, should have the option of setting a three-year term if it desires to do so. Let them decide whether they want a two-year or three-year term. I would appreciate some comments on that.

Some of the municipal officials, by the way, feel quite secure about the three-year term, they are quite willing to put it on the ballot. I would like to know the government's answer on that score. Is there something wrong in the municipal officials in Metro Toronto putting that question on the 1978 municipal ballot, as a decision to be made by the people in Metro Toronto as to how many years they want the term of office to be for their elected officials? Pretty scary isn't it? It sounds like real democracy. I suppose it's at that point the government will back off, but I would appreciate some comments in that regard.

In conclusion, I am very happy to see the bill come forward. I am not very pleased at the manner in which it has come forward, because it sounds to me as though it's what the Treasurer would best describe as his benevolent hand in the whole affair rather than a proper kind of consultation. I am not very pleased about that. That kind of process surely has to change. As I sat and listened to my colleague from Welland-Thorold, I was very confident about and express some pride in the amendments which will be forthcoming from our critic. As a knowledgeable person for some 21 years in municipal affairs, he brings to this Legislature a knowledge which is absolutely first rate and a concern which isn't paralleled by anyone.

Mr. Cunningham: Certainly by you anyway.

Mr. Warner: Did I awaken you again?

Mr. Cunningham: You certainly did with your comments on municipal affairs.

Mr. Warner: I apologize for having awakened him, Mr. Speaker. I should know by now that the member for Wentworth isn't interested in securing knowledge.

My colleague from Welland-Thorold will be putting forward some amendments. I hope for the sake of good legislation the government is listening very carefully, because those amendments come forward as positive steps to help improve a weak bill. We want to strengthen the Municipal Elections Act. We have the opportunity to do it here tonight, because we have the opportunity to share the expertise and knowledge of my colleague from Welland-Thorold. I ask for support on each one of those amendments, because they will make for a better municipal life in the rest of Ontario. [8:45]

Mrs. Campbell: Having really been challenged by the last speaker, I feel that it is somewhat important that I lend my voice to this debate. I have listened to this great reform group which thinks that moving the date from December to November to October is real reform. I would like the answer to the question that I think is the inevitable one, particularly with the chaotic situation in municipal financing: What happened to the undertaking of the former Treasurer, Mr. White, to give consideration to either changing the fiscal year for the province or changing the municipal year to correspond? It seems to me that when you have a municipality such as the city of Toronto, and you find her in a negative grant position for educational purposes, then it's time that the people of the city of Toronto, as well as in other parts of Metro, should have a greater voice in the planning of their municipalities.

It seems to me that only if you face up to the very real problems of any day, which at this point is in conflict with the provincial and federal fiscal dates, are you in a position where you can really try to plan, when you and you alone are going to be responsible for your educational costs, as Toronto was this last year.

There is no question in my mind that the three-year term ought to prevail in the area of Metropolitan Toronto. I have not had the opportunity of discussing the feelings of people in other parts of the province. But why on earth should the city of Toronto, raising 102 per cent of its educational costs out of the property tax, be treated like some second-class corporate body because the Treasurer doesn't even pretend to understand the problems facing the municipalities in the Metro area at this time?

The Treasurer is putting more and more of the financial burden on Metropolitan Toronto, and yet he can't trust that municipality to plan on a three-year basis. Those of us who have had anything to do with either the financial planning or other planning in a municipality of this size certainly have to tell the parliamentary assistant that it's ludicrous not to permit a three-year term for a body that one day may actually follow Alderman Gilbert's plan and demand to be a separate province. You know, that's not so funny as it seems.

If the government's going to put all the financial responsibility on Metropolitan Toronto, then for goodness' sake the government should grow up and let them mature and have the opportunity to decide their own future on a basis that is compatible with the wishes of the people of the Metropolitan Toronto area.

The kinds of dates I am talking about are Liberal dates, because they are a reform, if we can bring it about. Certainly I wonder why the present Treasurer has been so at odds with the former Treasurer—

Mr. Bradley: Where is he, anyway?

Mrs. Campbell: —in every particle of this bill, and why, he also apparently is at odds with the recommendation of Mr. Robarts in the Metro plan.

Mr. Conway: All those Tories are desperately trying to forget John White.

Mr. Cunningham: Yes. Where is he now?

Mr. Conway: Farming in Edwardsburgh.

Mrs. Campbell: You know, I suppose it really counts for naught that we stand here trying to make some reason out of this legislation. It's very strange, when you don't want to do something about the Metropolitan Toronto you always put it off until the decisions about the Metro plan, but then when you want to change something you do it without discussing the Metro plan.

Those two points are points which I must make and make strongly. Otherwise, with the way in which you're proceeding, if you have your elections as proposed in this bill you may one day wake up to find, because of the lack of ability to plan on a proper basis, you may have bankrupted some of your municipalities in the Metropolitan area.

I suggest further consideration be given to this matter. I don't like to say Toronto should have some special privilege over the others, but I certainly think a municipality as large as Metropolitan Toronto, with its financial problems and financial responsibilities, particularly in the field of planning for human concerns, will have to have a longer period of time than the provisions in this particular bill.

Accordingly, I would hope we would get to the amendments. It is good we have this bill before us, but certainly I'd like to see some enlightenment in so far as it pertains to Metropolitan Toronto.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bounsall: Various of my close colleagues here have advised me and adjured me to speak for an hour. Let me tell the rest of the House, I may not have enough points to fill up that amount of time.

Mr. Conway: Well that doesn't usually stop you, Ted.

Mr. Lewis: It certainly did, we are governed by points.

Mr. Bounsall: That didn't stop me before, but I can't get quite as angry over this bill as I do over OHIP and the Minister of Health.

Mr. Speaker, the main point I want to speak on in this Act respecting municipal elections is the timing of the elections, the advance from the first Monday in December to the second Monday in November. It is certainly not a sufficient advance. In 1974, the first Monday in December, an election day in Windsor, a disaster befell us. We had some snow. Now it may not be unusual to get a little snow that early, but it's certainly unusual to get 18 inches of snow, something which may not bother too many other communities, but it caused quite a concern in Windsor.

The procedures under the Municipal Elections Act were not sufficiently clear for the clerk to know what to do with respect to cancelling the election, what to do with polls that were on the borderline of having opened on time and with a bunch of polls that really didn't get opened that day at all and didn't get ballot boxes out. Subsequently, there was a lot of confusion, which the press tended to compound for the first five or six voting hours on that day, as to whether the election was taking place or whether it had all been cancelled till the next day; or for a given elector whether his poll was open that day and he had to get to the poll or whether his poll was in fact one that didn't get open on time and could be cancelled till the next day.

As a result, in the spring of 1975 I proposed a private member's bill dealing with amendments to the then Municipal Elections Act in which I proposed the very latest an election should be held municipally would be one month earlier than that, the first weekend in November.

I wasn't quite aware at the time of all the factors involved in the advance work required to go into an election. A poll of various people at that time, particularly in Windsor, indicated that that would be an appropriate time, a time at which in Windsor we certainly would never expect and very seldom would get snow, let alone 18 inches of snow.

The proposal that it go to roughly mid-October, which our party is proposing, is an even better suggestion than I had in that bill. Whatever steps need to be taken to ensure that municipal elections can be held that early would very much benefit the turnout and participation in municipal elections, and that is something we all wish was much higher than it is.

The second point I find of interest and concern in this bill is that over the last few months several of the large municipalities have contacted me—certainly the city of Windsor has—with regard to the length of term that would be covered by those elected municipally. Invariably the word has come through that larger municipalities would prefer to have a three-year term, while from other municipalities comes the information that many of the townships and the small towns are content with the two-year term. I can see with that attitude why the Provincial Municipal Liaison Committee in its brief did not come down any firmer than it did on the three-year term versus the two-year term. That is the situation which exists in Ontario. The larger municipalities almost invariably want that three-year term. There is no intent by this Legislature, I would not think, to impose a three-year term on the small municipalities and townships which very much do not want a three-year term and are happy with their two-year term.

What we need very much in this legislation, which should be amended to accommodate it, is a clause enabling the municipalities, whatever their size, to choose what length of term they are going to have. It will be no surprise as the large municipalities choose the three-year terms and no surprise as the small municipalities choose the two-year terms. That is what should occur very much in this bill. This would satisfy all of the municipalities across Ontario to the detriment of no one that I can see in the province. Whether they have a referendum or not to determine which their electors would like is up to them.

I am sure this is a correct reading of what the elected officials in municipalities would very much like to see, namely, for financial and planning reasons, the large municipalities going to a three-year term, while the two-year term is what the small municipalities would like to see. Why this Legislature in this bill just doesn't allow that to happen is beyond me. I very strongly support a clause which would enable municipalities to choose whether they wish to have the two-year or the three-year term.

I would also like to make a comment on one other section of the bill. I am pleased to see that the clerk is given powers under section 69 of the bill to adopt any necessary procedures for the conduct of a poll when an emergency situation arises on polling day. The private member's bill I had was much more specific in this area and suggested various alternatives for the emergency situation. But I believe what we have in this bill is general and gives the clerk sufficient power to make whatever arrangements he deems necessary, bearing in mind whatever emergency situation has arisen. On this, I think we are all really speaking of weather. Something else may occur, but it is mainly a weather situation particularly as the bill stands with the election day still in the second Monday in November, which is not very much an improvement over what we have. The way we have left it, with the clerk being able to adjust to that situation and in very general terms giving him the powers generally to do what he deems necessary, is a well-written section of the bill.

[9:00]

The last subsection, subsection 3 of section 69, in which his decision is not open to question, is also a step forward when one considers the arrangements made by the city clerk of Windsor, John Adamac, and the decisions he had to come to on that Monday in December 1974, when the situation arose at Windsor, to proceed with the election in those polls that managed to get open on the Monday, and those polls that did not manage to get open on time on Monday voted the next day. That whole situation was then challenged in the courts.

Subsection 3 of this section would forever forbid the questioning of the arrangements made by the clerk in all good faith—they are assumed to be in all good faith right in the Act—to take account of those emergency situations that arise. This is an entirely new section of the bill and certainly it is one which will be welcomed by the city of Windsor as it spent some considerable amount of time and money in preparing the defence of the court challenge of that clerk and what he did.

Certainly the Municipal Elections Act at that time was not at all clear to the clerk as to what his powers were and what he could do about it. Despite phone calls to the Treasurer at that time, one John White, and contacts by myself with John White on the Sunday night and the Monday morning—the snow started to fall early Sunday morning and kept coming down—we were again left in a situation of not knowing what it was that could be or could not be done. Section 69 certainly is a step forward in keeping election challenges out of the courts and gives the clerk the proper amount of discretion to use when an emergency arises.

What I feel most strongly about in this bill is that the elections should be held as early as possible in the year—mid-October seems eminently reasonable—and certainly we should have an enabling clause in the legislation allowing municipalities to choose between two years and three years.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I rise in general support of this particular bill advanced by the government. Along with a number of other speakers who have spoken previously, I comment that it has been a long time coming, but certainly we on this side of the House are delighted that at long last it has arrived.

I would like to commend the member for Durham West for piloting this bill through the Legislature in place of the Treasurer, who apparently has deemed it not important enough to be here. Perhaps he has a good reason for not being here, but certainly I commend the member for Durham West in this regard.

I would also commend the member for Waterloo North, who has outlined the general stand of this particular party on this bill, and the member for Welland-Thorold, who has obviously done extensive research and has come forward with a number of rather interesting amendments that will have to be looked at very carefully as we proceed through the committee stage.

I would also like to thank the clerk of the city of St. Catharines and the representatives from the Association of Municipalities of Ontario who have commented on certain aspects of this bill. I note in some of the changes that have been made since the original printing of the bill that the government has been wise enough and certainly conciliatory enough to make some of the changes based on the suggestions that have been put forward, and I think it should be commended for that.

Obviously to many of those of us who have served in the municipal field, the paramount part of this bill is that which changes the date of the election. Even though it advances it perhaps not as close to the summer as some of us would like, it certainly is an improvement to advancing it to the early part of the month of November.

I think the elderly citizens in our constituencies, the infirm, the ill and many who have found it inconvenient to be able to go to the polls, will be very delighted with this particular change which does move it forward. Those working on election day, who often have to trek through the snow and sit in cold gymnasiums, et cetera, will also find it a distinct benefit to advance it even the small amount it has been advanced.

The members who represent Windsor would all have vivid memories of the famous election there which was a shemozzle because of the weather, partially because it was scheduled so late in the year. I realize it can happen again.

Mr. Lewis: It wasn't a shemozzle. It changed mayors, for heaven's sake; it was a great victory.

Mr. Ruston: An NDP mayor won.

Mr. Bradley: That's what I say, it was a shemozzle.

Mr. Lewis: It might not have happened otherwise.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Is shemozzle a parliamentary word?

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, in regard to that, and I recognize I shouldn't comment on interjections—

Mr. Lewis: That's right. You are out of order.

Mr. Bradley: —but as a member of city council in the city of St. Catharines, I often wondered if they were running a federal parliament, a provincial parliament, or a municipal council in the city of Windsor because so many of the resolutions which had nothing to do with municipal affairs seemed to emanate from the city of Windsor.

Mr. Bounsall: Good social conscience down there.

Mr. Bradley: It's of course very easy to make decisions when you don't have to take the responsibility for them, and I suppose you've got to take that into consideration.

Mr. Martel: You are starting to sound more like Trudeau every day.

Mr. Bradley: I'll go back to the regular train of thought and speak to the question, Mr. Speaker. You've been quite tolerant in this regard.

I would also mention the fact, and I think other members have pointed it out, that the candidates for election who used to have to go out in the cold will appreciate this legislation. The member for Welland-Thorold mentioned this, I think. In the last municipal election—he may be familiar with it even though he was in the House at the time—we were out with the icicles coming from our ears and our noses and our wet hair as we went about campaigning. I'm sure the people at whose door we showed up were not too anxious to open the door and listen too long to the words of the politicians.

Mr. Warner: In your case, that's understandable.

Mr. Bradley: Whether they are at any other time, I'm not sure, but at least they had an excuse at this time for closing the door, and I'm not sure that contributed to an excellent democratic choice.

We have heard from some it would be a real problem to avoid the precedents of the past which saw councils take office on January 1. We have the inaugural meeting right after New Year's and somehow this is established as the proper manner of conducting business. However, I must say personally I've never found this to be a particularly sacred time of the year to have a new council take over. I certainly see no problem with a city council taking over, or a regional council, or a schoolboard, on the first day of December. In fact, as has been pointed out, there would not be harm in them taking over even earlier if the date could have been advanced. It does give them a longer time to plan.

Mr. Foulds: How about November 1, Hallowe'en?

Mr. Bradley: As we all know, the fine representatives of the civil service give us an awful lot of guidance in providing those budgets anyway, and I'm not convinced that politicians themselves have a substantial effect on budgets, many of which contain set costs.

We will look at some other aspects of the bill which are rather interesting and probably worthy of support, and also at some of the amendments proposed to this bill. Certainly I will be prepared to speak on these amendments when we come to that particular stage, because I think a couple of them are certainly worthy of commendation.

The one which should be easy to implement is that providing three clear hours for voting. There are those who will say you're somehow going to be hard on small businesses, because they're not going to be able to comply. But I think if we look at the voting hours that are provided, we're going to find that it's not going to cause any hardship, once every two years, to implement this particular recommendation. Certainly on a personal basis I see this as being of positive benefit, and I'm certain this party will support that particular amendment.

Also, I heard mention of the three-year term for municipal politicians, the member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall) mentioned that. He makes some very good arguments as he feels the municipal politicians would put them forward. As a municipal politician, I must say I always thought the three-year term was excellent, because it meant I didn't have to go through an election in that one extra year.

Viewing it objectively as a member of this Legislature, however, I can recognize the benefit of having two years in that the municipal level of politics, even in some of the larger municipalities, is different from the federal House and provincial Legislature. Many of the decisions made are instant decisions and many of the changes made are somewhat radical changes at the local level, even taking into consideration the fact the province has such great powers. They are the kind of changes that require the ratification or opinion of the electorate in terms of an election, and therefore I would be rather reluctant to see us move to a three-year term. I would find it rather distasteful, if we're going to have an election Act, to have across the province the option of having a three-year or two-year term. I would suggest in many municipalities it will be three years because of the self-interest of those of us who have served at that particular level. I know we always say it's for planning and financial purposes, but I'm afraid when it really comes down to it it's the fact that people don't want to face the electorate quite so often in municipal office.

Mr. Martel: In a few months from now you're going to see what it's like again, if it goes that long.

Mr. Bradley: I won't make predictions. I assume we will go the full five years in this particular House, as the opposition parties and the government—

Mr. Martel: Don't count on it.

Mr. Bradley: —work together for the people of Ontario.

Mr. Martel: Oh you're going to prop them up are you?

Mr. Roy: It's you guys who are going to prop them up, once you have your leadership decided.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Bradley: I was somewhat concerned, initially, about the particular date being the second Monday in November, because it might fall on Remembrance Day. But I have been informed, in consultation with those responsible for presenting the bill, rather than the election coming on Saturday as some of us might have interpreted by the term, "the next preceding day," my understanding is it would be held on the Tuesday; I think that should alleviate the fears of some of us who are rather concerned about that aspect of it.

I also find a very positive movement the fact all qualified electors will be allowed to vote on money bylaws rather than only owners of land and long-term tenants. Of course we recognize nowadays, particularly with the level of rents we see in many areas, that those who are renting and those who are boarding are also those who are paying, indirectly, the taxes in the community, and therefore they should have a say and a stake in the financial decisions being made. This is certainly a positive step in the right direction.

Another aspect of it I find very useful is the section which says only the name and address will appear on the ballot. One of the tricks of the trade in municipal politics in years gone by was to attempt to elevate oneself to a rather high position. Someone would say he was the president, for instance, and put president on the ballot. It could have been the president or vice-president in charge of sharpening pencils of a particular one- or two-person firm.

Mr. Foulds: What have you got against small business?

Mr. Bradley: Nothing at all against small business. We are the party which has promoted small business in Ontario, and therefore I feel very proud of that.

Mr. Foulds: That's not on the principle of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bradley: There are those who would put lawyer on the ballot, and there might be those who think that simply because they were lawyers they were more learned people, even though those of us who are not in the legal profession recognized long ago that is not the case. This really removes that abuse. It removes the trickery played with terminology in terms of one's particular classification for employment; and I think this is certainly a positive step and one which should receive the support of all members of this House.

I note also, and this I suppose really arises out of the situation in the city of Windsor, the clerk is given powers to adopt necessary procedures during the emergency. I think as long as these powers are well-defined that is all right. I'm concerned if they're not well-defined there could be a problem when the clerk takes it upon himself or herself to make certain decisions which might have rather serious legal ramifications at some time in the future. So as long as they're clearly spelled out this is probably another step in what we would say it the right direction.

[9:15]

Members who represent constituencies in northern Ontario, the extreme southwestern Ontario and around Welland for instance, would find extremely useful the fact that notices required under the Act may be printed in the French language as well as the English language. In many constituencies in this province this would not have a major effect, but certainly there are many where the French-speaking population is rather large and this is a step in the right direction. It is certainly one which refers to the kind of justice we are talking about in the context of the debate on national unity.

Some of the concerns that are expressed are expressed by those who have to actually carry out the terms of the Election Act. In this Legislature we make a lot of laws which we don't have to necessarily administer on a personal basis or as a body. One of the things you notice when you sit on municipal councils is that you are often critical of senior levels of government which pass laws which they think are reasonably good laws, but when it comes down to it, we find they are extremely difficult to administer and are not reasonable laws. They are not practical laws as they relate to particular municipalities. I think we always have to be careful of this.

One of the amendments presented by the member for Welland-Thorold appears attractive in the beginning, but when we really examine it it isn't quite so attractive.

Mr. Foulds: It's even more attractive when you examine it.

Mr. Bradley: I don't mean the member for Welland-Thorold, I mean the amendment. Certainly the member for Welland-Thorold is very attractive in the manner and length in which he speaks in this Legislature. Being from the Niagara peninsula, I have been subjected to his verbiage in the past; listening to his speeches in regional council and reading them. In many cases they do contain some rather good ideas and in many cases they do not.

But to get back to the hours, the change proposed would be to lengthen them by beginning at nine o'clock in the morning. As many other speakers have said, very few people, outside of perhaps a member of this Legislature who wants to vote and then leave for Queen's Park, very few electors in this province take advantage of the fact they can vote from nine o'clock to 11 o'clock in the morning.

The manner in which a municipal election differs from federal and provincial elections should be quite obvious to those who have had scrutineers present at the time of counting of the municipal ballots. When you have questions on the ballot, when you have the lengthy separate and public school boards lists, the regional council, and perhaps you have a county council as well as a city council, and so on, by the time the people have finished counting ballots in those areas which don't have voting machines—I must say that the city of St. Catharines has taken the progressive step of beginning a system of voting machines, although perhaps I am going out on a limb saying that now because we might well find out later on they are not working and then of course I will blame the local council of which I am no longer a member—however, to continue, this will not be such a problem in my constituency, but I am certain it would be in many other constituencies where the people would be there until midnight or one o'clock, or even two o'clock in the morning in very close elections doing the counting. To avoid this, I think we should remain with the present hours.

There is a large number of ballots. There is a large number of candidates. The hours are already long. If we take into consideration the fact that many of the people who work in these elections are rather elderly people, it would be unfair to keep these people unnecessarily longer; and I am not saying that we should bend the laws of elections simply because of the personnel involved, but I am saying it is a bit unfair and impractical to make their day longer.

Any movement which would change or extend the period of time during which voting proxy certificates may be obtained is good. As the election comes up many people are unclear about the rules for proxy voting. It is because they are unclear that they postpone getting themselves involved in this process only to find that it's then too late. Any extension of this particular period would again be a step in the right direction.

One aspect of the bill could cause problems. I don't think it's a major concern, but it is a concern nevertheless, and that is the stipulation about the hours during which a person may file nomination sheets. I think if it were to say "at regular office hours" it would perhaps clear up a lot of confusion. If it states by six o'clock or five o'clock in the afternoon it is confusing because many municipalities work different hours. It can be daylight saving time, it can be—well, it can't be, in this particular case, daylight saving time in November so there is no problem that way, but if we moved it into October it could be a problem.

I would be concerned about this, because some may operate from 10 to six; some may operate from nine to five, or eight to four. I think perhaps including "during regular office hours" would certainly be a benefit.

An obvious change, and I am sure it is housekeeping to a certain extent, is the aspect of the bill which clarifies that a DRO or a poll clerk can't be a candidate at the same time. I don't know whether this did occur somewhere to bring this forward, but certainly this is something that should be looked after rather quickly, because that could be a conflict of interest.

As we get into the amendments that have been proposed by members of this House, I will take the opportunity to make further comments. I am of the opinion there are a couple that are obviously good amendments. One that I think should be considered carefully is where a person's name is deleted from the voters' list, that that person should be so notified by registered letter. I think this is perhaps a positive step and one which might be overlooked in a bill which contains many other elements to it.

I have spoken generally in favour of this bill as a positive first step. I recognize, also, that it does not include any mention of controlling election expenses. I am somewhat concerned, because local councils do have the ability to change zonings. While I am not aware personally of any specific case where undue influence has been brought on a particular member of council by one who may have contributed to the election of that member to council, or board of education, whatever it might be, the opportunity is still there if that person is owed some monetary obligation by the person who has been elected.

So it might well be that at some time in the future we should be looking at this aspect of election expenses—

Mr. Davison: No time like the present.

Mr. Bradley: —by putting limitations on them and by having disclosure of those amounts over $100, a publication of those names, just as we have at the federal and provincial level. Perhaps this is not the right time to include it in this bill, but it is worthy of future consideration. I think the government should be implored to give that some consideration before the next election. There may be some aspects of municipal politics that are not similar to provincial politics, and therefore, we would not have exactly the same legislation.

I am generally in favour of the bill, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the debate and the exchanges as we look at the amendments.

Mr. G. I. Miller: My remarks will be brief, but I would like to make a little input into the debate. I feel that anything to encourage a great participation by the general voting public has to be the ultimate goal of this Legislature. As we all know, municipal elections aren't all that well participated in by the voting public at large.

Restrictions also have been applied by the government in power over the last years by bringing in regional government. This has eliminated many people from participating by giving their time. I know many people in my area would like to participate at the municipal level but, because of the workload of the councils under the regional system, it has prevented many of them from participating. I think that's a regressive step.

Mr. Bradley: I never thought of that. That's another reason why we need regional government.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I would like to think too that moving the voting day to the second Monday in November is a step in the right direction, because weather conditions can be miserable the first Monday in December, as has been proven so many times in the past.

By having the second Monday in November as our election day, it should be to the advantage of the electorate at large and it perhaps will contribute to a better participation by the public.

The one thing that does concern me is the fact that three weeks is allowed after nomination. That is a long period of time, and again it could be a time factor that could affect the participation of candidates who don't want to contribute three weeks of their time in being involved in an election. I question whether it is necessary to have that three-week period before the voting day.

Another point is that, since unity in Canada is a very serious question at this time, I think a person entitled to vote should be a Canadian citizen and perhaps the phrase "or other British subject" should be removed. The NDP has indicated that you should only live in Canada for one year, even as an immigrant, but I would have to disagree.

Mr. Warner: Who said that?

Mr. Martel: We didn't say that.

Mr. Deans: We're talking about municipal elections.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I think our citizenship shouldn't be taken lightly. It is something we should cherish, and we shouldn't be giving it away too freely.

On the other hand, I think we like to be identified as Canadians and perhaps the fact that a Canadian citizen should be the recognizing factor for being entitled to vote would be a good move at this particular time. It would show impartiality. No matter what nationality one is, it shows no partiality.

I believe this bill also permits scrutineers to be 16 years of age. Again, I think it is a step in the right direction to get our young people involved in our democratic system, which I feel is the greatest that can be provided for any country. I'm proud to think that our young people can get involved and I think they should get involved at an early age so they will understand the system. Anything we can do to encourage that is an improvement.

With those few brief comments, I would like to say again that we support the bill as it has been presented, perhaps with the exception of a uniform time. I know my colleagues who have spoken on it have said that 11 to 8 is perhaps enough time for the polls to be open. However, I think a little consistency with the provincial and federal elections would be beneficial and it would be less confusing. Perhaps an opening time of 9 to 8, or even 10 to 8, would give more people an opportunity to vote. For instance, if the Legislature is sitting and we have to wait until 11 for the polls to open, it wouldn't give us that opportunity. I think again maybe consideration should be given to uniform hours to correspond with the hours in provincial and federal elections. With those few comments, I would like to leave that with the bill.

I have one further comment. We have only had one week to study the bill. It was only presented to us one week ago which certainly doesn't give us much opportunity to research it and have any input on it.

[9:30]

Mr. Martel: Support our amendments then. We have looked at it.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I hope the government would take into consideration, as it presents bills, giving us more opportunity to research and prepare for debate on them.

Mr. Haggerty: I want to add a few comments to Bill 99, An Act to Revise the Municipal Elections Act.

Mr. Martel: What is this? A filibuster?

Mr. Haggerty: It looks like it.

Mr. Martel: They want time to read the bill tomorrow.

Mr. Haggerty: I do want to concur with some of the previous speakers that it is time to advance the election date for municipal elections in Ontario. Perhaps November is not suitable to some of us, but it is a step in the right direction. Perhaps October is the month. The argument put forth by some of the previous speakers, or even the Treasurer, is that we may have difficulties in enumeration. Maybe we should be looking at the policy established in the United States. I am a strong believer that we should have pre-registration for elections in Ontario.

Many times when a candidate is out in a municipal election, or even a provincial election knocking on doors, he meets people who have no interest at all in casting a ballot. I think it is rather important that persons running for office—and they are dedicated persons who take on this task of representing the people in municipalities—should know the persons among those they are contacting who are really interested in going to polls to vote on that day. There could be a saving to the province of Ontario, and even to municipalities, by having a pre-registration day for voting, so that one knows the persons who are likely to cast ballots on that day.

I am a little bit alarmed there is nothing in the Act that would include other communities in Ontario having the right to elect a council. I am speaking of the unorganized communities in northern Ontario. We have been promised a bill for two or three years now to give them representation and local government rule, but to this day the government has not brought in a bill to give them that opportunity to be represented at a local level.

I am a little bit alarmed also at explanatory note No. 12 which says: "Notices required under the Act may, at the option of the municipality, be printed in the French language in addition to the English language." It refers to section 119. Let's take a look at that particular section. I think this is a step in the right direction that we do have the forms printed in both French and English. It is necessary in certain communities in the province of Ontario. I can think of the city of Welland and even the city of Port Colborne. There are a number of French-speaking people in those communities.

But, let's just see what section 119 of the Act says: "The minister may by order prescribe the forms required for the purposes of this Act, which forms may be in both the English and French languages. Any notices required to be posted, published or mailed under the Act may, in addition to being printed in the English language, be printed in the French language. The use in a municipality of forms prescribed in the French language under subsection 1, or the printing of notices in the French language under subsection 2, shall be determined by bylaw of the council of the municipality."

When one looks at that, it says, "the minister may by order prescribe." I have often heard of the expression in the House that we are looking for local autonomy, but when the minister has the right to step in and to interfere further in municipal laws—one might call it that—or operations or functions of local council where he "may by order prescribe the forms," I think that is going a little bit too far. At present municipal councils and electors are intelligent enough to make that decision themselves at that level. I would like to see that particular section, section 119, removed to permit having it in French and English where it is necessary.

The other concern is the glossy references that were made to the member for Welland-Thorold. I might go a step further and say after all he is the "father of confederation" in the Niagara region, one of those responsible for regional government in the Niagara region. He is knowledgeable in this particular area.

Mr. Davidson: You're kidding.

Mr. Haggerty: Oh definitely; one of these times we may secede from the rest of Canada too, you never can tell.

Mr. Davidson: On a regional council basis.

Mr. Haggerty: To get back to local autonomy and the financing of municipal elections, I am quoting here from the AMO, which has asked the government to give consideration to limits on the size of donations from a single source, independent verification, publication of campaign finances and tax credits to contributors. In many municipalities where there is a strong mayoralty contest there is a large amount of money spent. I suggest there should be some accountability as to where these funds are coming from.

The matter of the three-year term was considered at the meeting with the MLC and AMO. They suggest that a three-year term is acceptable to them. If we look at the records of elections in Ontario we find about 50 per cent of the previous council is usually returned to office, so you have continuing experience at the council table. About 25 per cent of the members running for a municipality office are returned or accepted by affirmation, so there shouldn't be any difficulty in accepting the three-year term.

It has been spoken of before. Sometimes a new person elected to council needs that experience and perhaps during a two-year period he just gets his feet wet, he gains experience and he is ready to continue with what he thinks is best for the community. I think there is nothing wrong with extending municipal office to a three-year term; even Robarts has recommended a three-year term and suggested perhaps it should include the larger municipalities. Perhaps we should have something in this Act to say that any municipality of 75,000 or over should be entitled to a three-year term for council. I see nothing wrong with that. I hope there is an amendment to consider that.

The other area that I would like to discuss is the ward system, mentioned in section 21. Under the region of Niagara bill there is some difficulty if a municipality, for example, wants to establish a ward system within a municipality. They have to go through much red tape to have boundaries for a ward system established. They must have a hearing before the Ontario Municipal Board, and you are looking at perhaps two or three years for approval. I suggest that something should be in this bill, so that if by resolution of council they call for a ward system, then I think that should be granted. We talk about local autonomy, and this is one area where if the municipality wants a ward system it should be granted.

On the advance polls, I think the member for Welland-Thorold suggested that should be changed. There should be two days for advance polls in municipal elections. They should be spread so that enough persons would have sufficient options as to when they will vote. Perhaps it should be an all-day Saturday advance poll and one evening session.

The member for St. Catharines (Mr. Bradley) discussed the long hours of the poll clerks and of those working in the polls. I would leave the polling time from 11 o'clock in the morning to 8 o'clock at night as at present.

The Act says the clerk has the right to supply equipment for polling places. I think there should be a clear understanding in the Act that accessibility must be made available to those persons who are disabled, persons in wheelchairs. I can recall in the last provincial election that I, myself, along with my candidate, had to pick a chap up in a wheelchair and go up a large flight of stairs. I'll tell you, it was a tough go for both of us to get him up there—what some people won't do to get a vote.

I think there should be easy accessibility to the polling places. Above all they should be kept at ground level. Regarding the matter of the long hours for the people working in the polls, I think meals should be supplied by the municipality. For many persons working in the polls it's a long day. They go almost until midnight counting the ballots, if you're including two school boards, the regional councillors, local councils, mayor, and the council-at-large. You could also have utility commissions being elected. There's a number of them and there are quite a few ballots to be counted. I suggest some consideration be given to those persons working in the polls and meals be supplied.

Regarding the matter raised previously that there should be two nomination dates set, I think one is sufficient. Also under the present Act I believe you have to have 10 electors sign a candidate's slip for him to qualify as a member running for council. I'm not too happy with that type of section in the bill. I believe I'd like to see the old method, the old nomination night in municipalities when the previous councils had to stand up. It was their accountability night. I know many persons throughout the community haven't had an opportunity to question some of these councillors about their term of office for the past two years. I believe at nomination night they have to really show their colours and be accountable.

This new method of bringing in 10 persons to sign a candidate's slip, I just can't see that as much benefit to the electors in the community. There's very little press coverage given to that particular day of official acceptance of the candidates. I would suggest maybe this area should be changed, it should go back to the old way of being accountable to the taxpayer. I see no reason why we should have two nomination days as mentioned by the member for Welland-Thorold.

One of the difficulties I find facing councils today is the matter of the municipal budget. If we moved the election date up to November so they can take office on December 1, as my colleague from St. George has discussed and brought to the attention of the members debating the issue tonight, it may alleviate this difficulty. I find today, under the present circumstances, a municipality has a difficulty in bringing in a budget, in some cases before the end of June. I can remember in my days on council we used to have the budget prepared at the latest by March 1 of that year. Even school boards used to have their budget in by that time. But since the regional government came into the Niagara Peninsula, we find sometimes the regional budget is not struck until sometime in June. This causes some undue hardship to the local councils in establishing or setting their mill rate and getting out their tax notices.

At one time municipalities used to give the taxpayer a break if he could pay his taxes sometime in January. The municipality I represented, even Welland county council, used to have it in their bylaw that if you paid your county taxes at the beginning of the year there was a certain rebate given. The reason was a municipality was not required, in a sense, to go to the bank and borrow some heavy financing to carry on for a period of six months. I'll tell you municipalities going to the bank early in December now will carry a heavy financial load at a cost to the taxpayers. I suggest there must be some other method of financing this.

The province comes in with its commitment to the municipalities and the region comes in with its budget much earlier than they have been in the past. I think it's time we looked at the matter of the fiscal year of the province and the calendar year of the municipalities. Perhaps they should be consistent with one another, with one following the other just as the province has. I throw these out to the members here tonight who might give them some consideration.

In all, I support the bill in principle. I'd like to see the date advanced to October 2, but I do support the bill in principle.

Mr. Samis: I'd like to make a few comments on the bill. Some of the main matters have obviously been covered by previous speakers with regard to such things as an earlier voting date in the fall. In our particular part of the province, we are sometimes susceptible to storms such as was experienced in Windsor, so obviously we would support that. The idea of the uniform voting day is essential, because an essential problem in municipal politics and the whole concept of municipal democracy is the degree or lack of participation in voting and in the whole democratic process.

For example, I happened to notice in the province of Quebec, they had elections on Sunday. They have tried to use Sunday as a device to stimulate more public participation, assuming more people would be off work. Even there, in the city of Montreal and in Quebec City, the voter turnout is seldom beyond 40 to 45 per cent. I know in the city of Montreal, the average is generally between 25 and 35 per cent. We're talking of budgets of over $1 billion or $2 billion and with a turnout of that sort my feeling would be if we were to diversify the dates, even if it were just two or three in one particular year, it would seriously weaken the public focus and public interest. I would strongly support the idea of a uniform voting day in the province of Ontario.

My colleague from Welland-Thorold has pointed out some of the amendments he intends to introduce with regard to the idea of extended hours for people to vote.

One aspect I would like to focus on is the lack of public financing in this bill. It seems to me, there's an essential difference between municipal politics and any other form of politics as practiced in this country. When a person decides to enter, he enters as an individual. He has no organization or political party backing him. He has to start at the very basis of the individual contacts and build up his own organization or group to finance the campaign and get himself known.

Obviously, when you're on the council, you have the automatic advantage of publicity, your record and public exposure. An individual who wants to break into politics at the municipal level has no set organization to start from. Provincially we start off with a party label. Most of us have a riding association or riding organization, already established in advance that we can use. We have a provincial leader who will focus attention on our party. The provincial media will help focus attention on our party. We're given free-time political broadcasts. We're given, frequently, space in newspapers to get the party message across.

All these things give a candidate at the provincial or federal level tremendous advantages over someone running municipally. I think it's extremely important that the municipal level barrier that prevents a lot of people from getting involved, namely the lack of funds, or the fear that somebody might go deeply into debt if they were to run a good campaign, has to be removed.

If you put that in the context of a two-year election, the fact we're not going to extend it to three years or four years means we're focusing on the idea people should participate as much as possible and as frequently as possible and have the council and the local government as responsible as possible to the electorate. That means more elections and obviously that means more money and necessitates organization, advertising, et cetera. I think it's on that basis something has to be done to allow somebody of modest or ordinary means, modest financial resources, to participate.

I happen to know, in some municipalities just beyond my riding, of some people who did offer themselves for public office. A couple were successful but decided to drop out because they just couldn't afford to run a second or third time because they were working class people. They weren't businessmen, they weren't lawyers, they weren't contractors; they had rather modest incomes. Democracy should afford equal opportunity for those who want to get involved, and not make it on the basis of their pocketbook or their financial capacity but on their ability and willingness to serve.

If the Treasurer argues, as he did in his meetings, that this would cost the government more money and that the province shouldn't get involved in financing at this level, then obviously there are ways of getting around that if there is not going to be direct financing.

First of all, I think every citizen in this province has a right to know who is financing political campaigns. In 1974 the federal government, the Liberals of all people, obviously because they were a minority government and because they were forced into it by David Lewis and the NDP, did come across with an election financing bill that did give the people of Canada the opportunity to find out who was financing the political parties. I notice there was a report came out from the election officer, I believe it was two weeks ago, informing us how much money had been raised by the three political parties nationally and how it was broken down between corporations, individuals, unions, businesses, et cetera.

I think that's extremely important, because there is an awful lot of cynicism in politics that he who pays the shot calls the shot. Too many people are answerable to backroom boys, financiers, lawyers, contractors, patronage seekers, ward heelers and people of that type.

We have to open up the political process. We have to make the people realize that this era of backroom politics, of deals, of payoffs and control via the dollar, has to end. We have done a reasonably good job of opening up the political process federally, we have done a reasonable job provincially; but we have left the municipal scene untouched. I think that's a major fault of this piece of legislation. There is no initiative to try to get some form of public disclosure on financial contributions.

I dare say if we applied the same standards to the municipal level as we use federally and provincially, namely $100 maximum from an undisclosed source, that would still protect the anonymity of those who want to contribute to a personal friend, whether it's $25 or $50; yet it would still give the possibility, if some contractor or somebody wants to influence one candidate or bankroll a candidate, of the citizens knowing who is giving $2,000 or $5,000 or $10,000 to one particular candidate. The people are the ones who will pay for it after the election, when the contracts are awarded or the patronage is given out, or under-the-table deals are made. I also think if we are not prepared to fund candidates publicly, we should devise some formula for some degree of control on advertising.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is talking about something that isn't in the bill rather than speaking to the principle.

Mr. Samis: I am suggesting an inadequacy in the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: That's out of order on second reading.

Mr. Davidson: He is speaking to the principle.

Mr. Samis: The principle is that the government should not become involved in any aspect of financing in this bill.

Mr. Speaker: It is a principle that is non-existent in the bill.

Mr. Samis: Let me suggest, Mr. Speaker, that one of the inadequacies of the bill is the absence of any involvement in this aspect of municipal elections.

Mr. Foulds: Good, well put.

Mr. Samis: I obviously deplore that absence and that inadequacy. I will not prolong it beyond saying I think that's a fundamental weakness in the bill.

In closing I would like to deal with another aspect that was mentioned by my colleague from Erie just previously, that is the absence of sufficiently strong wording for the clause dealing with the printing of notices whereby it says that it may be done in English or French. Coming from a riding where the two languages are officially represented at the local level, where our population is almost evenly divided, where there has for too long been an attitude in some municipalities, especially where franco-Ontarians constitute the minority, I find their rights are dependent upon the goodwill or the good nature or the disposition of the majority. If they are sufficiently well organized or powerful or influential or connected, then it will be published in their language. But if they are not economically powerful enough, then they have to depend totally on the goodwill of the majority.

In 1977, considering the national situation, considering what's been done in the province of New Brunswick in terms of language rights and considering what has to be done in the province of Ontario, I think the days of that concept of depending on the goodwill of the majority, or hoping they will condescend to publish it in both languages so that people can read it, have to come to an end.

This is Canada 1977. In a year of federal-provincial relations and the obvious challenge to our national unity, I don't think we can continue that particular concept. I wholeheartedly commend and support my colleague from Welland-Thorold for his amendment and for his desire and struggle to get, as a compulsory, mandatory, obligatory regulation in this bill, the publication of all notices for electoral purposes in English and French.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few comments on the bill. While it is very difficult to say something that hasn't been repeated—and maybe repeated a second, third, or fourth time—I do want to make mention that one of the reasons the bill is before us is the snowfall in the city of Windsor back in 1974 and the inability to get someone with authority who could have postponed that election for one and/or two days.

I can recall my own personal involvement in that situation. I was contacted by the city clerk the day before the election and I attempted to get in touch with the Hon. John White, who was the Treasurer at the time. After a series of phone calls, the operator at Queen's Park did get hold of him and the municipal clerk, John Adamac, did have a fairly lengthy conversation with the Hon. John White. But nothing could be done; no one seemed to have any authority.

In this bill authority is going to be given to the city clerk to use his own discretion as to whether the election date should or should not be postponed. I know there is some concern on the part of some members that he may not exercise his discretion as carefully as they would like him to exercise it. But, knowing John Adamac back in the city of Windsor, I have no fear for that at all.

Mr. Foulds: Where is the cabinet for this important bill?

Mr. B. Newman: One of the portions of the bill makes mention of election day, and the advancing of the election day approximately three weeks is a step in the right direction. And if the three weeks doesn't prove to be in the best interests of the electorate, then I see no reason why at some future date we couldn't advance that once again and put it at an earlier date if necessary.

Mr. Foulds: Always do everything by halves; if necessary, by quarters.

Mr. B. Newman: The bill does have a whole series of clauses that do concern me. I don't intend to bring all of them to your attention, Mr. Speaker, but I do refer to section 18 of the bill, which says, "a polling subdivision shall not, so far as is practicable, contain more than 350 electors . . ."

There is nothing wrong with the number 350, but if you have approximately 10 candidates for the mayoralty, up to 40 running for council with an election at large, another 10 or 15 running for the utilities commission, more than 20 running for the public school board and the same for the separate school board, and then another 10 or 15 running to be separate school representatives on the public board, you can have 60 to 70 candidates, plus any questions that may be on the ballot.

Mr. Laughren: Trudeau called it participatory democracy.

Mr. B. Newman: It's nice to see so many individuals involved in the running during an election; that doesn't disturb me one bit. What does disturb me is that having 350 electors in a poll sounds like too large a number. The poll should be substantially smaller. Rather than the 350, I would use a maximum of 250. In that way the deputy returning officer and the poll clerk are not liable to make as many, or any, mistakes. They will not have to work as hard, the line-ups will not be as long, and they would do their work with despatch and with maximum efficiency.

[10:00]

If you do have an awfully long list of names and a large number of electors from one poll, it makes it extremely difficult to operate well. I know from the little experience I've had in both municipal and provincial elections that the large polls are the polls in which everything seems to operate much more slowly. If mistakes are made at all, they're generally made in those larger polls. I would have preferred to have seen a smaller number than 350 electors per poll. I know that can be taken care of when we go into a clause-by-clause study of the bill.

One of the other points that concerns me with the legislation is the need for uniformity. I'm pleased that, wherever possible, the bill does attempt to make uniform procedures as between the Municipal Elections Act and the provincial Act. That is a step in the right direction. I would think that the next step would be at the federal level so that all three follow the same type of procedures. The printing of the names is exactly the same. The numbering uses the same principle. The reverse printing is exactly the same. The size of the circle opposite or at the end of the name and everything else should be as close as possible to the procedures in the other two elections that are held.

In other words, municipal, provincial and federal elections should use paper exactly the same and so forth so that, once an individual gets the pattern of voting, he isn't confused when he comes from a provincial election into a municipal election. Municipally, we have a whole series of ballots. I think that's a better procedure than the American system where you have the bed-sheet which makes it extremely complicated.

Mr. Roy: That's unparliamentary.

Mr. B. Newman: Maybe the paper should be coloured on the one side, so that at least if the ballot sheet is turned over then one knows whether this is a ballot for the mayoralty as opposed to the utilities or any one of the other elective offices.

Mr. Philip: Coloured paper causes pollution in the sewage system.

Mr. B. Newman: As far as polling subdivisions are concerned, the bill makes mention that each polling subdivision should be in a place "that is most central or most convenient for the electors and is furnished with light and heat and such other accommodations and furniture as may be required." That is generally provided. The thing that does concern me a bit is that quite often the rooms are small, if it's in a private home.

Mr. Foulds: There isn't a cabinet minister in the House.

Mr. Laughren: Where is the cabinet? Where did the cabinet go?

Mr. Pope: You guys don't want them.

Mr. Speaker: Will the member for Nickel Belt stop mumbling?

Mr. B. Newman: If they are in a school, there is practically always a substantial number of steps to climb up or to go down. That makes it a handicap for not only those who are physically handicapped, but also for the elderly climbing any types of steps. In every community during a general election or a municipal election there should be some polling subdivisions on a ground floor to which anyone that is handicapped should be allowed to go whether he resides in that polling subdivision or not. He should be given a transfer certificate so that he could go into another polling subdivision and not inconvenience himself.

Further to that, I think there should be drive-in voting. There is no reason why a handicapped person couldn't sit in the car and the election officers come to the individual, check his name, give him the ballot, allow him to mark the ballot and then put it right in the box. There is nothing wrong with that at all. We do that with our money in the banks. We do that in the post office.

Mr. Haggerty: Have a credit card.

Mr. B. Newman: But we don't do it in probably the most important expression of democracy that we have, that is, the right to cast a ballot. The individual who is handicapped should have exactly the same rights as those of us who are blessed with not being disabled in any fashion, other than maybe—speaking for myself only, Mr. Speaker.

I think we have got to look at the handicapped. We want them to exercise their franchise, and yet we don't make it convenient for them. This is one of the things that is lacking in the bill—and maybe I should not be speaking on it because it is lacking in the bill, but if there is a possibility of an amendment when it comes to clause-by-clause study, I hope that will be taken into consideration by the member who is piloting the bill and that such an amendment will be put in there to convenience the handicapped people who want to exercise the franchise.

The bill lowers the age of scrutineers to 16 years. I think that is a good, forward step. As one of the previous speakers mentioned, we want to interest our youth in the democratic process. So we are going to have to attract them into the polling subdivisions and having them as scrutineers, I think, is a good thing. Maybe we should allow high school students, to sit in at polling subdivisions, not necessarily only as scrutineers but as observers so they can see the whole electoral process and, as a result, go back better informed and maybe pass that information on to their fellow students.

I notice the bill also states: "In municipalities having more than 5,000 electors, the clerk shall mail or cause to be delivered to each dwelling unit in the municipality a notice advising the elector or electors therein of the location of the polling place in which that elector or those electors is or are to vote."

That is good, it has been done in the municipalities. But I just cannot understand, when we have this in the Municipal Elections Act, why we don't follow exactly the same procedure when it comes to provincial elections. I think the same thing should be done there.

There is no reason why each of the three, four, five or six political parties should go ahead and send the same information to each of the electors when the chief returning officer—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the member will heed his own admonition and stick to the principle of this bill. We are not talking about provincial elections.

Mr. B. Newman: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I will return to it, but I make the point that we have to look at other things when we are looking at this. We also hope the member piloting the bill through will pass this bit of information to the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) and take that into consideration.

Mr. Bradley: Who is in charge over there?

Mr. Warner: If you can find him. He is hiding somewhere.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I did make mention of drive-in voting not being in the bill. I think it should be in the bill to permit the use of a car to drive up and vote at a polling subdivision.

Mr. Davison: How about public transit voting?

Mr. Bradley: Who is the acting Premier?

An hon. member: George, you have been promoted.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, that essentially was what I was going to say concerning this bill, other than that schools and churches are not necessarily always the best locations for polling subdivisions. One of the bad features about the use of schools and churches is that they may put six polls in the area in one school. As a result, people have to come from a greater distance to vote. All you are doing, by doing that, is discouraging people from coming out to vote. Recalling the snowstorm in the city of Windsor back in 1974, I can understand why quite a few people did not go out to vote. In addition to the snowstorm and the inconvenience it caused, the fact that people had to travel almost a mile, and maybe even a lot farther than a mile—and I am referring to an urban voter, not a rural voter—doesn't encourage an individual to exercise his franchise.

The other comments I would have liked to make, but which you have ruled out of order, Mr. Speaker, had to do with the limitation on election expenses and the publishing of the contributions.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, we are on the municipal elections bill—

Mr. Riddell: Remember the three Ss.

Mr. Laughren: I want to get through this debate quickly and get on with the bill on occupational health. I'll do what I can to speed up the debate. I would like to add my support as a northern member to the 45-day interval between Labour Day and the municipal election date as put forth by my colleague from Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart). It was driven home to me this last weekend when I was laying a wreath on Friday, November 11. The snow was blowing down my neck and into my shoes and all parts of my body were frigid. I couldn't help but think that the Treasurer or his people who drafted the bill, hadn't spent much time in northern communities around the middle of November.

I really do believe that northern communities do have a right to have a greater input into this. It may not matter very much to the southern communities whether it's the middle of October or the middle of November. Therefore, their views are not as important as the views of those in the north to whom it really is important whether or not it's the middle of October or the middle of November.

It would not have cost the Treasurer anything to have moved back the date as suggested by my colleague. That is what should have been done. It would not have interfered with the provincial or federal elections. If it had, then let the federal and provincial people take note that that is an automatic date every year. They can take that into consideration when they are setting their election date. There is no reason that could not have been done. It's a sensible suggestion.

The other question is the whole one about the time off from work to go to the polls. Three hours seems to me to be most reasonable. We all know the problem of getting people at municipal elections out to vote. The percentage turnout is abysmally low, so we must do what we can to increase the turnout. That is just one way. I know it is not the ultimate way; the ultimate way, of course, is to introduce party politics at the municipal level, so that people know what the municipal politicians are standing for. They stand for a platform with certain policies, therefore it would encourage turnout at the polls.

Mr. Roy: You guys wouldn't get elected.

Mr. Laughren: That may be the opinion of the Liberal member.

Mr. Roy: They sneak in in the Ottawa riding.

Mr. Laughren: But I can assure you in the long run ratepayers at the municipal level are going to start demanding a different kind of return from municipal politicians. They are going to start saying, "We know something is wrong with the whole principle of property taxation and that the determination is made in Queen's Park. It is not made at the municipal level." Sooner or later that is going to start sinking in. Sooner or later politicians in Queen's Park are not going to be able to use municipal politicians as scapegoats for increased property taxation. That is going to happen. It is already happening now.

The more we can increase participation at the municipal level in elections then I think it serves us all better, because we will get the message more clearly here at Queen's Park as well. It is fine to say that the municipalities are creatures of the province and if that is the case, it certainly is under the BNA Act, then we have an obligation to listen to those people, and to listen to those politicians much more closely than we do at present.

The only other point I would like to make is the whole question of a limit on expenditures and full disclosure, requirement for disclosure, and the right of the municipality to make that determination. I would suggest it should be a requirement under the Municipal Act, not even left to the discretion of the municipalities. But I could certainly support my colleague that it be at the discretion of the municipality.

[10:15]

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, when I talk about party politics at the municipal level, it permeates the whole municipal scene in, well, almost an under-the-surface kind of way. Right now at the municipal level there is party politics and it does involve the expenditures and it does involve disclosure, because the establishment in municipal politics in the province of Ontario by and large is Tory. By and large, the Conservative government in Ontario has done a very good job of wooing and attracting municipal politicians. One need only look at the Conservative benches—and I don't say that in a disgruntled kind of way. I say it in an envious kind of way.

Mr. Davidson: The working man can't pay for the campaign, that's why.

Mr. Lewis: You could say it in a disparaging way.

Mr. Laughren: They have a very good job. There is the odd exception such as my friend who is our critic and my colleague from Sudbury and others from this party who have been very active in municipal politics, but by and large we know that as long as the bulk of municipal politicians represent the Tories there is a need for disclosure and a limit on expenditures in municipal elections. It's as simple as that.

Mr. Germa: Especially in Thunder Bay.

Mr. Laughren: That's right. There's probably no better example than Thunder Bay.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Thunder Bay is an example. Imagine if there was disclosure in Thunder Bay.

Mr. Laughren: Ah!

Mr. Hennessy: I spent $140.

Mr. Laughren: That's why we need disclosure. Exactly.

Mr. Hennessy: I don't spend much.

Mr. Laughren: No, you don't. It's who spends it on your behalf that bothers us. That's what's bothering us.

Mr. Lewis: That's $140 at one lunch. What did you do for the rest of the time?

Interjection.

Mr. Laughren: And that's without food.

Mr. Speaker: Could we have some order? Perhaps the member for Nickel Belt would address his remarks either to the Chair or through the Chair.

Mr. Warner: Could we also have a cabinet minister?

Mr. Laughren: I'll try and do both, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Warner: That's asking too much.

Mr. Laughren: The final point I would make is the one that was made so well by my colleague from Cornwall (Mr. Samis), and in support of my colleague from Welland, that "any notices"—

Mr. Bradley: Welland-Thorold.

Mr. Laughren: Welland-Thorold.

Mr. Bradley: Don't forget the Thorold.

Mr. Laughren:—"that any notices required to be posted, published or mailed under this Act may be printed in both the English and the French languages." I happen to represent a bilingual-bicultural community myself and I would endorse wholeheartedly what my colleague has said, and as well, my colleague from Cornwall, because there has been an acceptance, just an acceptance, that whatever the majority is in that community—which of course is English—that's the way the decisions are made and everything else beyond that is permissive. I think that the amendment that will be put makes an excellent point and I think it's one that should be supported, not just by us but by the government and by the Liberal Party as well.

Mr. Roy: Many comments have been made about this bill and I don't intend to be repetitious on certain positive aspects of it. Certainly I for one am in favour of certain changes, as has been mentioned by the previous speaker, especially in the area of having bilingual notices and things of this nature. I don't see why it never existed before and frankly, it's a matter of paying a bit of attention to certain situations and certain matters of fact existing in a number of areas of this province.

I'm sorry that certain aspects of the suggestions we and the members to my left have made in the past as to election expenses and even extending in certain areas the term of council were not looked at in this legislation. But basically my only concern about the bill is something that I would have thought that the government across the way—and I'm pleased to see, Mr. Speaker, that we do have one cabinet member now in the House.

Mr. Lewis: She is asking herself why.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Right.

Mr. Roy: Yes, she is asking herself why. The participation on behalf of the government in the debate on this legislation certainly has not been something to be proud of. The front benches have been extremely weak.

Mr. Pope: You missed it.

Hon. B. Stephenson: The member for Oshawa East hasn't been there for long.

Mr. Roy: The thing that I can't quite understand with the legislation is the—what do you call that?—anachronism.

Mr. Havrot: Anachronism?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Anachronistic.

Mr. Roy: Anachronism, yes, I keep putting the accent on the wrong syllables. In section 12 and 13, I think it was mentioned by my colleague from Waterloo, that the government insists, when it talks about qualification of electors, about equating a Canadian citizen and a British subject. I would have thought that this was something that in 1977, in the context of Canadian politics, would be something we wouldn't have in this legislation. I'd really thought the government had gone past that, that its perception and its sensibility in that area had progressed to a stage where such things would have been changed.

Mr. Ashe: We don't understand what you are saying.

Mr. Roy: The reason I mention this is that—what's this?

Mr. Ashe: We don't understand what you're saying.

Mr. Roy: I don't understand what you're saying. Possibly you can educate me.

Mr. Havrot: You need one.

Mr. Roy: If the member for Durham West is the one who is trying to push this legislation through the House, I'm telling him right now he may have a problem and he may be facing an amendment. As I understand it, it says, "Qualifications of the elector:" I think I can read English as well as the member can, states: ". . . is a Canadian citizen or other British subject; . . ." That's in English. I'm sorry if I don't understand what that means.

I can recall debating the provincial Election Act back in 1974. At that time the minister piloting the legislation through the House was Mr. Irvine. He surprised us at that time when he said that in the provincial Act he intended to change it to make it strictly a Canadian citizen. He surprised us. I can recall it, and my colleague from Waterloo has the Hansard notes on this. I thought if they evolve that far when you can get that kind of thinking from a person like Don Irvine, in the area of the province he's from, I think we're getting on, we're starting to understand the aspect of Canadianism in this country. Unfortunately, what happened was, he promised us an amendment but never brought it in. Obviously he was not able to convince his colleagues in cabinet or his colleagues in caucus. This country has opened its arms to people from all over the world.

Mr. Speaker: You're straying from the principle of the bill. You're talking about what didn't happen in a provincial Act.

Mr. Pope: It's all academic. That is academic and you know it now.

Mr. Roy: It's all academic they say. I don't consider this to be an academic exercise. You, across the way, may consider this to be one.

Mr. Pope: What about the changes in the Citizenship Act?

Mr. Roy: What's this?

Mr. Pope: What about the changes in the Citizenship Act?

Mr. Roy: Yes, there have been changes to make it easier for one to become a Canadian citizen.

Mr. Pope: Right. You know it's academic now.

Mr. Davidson: Two wrongs make a right.

Mr. Roy: I can see some of the members across the way feeling somewhat uneasy but my point, basically, is this. Surely, in any level of government, the people who should elect their representatives should be Canadian citizens and we should take every step possible that Canadian citizens, no matter what their origin or country they're from, are treated equally. But we're not, when we continue this type of clause in legislation.

Mr. Pope: You don't know what you're talking about.

Mr. Roy: And it should be the criterion for voting in any election, whether it be provincial, municipal or federal. It should be strictly Canadian. We've taken steps, and the government federally has taken steps to make it easier to be a Canadian citizen.

I find it somewhat offensive at times. I don't want to be derogatory at all to people of British extraction. They have made a contribution to this country. But having made a contribution to this country, and wanting to stay in this country, there should be some positive encouragement to become Canadian citizens, and one of them should be to participate in the political process.

I say when we start looking at some of these things and when we start treating all citizens of this country, no matter what their place of origin, as Canadian citizens and encouraging them to become Canadian citizens through participation in the political process, then we will have evolved and progressed to what some of us at least anticipate or foresee this country should represent.

We should not allow this. I would hope my colleagues across the way, in spite of some of their comments, will support the amendment that will be brought forward, hopefully, changing this and limiting it to Canadian citizens, period. Certainly this is qualification enough to be a voter. I really can't see, and I am anxious to hear from some of the members across the way, what is offensive in having in a piece of legislation, whether it be provincial or federal or municipal, that the criterion to become a voter is that one be a Canadian and nothing else and nothing more.

Mr. Lewis: In the two minutes that are left, I am feeling my normal pre-conclusion spasm in these evening sittings. I want, therefore, to say to the parliamentary assistant that as I have sat and listened to this debate for a number of hours today, both to the participation of the New Democratic members and the Liberal members, it appears to me that the job cut out for him is rather greater than he anticipated. That has emerged during the course of the discussion on this bill.

I draw to the parliamentary assistant's attention: 1. that the consultative process was abjectly neglected by his ministry and by the province; 2. that the date the government has chosen is wrong; 3. that the tenure it has imposed is arbitrary; 4. that it has no provisions for disclosure or indeed for maximum spending in a bill of this kind; and 5. it has failed to take regard of the need for some emphasis on bilingual realities in the province of Ontario.

In other words, if we weren't of such passivity in this caucus, we would have worked ourselves up to an appropriate froth at this point of the night and opposed this blessed bill in principle. But, being men and women of reason, we will give the parliamentary assistant the opportunity next Tuesday to rescue this fiasco from the ashes to which it has been reduced by the collective brilliance of the combined opposition throughout the day today.

Mr. Warner: Perhaps the parliamentary assistant should consider resigning.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any further debate on second reading of Bill 98? Would someone care to move the adjournment of the debate?

Mr. Lewis: Have the parliamentary assistant do it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Is he the last speaker?

Mr. Lewis: I think so.

Mr. Speaker: If there are no further speakers, then the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Ashe: I would have to react to a lot of this rhetoric that was put forward. I am afraid I can't do it in 30 seconds.

Mr. Speaker: Would you care to move the adjournment of the debate?

On motion by Mr. Ashe, the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: Do you have an announcement? We have a late show.

Mr. Lewis: Several late shows.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 28, the member for Downsview and the member for Oakwood have filed the required notice of their dissatisfaction with answers to questions posed to the Minister of Education on November 10 concerning the heritage language program. A motion for adjournment is deemed to have been made. I will listen to the hon. member for Downsview for up to five minutes.

HERITAGE LANGUAGE PROGRAM

Mr. di Santo: Last Thursday I asked the Minister of Education a specific question about the heritage language program in the borough of North York, which is one of the boroughs of the province which has not accepted the provincial heritage language program along with other boroughs in Metro Toronto, like Etobicoke, Scarborough and East York. I asked the minister to clarify why it was the borough of North York didn't accept the program and whether the reasons they gave were not serious enough to have him reconsider the position of the government.

[10:30]

In fact, the North York board said on September 17 that they could not accept the program because it was not self-financing. They proposed that either the province would totally fund such programs or that the students would be charged $25 for the same programs. The minister said this is the way the continuing education programs work; it is based on sharing between provincial and local governments.

I want to tell the minister that the way this program has been implemented by the ministry is not only shameful but has been producing a negative impact in the community. The fact of the matter is that in the borough of North York alone the parents have been forced to set up third-language courses in 27 schools to date. Not only that, but the proposals of the board of education of North York are creating such a negative reaction that I can tell the House that there will be reactions, not only among the ethnic groups but also among the English-speaking groups. As a matter of fact, if one reads today's newspapers one already can notice that there are reactions in that sense. In fact, a headline in the Globe and Mail reads: "Parents Worry Heritage Program Could Harm Basic Skills."

If the government doesn't become serious and implement this program in a way that will respond to a need which is there in the community, and the fact that thousands of children are organizing themselves and paying for their courses, it will create a serious division and a serious resentment in the community.

If the school boards ask the parents of the children to pay for the courses, I think that would be highly unfair. Either we think those courses are necessary and are a public service, and therefore they should be funded publicly, or we think they are not necessary and they should have been left out of the election promises that the Conservatives made in May.

If the school boards increase property taxes, then the government will be responsible, because that will produce reactions among the other parents whose children are not benefiting from these courses. In both cases, the way the government has promised these courses and the way it is implementing them, they are becoming a negative factor in our community. It will raise serious apprehensions among the ethnic groups and the other citizens of this province.

I ask the minister at this point that he assure this House and the people in the province, especially the ethnic minorities, that this government is serious about the business of the third language. If he does so, I hope the minister will give us an assurance that the whole program was not just an election promise but was something serious towards creating a multicultural society in which we truly believe—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. di Santo: —and I hope that the government will seriously consider it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Is there not another question?

Mr. Speaker: They were separate motions that were introduced for different reasons: in fairness, I think you should respond to the remarks of the member for Downsview.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to respond to the remarks of the member for Downsview, because I think that I can appreciate his enthusiasm for wanting to serve his constituents. That certainly is well placed. The borough of North York anticipate they will be starting classes in January. I think it's incumbent upon him to work with the community groups and the North York Board of Education to see that these programs are set up in the way that the community wants.

We established this heritage language program, as we had announced many times in this House, as part of our total multiculturalism in education program. We laid out the ground rules. We felt it was better to support parent groups, working with school boards, to give a degree of continuity and to give a degree of supervision to these programs.

Mr. di Santo: But you have not paid.

Hon. Mr. Wells: We have, however, left it up to the—

Mr. di Santo: You are not paying.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —boards of education and the community groups to establish the programs. The city of Toronto has about 402 classes with nearly 10,000 students who will be taking part in this program.

Mr. di Santo: What about North York?

Mr. Lupusella: Where is your leadership in those programs?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The borough of York has 34—I've just explained to the member that the borough of North York has said it is hoping to have something ready by January.

Mr. Foulds: Hope springs eternal in the human breast.

Mr. di Santo: Yes, one program—

Hon. Mr. Wells: We over here, and a lot of the members opposite, believe in the democratic principles and the rights of people working with their boards. It's all the essence of the community school principle and so forth. All I say to the member is, work with the people and work with the elected trustees in North York to get this program going.

Ms. Gigantes: The rights of people who pay for school programs.

Hon. Mr. Wells: We've laid out the ground rules—

Mr. di Santo: But you are depriving people of their rights.

Hon. Mr. Wells: We've laid out the grants and I have used my influence—

Mr. Lupusella: Why don't you organize them? You are the Minister of Education. You should provide guidelines.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I've used my influence to encourage and ask boards to take this program. We're not going to force them to take the program and we're not going to change the grant structure. So the member may as well get that clear.

Mr. di Santo: You have reduced the grants, exactly.

Hon. Mr. Wells: With those two principles established, the city of Toronto and 37 other boards in this province have seen fit to move ahead in this program.

Mr. Lupusella: That's how the fiction has been created.

Hon. Mr. Wells: So let's get off all this carping. How about the member working with the North York board to get the program established up there?

Ms. Gigantes: Seventy cents.

Mr. Lupusella: Why don't you change the formula then?

Mr. di Santo: Twenty-five per cent.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Let the member work with the North York board. We've already told the board; the member just needs to do a little work with them. Let's talk for a minute about this grant situation. The member keeps talking about "all that we're paying to the city of Toronto and the Metro boards". At the rate of grant that we're paying the Metro board to have a full heritage language program, it would only cost the taxpayers another two or three dollars on their taxes. That's all. That's all it would cost. And that's certainly—

Mr. Grande: Seventy-five per cent of our money.

Hon. Mr. Wells: With 75 per cent of the cost borne at the local level, with the high commercial base in Metropolitan Toronto it would only cost another two or three dollars a year.

Ms. Gigantes: You go out and get elected to a board on that.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Don't try to tell me that it's unfair and that our rate of grant is unfair because it is not. It is an equitable situation. If the member believes in equality—

Mr. Lupusella: The formula is unfair.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —he'll believe in the way we've handled our grants for this particular program.

Mr. Warner: Nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Let him cut out all his talking in the House, and instead of carping at the program, go out and help in North York to get the program established—help, like some of the other people have helped to get it established. Then, perhaps, we'll be worthy of a little support from the community.

Mr. Lupusella: That's what we are doing and there was no reaction coming from them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oakwood for up to five minutes.

Mr. Grande: The minister tonight is in a fighting mood, so let's keep on with that kind of a mood. On May 19, 1977—and that was, by the way, during the election campaign—the Premier (Mr. Davis) made his first election promise to a full house of ethnic press reporters, during which he unveiled the multicultural policy—

Hon. Mr. Wells: You are wrong—March 29.

Mr. Grande: May 7.

Hon. Mr. Wells: March 29.

Mr. Grande: All right. There is a speech by the Premier and I can prove that.

Hon. Mr. Wells: All right, on March 29, the program was announced.

Mr. Lupusella: Which was a political ploy.

Mr. Grande: Anyway, what happened was that on June 15, 1977, the Minister of Education sent a memorandum to the directors of education and principals in the schools. This memorandum was received by the principals and directors on June 27 and June 28, 1977.

The Minister of Education understands that at that particular time of the school year the schools are ready to close. So that meant no action was going to be taken during the summer and in September, when the principals arrived back in the school, what they found was that they had a memorandum on their desks which was, in essence, meaningless. It gave no details whatsoever in terms of the funding, it gave no details whatsoever in terms of how the school boards were going to set up these heritage language programs.

I talked to the minister before about demonstrating leadership in that ministry and he says that the leadership ought to be at the local level. Well, fine. Then let him react to what the local level said. Because, if nothing else, these heritage language programs represent what the local boards of education had been saying to the minister for the past five years. And, by the way, it was in 1975 that he first told me in this Legislature that the multicultural policy was going to be announced within two months. He came in May 1977, two full years later, to make that announcement.

Mr. Pope: March 29.

Hon. Mr. Wells: March.

An hon. member: Two years later, no matter how you read it.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, very quickly, because we just have five minutes here, on October 6, 1977, when the Minister of Education went to the Toronto Board of Education, at the meeting where 300 parents were present, the Minister of Education was quoted in the Toronto Star as saying, "Bring me some cases and we will investigate. I want to know why they are not providing the program." And "they" meant the school boards.

I wrote to the different boards of education in Metropolitan Toronto, in Ottawa, in Windsor, in London and in the major urban centres. The answers are:

North York: "We cannot start the program. The funding is limited. What we need is full funding for this program."

The Scarborough Board of Education—and that happens to be the board of education from where the minister comes—says: "We feel that the grant is not sufficient as it pays for only 25 per cent of the costs in Metro. The Metro taxpayers should not be forced to pay the difference." And it says, "A satisfactory solution would be for the Ministry of Education to pay 100 per cent of the cost of these programs."

The East York Board of Education says exactly the same thing—that the minister ought to be providing full funding for these programs.

The Etobicoke Board of Education—exactly the same thing.

An editorial in the Toronto Star titled "Wells Gets Praise But City Gets the Bills" points out to the minister that the 25 per cent of the provincial funds that go to the public school boards is certainly not enough to encourage these boards of education to set up the programs. I was telling the minister the same things during the estimates but he would not believe it.

Mr. McClellan: Two-bit Wells.

Mr. Lupusella: The programs are in jeopardy.

Mr. Grande: Here is the reaction from the parents.

I received a call a few weeks ago from the Mississauga Separate School Board. There is a petition with the names of about 35 parents and the school says to these parents, "No, we are not going to set up these programs."

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, if I may have one final sentence, that is: Take a look at the funding; go towards full funding. If the minister cannot go toward full funding, at least begin to set up a grant specifically for the heritage language program, because otherwise this is going to be a failure. Something we have been working for for five years is going to be a total failure and the responsibility must rest only with the minister.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, since we are in the mood for reading letters, let me read a letter which says, in part, "Although most of these classes are still being organized, it is anticipated that we will be providing the program for somewhere between 10,000 and 20,000 students. It is expected that the present grant scheme will be adequate, provided we are able to maintain the instructional costs at a reasonable level and the enrollments do not fall between 15 and 20 pupils per class and that the ministry does not impose a limitation on the grants as proposed."

[10:45]

Mr. Grande: That's from the separate school board.

Mr. Lupusella: Who's that from?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The Metropolitan Toronto Separate School Board which will be operating one of the largest—

Mr. di Santo: That's unfair. They had the program last year.

Mr. Speaker: Do you want to hear the answer?

Hon. Mr. Wells: All right, my friends, just calm down. The Metropolitan Toronto Separate School Board is a school board in this province just like any other board, so remember that.

Mr. di Santo: But they had a program last year.

Hon. Mr. Wells: What I am going to do in the few minutes that I have—and I understand that I have five minutes—is I am going to read to the hon. members, and put on the record, the boards that are now operating classes under the heritage language program in Ontario: Wentworth County, Lincoln, Hamilton-Wentworth RCSS, Hamilton, Niagara South, Norfolk, Welland County, Lincoln County, Windsor, Lambton County, Wellington County, Lakehead District RCSS, Lakehead, Kenora, Brant, Oxford, Perth, Nipissing, Nipissing RCSS, Kirkland Lake, Hearst, Timmins, Ottawa, Ottawa RCSS, Renfrew, Frontenac, Leeds and Grenville, Northumberland and Newcastle, Peterborough County, Halton RCSS, Borough of York, Durham, York Region RCSS, Metropolitan Toronto Separate School Board and the Toronto Board of Education.

Ms. Gigantes: How many are new?

Hon. Mr. Wells: There are 27 different heritage languages being taught under the programs of those various boards—of course not all of them in one board but at different boards—and those languages are Arabic, Armenian, Chilean, Chinese, Cree, Croatia, Czech, Danish, Dutch, Estonian, Filipino, Greek, German, Hindi, Hungarian, Italian, Korean, Latvian, Lithuanian, Polish, Portuguese, Punjabi, Spanish, Slovak, Slovenian, Ukrainian and Welsh.

Mr. Foulds: I bet you don't even know the difference between Slovakian and Armenian.

Hon. Mr. Wells: It was our estimation, when we brought in this program, that we would have about 40,000 students enrolled across this province in the first year and for which we would pay grants. We will likely reach about 40,000 students and we will pay out about $2 million in grants. I don't think the program is a failure. I think we are starting on a very good, solid base and we will move from there.

OHIP OFFICE CLOSURE

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, I assume this is going to be the first of a series of evenings in which the minister will be appearing late before us over the OHIP situation in Windsor. We are simply not going to forget this very easily, I can tell you.

The Minister of Health on Thursday last guillotined the staff of the Windsor OHIP office from 51 to five, removing thereby all the claims processing from Windsor to London, a small sub-office being left to handle inquiries only. I asked the minister today how, in the name of saving dollars, he could shift the claims processing from Windsor to London when by the ministry's own figures the Windsor employees are more efficient. The minister did admit that the efficiency in the Windsor office was higher.

I asked the minister, in addition, did he have any idea of the number of claims from Windsor area residents arising from treatment in Detroit because of the special treatment and facilities there? I referred to claims for payment that they personally take in to the Windsor office. The minister had no idea but thought they were small.

It shows again that the minister does not really take into account the special situation of Windsor as a border city that he did not have that sort of figure.

He completely ignores the very important psychological feeling of those persons who require to have medical treatment in Detroit and pay out of their own pocket for them first and then have to come back to the OHIP system for repayment. They have a very strongly felt psychological feeling of walking into an OHIP office and feeling confident, with the full range of services there, that their claim will be processed promptly.

My third question pertained to the space situation in London, to which 27 persons from the Windsor office are to be offered a transfer. I asked, was he aware that the space consolidation plan for the London OHIP office would make the situation very tight even for the staff there now, let alone 27 more coming in? Or words to that effect; I didn't quite have enough time to say all of that. But certainly the situation would be tight with that planned space consolidation. The minister replied to the effect that the space situation was adequate in London, and this is where his answer was most inadequate. It can be fine only if that space consolidation plan is reversed and if the space on the fourth floor, which was to have been vacated in March is restored.

I gather that this was done yesterday. OHIP officials went down and said to the London office people, "You will not have to relocate the space. You will not have to vacate the fourth floor." This points out weaknesses in the minister's figures. He's counting as half of his half-a-million dollar saving savings resulting from rent and other cost figures in the Windsor building. If he does that, he must subtract from that all of the maintenance and rental of that fourth floor space in the London office which is now being returned to that London office. Like all figures, it seems, emanating from the Ministry of Health, when one gives them a close scrutiny, they do not stand up to what is released by the minister's staff.

The minister in his cutback completely ignores the historical feeling around Windsor over the OHIP office, Windsor Medical Services having existed in those facilities and operated for years before the formation of the province-wide OHIP. It was a service to which Windsor people had become very attached under Windsor Medical Services. They were a little bit concerned when OHIP came in and it is now removed entirely from the community.

One other point which is of interest is that my colleague from Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke) asked the minister if he had any plans to close anything else down in Windsor. The reply from the Minister of Labour to that was, "How about Windsor itself?" I think this minister may well talk to the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) about her attitude towards Windsor and the services that should be provided there.

Mr. Cooke: She should apologize in the House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Bounsall: I just say in conclusion, with most other ministries decentralizing and attempting to bring services closer to people, this ministry in its madness in a drive to save money, where those savings are very questionable, does the reverse.

Mr. Warner: Justify your actions.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, may I have some indication from you? I think the next late show serial deals with the same subject. May I respond to both at once?

Mr. Speaker: This is the end. We can only have three.

Mr. Warner: We're doing this in instalments.

Mr. Wildman: You'll have to come back Thursday night.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As I understand it, the hon. member made four or five points tonight. They are basically as indicated in his motion noting dissatisfaction.

First of all, let me deal with the question of the volume of claims. It is quite true that the efficiency, if you want to call it that, of the Windsor office in terms of numbers of claims for the number of staff is marginally, during last year at least, better than that for the London office.

Mr. Bounsall: Ten per cent.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, I worked it out as a matter of fact. If you take the two million claims at Windsor and divide it by 51 staff, that gives 39,215.6. If you take 4,800,000 claims at London with 128 staff, it gives 37,500. That is a difference of 1,700 which is not 10 per cent. It is much less than 10 per cent.

The London office is a district office in an area serving a much broader area than that of the Windsor office presently and also serving a number of teaching hospitals. It has been the experience of OHIP over the years that the teaching hospitals do generate more difficult, more time-consuming and more involved cases than in the non-teaching hospitals.

Mr. Wildman: Which city has the largest RCMP detachment?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Given the marginal difference, I really don't think that that is a valid argument. Of course, with the transfer of the bulk of the function of Windsor to the London office, there will be an overall reduction in staff of 19, which will give us 160 staff in London processing 6,800,000, we'll take the same figures, which will give us an efficiency of 42,500, if we want to pursue that argument through to its logical conclusion.

The other thing I want to point out is that we do have a series around the province of district offices and sub-offices. For instance, the Hamilton office of OHIP is a district office, but there are sub-offices in Kitchener and St. Catharines which do receive some inquiries and claims. They relate to Hamilton as their district office. This is the relationship that will exist between Windsor and London. The other thing I want to clear up is that the member talks about the claims from Detroit. I'm sorry, I don't know what the numbers are. I really don't think that it would be a sizeable percentage of the total number of claims processed through the Windsor office.

Mr. Bounsall: It matters very much to the persons involved, though.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: But the point is that any such claims will continue to be processed. They can continue to go to the Windsor office to get their assistance in filing claims. Our experience in looking at the operation of OHIP is that based on a survey of our OHIP offices, 97 per cent of the inquiries which we receive at the OHIP offices from the general public relate to enrolment, and not to claims. Certainly that will continue to be looked after by the five-person staff left in Windsor.

Let me get into the question of the amount of space. In London, it is quite true that before the decision was taken to reduce, it was their intention to give up 10,000 square feet of space. That will now be reduced to 5,000. We will be giving up 5,000 square feet of space, rather than the original 10,000 as planned. That will save us $45,000 a year in the London operation, as opposed to what would have been $90,000 a year, had that been given up and the other changes not made.

The moving of the two offices together for the processing purposes, aside from the fact that it is part of a process in which the ministry is going to be involved for a number of years with district offices and sub-offices, will mean that we will be able to reach the desired range for the offices of 600,000 to 700,000 claims.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister's time has expired.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, as a matter of fact, we'll be into estimates again and there are many other aspects of this I will be glad to share with the members at that time.

Mr. Warner: Like centralized confusion.

Mr. Speaker: I deem the motion to adjourn to have been carried.

The House adjourned at 11 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1977

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I have here a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor signed by her own hand.

Mr. Speaker: By her own hand, P. M. McGibbon, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, transmits supplementary estimates of certain additional sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1978, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly, Toronto, November 17, 1977.

NON-PROFIT HOUSING

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I rise in order to correct the record and to explain remarks I made in answer to a question on Tuesday that unintentionally and inadvertently, I believe, misled the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy), and as a result, other members of the House.

On Tuesday last the hon. member for Ottawa East inquired of me as to the status of discussions between myself and the mayor of Ottawa as it related to funding for non-profit housing developments in that city. In response to his question, I advised the hon. member that I had communicated with the mayor of Ottawa and had advised him of a formula that had been worked out that we felt would satisfactorily take care of the problem.

That was not correct. I had written to the mayor of Ottawa and advised him that a formula had been devised in which Central Mortgage and Housing had concurred, but I did not communicate the formula to the mayor. The matters to be discussed required that they be presented to Management Board for their approval prior to being forwarded to the mayor.

I would like to correct the record and I regret any inconvenience that may have been caused to the hon. member. I did attempt to contact him on Tuesday; unfortunately he was busy. I did advise two members of the press gallery representing Ottawa papers of exactly what had occurred.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

OHIP HEADQUARTERS

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, on November 15, 1977, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) asked if in fact this government was reconsidering its decision to move the OHIP headquarters to Kingston. The hon. member went on to indicate that rumours were circulating in the Kingston area to this effect.

It has come to my attention since I first addressed the hon. member's question in the Legislature that this rumour was in fact started or supported by the hon. member himself on an open-line radio show in Kingston.

Mr. Lewis: How do you have a rumour if someone doesn't start it?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I would like to reconfirm that OHIP is going to Kingston. There is no truth to the rumour indicating that the government is reconsidering its decision. Indeed, a site has been selected and negotiations are under way between the Ministry of Government Services and the current owners.

Mr. Lewis: I have heard you are closing down the head office in Toronto. It has come to my attention. I have heard that.

COMMERCIAL VEHICLE REGISTRATION FEES

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, an amending regulation on fees for commercial motor vehicles is presently being prepared for 1978 registration year. Included will be a new category of fees for small commercial motor vehicles, such as half-ton pickup trucks, and vans.

Commercial motor vehicles used primarily for personal transportation and recreational purposes, with a registered gross weight of 5,000 pounds or less, will be able to purchase annual registration based on cylinders under the same fee schedule as passenger cars. Persons wishing to apply for this type of registration must complete a declaration form attesting to the personal use of the vehicle and the following fees will be applicable:

In southern Ontario, four cylinders or less, $30; five or six cylinders, $45; seven cylinders or more, $60. Vehicles with an engine displacement in excess of 6.5 litres or 397 cubic inches being registered in Ontario for the first time, $80

In northern Ontario, all small commercial vehicles coming within the category will be eligible for the $10 fee.

Mr. Wildman: It's time you woke up.

Hon. Mr. Snow: This change will be introduced with the commencement of the 1978 licensing year for commercial motor vehicles. Vehicles licensed in this category will continue to bear commercial motor vehicle plates, which will be identified by a sticker indicating the vehicle is being used primarily for personal purposes. It applies to all of Ontario.

STREETCAR CONTRACT

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I have a reply to a question by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) which I wish to give as a statement as it is rather lengthy.

On November 10, the hon. Leader of the Opposition asked several questions related to the contract between the Urban Transportation Development Corporation and Hawker Siddeley Canada Limited for the production of 190 streetcars for the Toronto Transit Commission. I provided at that time a partial answer and undertook to obtain additional information. I would like at this time to respond to those questions.

The contract was signed on November 8 and does include an escalation formula. An escalation formula would also have been included in any contract we would have entered into with Bombardier-MLW.

I would point out to the House that the proposals to build the streetcars submitted by Hawker Siddeley and by Bombardier-MLW each contained several qualifications. Among the qualifications were concerns related to the finalization of escalator clauses, methods of payment, clarification of the technical data, the ultimate weight of the cars, delivery of materials, and possible design changes. One of the items negotiated during recent weeks was the escalation formula, which had a considerable bearing on several of the other items under negotiation, such as the method of payment.

The final contract with Hawker Siddeley was contingent on the successful negotiation of the items which were qualified in their bid. I refer the hon. member to the letters between UTDC, the Toronto Transit Commission and myself, which were made public at the time of the announcement that the government would request UTDC to award the contract to Hawker Siddeley Canada Limited. Those letters are dated July 7, July 13, and July 15, 1977.

At that time the president of UTDC, Mr. Foley, wrote to me indicating that there were a number of differences in the bid, but he also indicated his confidence that these items would be agreed upon or eliminated. From the time of the announcement until the contract was signed, these negotiations were intensively conducted.

I would add that it is the normal procedure flowing from the proposal bid to negotiate the details once a choice of contractor has been made. When the bids are received they are analysed. Attempts are made to iron out differences and difficulties. Then there is a zeroing in on the most likely candidates. Finally, a decision is made on which will receive the contract.

But that process does not mean that all the details have been negotiated at that time. In fact, it really launches the final stage which results in the signing of a contract. In this particular instance, after receiving the two proposals, UTDC met with both companies and analysed their bids. It was on the basis of this analysis that UTDC made the recommendation to award the contract to Bombardier-MLW. However, as the House is aware, the government requested that the contract go to Hawker Siddeley Canada Limited, subject to the successful negotiation of the outstanding points outlined in the bid.

The completion of these negotiations allowed the contract to be signed. In addition to the contracts, which I am tabling today, I have also received a copy of a letter from Mr. Foley advising the Toronto Transit Commission that with the signing of the contract, the force majeure has been lifted. Therefore, returning specifically to the questions of the hon. member, the escalation formula and the terms of payment are not the same as were outlined in the UTDC request for tender.

The changes flowed from the complete negotiating process extending back to the first submission of bids, well before we designated Hawker Siddeley as the contractor. Then end results are detailed in the contract.

With respect to whether the TTC has been guaranteed a fixed price, I want to clarify what I feel is a possible misunderstanding related to the purchase of the new streetcars by TTC. It must be appreciated that there are two contracts involved, including not only the Hawker Siddeley contract, but also the other components which are necessary to produce the completed streetcars.

One, the Toronto Transit Commission has a contract with the Urban Transportation Development Corporation to be supplied with 196 completed streetcars. Six of these are the Swiss-assembled prototypes. The other 190 car bodies are to be constructed by Hawker Siddeley and assembled with UTDC-furnished equipment.

Two, the second contract is between UTDC and Hawker Siddeley Canada Limited. The UTDC-Hawker Siddeley contract represents 40 to 45 per cent of the total cost of the cars and is for constructing the bodies and the assembly. The remaining cost is contained in equipment such as motors, gear boxes, brake systems, door systems, and ventilation, et cetera, which UTDC supplies to complete the cars.

Escalation clauses are contained in each contract. In the TTC-UTDC contract, the price is established, as is the escalation formula. The contract indicates that in all sub-contracts, the escalation formula must be the same. If there is escalation in cost, the TTC must pay according to the formula in their contract with UTDC.

To summarize and speak specifically to the questions: (a) The TTC will pay escalator costs as outlined in the formula contained in the contract between the TTC and UTDC. The escalation is based on the total cost of the car; (b) I wish to assure the House that any cost related to the difference between the Hawker Siddeley and Bombardier-MLW bids will be paid by the government and not the TTC. This was confirmed in letters made public earlier.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the House that all matters relating to the UTDC-Hawker Siddeley Canada Limited contract were exhaustively negotiated between the parties and covered all aspects mentioned by the hon. member.

OBSERVANCE OF RULES

Mr. Speaker: Before we go any further in our proceedings this afternoon, I've just been informed by one of the attendants of this House, in his efforts to maintain decorum and to enforce the rules that apply to this assembly and its precincts, that one member of the press gallery refused to, and in a profane manner told the attendant what he could tell the Speaker to do with one of the rulings.

[2:15]

I want to inform the member of the press gallery right here and now that if he refuses to abide by the rulings and the rules that apply to all members of this House, that he either leave or we will forcefully eject him from the precincts. I want that clearly understood by all members of the press gallery.

Mr. Sargent: Cracking your whip there.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Don't worry, it's not that thick.

TRUCK WEIGHT REGULATIONS

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, on July 8 last I advised this House of my ministry's activities with respect to improved axle and gross weight legislation for commercial motor vehicles.

I am pleased to inform you that after considerable study and consultation with members of the trucking industry, I am now today or will be at the appropriate time, introducing amendments to Ontario's vehicle weight legislation. This legislation, we feel, will greatly simplify the current complexity of our present legislation.

Since 1971 we have been using the very complex Ontario bridge formula to define maximum allowable vehicle weights. We are replacing this with a set of only 29 tables that define the maximum allowable gross vehicle weight depending upon the number of axles, the intervehicle unit distance, the base length and the front axle weight.

This new system will make enforcement of the legislation easier, reduce confusion in the courts and provide the trucking industry with a much simpler method to determine permitted vehicle weight.

The legislation introduces a new length limitation of 68 feet 10 inches, which is approximately 21 metres, replacing the present maximum allowable length of 65 feet. The western provinces already permit vehicles longer than the standard 65 feet under special permit and we have had representation from the trucking industry that operates through Ontario and western Canada to increase the permitted overall length.

Analysis of the increase in length has not disclosed any significant problem in regard to safety and/or operational characteristics of the vehicle. In fact, it has added some positive contributions to safety. A minor extension in overall length permits a greater spacing between vehicle units and therefore contributes to the safety and stability of the vehicle. Also, with pup trailers and the new liquid carrying trucks, this will lower their centre of gravity, again increasing the vehicle's stability.

Concern has been expressed by some members of the trucking industry about the possible loss of permitted weight by vehicles designed to the present Ontario bridge formula. To answer this concern we are introducing a grandfather arrangement for these vehicles.

If a trucker finds he will lose 1,000 pounds or more gross weight by using the new tables, he may apply for a special permit to carry the present load. The truckers may apply for this special permit up to July, 1978, and it will be valid for eight years until December 31, 1986.

In the preparation of this new and improved axle and gross weight legislation, my ministry has conducted an in-depth intensive study of the problem during the past three years. We have had excellent co-operation and discussions with the Ontario Trucking Association's vehicle weight committee and other industry associations. I wish to thank them for their assistance.

I am pleased to report that in our discussions, there was a clear acceptance by the trucking industry of the need to protect our roads and bridges. I'm sure that they welcome less complex and more enforceable axle and gross weight legislation.

NEWSPAPER REPORT

Mr. Stong: Had I been in my seat on Tuesday past, Mr. Speaker, instead of being required to visit the undertaker in Orillia, I would have gladly responded to the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) with respect to an article that appeared in one of the Toronto papers.

I have had an opportunity to check this matter out with the Clerk's office, and I am satisfied through my own research and from the office of the Clerk that there is no written rule that would prohibit a minister from introducing a private bill. However, I am instructed and I accept that the tradition of cabinet solidarity lends itself to an unwritten rule that no private bill can be introduced by a member of cabinet. In so far as I reported to the Toronto Star and used the word "present" in reference to the hon. member, I apologize to him for the embarrassment and the inconvenience caused thereby. However, I hasten to add that there is one salutary effect from that article and that is it has finally got that minister off the fence he has been sitting on, with respect to Georgina township, and no doubt his commitment to address the justice committee this afternoon will serve to enlighten all of us.

MINISTERIAL APOLOGY

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege. It has come to my attention this morning that a radio hotliner in Windsor has been utilizing a piece of Hansard in a way which I think was perhaps inappropriate but certainly not intended on my part. On November 15 during the discussion of some problems related to the great metropolis of Windsor, there was an interjection on my part which the hon. leader of the third party spoke about later apparently. I would like to tell you that this remark was made not with any seriousness at all, but in the thrust and parry of facetiousness which so often overtakes this House during question period and at other times.

Interjection.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am terribly distressed that anyone would have thought that I was being serious at that point, and I am particularly distressed that a member of the media would spend the entire morning this morning stirring up the good people of Windsor with this kind of problem.

Mr. Lewis: I heard about that.

Interjections.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, if I have in any way offended the people of Windsor, amongst whom I number a great many of my best friends, I would apologize very abjectly. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I apparently was mentioned too and I would like to apologize for nodding.

Interjection.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I put them both on the hook and I am pleased about it.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Mr. S. Smith: If I may engage in some of the cut and thrust of facetiousness, I'll ask a question of the Minister of Energy which is guaranteed to produce more of the same. The hon. minister perhaps could reflect on this.

Referring to news reports that the ministry was frantically searching yesterday for some government authority or approval of Ontario Hydro's commencement in January 1974 of Bruce D heavy water plant, can the minister confirm reports that he feels that the Premier (Mr. Davis) somehow approved this plant by his statement to this House in 1973? If he is not using that as his so-called approval, when does the minister claim that the government did approve of this plan?

An hon member: He nodded.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any frantic search going on yesterday afternoon; I was tied up in cabinet all day, as the member may or may not know. I do gather there was some confusion in connection with the appellation of the four plants. Apparently plants are built in groups, as I am sure the Leader of the Opposition knows. Plant A, as it was called, was built for AECL and subsequently turned over to Ontario Hydro. That was the first plant, and then you had plants B, C and D all in a row.

Mr. Lewis: Well done. Bravo.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Can the members picture that? If they could expand their minds, they might be able to picture that.

Interjections.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: B, C and D in a row; C coming between A and D. Can the members conjure that up in their imagination?

Interjections.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: If numerically the same order was taken into account then you'd have: A would be plant one, B would be plant two, C would be plant three, and D would be plant four—

Interjections.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: —if the Leader of the Opposition is still with me on that. Apparently the cancellation of C confused the order of sequence. So really it was in the order A, B and D, so that D became the third plant and the referral to the fourth plant would be actually C, if it had gone ahead.

Mr. Lewis: Could you run through that again?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I hope that explains somewhat, if not I'd be happy to take the member for Hamilton West aside and give him a lesson as a father to a son and probably pat him on the head in the process.

Mr. Breithaupt: Only this government can put D in front of C.

Mr. S. Smith: How do you follow an answer like that, Mr. Speaker? Am I taking it correctly, when I assume that the minister is suggesting that because the hon. Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) cancelled plant C, I think it was in 1975 or early 1976, in order to save money in the restraint program, that the Minister of Energy is now claiming the approval which was given to this particular plant D can now be assumed to really have been the approval given to C originally? And is he suggesting that they cleverly anticipated at Hydro that the Treasurer was probably going to cancel C in 1976, so they went ahead and started building D in 1974, being clairvoyant enough to know that he was going to provide the cancellation of one of those plants a little later? Is that basically what you're telling me?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: No, that sounds more like The Sound of Music.

The project was approved in principle in 1973—as the Leader of the Opposition indicated in a statement in this House—by the Premier at the time the Ministry of Energy was set up.

Mr. Eakins: He is still the best you have got.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary, rather than pursue this. Is the minister aware that in the Premier's statement of 1973 there is no mention whatsoever of D, but in the Hydro report on the policy statement to which he refers, it's very clear that they're referring only to the construction of B? Is he aware that the Ontario Energy Board in the letter to the member for Chatham-Kent, August 26, 1974, makes it quite clear the board suggests that before committing the construction of a fourth heavy water plant at Bruce—and remember, A, B, and C had been approved by then—they should commission an independent review of heavy water supply and requirements by an agency external to Hydro? All this is long after January, 1974. Would you care to comment on that?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Yes, I am aware of the whole procedure and catalogue of events. I think the Leader of the Opposition is still somewhat confused in that. But I appreciate the cat and mouse game he's playing.

Mr. Peterson: You are the rat.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: If he would care to communicate with me directly—and this is the only occasion when he asks questions, in the House; he never approached me except through the media or via the chairman of Hydro in the past—I would be delighted to take him through the process again.

Mr. Peterson: We have an hour every day when we ask questions.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: As a matter of fact I wish the Leader of the Opposition wouldn't keep dragging his feet in terms of the matter being dealt with by the select committee.

Mr. Martel: What happened to your equation?

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: —why doesn't the minister just admit to the House, because it doesn't hurt from time to time to do so, that on Tuesday afternoon after the question had been asked, his ministry was in a positive turmoil, not to say a panic, to find out how this construction had proceeded in early 1974 when it was denied, or announced later on, Hydro clearly having overstepped the bounds again? Simply put: Why doesn't he fess up? It's time, in this Legislature.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: If it was in a turmoil I've only been acquainted with it now, and if I'd been there and not otherwise occupied I can assure the member it wouldn't have been in a turmoil.

[2:30]

ACTIVITIES OF RCMP AND MILITIA

Mr. S. Smith: A question, Mr. Speaker, for the Attorney General: Would the Attorney General explain to the House what seems to be an apparent reluctance on the part of the Crown in Ontario to lay charges against certain federal agencies, for instance the RCMP and the military as referred to in a couple of stories from yesterday's Globe and Mail, one about the alleged tapping of the phone of a lawyer, Mr. Ruby, and the other about the accosting of civilians by a group of uniformed so-called militia on school or other non-military grounds? Why are charges not being laid?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that there is no reluctance on the part of anyone in my ministry to authorize or encourage the laying of charges when there is evidence of a breach of the Criminal Code.

In relation to the alleged wiretapping of a Toronto solicitor's phone, that obviously was a most regrettable incident, to put it mildly; but that, to my knowledge, occurred prior to the present legislation, the Protection of Privacy Act of 1974, so it occurred at a time when it was not a criminal offence.

In relation to the most recent reports of the activities of members of the militia, my local Crown attorneys' office at this very moment is reviewing the matter with representatives of the Metropolitan Toronto police department to determine whether charges should be laid.

Mr. S. Smith: I thank the Attorney General for his answer. By way of supplementary, regarding this militia matter, is the Attorney General not a little concerned, as I imagine most people would be, that it has taken so long for this internal military investigation to come up with answers; that the civilians who were allegedly accosted have not even been asked for their testimony; that a number of people apparently have been dealt with in a very shameful and aggressive manner, and yet nothing much seems to be happening? Why the delay?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: At this moment I have only a very bare outline as to what was alleged to have occurred. I will inform the members of this House further when I have additional information. I don't know what delay there was. I really don't know any details of the particular incident other than what I've indicated, that the local Crown attorneys' office is meeting at this very moment, to my knowledge, with representatives of the Metropolitan Toronto police department to determine whether charges should be laid.

The thrust of the question would suggest that members of the militia unit may have been given some sort of unofficial form of immunity or that there was some problem in relation to proceeding with possible charges because of the fact that they are members of the militia. I can assure members of this Legislature that that fact should give them no immunity whatsoever and should not place them in any different position than any other citizen in this community.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: Is the Attorney General aware of the fact that it is alleged the police have already advised the women involved, the victims of this incident, whatever it was, that the Crown was reluctant to take any steps in this matter? Could the Attorney General then tell us at what point the Crown changed its mind?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am not aware of any reluctance on the part of the Crown and, if there was, what the basis of the reluctance was. I've certainly indicated already that I intend to pursue the matter to determine whether there was any reluctance that was motivated by any other factor than the question as to whether there had been a breach of the criminal law of this country.

Mrs. Campbell: Could I have one further supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary.

Mrs. Campbell: Does the Attorney General not view this matter with a good deal of seriousness, having in mind the question I raised the other day regarding the whole training of lawyers in this province; and would he not look into that aspect of it, since that may be the reason why the Crown is not interested in pursuing the matter?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I can assure the members of this Legislature that that would not be a consideration. I find it very difficult to equate the—agreed, unfortunate—incident that occurred at the bar admission course the other day when an instructor made some very stupid remarks—if the press reports are accurate, I must admit I find it difficult to consider that in the same context as to the possibility of criminal behaviour on the part of members of the militia of this country.

Mrs. Campbell: It is the Crown I'm talking about, and their attitude.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES

Mr. Lewis: I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. Does the minister know whether or not the observations made by Judge Stewart Fisher in today's Globe and Mail about the continuing abject and dismal state of appropriate treatment facilities for young children in trouble, or adolescents in trouble, are shared generally by the juvenile court judges in the Province of Ontario? Are we any closer to a breakthrough in the provision of facilities in the province with the consolidation?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that I can answer the first part of that question with any confidence as to how generally that view is shared. I can respond, I think, to the second part of that question more completely.

It's my understanding as well that fuller information had been made available at the time of the interview with my associate deputy minister which was not used in the course of the preparation of the story. But we have taken steps, up to this point, to meet the needs of those particular children who are especially difficult to place. These, I admit, are interim steps in terms of filling in for the period, or providing for them in the period when our more complete services will be available.

The steps we have taken, for example, are to establish a committee composed of the chief judge of the juvenile and family court, a representative of the Children's Aid Society and an interministerial representation from the government with the express purpose of receiving from judges and from agencies requests for assistance in the placement of especially difficult to place children such as the child, I believe, to which the judge was referring in the newspaper article.

We have provided, within our ministry, funds expressly for that purpose and have assisted in the special placement, in some cases a unique placement, not necessarily in an existing facility, for children who have been brought to our attention in that way. That's what my associate deputy was referring to when he said, or was quoted in the newspaper as having said, "they should have contacted us"—meaning, I think, the committee—because we have set up a mechanism for assisting with those particular children.

In addition to that, for those children such as this who are perhaps in need of security and treatment our plans are well advanced in a proposal for the establishment of a secure treatment facility for, again, a relatively small but especially difficult to treat group of children.

Mr. Lewis: When?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I will be in a position to make a specific announcement as to location, I hope, in the relatively near future.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. minister make his answer a little less verbose?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, with great respect, I do attempt to respond as fully as possible to the questions the opposition ask and I think this is a very important question. I'm trying to touch on various aspects of the question that the hon. member asked me.

Mr. Haggerty: Yes or no?

Mr. Speaker: It doesn't require a review of the entire policy of the ministry.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect again—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it the question has been answered. Does the member for Scarborough West have a supplementary?

Mr. Peterson: The minister is boring the Speaker.

Mr. Sargent: Get the sword out.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, since you curtailed my opportunity to answer the question, I will abide by the Speaker's ruling.

Mr. Lewis: I want to ask a supplementary: Is it not true, although perhaps not widely known, that before the transfer to this ministry, a gentleman named Doug Finlay, in the children's mental health branch of the former Ministry of Health, was doing exactly the job the minister has talked about—a specific service for referral of difficult kids? Is the minister not saying in effect that nothing has changed with the consolidation, that kids are still going to Oakville, still going to training schools and that we haven't made any significant progress at all? How come? How has that happened?

Hon. Mr. Norton: If I have the opportunity to respond to the member's question—

An hon. member: Here we go again.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —yes, we have made progress; we have made substantial progress.

It is true, as the hon. member suggests, that Mr. Finlay was, prior to the amalgamation of children's services, trying to provide that specific service. We have continued that. The committee was established for that express purpose.

Where these kinds of situations develop and they are not brought to our attention, it is impossible for us to assist. We have tried to make the information available to the courts so they know that the service is available. Why it was not brought to our attention in this particular case, I simply don't know. But I can assure the hon. member that we are ready and willing to assist in these difficult situations.

Mr. Lewis: That is no way to handle it.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: Would the minister agree with His Honour Judge Fisher, that children in the courts lack appropriate rights? Could we have an answer from the minister on that one?

Hon. Mr. Norton: As I am sure the hon. member is aware, we have in fact indicated that we recognize that there are areas in which the rights of children ought to be reviewed. I have also indicated recently to the hon. member that the package of law reform proposals, which we will be making available very shortly for the hon. members of this House and for public discussion, will address itself to that particular issue.

Mr. McClellan: Supplementary: May I ask the minister what concrete steps he is taking to make sure that family court judges are aware of the even limited service that the ministry is providing and what instructions he can give to family court judges, either directly or through the Attorney General, that children in need of mental health care are not directed into the training school system?

Hon. Mr. Norton: There has been extensive communication between my associate deputy and members of the bench and, as I pointed out earlier, the chief judge of the provincial court is himself a member of the committee. If there are any additional ways that we might attempt to communicate this—I don't know, for example, whether the chief judge or my associate deputy has expressly sent letters of instructions and requests to every judge in the province; I will find that out—

Mr. Lewis: They should.

Ms. Gigantes: It would be nice.

Hon. Mr. Norton: All right. If it has not been done, perhaps it should be done and I will see that it is. But I cannot be certain at this point just how express the instructions or requests have been to the members of the bench.

PIPE PRODUCTION

Mr. Lewis: A question for the Premier: Can the Premier recount in some detail exactly what discussions he has had or what representations he has made on the question of the use of Canadian products and steel in the Alaskan pipeline?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member or one of his colleagues asked this, and I am in the process of getting as much information on that—

Mr. Reid: No, it was the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio).

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, was it? I thought I got it really from both places; well, from whomever. I am in the process of getting as much up-to-date information as I can, and I will be delighted to share it with the members of the House. I may have it by tomorrow; it may be Monday or Tuesday.

[2:45]

Mr. Lewis: May I ask, sir, have we made a specific representation, since there seems to be the possibility of a fait accompli which would lose us that market at the moment?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what one really means by a specific recommendation or request—

Mr. Lewis: Is the Premier fighting for it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It has been well known by (a) the government of Canada and (b) some of the principals involved in the company that ultimately will construct that line that we in this province would like to see 99 per cent of the purchases made from Ontario companies. That information, that desire, has been known to them probably prior even to the hearings and the decision of the board.

Mr. S. Smith: Will the Premier associate himself with the letter which I directed yesterday to the Prime Minister of Canada on this very topic?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am not sure what the Leader of the Opposition may have communicated to the Prime Minister of Canada. There are some things with which I might be associated and some things with which I might not be associated. But I can assure him that the Prime Minister of Canada has known for some time the interest of the people in Ontario, not just in Hamilton, with respect to the purchase of material for the pipeline from within Ontario.

I think, with great respect to the Prime Minister, he is well aware of it.

Mr. Swart: In view of the press reports that the Premier will be having dinner later today with the Prime Minister of Canada, would this matter be an appropriate item to discuss with him, in view of the fact that the Welland Tubes in Welland has been down now for a year with 400 people laid off?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't know what press reports the hon. member for Welland-Thorold has been reading. It is not my pleasure tonight to join the Prime Minister of Canada and the Prime Minister of Italy at dinner. I am actually having dinner with the former very distinguished member for that part of eastern Ontario which is still represented on the government side of the House, to which I am sure all members would be welcome in case they haven't been invited to the Prime Minister's dinner.

Mr. Speaker: That is really not an appropriate part of the answer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. In other words, I am not going to the dinner tonight.

Mr. Sargent: What time? What time is it?

Mr. Kerrio: Is the Premier aware of a story in the Financial Post that says, "Hungry US Steel Industry Eyes Order for Pipeline," and that "the behind the scenes battle between Ottawa and Washington is brewing over who will supply the pipe"?

Now, my question to the Premier is—I am joining with him in wishing it is going to happen, that we will get the order in Ontario—what I am asking the Premier is, what are we going to do to bring the kind of forces to bear that will give us a greater guarantee that it will happen?

Mr. Martel: Get rid of Trudeau.

Mr. Kerrio: It's not going to happen—that order is going to go to the States if we don't do something about it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: What nonsense. Nonsense.

Mr. Kerrio: And the Treasurer knows it, too. He knows it. The Treasurer and his free trade. If he knows something we don't, why doesn't he share it with? us

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in reply to a supplementary from the member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins), who suggested I should be having dinner with the Prime Minister tonight because it may be my last opportunity to have dinner with him as Prime Minister, I am interested to hear that point of view. I love to see the party solidarity and loyalty that is exhibited across the House.

I would say in reply to the member for Niagara Falls, I haven't seen that specific article. I must confess I would be a little surprised—

Mr. Sargent: Darcy has. He has seen it.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—if certain American interests were not making some effort to sell steel. I'd be surprised, as I am sure the hon. member would be surprised, if they didn't. But my answer to him is the same as the answer I gave to him about five days ago.

Mr. Speaker: That's enough supplementaries on this question. A new question, the hon. member for York Centre.

CROWN ATTORNEYS

Mr. Stong: I have a question of the Attorney General. What steps has the Attorney General taken to resolve the conflict and unrest that is in existence among the Crown attorneys of the Metropolitan Toronto region as a result of the implementation of his program for decentralizing the Crown, and which unrest is apparently indicated with the effective mothballing of acting Crown attorney Peter Rickaby and the resignation from the position of Crown attorney by Mr. Affleck, the senior Crown attorney from the Oshawa-Whitby area?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Do you deal in communiques or do you send letters?

Mr. S. Smith: I think a letter.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I see about three or four questions in relation to that question. With respect to the unrest in the Metropolitan Toronto Crown attorney's office, I simply do not agree that that is the case. The suggestion that the Crown attorney has been put in mothballs couldn't be further from what is actually happening.

Mr. S. Smith: Very unhealthy.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The Crown attorney's office in Metropolitan Toronto represents a very substantial portion of the Crown attorney system in this province, as you know, Mr. Speaker. When I first started appearing in the courts, there were, I think, eight members in that Crown attorney's staff. There are now about 60.

The Crown attorney for the judicial district of York is a very major figure in the system, and in order for him to play a more important role than he has in the past with respect to the whole system, he is now performing very important functions in the ministry at 18 King Street East. His responsibilities have broadened and will continue to broaden as a result.

The resignation of Mr. Bruce Affleck, of course, has nothing to do with the Crown attorney's office in the judicial district of York as he was the Crown attorney in another judicial district, as the member well knows. Correspondence I have from Mr. Affleck would indicate a very cordial relationship between Mr. Affleck and the Ministry of the Attorney General. As a matter of fact, I spoke at a dinner honouring Mr. Affleck not so many weeks ago in Oshawa.

One of the challenges—and I hope the Treasurer hears this—one of the challenges in maintaining good Crown attorneys within the system is that sometimes the private sector offers some very substantial monetary rewards. We do lose good lawyers from the government service from time to time as a result of that.

Mr. Conway: I thought you were going to tell us we were going to lose Darcy.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: On a point of order, I would just like to point out the Attorney General underestimates his own ability. That used to be the case. Since he became Attorney General, they're clamouring to work for him even at low pay.

Mr. Speaker: That's not a point of order.

Mr. Conway: Good to know you two are getting along now.

Mr. Stong: Supplementary: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure whether the minister's disagreement arises out of lack of knowledge or otherwise, but I wonder if he would share with the House the criteria by which he has chosen his department heads, which criteria seem to be other than, and in addition to, years of service and competence in the job.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As the member knows, the Ministry of the Attorney General's estimates are currently in the House. I would think that this is a matter that I'd be pleased to discuss with the hon. member opposite during the course of my estimates.

USE OF MEDICAL DATA

Mr. Deans: I have a question for the Minister of Health. Under what conditions do institutions and agencies of the Ministry of Health make available the personal or medical records of patients or of citizens of Ontario to the police authorities?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: There would have to be a court order, to the best of my knowledge. The only particular section or statute that comes to mind is the section in the Hospitals Act which indicates that the patient would have to authorize someone to reveal the records. Otherwise, so far as I know, it would require a court order.

Mr. Deans: A supplementary question: Will the minister review within his ministry the directions or guidelines that are currently available to all of the institutions and agencies and place those before the Legislature, in order that we can determine how the agencies or the institutions come to the conclusion that they are, in fact, able to make available medical records?

Secondly, will he determine whether or not it is either standard practice or has been the practice within the institutions to make available to the police authorities the original records, thereby removing from the institution any record of the patient either having been there or any record of the medical or psychological condition that affected that patient during the stay?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I take it from the hon. member's choice of words that he is referring to psychiatric institutions rather than public hospitals?

Mr. Deans: I assume it is in everything.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'll provide the information as it pertains to both provincial institutions as well as the public hospitals.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With the permission of the House, the Chairman of Management Board has an announcement and an introduction.

VISITORS

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to the House today a delegation of visitors who are in the Speaker's gallery. We have with us seven representatives of the American Council of Young Political Leaders. This delegation includes state legislators and administrators, all of whom under the age of 40.

Mr. Reid: That's much too young to be in politics.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The visitors are: the Hon. Samuel N. Kusic, State Senator from West Virginia; the Hon. Andrew Natsios, State Representative from Massachusetts; the Hon. David Volk, State Treasurer of South Dakota; Joe Farmer, the executive director of the American Council of Young Political Leaders; David Krieder, press secretary to United States Senator Patrick Leahy of Vermont; Kathleen Sullivan, assistant to Governor Brendan Byrne of New Jersey, and Rick Anderson.

HYDRO OBSERVERS IN HOUSE

Mr. Peterson: A question of the Minister of Energy: Is it true that Hydro has a chartered accountant attending on all the meetings in the House—for example, the public accounts meetings—when nothing to do with Hydro is being discussed? Are these people monitoring all of the other procedures of this Legislature?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Not that I am aware of, Mr. Speaker, but I would be delighted to find out.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary: When the minister is checking this out would he inform the House of what the obligations are about who reports to who; whether he reports to Hydro or whether Hydro reports to the minister through these various little minions who are running around watching his behaviour?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as being simply facetious.

Mr. Reid: That is how we take the minister.

Mr. Peterson: On a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker, that is not a facetious question whatsoever. The minister doesn't know. He should know. He should find out, and if Hydro had any faith in him it wouldn't be doing it anyway. I am looking forward to a report from the minister.

Mr. Havrot: You are just being a smart aleck.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: The member is exhibiting infinite ignorance, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Martel: I have a question—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The new leader.

Mr. Lewis: He is not even wearing his vest, for heaven's sake. Leave him alone.

Mr. Martel: I haven't got my vest on today.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Tory blue.

SUDBURY POLICE DISPUTE

Mr. Martel: A question of the Solicitor General: As a result of a visit by one of the police commissioners from Sudbury region to the minister's office recently, indicating that the problems between the police commission and the police association have not been resolved, is it his intention now to honour his commitment to come to Sudbury to try to help to resolve the situation?

Secondly, when the minister had an opportunity to replace one of the police commissioners, whom many feel is responsible for the unrest that occurs there, why, in fact, did he reappoint that individual to another term in office?

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend for Sudbury East knows, this is a long-standing matter. I did undertake last session that we would send somebody from the Ontario Police Commission to Sudbury to try and pour some oil on troubled waters there. Some of the troubled waters I think have been caused by the personalities involved and the fact that they were going through some negotiations. But in any event, His Honour Judge Graham did go to Sudbury and worked out, I think, a reasonable compromise. I think there is reasonable harmony at the present time, and if some of the politicians both locals and provincial would keep out of the matter I think it would work out pretty well.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister prepared to meet the requests of the region to him that they, in fact, appoint three of the councillors to the commission and the province only be allowed to appoint two of the commissioners?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: From my experience, Mr. Speaker, that would only worsen the matter.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A final supplementary.

Mr. Martel: When the Solicitor General had an opportunity to replace a second member of that commission recently with someone suggested to him by the region, why did he take another party faithful? Why did he add to the police commission one Mr. Guy Raymond, recommended by the defeated Tory candidate Mr. Cosgrove who, it would appear to be now, is the patronage dispenser in the Sudbury area, as opposed to Red Pianosi and his group.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Speaker, all I can reply to that is that there has been some question whether the appointment that cabinet recently made was or was not a party faithful.

HIGHWAY 11 CONTRACTS

Mr. G. E. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Keeping in mind the concern of local residents in Oro township for highway safety, the safety of the motoring public, could the minister indicate when he proposes to let the contract for phase two of the realignment of Highway 11 from Barrie to Orillia, that is including the box-beam barriers and the fly-overs?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the exact tender call date. The first contract was awarded early last spring and I believe is completed or nearly completed now.

The second stage which will take the dividing of Highway 11 through to Orillia will be awarded during this winter in order that the contractor may start first thing next spring. Then there are two further contracts to be awarded north of Orillia, between there and the Severn River in succeeding years.

STREETCAR CONTRACT

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Further to his report today to the House concerning the Hawker Siddeley contract. I wonder if the minister could advise the House if it is true that many of the technical people that will be employed by this firm are coming from England, and if so, how many?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, if it's true it is certainly something I know nothing about. As far as I know, the 1,000 or more residents of the city of Thunder Bay who are employed by Hawker Siddeley will be carrying out the contract for the construction of the streetcars the same as they are now carrying out the contract for the TTC subway cars—I think the last four of those cars are on the line now—and the double-decker GO Transit cars which are on the line now and which will be completed some time in 1978. The present employees will be carrying on with the streetcar contract.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary: In view of the fact that I have been informed otherwise, I wonder if the minister could check into this subject and report back to the House?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Certainly I will inquire, Mr. Speaker, but I would draw to the member's attention that I am not in charge of the immigration policies of this country.

Mr. Breithaupt: That wasn't the question.

Hon. Mr. Snow: That was the question. The member asked whether the company were importing employees from England to carry out the contract. I can't guarantee that there isn't someone working in that plant who came from England or may come from England. I don't know, but I will certainly inquire.

PIPE PRODUCTION

Mr. Swart: I wanted to put a question to the Premier, but in view of his absence I'd like to put the question to the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Since the announced Inco layoffs and the softness in the metal industry, can the minister tell us what specific steps he has taken, if any, to provide jobs in the steel and pipe industries? And what measures is he proposing to the federal government relating specifically to the use of Canadian pipe in the pipeline?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, the second portion of the question is one that was answered, I think, in rather explicit detail at the time of my estimates. It was a question that was placed by the member for Niagara Falls.

We have met—the Premier's office, my office, deputy ministers—with those in Ottawa responsible for the input towards the signing of the agreement for the pipeline. We have clearly indicated what we as Ontarians believe should be our participation in the making of pipe, both at the plant in Welland and in other steel mills or plants in Ontario.

There are some very great difficulties at this moment; it is not so simple as some would like to think in dealing with that type of a contract. First of all there has not been a firm determination as to the diameter of the pipe they are going to use, nor the pressure under which the gas will flow. Until those two items are determined it is rather impossible at this moment to say whether full production could be entertained in Canadian plants.

We believe technology could be introduced in some of the Canadian plants that could look after the making of pipe, regardless of the pressure, but some of that technology is not presently in place in the Ontario industry.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: May I ask specifically what representation the minister has made to the government about limiting or preventing the importation of the pipe from other countries, not just from the United States, so we can secure the jobs for the people in this country?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, it would be very kind of the federal government if they would provide that kind of assurance to the minister of this province, or indeed the minister of industry in any province across Canada. We made a very strong, solid input, both to the Prime Minister of Canada's office and to Mr. Horner, on two or three personal occasions when I've met with them. We have tried to secure, to the greatest degree possible at this moment, that the pipe will be manufactured in this country from Canadian materials.

It is very simple to say that we can do it all here, but there are a great number of other trade-offs, I'm told, that are in the agreement that was signed for the pipeline. Those trade-offs will have to be reviewed and have to be looked at very carefully as to where Canadians will participate in the various phases of the building of that pipeline. I give assurance to this House and to all members, and to the people of this province, that this government has been heard by Mr. Horner and the Prime Minister as to our position on what we believe should be our participation as Canadians in the making of pipe for the pipeline.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: The last time such a contract existed the Americans themselves were very disappointed that contract went to Japan. In view of the fact that the options are still open, is the minister not aware that Page-Hersey in Welland can build 48-inch or 54-inch, low pressure or high pressure pipe. There's 100 feet of it that they've run through their mill sitting right in their yard. There's no question about us having the ability to build that pipe in Welland, Ontario. The question I pose to the minister again—and I think it's a very significant question—does he not feel we should have been guaranteed a reasonable percentage of the production of that pipe in Canada, and does he not think we should bring all pressure to bear to make sure that happens?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I'm amazed at the remarks by the member for Niagara Falls. I would like to offer him the assurance that even though the government of this country happens to be of the Liberal Party and not of the party that I represent in this province, I give them full marks because their concern for the welfare of Canada and employment in Canada is as great as it is by any member in this House. My understanding has been that those who had an input to the contract tried to extract an assurance and a guarantee that that pipe would be manufactured in this country. But as I've said earlier, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of clauses in that agreement, that also had some other trade-offs.

We are given assurance by Mr. Horner and his people—and his deputy minister is, I think, one of the finest deputy ministers in the federal government—that they will continue to press in the negotiations that the pipe be made in this country. I realize that pipe is in Welland, and we've had that discussion with the hon. member before; just as long as we keep clearly in mind there is some technology we do not at this point have in place in the production system of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. At this time I will recognize the hon. Premier.

VISIT OF THE
HON. GIULIO ANDREOTTI
PRIME MINISTER OF ITALY

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to the members of this House a very distinguished political leader. I really had thought we might have carried on with the question period for another 10 or 12 minutes so that our guest would be able to understand that politics in Ontario and the legislative process isn't too dissimilar to that with which he is familiar in his own home country.

Mr. Peterson: More restraint.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not sure that there is more restraint.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to introduce to the members of the House the Prime Minister of Italy, Mr. Andreotti, who has been in political life since approximately 1948. My colleagues in the House will be delighted to know that he received some legal education, which is not necessarily a prerequisite to a successful political career.

Mr. Reid: It is something to fall back on.

Hon. Mr. Davis: For those in the gallery, who I know will be interested, and who I understand will be entertaining the visiting Italian press—and I should warn the Prime Minister that if he doesn't see the Italian press during the rest of the day, it will only be because of the hospitality of our own gallery—the Prime Minister was also a journalist. That is an interesting combination and one that—well no, I was going to say something that might be misunderstood, not by our guest but by members in the House.

I had the pleasure of sharing lunch with the Prime Minister of Italy along with the Prime Minister of Canada, and it was an opportunity for me to say to him, and to say to the ambassador, that while there are many Italian people throughout Canada, we in Ontario in particular appreciate the contribution that people from his country have made to Ontario, not just in a cultural sense and not just in an economic sense, but really in assisting in the diversity, the makeup and the mosaic of what we find here in our own province.

The Prime Minister asked me if I had visited Italy and how many communities I had visited, and I said, "Mr. Prime Minister, not only did I visit Italy but I intend to return sometime as Premier of the province of Ontario."

Mr. Reid: Do you know when the next election is.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't often mention my own staff, but on occasion I do. I related to the Prime Minister that for over 10 years I've had advice from a gentleman who happens to have the very onerous responsibility of conveying me from place to place. In our office he is known as the honorary mayor of Pescara. His family comes from that community in the central part of Italy

The Prime Minister asked me whether I'd just been to Rome, and I said, "No, the people in Metropolitan Toronto and throughout Ontario organized my visit, and as a result I think I visited every small town, village and city in Italy; and of course enjoyed it." I pointed out to him that I had visited Pisticci and how some 4,000 to 5,000 people from that small Italian community are now residents of Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Speaker, it's a great honour to have the Prime Minister of Italy with us. It is one of the rare occasions that the Prime Minister of that country has visited Canada, although the present Prime Minister was here, as he described it, as a tourist in the early 1950s and he says there have been some changes. I said that some of the changes had been created by his former fellow countrymen.

On your behalf, Mr. Speaker, I say to the Prime Minister of Italy, welcome to our Legislature. I also welcome the ambassador and both of these gentlemen are accompanied by the Minister of Defence, Mr. Danson, who is here representing the government of Canada. On your behalf, Mr. Speaker, welcome to the Prime Minister of Italy.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, as Leader of the Opposition, I am delighted to associate myself with the warm remarks extended on our behalf by the Premier. I note that Italian governments have had something of a reputation over the post-war years for frequent changes, and I wonder if he can perhaps infect Ontario with a little of the same virus, because there seems to have been an astounding immunity in this province to this type of problem.

Although the wonderful Italian tongue is not one of the official languages of this Legislature, I hope I may be permitted, Mr. Speaker, to offer a few words of greeting in that language on this occasion.

Signor Presidente, nel nome del partito Liberale di Ontario, é il mio piacere ad augurar la benvenuto alla legislatura provinciali.

Spero che il suo soggiorno in Canada sarà piacevole produttiva e che pitonerà presto.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, while acknowledging that bravura performance by the Leader of the Opposition, in the name of eloquent authenticity I will defer to my colleague from Downsview.

Mr. di Santo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the leader of my party for deferring to me so that I have the honour of greeting the Premier of Italy, Mr. Giulio Andreotti, in Italian. I want to thank you, and through you the assembly, for allowing me to respond in Italian.

Signor Presidente, ho l'onore di rivolgere il benvenuto nella provincia dell'Ontario a name dell'N.D.P. il partito che per la prima volta nella storia di questa provincia ha eletto quattro deputati italo-canadesi, dando così una legittima rappresentanza alla numerosa comunità degli italo-canadesi ed agli altri cittadini che costituiscono il meraviglioso mosaico culturale dell'Ontario.

Per il parlamento dell'Ontario la sua visita rappresenta un alto onore poiché è la prima volta che il primo Ministro d'Italia visita questo parlamento, come pure, in segno di amicizia e di rispetto per l'Italia e per la sua persona, è la prima volta che la lingua Italiana viene usata in questa aula.

Noi oggi salutiamo in lei il rappresentante di un paese che ha dato al Canada un milione di lavoratori immigrati che hanno dato un grande contributo, allo sviluppo di questo paese e di questa grande provincia, come pure salutiamo in lei lo statista che in tempi di grandi difficoltà sta aiutando l'Italia a risolvere i suoi problemi.

Le auspico che il suo soggiorno sia fruttuoso, e che costituisca l'occasione per aiutare a risolvere i problemi dei lavoratori italo-canadesi, nello spirito di collaborazione che certamente non mancherà da parte della provincia dell'Ontario, dove sono sicuro che governo e opposizione agiranno in spirito di co-operazione al di sopra delle convenienze di parte.

Auspico che oltre al trattato bilaterale sulla sicurezza sociale tra Italia e Canada che lei firmerà oggi, la sua visita sia l'occasione, nel suo incontro con il Premier, William Davis, per porre inizio alla soluzione dei problemi della sicurezza sul lavoro e degli invalidi sul lavoro che rientrano in Italia, come pure auspico che nel corso della sua visita abbia l'opportunità di esaminare i problemi dei titoli professionali, delle qualifiche di lavoro, dei ritardi di pagamento di pensioni, delle pensioni CEE, del servizio militare, dei problemi commerciali, del ricongiungimento delle famiglie degli immigrati, e i molti altri problemi che sono sicuro le verranno portati a conoscenza dalla reale comunità Italo-canadese—la massa come lei l'ha definita ieri sera—negli incontri pubblici che lei certamente avca?

Di nuovo, Signor Presidente, benvenuto e buon lavoro.

Thank you.

OHC OCCUPANCY POLICY

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I suppose at this time I should preface my remarks by saying "To non parlo Italiano."

My question is to the Minister of Housing: Would the minister explain to this House what the present policy is in his housing ministry in that he is removing people, or seeking to evict people, who have been eligibly living in housing, in some cases for eight to 10 years? Is it because of the failure of the ministry to produce adequate housing and the desire to keep the list moving around?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The answer to the last part of the question, Mr. Speaker, is obviously no. Unless the hon. member can be more specific, I would have to respond by saying that any person who may be being evicted from OHC units would be for due and just cause, but certainly not for the purposes of moving the list around.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, supplementary: Would the minister like me to send him an entire list of the people, only in the riding of St. George, who have been given notice to vacate although they are eligible? In one case in particular a woman was eligible for eight years and has lived there eight years. No circumstances have changed but now they require her apartment. Why, is what I want to know? Will the minister look into this if I give him the list of names?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, certainly if the hon. member would like to send me the list of names we will look into it. But I draw to the hon. member's attention, and in fact I do so recognizing that she is well aware of the fact, that Ontario Housing Corporation as a landlord is subject to the Landlord and Tenant Act, just as any other landlord is. If evictions are taking place I am reasonably satisfied, and I certainly will satisfy myself more so, that they are being done within the terms of that Act. If there are evictions taking place I believe we will determine that they are being done quite properly.

Mrs. Campbell: I have advised them to abide by the legislation and to see that the minister does as well, and not to get out just because of his notices.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, to respond just briefly: It is not my intention, nor is it to the best of my knowledge the intention of any of the people in Ontario Housing Corporation, to evict people from units who do not deserve to be evicted.

GARFELLA INVESTMENTS

Mr. Philip: A question of the Attorney General: Is the minister aware of the operations of a company known as Garfella Investments which is selling a building at 10 Garfella Drive in Rexdale through a real estate firm under the name of N. S. Mitro Limited? And is he aware of the process being used for the sale and being advertised is, "an undivided percentage interest in the whole of the ownership of the property, together with a designation of the vacant apartment to the purchaser"?

If so, would the minister look into whether or not the company is operating in a legal manner, as Garfella Investments are not registered or known by the Ontario Securities Commission?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to look into this matter. I am not aware of the matter; perhaps it is something I should discuss with my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Grossman).

Mr. Philip: Supplementary: Mr. Speaker: Would the minister, when he is looking into that, also look into the statements made by Mr. Nick Mitro who, referring to tenants who can't afford to buy or don't feel that it is a particularly good investment, stated, and I quote: "They will have to move out"? This is in spite of the fact that he says that what is for sale are percentage interests in the building and not apartments.

Would the minister investigate whether or not Garfella Investments is violating the Landlord and Tenant Act?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Philip: One last supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister also, then, take the advice of the mayor of the borough of Etobicoke, who has asked the government, in the case that this kind of sale is legal, to develop the appropriate legislation to plug this kind of attempt to get around the condominium conversion bylaws and sell what amounts to a condominium conversion under a different name?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to take that into consideration.

LAND CLEARING PROGRAM

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Northern Affairs. Has the minister involved himself in the request by the Rainy River, Ontario, Farm Organization for a land clearing project in the Rainy River district to provide jobs and more arable land?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can report to the hon. member that we have had some preliminary discussions. I, in turn, had some further discussions with my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman). The program, as the member points out, is an excellent one. However, because of constraints and a shortage of funds at this time, the program has been shelved for the time being.

Mr. Reid: I wonder if I could ask a supplementary. Has the minister, along with his colleague the Minister of Agriculture and Food, tried to get DREE funds for this project? Has he approached the federal government in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I believe those discussions are a part of an overall package. We will certainly be reviewing the possibility of getting on with the program in the near future.

DAY CARE

Mr. McClellan: A question for the Minister of Community and Social Services, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the article in this morning's Globe and Mail on the $2.6 million cut from this year's operating day-care budget:

In view of the fact that these kinds of unspent day care operating funds over the last two fiscal years now add up to $7.3 million, may I ask him to restore these moneys to the day care budget and to establish a fully-funded provincial day care subsidization program which would end the current humiliating and degrading day care subsidization program which is such an onerous burden, both on municipalities and on day care recipients?

[3:30]

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I'll try not to engage in light rhetoric in responding to the hon. member.

Mr. Laughren: You'd lose anyway.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I think there's some confusion in the way the matter is presented in the article. The funds were not lost in any sense, as I explained during my recent defence of the estimates of the ministry. They are funds which, according to the rate at which expenditure was taking place through the municipalities, would not be expended by the end of this year. But it does not mean, for example, even if those funds are not expended, that in fact there would be any absolute reduction in the amount spent.

Mr. Lewis: This is not an answer to the question.

Mr. Laughren: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I point out that in 1976-77 our ministry spent $24,733,000 in this program, and in the current fiscal year we will spend in excess of $31 million, which is about a 25 per cent increase. That is our forecast of expenditures by the end of this year.

Ms. Gigantes: He won't spend that. He will save that and put it in the kitty.

Mr. McClellan: He put $7 million back in the Treasury.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would point out that there is not any point in my reinstating those funds this year, even if it were possible. The only reason they have been constrained at this point is that they were not going to be expended by the end of this year; the system was not currently able to absorb them.

Mr. McClellan: You are killing day care in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Norton: No, you are. Keep on the way you are going and you will.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to know if the minister thinks that there is no useful way to expend that money within the day-care program in 1978. Why will he not take up the specific suggestion of my colleague from Bellwoods to put that into the degree of subsidy available to families in the day-care program in Ontario?

Mr. Eaton: Spend, spend, that's all you want to do over there.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would point out that the degree of subsidy to families who are in receipt of the service in this province at the present time is very substantial—

Ms. Gigantes: People are cut off.

Hon. Mr. Norton: If the hon. member wishes to present a particular blueprint and proposal, then I will respond to the specifics.

Mr. Lewis: Bring back Jim Taylor, for God's sake.

Ms. Gigantes: How come 10 per cent were cut off this year?

Mr. Speaker: That's enough supplementaries on that one. We've got one minute left. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce with a short question in one minute.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, you should be watching the Ottawa proceedings. The Speaker down there gives lots of laxity on questions.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Lots of laxative.

OHTB BUS LICENCE

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Transportation and Communications: I would like the minister to tell me why, every time Mr. Goodman brings a deal to sell a bill of goods to cabinet, they invariably buy it. It's an insulting thing to me as a taxpayer, sir, when the Greyhound deal is a fait accompli, that the minister still says it's coming before cabinet before it goes back to the Highway Transport Board. Why have Greyhound launched on a—

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has expired.

Hon. B. Stephenson: So has Eddie Sargent.

Mr. Sargent: It is a $10-million deal, Mr. Speaker, and you let it go like that.

Mr. Speaker: You can ask it tomorrow.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, I seek your advice. Having tabled a question on November 3, according to the standing orders I should have received some response within 14 days. That not having occurred, could you guide me as to what shall proceed from here?

Hon. Mr. Welch: What number is it?

Mr. Speaker: Could you identify it by number?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Resign.

Mr. Warner: The Treasurer may want to resign, but the questions were numbered 30 and 34.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, they are being tabled today.

Mr. Samis: Just under the wire.

MOTION

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that supplementary estimates for the following ministries be referred to the following standing committees for consideration within the time already allocated to the consideration of estimates:

To the resources development committee—the Ministry of Northern Affairs, the Ministry of the Environment and the Ministry of Natural Resources;

To the social development committee—the Ministry of Culture and Recreation and the Ministry of Education;

To the general government committee—the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that private members' public business which had been previously ordered for Thursday, November 24, be ordered for consideration at 8 p.m. on Tuesday, November 22, and government business will be considered on the afternoon of Thursday, November 24.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: While we are on the subject I feel I should inform the House of a difficulty which occurred, probably through an inadvertent lack of communication, in one of the standing committees. I realize, of course, that negotiations and consultations through the usual channels must take place to effectively regulate the business of the House. However, I was distressed to learn that the standing committee on general government had exceeded the time allocated to it for debate on the estimates of the Management Board of Cabinet without an order of the House authorizing this extension of time.

I must caution those concerned that the order of the House allocating time takes precedence, naturally, over negotiations. It is, of course, open to the government House leader at any time to move a motion altering the times allocated for consideration of estimates. I feel if we adhere to a rather strict interpretation of the time allocations, it will avert any misunderstanding which might arise in the future and I know a precedent will not be constituted by the occurrences of Tuesday night and Thursday.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, if I may just give a word of explanation as chairman of the general government committee.

On Tuesday last, the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) came to me and indicated that the House leaders had reached an agreement to add two hours to Management Board and to deduct two hours from the Office of the Assembly estimates. He inquired of me if I had any objection and I indicated to him that I didn't have any objection under those circumstances. It was not until the committee commenced yesterday that I was informed the motion that should have been put in order to accomplish the agreement that had previously been reached, wasn't put.

I apologize to the House for that, but it was inadvertent and unintentional. I hope the House gives our committee retroactive sanctions so that our work yesterday won't be in vain.

Mr. Breithaupt: Perhaps it would be worthwhile to speak to this particular matter only with respect to the timings that have been chosen by the ballot system that is now in effect.

I hope the House will realize that this is really the first opportunity we have had to go through the whole term of estimates under the hours as allocated. As a result, no doubt we will see certain estimates for which somewhat more time might have been given and others which are going to be a bit short of time in the interests of the members of the House. We will certainly attempt in the next session to sort out the hours as assessed to the particular ministries so that we can benefit those which require a bit more time, now that we have had that experience.

Mr. Speaker: I thought it incumbent upon the Chair to draw to the attention of the House the proper way of doing things.

Mr. Lewis: I wish we'd get the business of the House back into the House leader's hands again.

Mr. Martel: I might apologize, then, Mr. Speaker. In order that we not set a precedent, I was asked to negotiate the change. I approached the House leader for the government and the chairman of the committee and asked for the change at the request of the party. I too don't want to set a precedent. Therefore, I think you would have concurrence in the assurance of the House that there is no precedent being set. If it need be moved retroactively, we would be prepared to move it.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 107, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Snow: This is the bill I referred to in my statement at the opening of the House. I think that fully explains it.

CONDOMINIUM AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Leluk moved first reading of Bill 108, An Act to amend the Condominium Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Leluk: The purpose of this bill is to give priority to the lien that a condominium corporation holds against a condominium unit when a unit owner defaults on the payment of common expenses.

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Mackenzie moved first reading of Bill 106, An Act to amend the Employment Standards Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Mackenzie: The purpose of this bill is to reduce the standard work week from 48 hours to 40 hours and to require employers to pay overtime rates for work done in excess of 40 hours per week rather than the 44 hours at present.

[3:45]

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, this could be the point just to draw the House's attention to the fact that, with respect to the motion that was carried by the House, this bill will be one of the bills that will be debated on Tuesday evening next as part of the private members' hours. I think it's been filed today in its printed form in order to expedite consideration by the House.

ANSWERS TO WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 32, 33, 34, 35 and 36, standing on the notice paper. (See appendix, page 1974.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

TOXIC AND HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES ACT

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that that is not the bill that will be debated at this point time.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The resolution standing in Mr. di Santo's name.

Mr. Lewis: There's a resolution standing in the name of the member for Downsview (Mr. di Santo), which, with unanimous consent of the House, we would wish to proceed with, and my name has been dropped from the list.

Mr. Speaker: There again I think it's incumbent upon the Chair to draw attention to the fact that by order of the House, Thursday afternoon is set aside for the conduct of private members' public business and is not available to the government for conduct of its business. I feel I should draw to the attention of the House that any alteration of the business of the House for today will require the unanimous consent of the House. Whether or not that is forthcoming, I do not wish to attempt to influence members in one way or another.

I feel that in future, any alteration of the balloted list ought to be given careful consideration. It is an important safeguard for hon. members to gain legislative time for debate on their items of business. I fully understand that negotiations must, of course, take place from time to time, but I hope this will not become a practice, otherwise the balloted list will become quite meaningless.

I will therefore put the question: Is there unanimous consent to alter the order of business for this afternoon, as indicated by the government House leader? Do we have unanimous consent?

Agreed.

PROPERTY TAX EXEMPTION FOR ELDERLY AND DISABLED PERSONS

Mr. di Santo moved private member's motion No. 9:

Resolution: That in the opinion of this House, the Government should give immediate consideration to legislation which would exempt from school board levies the residential property owned and occupied by: 1. persons 65 years and over, in accordance with its election commitment in the "charter of Ontario" "to reduce the municipal tax burden on senior citizens"; 2. persons on disability pensions.

Mr. di Santo: Mr. Speaker, this is the second time I have moved this motion. The last time we debated my motion was on April 26, 1976. That motion was somehow broader than the one we are debating today. We asked at that time, with the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden), that the government finally undertake a review of the tax system in Ontario. At that time as well as today, we are faced with increasing property taxes—and not only that, but with a very serious situation for the municipal governments and boards of education, since the provincial government is constantly reducing grants to both levels of government.

The answer of the government at that time was negative, as it has been negative since 1966 when the Smith report was tabled, a report which asked that the government set up a select committee which would work out a fairer system of taxes for the people of Ontario. Then the election came and in the now famous or infamous charter for Ontario, point four, the government made a commitment, one of many commitments made before the election.

Mr. Conway: It's not worth the paper it was written on.

Mr. di Santo: The paper was quite expensive, in fact, and I think that many of the commitments have already been dismissed by this government.

Mr. Samis: Like the federal Liberal promises of 1974.

Mr. di Santo: The government said, "The government makes a commitment to reduce the municipal tax burden on senior citizens and to work towards the ultimate elimination of this particular tax for the majority of Ontario senior citizens."

I think that not too many people on both sides of this House are confident that the government will finally face this serious problem. In an extreme attempt to have the government take some action in this area which is becoming really serious for many thousands of citizens, especially citizens in our province, I moved the motion that we are debating today, which is directed only to the education taxes and only to the senior citizens and people on disability pensions.

The reason is that I think that the government doesn't want to change the tax system in this province. Everybody recognizes that the present tax system is inequitable, yet the government is taking its time and is postponing any kind of reform. Last year we had the Blair commission but the government is not ready to introduce any legislation as a result of that commission because we know what that implies for the government.

My party and I are convinced that we should have an equitable and progressive tax system in this province. We will never have that under the Conservative government.

Mr. Samis: Nor the Liberals.

Mr. di Santo: But since there will not be a property tax reform in the province until circumstances allow the government to impose it on the people of Ontario the same way it did with regional government, then I am proposing to the House—and I hope that there will be consensus on both sides of the House—that at least we look at the situation, at the predicament in which the senior citizens find themselves.

The present tax system is regressive but what is more serious, I think, is that it hits more of those people who can least afford to pay. In the last seven years, the increase in property taxes has been amazing. Since 1973, the tax in Metropolitan Toronto, in the public school system, has increased from $475.40 to $721.60 in three years.

Mr. Maeck: How much did wages go up? How much did salaries go up?

Mr. Conway: I can hardly afford my house.

Mr. Samis: Much less.

Mr. Laughren: For senior citizens, do you mean? Not very much. It is directed to senior citizens. Smarten up.

Mr. di Santo: I know that it's hard for members on that side of the House to understand. I'm talking of the senior citizens whose pensions have been increased by $30 in the same time.

Mr. Laughren: Thanks to the federal Liberals.

Mr. di Santo: By the way, last week by scheduling the GAINS to take full effect after 40 years, this government is reducing even more the supplements for the senior citizens. For an average house with an assessed rate of $5,000, the increase has been from 95.8 to 144.32 mills, which is almost 50 per cent in four years. The reason, as we know, is that the provincial government is constantly reducing the grants to the municipalities and the school boards.

While in 1975 in Metropolitan Toronto the grants of the province amounted to 35 per cent of the Metro school budget, in 1977 the grants have been reduced to 25 per cent. Since schools must operate, then the only easy way out for the boards of education is to go to the home owners and tax them by increasing property taxes. I think that is a situation which is becoming really dangerous. By not taking any action in this specific area, this government is really creating a reign of terror. I wouldn't be surprised if citizens revolt at one point because they cannot bear any more to pay such high taxes.

Today in the daily newspapers in Toronto we have two articles about taxes in Ontario. One comes from the Metropolitan Toronto council. The Metro chairman said perhaps next year they will need a 10.5 per cent increase in property taxes. The other comes from the president of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation who states that municipal property taxes could rise as much as 30 per cent because of cutbacks in provincial grants to Ontario school boards.

If that happens, we will be faced with a situation that will be absolutely intolerable for the senior citizens of the province of Ontario and for those people on disability pensions, especially those on Workmen's Compensation Board pensions whose benefits have not been increased since July 1975. They will find themselves in a situation where they won't be able to pay their property taxes and will be forced out of their houses.

This resolution is not a partisan one because, as I said before, it is very limited in scope. I really hope from every sector of this House there will be consensus and support.

Mr. Conway: It is like the charter itself.

Mr. Samis: Blasphemy.

Mr. di Santo: It's like the charter itself, and that was the reason I introduced my motion. I don't trust the Tory government because it always makes promises but very rarely carries them out.

Mr. Conway: That's not true. They appointed the member for Elgin (Mr. McNeil) as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman).

[4:00]

Mr. di Santo: I'd like to bring to the attention of the House that there are other jurisdictions in Canada where property taxes are paid out of the general treasury. Nova Scotia was the last province two years ago. It joined Alberta, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. You certainly know, Mr. Speaker, in the province of Manitoba, the entire municipal financing system is being reformed and 2.2 per cent of the personal income tax—

Mr. Ruston: What happened to that government?

Mr. Maeck: What happened to that government? Tell us about that.

Mr. di Santo:—and one per cent of corporate taxes are devoted to municipalities and school boards.

Mr. Samis: Sterling Lyon supported that.

Mr. di Santo: The new government of Manitoba, the Conservative government, is supporting the same legislation. In the province of British Columbia, the new Socred government, adopting progressive legislation worked out by the New Democratic government has introduced Bill 58, A Revenue Sharing Act, in which they found a new formula for financing municipalities and school boards. On the basis of this formula, they give one income tax point, one corporation income tax point and six per cent of renewable resources, non-renewable resources, and sales tax revenues to municipal and regional district grants. In Ontario, Mr. Speaker, we are still dealing with the market value assessment. We have been dealing with that for years and the government is unable to make any decision whatsoever because they don't know where to go. They don't want to touch the existing interests and in the meantime they are making life impossible for senior citizens, people on low incomes, people on fixed incomes and disabled people with a pension.

I would like to bring to the attention of the House, Mr. Speaker, if the government of Ontario adopted legislation exempting senior citizens from paying property taxes, the Treasury of Ontario wouldn't suffer too much. Actually, the burden would be more equally distributed among those people who can afford to pay, making life more bearable for people who cannot afford to do that. In fact, Mr. Speaker, if we reverted to income tax and to taxes on corporations as well as unincorporated businesses, I think the province of Ontario won't suffer that much.

In 1977, the percentage of the income tax in each province of Canada was: Newfoundland, 58 per cent; Prince Edward Island, 50 per cent; Nova Scotia, 52.5 per cent; New Brunswick 55.52 per cent; Quebec, 72.03 per cent; Ontario, 44 per cent; Manitoba, 56.045 per cent; Saskatchewan, 58.5 per cent; Alberta, 38.5 per cent; British Columbia, 46 per cent. Ontario is the second lowest province in Canada and we know it is the richest province in Canada. If we cannot afford to do that, how can the province of Manitoba afford to? Why can Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island do it.

Mr. Speaker, education is a public service as well as the right of the citizens of this province and the education system should be financed publicly by the Treasury of this province.

Since this idea is not accepted by the majority of this House, I think at least we should try to reduce the inequities within the system. In fact, property taxation was originally based on the sensible proposition at that time, 100 years ago, that those who benefit should pay. In simpler times, when local governments spent most of their money on such services as roads, sewers, fire protection and garbage collection, there were few complaints, because they were responding to a need and the taxes were paid by the people who were benefiting from them.

But if we look today at school taxes, we will see that people who are 65 or over, people who are pensioners, are really paying for a service from which they are not benefiting. This is the rationale for my motion. I say since they are not getting a service why don't we exempt them from paying a tax? This stems from the pure, simple, basic small T liberal philosophy on which the property tax system was based.

Mr. Conway: Great thing.

Mr. Ashe: Did he say vote Liberal?

Mr. di Santo: I think there should be a consensus on both sides of the House.

Mr. Conway: This sounds like NDP policy.

Mr. di Santo: It isn't NDP policy, it is only common sense. We had, in Ontario in 1973, 145,700 people who were tenants; and we had 117,512 people who were pensioners and home owners with an income below $6,000. That was in 1973, the last year for which statistics are available. People with an income below $6,000 constitute 78.5 per cent—

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member has one more minute.

Mr. di Santo: —constitute 78.5 per cent of all the pensioner home owners. I think if this motion is accepted we will relieve the majority of low-income people from paying a tax they cannot afford. Also we will allow them use of a home for which they have been working all their lives. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ashe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to thank the member for Downsview for placing this resolution on the order paper. This is a valiant opportunity to reaffirm in this House our commitment to the elderly, contained in the charter for Ontario.

Mr. Samis: Said with a straight face.

Mr. Ashe: It is, and I quote—

Mr. Conway: Two trees for everyone.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Ashe: —“A commitment to reducing the municipal tax burden on senior citizens and to work towards the ultimate elimination of this particular tax for the majority of Ontario's senior citizens.” Precise methods with which this goal is to be accomplished are currently under our review. The Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) will be carefully weighing the merits of the alternative ways to achieve this commitment as he prepares for the forthcoming budget.

Mr. Samis: Wriggling out of it already.

Mr. Ashe: I would like to take this opportunity to recall to your attention some of the considerations which will shape the precise method by which this extra tax relief is to be delivered. Ontario's program of property tax relief for the elderly is one of the success stories of the Ontario government in the past decade. The introduction of the Ontario Tax Credit system in 1972—

Mr. Villeneuve: Yes, we never hear about that.

Interjections.

Mr. Ashe: Listen, you might learn something across there.

The Ontario Tax Credit system provides property tax relief for all householders in the province on the basis of ability to pay—and I stress the ability to pay taxes.

Put most simply, this means that those households in the province with the least ability to pay taxes, whether because of income or family circumstances, have received the most relief from property taxes. For the second year of operation of the Ontario tax credit system, in 1973 a pensioner tax credit, which is now $110, was introduced in recognition of the extra burden of property taxes borne by the elderly.

This tax credit replaced and extended the existing selective program of Ontario property tax relief to recipients of the guaranteed income supplement which had been in existence up until that time.

In the spring of 1977—this is current history—Ontario pensioners received total Ontario tax credit relief to the amount of $173 million dollars. This represented 41 per cent of all Ontario's tax credit payments with respect to the 1976 tax year. Of the total tax credit relief received by the elderly, $21 million is a refund aimed to offset the regressive burden of the retail sales tax. A further $16 million in pensioner tax credit is paid to elderly pensioners who reside with their families or are in institutions. The balance of $136 million is a tax refund of property taxes to our elderly citizens, whether they pay property taxes or pay rent.

Let me put this in terms of more immediate relevance to the individual elderly person. In 1976, the average property tax or property tax equivalent of elderly persons in Ontario eligible to receive Ontario credits was about $434. Setting aside the value of the sales tax credit and looking just at the value of the credits directed to the relief of property taxes, the average credit received by elderly residents of Ontario for the relief of property taxes is $286.

This means that on average our elderly citizens now receive—now receive, and I emphasize it—property tax relief of over 60 per cent against the total tax burden—the total tax burden—for both municipal and educational purposes. More importantly, those senior citizens with incomes closer to Ontario's guaranteed income level receive more relief, and elderly citizens with higher average income levels receive something less.

In 1976 we estimate there to have been about 668,000 individuals filing tax returns in Ontario who were 65 years of age and over. Of these, 481,000 either owned their own homes or rented accommodation and had incomes which qualified them for Ontario property tax relief.

The property taxes or rent equivalent to taxes of this group of elderly was about $212 million in 1976. With $136 million of these taxes already refunded through the Ontario tax credit system, full refund of the property taxes of elderly individuals entitled to receive benefits in 1976 would have been a further $76 million.

In designing a program to provide further property tax relief for those of the elderly already receiving Ontario property tax credits one of the most important considerations is to restrict relief to those so that those elderly pensioners with incomes well above that of the average working family in Ontario do not receive disproportionately heavy property tax relief.

In designing an equitable relief structure we have no business providing higher relief to the well-to-do retired than we do to the average working family with children to support. In 1976, 3.8 per cent of Ontario's elderly tax filers had incomes in excess of $15,000, and 11½ per cent of Ontario's elderly tax filers had incomes in excess of $10,000. These are individual taxpayers, not families.

As another part of Ontario's tax relief system for the elderly, the Ontario government also recognized that some municipalities might perceive a need to provide supplementary property tax relief for the elderly. The municipal and school tax credit was created to meet this need.

Those municipalities in Ontario which elect to do so may offer this credit to elderly householders. Under this program one half of property taxes up to $150 are covered. The chief purpose of this program is to assist the most needy elderly to remain in their own homes and, as a consequence, the program represents a lien against the property.

The advances under this program are financed by the Ontario government.

Some years ago the Ontario government responded to the requests of many Ontario municipalities which perceived the need for additional property tax relief for the elderly. The Municipal Elderly Assistance Act enables municipalities to provide further tax relief to the elderly. Each municipality decides the level of the assistance, which is the same for each household. Furthermore the municipality decides whether only the most needy households receive the credit or whether it is available to all elderly householders.

[4:15]

What this combined package of programs means is that many of our senior citizens who must live within constrained incomes and who live in municipalities which also provide property tax relief may receive total—and I again emphasize total—property tax relief in excess of the actual property tax bill they have paid. However, this opportunity is not yet available to all our most needy senior citizens in Ontario. It is the purpose of the commitment in the charter for Ontario to fulfill this outstanding need.

I would like to place our commitment to provide further tax relief for the elderly within the broader framework of Ontario's record and intentions for tax reform. The most effective way to convey to you the opportunities which lie ahead for us is to refer to a portion of a speech which the Treasurer recently made to the Progressive Conservative Businessmen's Club of Metropolitan Toronto. In this speech, the Treasurer noted new vistas which he foresaw the tax credit system could open up: He noted that after the commitments to relieve the majority of senior citizens of property taxes is complete there will still be scope for further actions; there is still the opportunity to further explore the possibilities of replacing low income housing subsidies with income tax credits; further property tax relief to those on disability pensions is a goal which will find its place among these priorities as we wrestle with the programs for the future.

In summation, this government has shown by past actions that it does recognize its responsibilities to its seniors. This government will continue to do this in the future, with compassion but with recognition of its fiscal responsibilities to all taxpayers.

Mr. Warner: Darcy wrote that; that's pretty sad.

Mr. Ashe: You just don't like hearing the facts over there, that is the problem.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please. The member for Grey-Bruce has the floor.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must congratulate the member for Durham West. He had a lot of facts and figures.

Mr. Ashe: You don't like to hear those, they are confusing.

Mr. Sargent: But figures are like a lady of the night, once you get them down you can do anything you want with them.

Mr. Cureatz: Do you know about that?

Mr. Maeck: Are you speaking from experience, Eddie?

Mr. Sargent: Long experience.

The bottom line in this whole bill is the fact that it is degree of hardship we are talking about. For the party over there—and I assume they are going to vote against the bill—degree of hardship, as compared to the people we are talking about, relates to the hardship involved in their decision to grant the $2 million tax exemption for Ronto, and the reason there was that they only made a $10 million profit on the land deal.

Mr. Ashe: You just made a $10 million mistake.

Mr. Sargent: They described that as hardship. That is the reason the minister gave the $2 million tax exemption, because the $10 million was a hardship.

So the parallel here is that we have a new member of the House who did an excellent job in his presentation—much better than I will do—but he gets up and quotes the party line. He talks about the charter for Ontario they brought out in the last election.

The facts are, not a single member of their caucus, my good friends Osie and Lorne over there, not one of these chaps or the cabinet were involved in the making of that charter. They didn't know a thing about it. It appeared by magic one day in the newspapers, the think tank said this was their blank cheque on which they were going to be re-elected to majority government in Ontario.

Mr. Reid: And we haven't heard of it since the election.

Mr. Sargent: They had the whole ball of wax there, the whole kitchen sink was in there: "We will do all these things for everybody."

Mr. Warner: It's from 1943.

Mr. Sargent: But the people of this province are not as stupid as they think they are; they didn't buy this stuff. But here we go again. The member for Durham West says they are going to fix it up in the new budget, they are going to do all these things. The facts are the people don't believe them any more; they can't buy votes any more.

The facts are that to own real estate in this province is a hardship. In most cases it is becoming increasingly and progressively a hardship, a negative thing to own real estate, especially for those on fixed incomes and for senior citizens.

If you recall the days when our parents got married, they got a home, which they bought, and they had a big mortgage against it. For about 30 or 40 years my family bought a home; it was many years down the pike before they had their mortgage paid off. But all the time they were paying that mortgage off 50 per cent of their taxes were education taxes. So in effect the whole nest eggs, their total wealth, was in the form of a home that was mortgaged.

All the time they were paying off that mortgage 50 per cent of their taxes were education taxes, but had they had that $50,000 nest egg in the form of stocks or bonds, they would have paid no real estate and thus no education tax at all.

This is the inequity of the whole thing here. All of you fellows know that a $50,000 equity for a family, when I grew up, was a big thing; and because it wasn't in stocks or bonds or cash but was in real estate they paid the full shot for education tax.

I have always suggested to you and to my people that education taxes are being paid in the main by people who can least afford to pay them. Our educational facilities, I believe, are factories of learning, and the biggest benefit from these factories of learning is in the area of business, so that is where the tax load should be garnered for education costs.

I recall some years ago when the Ontario Federation of Agriculture said to this government: "We refuse to pay our taxes. In fact we demand that 25 per cent be cut off our taxes." To the credit of the federation, it stood by its guns and all across Ontario the farmers now get a 50 per cent rebate on their taxes for education; so they now are closer to a form of equity.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that our party is fully supportive of the NDP motion. I think every member of the government who has served in municipal government, who has had a lifetime of service to people, knows that this is inequitable. We should immediately take steps—and not the evasive steps the government is taking—to remove the education costs from real estate and give some relief to those senior citizens and people over 65 who have hardship in paying their taxes.

Ms. Bryden: I rise to support this motion. I know well the plight of many senior citizens and people on disability pensions who are having great difficulty making ends meet in this inflationary situation, some even faced with the prospect of having to give up their homes because of the very severe increases in property taxes that have occurred in the last couple of years.

Relief is very much needed. The present property tax credits are inadequate to provide this sort of relief and the present Municipal and School Tax Credit Assistance Act is also inadequate; it applies, hit and miss, throughout the province.

This motion is simply an implementation of something the NDP has been advocating for a number of years: namely the complete phasing out of the school portion of property taxes and substituting for it a system of raising the money for education through fairer taxes based on ability to pay.

The public appears to be in favour of this kind of trend. My colleague, the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) in his latest riding report, asked the question, "Should senior citizens pay education taxes?" The response was: yes, 13 per cent; no, 81.5 per cent; undecided, 5.5 per cent. So there is a great consensus that some special attention is needed in this field for senior citizens.

It appears that time in this debate will not allow further NDP speakers and, therefore, since the member for Ottawa West (Mr. Baetz) has extended the courtesy of sending us a copy of an amendment which he proposes to move to this motion, I would like to speak about the thrust of this motion. I know I can't discuss it as a motion on the floor, but I'd like to indicate what my reaction to it would be.

In effect, the motion suggests that instead of immediate elimination of the school portion of property taxes for senior citizens and disabled persons, he would substitute a phased program of reducing these taxes and would work towards the elimination of them. The amendment accepts the principle of the motion, and in that sense I think it indicates support for that motion on the other side of the House.

It also specifically mentions school taxes as part of the property taxes that are to be reduced and ultimately eliminated, which the charter for Ontario did not specifically mention. It just mentioned municipal taxes. So that is another recognition that school taxes are a special problem. A phasing-out program is only as good as the timetable. I could support such an amendment only if the timetable is adequate and if there is some commitment to immediate action, because the problem is with us now. The senior citizens will be facing large tax increases again next year. They need relief at once. So if the member for Ottawa West can assure us that he envisages a timetable that will have some action for 1978 taxes, some substantial action, and that it will be a relatively short timetable working towards the replacement of this portion of the property tax by fairer taxes, I could support it.

Mr. Mackenzie: Guarantees, not words.

Ms. Bryden: However, the proposed amendment also limits the application of the motion to a majority of senior citizens and disabled taxpayers. Once again we would like some clarification as to what sort of a means test he has in mind if he is going to limit it. If he is going to simply restrict it to all those in receipt of the guaranteed income supplement, it is unacceptable. Many senior citizens who are somewhat above the guaranteed income supplement level still need relief from the heavy and unfair burden of school taxes on their homes, if we want to enable them to stay in their own homes. I think we all recognize that is the most desirable place for them, and they are less likely to become an expense to the taxpayers if they can do that.

I would be willing to accept some limitation on the exemption that is being proposed in this motion, perhaps restricting it to houses below a certain size or below a certain value. That is not as much of a means test as looking at people's income. Any restriction of this sort, based on value, would have to vary from urban centre to urban centre, because the prices vary so much and inflation has had different effects.

This method would be a way of removing from the well-off the exemption that is proposed in the motion. I would really prefer a more progressive income tax as the way to get back the benefit from the well-to-do, but in the absence of a more progressive income tax I could contemplate such a restriction. On those terms I would be prepared to consider the amendment of the member for Ottawa West (Mr. Baetz), if he could clarify those points for us.

AUDIT ACT

Mr. Acting Speaker: One moment please. Earlier today, the Chair neglected to place a question concerning the disposition of Bill 43, An Act to revise the Audit Act, which was reported by the public accounts committee. Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?

Mr. Makarchuk: No.

Mr. Reid: No. Mr. Speaker, if I may, the bill has some amendments forthcoming from the Treasurer; committee of the whole House, please.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

PROPERTY TAX EXEMPTION FOR ELDERLY AND DISABLED PERSONS

Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to address a resolution on a subject which is so close to both my professional experience and my heart. The resolution is a further example where a social objective, namely financially assisting senior citizens and the handicapped, is to be pursued through the taxation system. Traditionally it was assumed that the fields of social security and taxation operated in two airtight compartments or two separate worlds: the social security system paid out and the taxation system collected the necessary revenue.

During my 15 years as executive director of the Canadian Council on Social Development, I became increasingly convinced of the central role which the taxation system could and indeed must play if we were to achieve our goals of equity. During those years on that council, I took part during the long drawn-out debates on federal tax reform and through a comprehensive review of our country's income security system.

It was during these periods of intense inquiry of both Canada's income security system and its taxation system that I became more aware of the independent and pioneering path which the Ontario government alone was pursuing. It was apparent that leaders in the Ontario government were recognizing the interrelationship of these two systems: the taxation system and the income security system.

The Ontario government also recognized very early that the device which could bring together and orchestrate social and fiscal policies was the tax credit. I was delighted to note that our Treasurer continues to pursue and develop that device.

Mr. Makarchuk: How come our taxes are going up?

Mr. Baetz: As we all know, the Ontario government has not only pioneered and theorized on the new approach to taxation and social security but, as we have heard from my colleague, the hon. member for Durham West, our government has also taken some concrete steps in implementing good ideas.

Mr. Warner: They should take steps in concrete.

Mr. Baetz: It's against this long background of pioneering, planning and concrete action that I am looking at the resolution before us.

I am fully supportive—and I know many of my colleagues share this view—of any step taken by government to further examine and implement ways and means for relieving the tax burden on our senior citizens and the handicapped. However, in the light of the repeated commitment by our government, not only to the principle of achieving equity through an integrated tax system, but in terms of the concrete steps already taken and further steps actively being planned, I cannot help but feel that the resolution has an air of redundancy about it—unless it's in the spirit of a jockey urging his horse, who is already in the lead, to run still faster.

What I find even more troublesome with the resolution as it now stands is that it is one more piecemeal approach, one more bit of ad hoc-ery, one more fragment in an already highly fragmented picture. That's precisely the fragmented approach we're trying to rectify to bring about a more comprehensive, integrated and equitable pattern.

Tax relief for one group, in this case the aged and the handicapped, will inevitably have an impact on all other taxpayers because tax relief is an illusion. It's a myth. It's really a tax shift, it is shifting the burden on to others, many of whom have equally inadequate incomes, including the thousands of the working poor.

Mr. Mackenzie: You shift from the rich to the poor all the time.

Mr. Warner: That's right; try taxing the rich for a change.

Mr. Baetz: Surely we must avoid violating the principle of equity, the objective of trying to be fair to all concerned.

I'm also deeply troubled by the resolution because it clearly proposes a further universal measure. All aged and all handicapped, owning and occupying their own homes, regardless of their income, are to receive total relief. Although the percentage of those with low incomes is much higher among the aged than those in the active labour force, and even though we're fully aware of the erosions of real income for those aged with fixed incomes due to inflation, there are happily a considerable number of aged whose incomes are higher than the average.

Moreover, I'm aware, representing a riding heavily populated by retired federal servants with indexed pensions, that not all senior citizens are on fixed incomes. The point is simply that universal programs do not meet the essential criterion of helping those who need it most. Indeed, they stand this principle on its head and help most some who don't need it at all.

Further, universal programs such as the one proposed in the resolution are needlessly inefficient, the loss of revenue which is really an expenditure is massive in light of the numbers helped who really need help. It was in recognition of this that our charter for Ontario very clearly and deliberately avoided a universal approach; when it spoke about the ultimate elimination of this tax it clearly said elimination for the majority, not for everybody.

In response to the question raised across the House, I would say that while we have no fixed percentage as to what constitutes the majority, we see a graduated scale which provides less and less relief as other income rises, and finally a level where no help would be given at all. There are certain millionaires and other very wealthy aged in this country who surely don't need this kind of tax relief.

Mr. Mackenzie: Quit dragging out that red herring.

Mr. Makarchuk: Give relief to the others, including the billionaires.

Mr. Mackenzie: The new right wing Tory party.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baetz: Finally, the resolution as it now stands has a serious, an almost fatal flaw in it. It is highly discriminatory against the aged and handicapped who live as tenants in rented quarters and who don't, as the resolution calls for, live in residential property owned and occupied by them. In our centres, more than half of the aged rent their places of residence. The resolution would provide no relief for them at all, although they too carry a part of the school tax burden.

While I'm morally in tune with the objectives of the resolution, I cannot in good conscience support it as it stands because it simply doesn't meet the essential criteria of sound social policy.

Mr. Mackenzie: That moral help doesn't put groceries on the table.

Mr. Warner: You abandon the old people.

Mr. Baetz: I would move, therefore, in order to keep this vital subject alive and have it brought to the immediate attention of a government—

Mr. Makarchuk: Until the next election anyway.

Mr. Baetz:—that does care about the aged and the handicapped, that the following amendment be made. In introducing this amendment, I would, in response to the question raised across the floor—

Mr. Mackenzie: I have heard everything now.

Mr. Baetz:—say that I have no mandate to promise a precise schedule of implementation of any new regulations, all I can convey to members is that there is a sense of urgency on this side of the House to do something to help the aged and the handicapped.

Mr. Makarchuk: In the next election you'll have another charter for Ontario.

Mr. Warner: It's the same old story.

Mr. Makarchuk: What a pile of baloney.

Mr. Baetz: I would appreciate the opportunity to respond on the amendment as well. I would plead that we in fact carry the amendment so that this very important piece of legislation not be dropped here today.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Mr. Baetz moves that the resolution embodied in private member's motion No. 9 be amended as follows:

"That all the words after 'consideration to' in the second line be struck out and the following substituted therefor: 'reducing the municipal and education tax levy on senior citizens and those on disability pensions with the ultimate goal of the elimination of this particular tax for the majority of Ontario's senior citizens and handicapped'."

Mr. Baetz: With that amendment the resolution will now read:

"That in the opinion of this House the government should give immediate consideration to reducing the municipal and education tax levy on senior citizens and those on disability pensions with the ultimate goal of the elimination of this particular tax for the majority of Ontario's senior citizens and handicapped."

I believe that with that amendment we could reach consensus here, because I think there is a consensus of spirit in this House. Thank you very much.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this motion.

Mr. Acting Speaker: You have about eight minutes.

Mr. Sweeney: Thank you. It comes to mind, though, as I listened to the two members on the government side, that I have some qualms.

Mr. Makarchuk: That sounds like a death-bed repentance.

Mr. Sweeney: The first one is the reference by the member for Ottawa West, who indicated government members would like to see this issue dealt with with some dispatch. I would remind the member unfortunately the reason this motion had to be brought forward by a member of the opposition was the fact we have now waited six months for the government benches to do something with it.

I know in my own riding, and I expect in many of your ridings senior citizens of this province have been asking continuously—daily, weekly, monthly—what is happening. They were told something was going to happen; they are still being pressed with the burden of property tax. So I say to the hon. member it was necessary, not redundant as he said, it was necessary for a member of the opposition to bring such a motion forward because there is clear evidence that left to its own devices this government will not do it, or clearly will take too long.

We talk in terms of time. I would remind the hon. member that this government has been in power for 34 years.

Mr. Makarchuk: George Drew promised it.

Mr. Sweeney: If they truly believe something like this should be done, they could have done something long ago. I sympathize with you, sir, but such is the reason we have to support this motion very strongly.

I would also mention, Mr. Speaker, the first spokesman for the government side, the member for Durham West, who gave us a well-presented recitation of, for want of a better expression, cold sterile facts. We are not dealing with facts here; this is brought forward as a motion because we want to deal with the spirit of the issue.

I was pleased, genuinely pleased, to hear the member for Ottawa West in his summation, end with the words, "Let's deal with the spirit." I would add to that, let us deal with the spirit of this, and the spirit is that in this province large numbers of our senior citizens through one method or another, are being forced day-by-day out of their homes and into some form of institution. They are being forced; you yourself admitted—

Mr. Warner: The government's done it; it takes them out of their homes.

Mr. Sweeney: —well over half of our senior citizens now have to live in rented quarters.

Mr. Maeck: Now live.

Mr. Sweeney: It is clear that in the last number of years, in the last decade, they have had no other choice. As a matter of fact it has been the practice and the procedure of this government to encourage them to do so. If they move into an Ontario Housing unit they are subsidized; if they move into a home for senior citizens, once again they are heavily subsidized. But the subsidy they receive if they want to stay in their own homes is minimal.

What your government is clearly saying is if you get out of your own home, if you go into an institution we will heavily subsidize you, but if you want to stay in your own home, the home for which you have spent a lifetime working, a lifetime earning, then we are not going to support you to the same extent. So what message do the senior citizens of this province get? It's the desire of your government to move them out of their homes.

That's in the spirit of what we are talking about. If on all sides of this House, we really believe, as we all so piously express at election time that we want to do something for the senior citizens of this province Mr. Speaker, then let's take advantage of this. We especially plead with the members of the government side as the motion says, to "give immediate consideration." That's all we are asking, give immediate consideration to this.

Let's look at another factor, Mr. Speaker. Let's just deal with the educational portion of this tax. We are talking about people—I am only dealing at this point in time with the senior citizens, I will get to the disabled in a minute—we are talking about people aged 65 and over. We are talking about people who have worked and earned, and who have paid into this province and into their local municipalities for at least 40 years, even if they went to university. They may have contributed through rents—we know very clearly now through the rent review board that taxation is a definite component of rent; or through direct tax on homes of their own; but we know they have all been paying educational tax. Over 40 years that would represent three generations of students in our schools; on a maximum of 13 years each, we are talking of three generations.

What we are saying is that these people aged 65 have already paid back the cost of their own education, first generation; they have paid the cost of their children's education, second generation; and they have paid the cost of their grandchildren's education, third generation. How much more can we legitimately ask of them? That's a point I think we have to consider. Somewhere along the way we have to say that some members of our society have paid their fair share. That's the point we want to bring out.

The figures that were mentioned by the member for Durham West indicated that for those senior citizens who are in most financial need there is already a fairly substantial contribution. I recognize that. As I understand the present tax credit plan they can get $180 plus 10 per cent; we are talking of about $200, some of them will get a little bit more. What we are recognizing now is that many of our senior citizens are paying taxes in the $800 range. With the educational tax being at least half in most municipalities, we are talking of at least $400. What is already happening clearly isn't enough.

A second point: As we look at the effect of market value assessment in this province, as it was clearly brought to my attention only in the last couple of weeks, the people who are going to be most negatively affected by the introduction of market value assessment are those living in older homes in the cores of our cities; for the most part our senior citizens, that's where they traditionally are located.

So not only are they being seriously affected now, they are going to be even more seriously affected when market value assessment is brought in. That again gives stress to the words of the motion "give immediate consideration."

I would like, in closing, to support very strongly the spirit of a statement which the member for Ottawa West made. I agree with him we have to bring a stop to some of these universal plans. I support that. I believe that the help we are talking about today should go to those people who need it most.

If there is some fair way, some just way, in which this government will bring in a bill, whatever it is, along those lines I, for one would support it; but I would say that at the present time the overburden, of education taxes in particular, is crippling our senior citizens. The one thing we are doing is driving them out. We are making them dependent when surely we want to give them their independence for as long as possible.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired. This concludes the debate on this item.

PLANNING AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Cureatz moved second reading of Bill 89, An Act to amend the Planning Act.

Mr. Cureatz: The purpose of this bill is to set out specifically the criteria that should guide a committee of adjustment, a land division committee or the minister when deciding whether to grant a consent under section 29 of the Planning Act.

In regard to my section 1, the existing section 29(12) of the Planning Act invokes considerations relating to subdivision agreements and applies them to giving of consents. The section, as amended, contains a list of criteria that have particular reference to consents. I might point out that most of the considerations are developed from a list contained in the present section 33(4) of the Planning Act. Another consideration is drawn from section 42(3). The amendment also requires the committee of adjustment, land division committee and the minister to consider the community needs for housing, commercial and industrial development.

In regard to my subsection 12(b), this is a re-enactment of the later portion of the existing section 29(12) concerning the attachment of conditions to consensus, merely a procedural section.

For my second section 2, the amendment deletes the words that are presently in existence in section 42, subsection 3, which read as follows: "provided that the committee is satisfied that a plan of subdivision under section 33 of the land described in the application is not necessary for the proper and orderly development of the municipality." This has been deleted. The phrase is unnecessary because it has been included in one of the criteria listed in the amended section 29(12).

Under the current Act, we have to apply the criteria set down for planning a subdivision when we wish to consider land division. I would submit to this House that land division is different from plans of subdivision and that it is such an important issue that it should be considered separately under the Act.

Also, subsection 12 of section 29 has been amended to include my own clause (c) which reads: "That the community's needs for housing and commercial and industrial development should be a part of the consideration." This will give greater scope when considering severances and allows recognition of the fact that severances are different from subdivisions. I would suggest that we really are considering totally different things and that a subdivision cannot fairly be compared to a severance in terms of impact or amount and type of land under consideration.

Mr. Wildman: What about agricultural land?

Mr. Cureatz: I recognize, speaking of agriculture, that those who argue that all land should be frozen do so out of a desire to protect our farm lands, and I am particularly sympathetic towards that objective. However, with respect, I suggest that property rights are a vital issue and concern that is just as legitimate, and I believe we should allow the availability of some severances, particularly when referring to bush lots or possibly ravine lots on farm property.

This proposed amendment to the Planning Act will not hamper the preservation of our farm land, but will allow for some flexibility, which I believe is much needed. I should also add that under my proposed bill, I have inadvertently deleted the reference to road access in clause (b) of section 33, subsection 4 of the present Act, and this should be retained in the proposed bill.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to reserve the time I have left and use it in later discussion of the bill.

Mr. Wildman: George, are you going to speak on this one?

Mr. Hall: I'm pleased to address the House on the subject of Bill 89. There's no question the matter of land severances is a difficult problem. I'm sure that rural members get calls on this subject frequently. However, I don't feel that the bill addresses itself too thoroughly to the many problems that exist, and there are many, dealing in form and function, guidelines, variance between municipalities and so forth, just in that package alone.

Over the past several years the provincial association of committees of adjustment and land division committees has done a lot of good work in education and information of the proper approach among the membership. However, there is still a long way to go. I frequently hear stories of dissatisfaction with the quasi-legal approach that is adopted by some, or the lack of public announcement of decision at the right time, as opposed to a completely different procedure that might exist in another municipality.

On the basic philosophy itself, I think we're all aware that there are very strong feelings with regard to land severances. One takes the traditional view of the public good, that there is a desire to preserve farm land and that there should be orderly development of land in a time when services such as sewers and water are important in our society, instead of having scattered development which doesn't permit these more sophisticated engineering benefits.

As we move to control our development, tell people where they are going to live, make certain they are fully watered and seweraged and lit, and that the proper access roads are there and what-have-you, it makes further away the day when rural areas can see growth. So for many reasons some of the benefits of our society are causing centralization at a time when we don't necessarily think that centralization is too attractive. In these rural areas it is impossible to meet a lot of the higher standards that are required under subdivision agreements and environmental standards that have been imposed.

On the other hand, dealing with the philosophy of the rights of the property owner, there are many serious matters that honest committees of adjustment are wrestling with. Certainly it is very hard for a man to have farmed in a community all his life and yet not have easy access to a severance and be able to live in a retirement home on the same property, in the community where his family resides and where all the family social ties and social work and church work are centred; to suggest that he be denied that opportunity to stay in the community; that is a terrible dilemma in itself, in my opinion.

The agricultural paper suggested by the Ministry of Agriculture and Food suggests that maybe trailers should be considered as accommodation for this person so that he doesn't put a permanent house on this agricultural land. I don't feel that this is too satisfactory, either.

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture in many respects assumes the conscience and the responsibility for preservation of agricultural land in this province. Again, in my opinion, it seems to be somewhat divided. Certainly it is against anything that is going to damage and fragment the good soil of this province. Yet these same members are also ruggedly independent people. Speaking to them individually I get some consensus that they still do believe in property rights, that they feel they should have the right to do what they want to with the land they have worked and paid taxes for, et cetera.

This is a particular problem for them. As farmers they know that vastly increased quantities of food could be grown on many of the farms if markets were available. They are torn because they sometimes face, in their declining years, an economic need to sell part of their land and get financial assistance as their own private form of pension for their old age, and yet as true stewards of the land they feel that agricultural land should be preserved.

The matter of the bill itself, as I look at it, seems merely to move requirements in section 33(4) and section 42(3) of the Planning Act to an amended subsection 12 of section 29. It really lists only one new criteria that I can see, and I think it's pure words. I refer to clause (c), "the community's needs for housing and commercial and industrial development."

I don't really think that putting this in print in the bill is going to change the ball game very much. It does leave out present sections 33(4)(c) dealing with suitability of land; (d) the adequacy of roads; and (j)

the dedication of land for highway purposes. I suggest that the adequacy of roads and the dedication of land have both been used frequently as conditions and circumstances by various land severance committees in their work.

I appreciate that the member has mentioned that he inadvertently left one of these items out, and I certainly have to agree. I do know of circumstances where not too many years ago a demand could be made for a severance on an unopened road allowance and before too long the municipality found itself faced with a considerable road building cost. In this day and age, it is not fair to pass that cost on to the general taxpayer in the community. It should be tied to the use of the particular site.

[5:00]

We have had instances of checkerboarding too in the past, which have led to very flagrant problems having to do with road access. Certainly in my community, whether or not it's spelled out, land severance committees have never hesitated to accept a dedication of a road allowance to further their programs for the highways in the area at the time of granting a severance.

Subsection (i) at the top of page 2 of Bill 89 seems to me generally to be taken from section 42(3) of the Planning Act. It does seem to me to go against the recommendation of the Comay report, which in part says: "Committees of adjustment and land division committees should be authorized to grant consents for the separation of land where they conclude that a registered plan of subdivision is not necessary for the proper and orderly development of the land in question, rather than for the proper and orderly development of the municipality, as the Act now provides."

This concept is a major thrust of Comay in that he recommends, I'll put it in other words, that the onus be on the objector to show why a proposal should be rejected, rather than requiring a proponent to justify a proposal, which is presently the case.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the proposed bill remains silent on several aspects of land severance which are pertinent. I've suggested a few of them. I will touch on them again: the matter of agricultural lands, the matter of getting down to the specifics of a farmer and his need to obtain a severance; under what conditions shall it be recognized that a son or a daughter is entitled to a severance—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has one minute.

Mr. Hall: Thank you, you've slowed me down here.

Quite briefly: Comay is in the works, the report of the committee has been sent out to all municipalities of Ontario. They're entitled to an answer; I feel that very strongly. These people have done the work and they deserve to be heard.

I feel the bill doesn't accomplish a great deal, and major surgery is needed. The experts are finally assembling all the views on a major work, I think it's untimely to merely shift clauses from one page in the book to another; therefore I'm afraid I can't support the bill. Thank you.

Mr. Makarehuk: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this bill, I want to state to the member there's absolutely no way we can support this piece, really of planning ad hoc-ery that he advocates for Ontario. There's no question that planning in Ontario is in a mess, that a lot of your planning is on an ad hoc basis, that you have no major land-use plan for Ontario, that you really in many cases do not know where you are going or why you're going, and if you do you don't know how you're going to get there.

I think the member introduced the bill probably on the assumption that if we free up more land somehow we're going to get cheaper land for houses, that it would provide lower costs in housing. This is the line that's used continuously by the Urban Development Institute when it goes around lobbying and trying to justify why it is ripping off the consumers, the people who buy homes, why it is ripping them off at such atrocious prices for housing. The big argument, of course, is that if only they'd let us get the subdivisions through fast, if only they'd let us do this or that, we would get the land on the market faster and then the price of housing would go down. This is absurd and totally false.

If you look at the situations that exist in various communities in Ontario, you find out that in most cases, if not in all cases, there are plans of subdivisions available in which all the owner of that particular plan of subdivisions has to do is go to the municipality, take out a building permit and start building in those areas. This applies to cities like Guelph; it applies to Galt; it applies to Kitchener; it applies to Brantford; and it certainly applies in many cases to Toronto.

The reason they don't do it is because they know very well by holding the land off the market, by playing, by putting so many lots on the market they've got a nice cash flow that goes on day in and day out. They also know that under those kind of conditions, they can keep the price of housing where it is. It's totally atrocious and it's out of reason.

To an extent there's no question that it is because of the failure of this government, of the Tory government in Ontario, to really deal with the housing problems that we have this high cost of housing. We also have this effort on the part of the member to sort of bring in a cutesy little bill through the back door to make things easier for major land holders and speculators and no one else.

If the government of Ontario was serious about housing what they would have done, and what they could do even now, is to ensure that the land they hold in land banks, is put on the market as serviced land at cost.

I remember my own personal experience when I had to deal with Ontario Housing. We offered them 160 acres or thereabouts to put on the market. The only stipulation we asked of the Ontario Housing Corporation was to put this land on the market at what it cost to buy the land, or the cost of the land plus the servicing costs. They said, "Oh, we can't do that. This is going to affect the market."

That's exactly what we're all about. We've got to affect the market. In this particular case, we could have put fully serviced lots on the market for about $6,000 or $7,000. Across the road, a similar lot, the same size and everything else, was being sold for about $21,000 or $23,000—exactly identical land.

That is, shall we say, the real problem in the whole housing situation. There's the area you have to attack if you're going to deal with the housing problem, and not by trying to bring in the sort of cute little bill you have here.

I would suggest to the member that he look at Saskatoon, or look at Lethbridge, where the municipalities went into housing and intentionally acquired land and put it out for housing at cost. The housing costs in those areas are much lower and there's an adequate supply of land. If you look at the Ontario experience you find the land surrounding the communities is owned by major developers who hold it and release it as they see fit; and generally when they see fit is when it will maximize their profit. They're not at all interested in lowering the cost of housing.

This particular bill, Mr. Speaker, just opens the doors to a lot of rather irrational nonsense. It opens the door to favouritism. What it's going to do is allow four or five or seven people on the adjustment committee or land division committee to decide just about everything. They will decide how subdivisions are going to go and the number of units in the subdivision; there are no restrictions. Right now the municipalities, although they vary, insist that if you have a plan for more than six houses you have to draw up a plan of subdivision, otherwise you may go to the committee of adjustment or a land division committee. Under this situation you will leave this door open to five, six, or seven people who generally do not have a concept of what planning's all about. Generally these are appointed hacks of a municipality, who meet occasionally when the mood strikes them; who have no depth and no understanding of planning in many cases. These are the people who are going to decide the future of Ontario.

What these people ignore is the fact, that when you come to things such as schools the school board has to be brought in and all the other agencies dealing with schools. You have to take into account projections on students in that area. You also have to take into account how other planning is going to go and you have to relate one plan to the other plan. This is not taken into account.

You have the same problems with highways, you have the same problems with railways, you have the same problems with the shape of lots, and grades; you'll have problems with water, you'll have problems with sewage. Even in this day, when you still have a great deal of control and a great deal of examination of a plan of subdivision, you find subdivisions go in where these problems still persist. We have noise problems, we have drainage problems, we have sewage problems and everything else. You have problems with grades, you have problems with snow-clearing and all these things.

Can you imagine the sort of havoc that would be caused in Ontario if this matter was left to about four or five nice, decent elderly gentlemen who met when they felt like it? They sort of have an afternoon off and they say: "Boys, let's go and see how many subdivisions we can give out today."

The other element that comes into this is the fact that you will have a nice, friendly developer wandering in there and saying, "Hey, Joe, I need about 30 units" or "Give me a chance to subdivide about 30 units," because it's nice. He can put in 30 units this year; that will give him a cash flow of about $300,000 or up to that point, and there will be something else next year. It just keeps going on this way; there's no rhyme or reason, no attachment, no consideration for anything else.

Earlier, when the member spoke, he said: "We have to take into account the property rights of people." Quite right. We have to take that into account. But one of the things that will happen under this bill is that people who live in an area and who have committed themselves to paying a hell of a lot more than they should for housing and are paying through the nose, may find that they can get stuck with a horrible subdivision right beside them which, whatever one says, is going to devalue their property. The member doesn't consider their property rights whatsoever. If we're going to do it one way, we've got to consider it on all sides.

The other problem, of course, is that this bill will open up strip development—the bane of the landscape, the insult to the landscape, the most disgusting form of development that we can have in Ontario. Under this bill, the committee of adjustment can have the right to allow any kind of development—it could be a little commercial development, a major development or any other kind of development—to proceed on a strip basis. This is very valuable, of course, because then we can have a series of hamburger stands, pool halls and various other things. This is what the member wants on the Ontario landscape and, under this legislation, this is entirely possible and feasible.

The matter of garbage collection is the other problem. Once we get strip development or scattered kinds of developments, which, again, this bill opens up, we have a problem of garbage collection. Who collects the garbage? Who pays for the collection, et cetera? Where do we put it? Again, these problems will develop.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has one minute.

Mr. Makarchuk: I'd like to conclude by saying that planning in Ontario is bad and, if this bill goes through, it will become worse. Why it was introduced at this time, when we have a review of the Planning Act coming in, is beyond me. For those reasons, we will not support the bill.

Mr. G. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the bill of my colleague from Durham East, Bill 89.

Mr. McClellan: Shame.

Mr. Wildman: We want to hear what the member for Dufferin-Simcoe has to say on this one.

Mr. G. Taylor: It may be cute and it may be little, but I believe it's a bill put forward in all sincerity in the spirit and essence of the private members' provisions of this Legislature.

For the short period of time I've been here, I've watched the amount of bills that are going through and, with no disrespect to the opposition, each week we see them getting into what might be considered major policy fields of the government—not ones where one can purely come forward as a private member and correct some matter that is concerning one and his constituents. Each week we watch them try to play government with no responsibility for one hour.

Mr. Riddell: If it wasn't for this side, you people wouldn't have anything.

Mr. Warner: Just turn it over to us; we could run it.

Mr. G. Taylor: I'm sure it would have been turned over to them had the people of Ontario appreciated what their policies were. They did appreciate them and didn't turn it over to them.

Mr. Makarchuk: You had a couple of chances in the last three years and what happened?

Mr. Wildman: You forget we voted for the member for Dufferin-Simcoe because of his private member's bill.

Mr. G. Taylor: But this cute little bill does give what is needed for the land division committees and the committees of adjustment in this jurisdiction of Ontario. We have them referred to another section but it isn't complete, and often with those people who have had experience going before these committees, naturally they do not always have the expertise. When they say, "Okay, we'll look at the subdivisions," it isn't a subdivision we're going for here. There is not the necessity of all the material that a subdivision needs. It's the land division committee.

Although they may be hacks, as described by an opposition member, they do do their job in all sincerity and they try to do it as best they can. This is a bill providing them with further tools and guidance to carry on that work that they are trying to do on behalf of their municipality. It's done locally. It's in the local hands. They appreciate the work they have to do. They appreciate the concerns of their community. It's what they want, not what Queen's Park wants—not trying to freeze it all and work it all from here. It's local planning done by a committee of adjustment or a land division committee by those very hacks who understand their community; it's done by those very hacks who, I am sure, do not wish to be described that way, but those very hacks who understand what they need and what they want and not what is determined by some other source.

[5:15]

Mr. McClellan: Let's hear it for the hacks. More power to the hacks.

Mr. G. Taylor: Here we have a few provisions set out for their guidance and often times they need that guidance in the form of a legislative piece of machinery—

Mr. Lewis: A ridiculous bill.

Mr. G. Taylor: —those who may be making policy decisions, not by what somebody might suggest by letters or other correspondence, but there in the form of a piece of legislation. It is a bit of housekeeping, one might suggest, but a necessary part of housekeeping that is rather important to those small and concerned people of local municipalities.

It does not breed strip development, as one member may suggest, but it gives them some guidance in the area they have to work from. Not all strip development is bad, not all subdivision planning is bad, not all the work these committees do is bad. I would suggest that the bill, in giving them guidance, improves their lot and would create for them an atmosphere of information as to what they should look for.

If we go to the very important clause that my colleague from Durham East has added, clause (c) it says: "the community's needs for housing and commercial and industrial development." Here again, it points out to them further information they need to conduct their community spirit and to conduct how they want to live within their community. With that extra information, it provides for them the guidance they need.

The other matters of "health, safety, convenience and welfare, of the future inhabitants," coupled with clause (c) of that, gives this land division committee the information on the two major features any land division committee must work within, information to guide them in the spirit of the legislation to carry on what they want for their community.

It has been suggested that the Comay report may be intruding upon this very shortly. However, as we all know, some reports take a little longer to get there than is sometimes necessary, sometimes because the government does not act as swiftly as one would want, sometimes because there is opposition to the report and often times because it is studied, worked on and brought forth in probably its most ideal shape. But in between that time and when the Comay report comes in, we can have this little cute bill add to the efficiency and the courtesy in the manner—

Mr. McClellan: A cutesy hack bill.

Mr. G. Taylor: —in which the land division committee and committee of adjustments may have to conduct their proceedings.

I submit that with this we will be taking one step further in assisting communities in their local planning—and I emphasize that the planning to be done locally so that they may conduct themselves for the best in their community.

Mr. Riddell: In rising to speak to this bill, which I really didn't have any intention of doing an hour or two ago but I was asked to make a few comments, I find it unbelievable we can waste so much time and so many words on a bill which in my way of thinking is redundant. We have all the provisions of this bill already incorporated in the Planning Act, with the exception of the one clause which several have alluded to, that is, the clause (c) of section 1(1), the community's needs for housing and commercial and industrial development.

I did take the time to phone back to the county planner in Huron, and I also talked to the clerk-treasurers in both the county of Huron and the county of Middlesex. They couldn't believe we would waste time on this kind of a bill when everything in the bill is pretty well included in the Planning Act. It's confusing to know just what changes are being proposed.

There has been some mention made of the Comay report, which is being studied by the various municipalities across Ontario—and I believe that there is also an actual report now—and they have pretty well adopted the recommendations made by the Comay committee. They suggest that urban and rural severances be treated differently. I believe they also suggest that the province should establish a basic rural severance policy.

The fact of the matter is that this government is pretty well bankrupt of any policies. They have done very little planning and what planning they have done has created undue hardship. I just wish that some of the members had joined with the Liberal task force in Owen Sound yesterday and heard the reasons why the tourist trade has declined considerably there. The members should hear the way they talk about the Niagara Escarpment commission and what that commission has done to stifle any initiative in that part of the country. They can't do a thing; there's a ministerial order on most of the land in that area. The most recent road map shows private property as belonging to the government—as provincial park. Campers move on to this property and the person who thought he owned the land would tell the camper that it was private property. The camper replies, "I am sorry, take a look at the map. It shows this property as belonging to the government."

Planning leaves quite a bit to be desired in this province. Again, in Bruce and Grey counties, where there is land which could be used for development purposes—this land certainly can't be farmland and never will be because of the rock outcrops and so on, yet once again it is frozen, under some kind of ministerial order. I see no reason why some of this land could not be developed for commercial, or industrial or residential purposes.

Mr. Makarchuk: Right on the principle.

Mr. Riddell: Getting back to the principle of the bill—

Mr. McClellan: No, stay on that.

Mr. B. Newman: Continuing with the principle.

Mr. Riddell:—and as I have indicated, I haven't been able to ascertain what the principle is, so it is really pretty hard to talk on a bill which is meaningless. It is absolutely meaningless.

Mr. Lewis: It is a disgrace, this bill; a disgrace to the Legislature.

Mr. Riddell: Disgrace is right.

Mr. Cureatz: I will take that back to the farmers of Durham East.

Mr. Lewis: That's fine. It is not helping the farmers of Durham East.

Mr. Riddell: I don't know whether the member for Durham East is trying to secure his position there, but if he is he had better be bringing in something more meaningful than this Bill 89. We can't support it on this side of the House.

Mr. Germa: I object to this bill. I just didn't expect that the member for Durham East could be that kind of a person. I think most people who have spoken have missed the really dangerous part, section 2 of the bill, repealing subsection 3 of section 42 of the Act, which of course is that the committee of adjustment does not have to comply with the requirements as enunciated in section 33 of the Planning Act. That is where the danger could be. What the mover of this bill has done, is to remove from consideration all of those things under section 33 of the Planning Act which through long periods of time have been built up to include those things of concern to people living on adjoining lands; to the total health, welfare, and protection of the entire community.

What he's done, then, is remove section 33 of the Planning Act from consideration as far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. Lewis: Shame. My God, it gets worse and worse with every speech.

Mr. Martel: The speculators will like you.

Mr. Lewis: You just want to give the farmland away.

Mr. Makarchuk: The speculators' friend.

Mr. Germa: For instance, what he is really asking us to do—

Mr. Makarchuk:—Frank Drea would never do a thing like that.

Mr. Germa:—is not to take into consideration the purpose for which the lots are to be used, which is included in section 33 now. That is one of the considerations that's paramount in any land severance; you must know the purpose for which the lot will be used. But this member did not include that in his bill.

Mr. Lewis: Incredible.

Mr. Wildman: The farmer can already get an intra-family severance.

Mr. Lewis: Have a by-election in that seat.

Mr. Germa: Section 33 also provides that—

Mr. Cureatz: I don't know if you are going to find Doug Moffatt now that he is with UPS.

Mr. Lewis: We'll look for him. We'll look for him.

Mr. Germa: We caught the member for Durham East with his hand in the cookie jar this time. Yes, sir. He got caught with his hand in the cookie jar on this one. We've seen through this sneaky little clause, section 2 of the bill. Everybody didn't see that in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Nobody else has.

Mr. McClellan: I'll bet George McCague didn't see that.

Mr. Germa: Another thing we're going to disregard as far as this bill is concerned is the nature of existing uses of adjoining land. We certainly have to take that into consideration wherever we're doing any severances. He also wants to disregard the approximate dimensions and layouts of the proposed lots.

Mr. Lewis: Incredible. Paul Wessinger would have seen that clause.

Mr. Germa: Sure he would have.

Mr. McClellan: Paul Wessinger wouldn't speak in favour of a bill like this.

Mr. Germa: Under this bill the committee of adjustment will not have to take into consideration the availability and nature of domestic water supplies; the nature of the soil; the municipal services available or to be made available to the land to be subdivided.

Presently section 33 calls for a regard to health, safety and convenience and welfare of the future inhabitants and also that it conforms to the official plan; if the use of these lots conforms to the official plan.

The member for Durham East is asking us not to take that into consideration. Whether the severance is premature or unnecessary, the suitability of the land for the purpose for which it is being severed—I think that's paramount. We have to know if the land is suitable.

Mr. Lewis: This is a reversion to 300 years ago, for God's sake. Why don't you just auction the land off to the highest bidder?

Mr. Germa: There is no consideration taken for the conservation of natural resources and flood control—

Mr. Martel: Withdraw the bill.

Mr. Wildman: George McCague is having to leave.

Mr. Germa: —the adequacy of utilities and municipal services—

Mr. McClellan: Even your one supporter is abandoning you.

Mr. Lewis: Even the Niagara Escarpment Commission was better than this.

Mr. Germa: —school sites—we don't even have to consider school sites.

Mr. Lewis: Isn't this humiliating for you?

Mr. Warner: You should withdraw the bill or resign. Or both, preferably.

Mr. Germa: It also disregards the fact that you can appeal to the Municipal Board. The court of last resort is now eliminated if we go along with your bill.

Mr. Hennessy: You are disrupting your man.

Mr. Germa: I just don't know how the member for Durham East could come to the conclusion that we have to dispense with all those present safeguards we've had. I have to oppose this bill violently, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hennessy: Don't get mad.

Mr. Germa: As far as the Comay report is concerned, I don't agree with one of the projections in the Comay report which is incumbent in the bill.

It says in the report in Housing Ontario, June 28, 1977: "Committees of adjustment and land division committees should be authorized to grant consents for the separation of land where they conclude that a registered plan of subdivision is not necessary for the proper and orderly development of the land in question, rather than for the proper and orderly development of the municipality." I cannot separate in my mind the orderly development of the municipality from the orderly development of a piece of land.

[5:30]

If a piece of land is contained in the municipality, and every piece of land must be, then you have to have concern for the entire municipality. That is paramount, because as each piece of land is used, so it determines what type of a municipality we are going to live in. The one is inseparable from the other.

The bill also speaks to the Comay report. I believe that is where Comay was wrong in his theory—that the use of a piece of a land is not connected to the viability of your community. In my view they are one and the same consideration. I am also reluctant to give so much power to what was described as these political hacks on the committee of adjustment.

Mr. G. Taylor: Just hacks.

Mr. Germa: I think anything as serious and important as land use must be left to people who have accountability and a person appointed to a committee of adjustment just doesn't have the kind of accountability the minister would have, as required under section 33 of the Planning Act at present.

Mr. Lewis: Absolutely. As a matter of fact, hacks can't even count.

Mr. Germa: So, I will have to reject this bill.

Mr. Speaker: I will remind hon. members that there are about 17 minutes left before the vote is called.

Mr. Martel: The member for Fort William wants to speak.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Mr. Cureatz has reserved 16 minutes. If he wishes to have all of that time he can have it. If, however, he would like to share some of that time with the hon. member for Grey who is the only other member on my list—

Mr. Cureatz: Mr. Speaker, I will share a portion of that time. I'll take approximately 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker: All right then. The hon. member for Grey.

Mr. McKessock: I appreciate the member for Durham East giving me a few minutes. I probably will agree with him more than any of the other speakers on this side so it's lucky for him he gave me a bit of time.

As I listened to the member for Durham East explain Bill 89, it appeared to me that he was trying to do something that is of interest to me, that is freeing up severances in an area where they won't do any harm and are needed. With a few minor changes, such as if he proposed in the bill to get rid of the Niagara Escarpment controls, I would have no problem supporting it.

Mr. G. Taylor: Rural people understand.

Mr. McKessock: In the rough land, in bush lots, if the local township is agreeable, nothing else should be necessary for allowing these severances. You can't expect the same rules and regulations on land use to suit every area of the province. This is why it should be left up to the local township. Grey riding is 90 miles long, so what is good for one part isn't necessarily good for another.

Mr. Martel: Strip development isn't good for anybody's riding.

Mr. McKessock: The contour of the land is different and the land use is different, so each municipality should be able to decide what they want to do with this rough land or bush lot land. Of course, we have another stumbling block in our area to getting a severance. The main one is the Niagara Escarpment Commission, as the member for Huron-Middlesex mentioned.

It is really because of the Niagara Escarpment Commission that we cannot get severance. The Niagara Escarpment Commission won't agree with that. What happens when the commission make their submission to the land division committee is they say they won't allow a development permit on that land. Therefore, after receiving this submission the land division committee will not issue a severance because it would be pointless. It means a person would be given a piece of land he couldn't develop. So indirectly the Niagara Escarpment Commission is the cause of not allowing severance in most of Grey riding.

I have one example which shows how unjust it is. One person was given a lot by a friend; he has applied for a severance and has been turned down twice. The lot opens onto a township road that is seldom used. The land is rough. It isn't farmed and it's ideal for somebody to build a home on and live out in our beautiful country. But the Niagara Escarpment Commission feels this land should be saved for somebody, somebody who might happen to drive down that road. I suppose they prefer to look at the weeds along the road rather than at a nicely built home someone else could be enjoying 365 days of the year.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say a few words on this bill. I think the member has some good thoughts in mind. I would hope he might persuade the government to come in with some bills that might do us some real good, especially in my area. I would hope one of these things would be to get rid of Niagara Escarpment controls.

Mr. Cureatz: Mr. Speaker, I want to first thank all those members who participated in the debate for some of their kind words and unkind words. It's always gratifying to have some input into legislation during private members' hours.

I'd like to first comment to the member for Lincoln (Mr. Hall). Unfortunately, he's not in the House, but I'm glad the member does acknowledge that indeed farmers in rural communities—he's now back—are concerned about the retention of their property rights. All too often I'm approached in regard to "What do we do with our property?" As are any members who have had the opportunity of driving through the rural communities or while campaigning in them.

As I mentioned in my opening remarks, we're all concerned about saving valuable agricultural land. However, I think it should be stressed we should be taking a reasonable approach to try to accommodate not only those people concerned about saving agricultural land but also those people who own the property. If I'm able to bring to the attention of the Ontario people and especially to the legislators here, that there are farmers out in that area who are concerned about rights, at least I've done my function and of that I'm proud. I'm proud of representing those farmers in that particular part of the my riding, who are—

Mr. Makarchuk: Is this E. P. Taylor and friends?

Mr. Cureatz: —complaining to me about the restrictions being placed on them, day in and day out, by municipalities, by provinces and by the federal government. But I do want to say to the member for Lincoln that I did not intend to create a major policy change in the Planning Act, or in the criteria set out.

Mr. McClellan: Then withdraw the bill.

Mr. Cureatz: I did intend to place emphasis on the importance of severances in rural communities and to once again bring to the attention of the land division committees that indeed we do respect the kinds of responsibilities they have to the community. That responsibility is so great in dividing up agricultural land, it should be designated in a separate section under the Planning Act and not under the section concerned with plans of subdivision. Speaking of plans of subdivision, I feel the hon. member for Brantford was stressing too heavily my bill in conjunction with plans on subdivision. That's not the point at all.

Mr. Makarchuk: But you will let them; you have the power to put in something else.

Mr. Cureatz: We're not speaking of plans of subdivision and we're asking for a reasonable approach, again, to severances for farmers in rural communities.

Mr. Makarchuk: How many severances, 40, 50, 100?

Mr. Wildman: They already can get one or two severances.

Mr. Cureatz: I'm afraid I also must disagree with him in regard to his position or thoughts, on the members of the land division committees being hacks of the community. It certainly is an unfair statement.

Mr. Germa: Tory hacks.

Mr. Cureatz: No, they are not Tory hacks, to the member for Sudbury. They are quite often professional people, rural people, appointed by their own local municipal councils. They're quite concerned about the happenings taking place in their own communities.

This is why I wanted to bring to their attention the concerns that are continually arising, because this group of people quite often is not in the political arena. They are appointed people.

Mr. Martel: Not answerable to anyone.

Mr. Cureatz: They do not quite often have the pulse of the community. If I'm able to bring that pulse to those members of the land division committee through this Legislature, then again I feel I'm doing my job as a representative from Durham East.

An hon. member: Withdraw the bill.

Mr. Cureatz: As for the Comay report, I say this as a private member and not as a member of the government. Quite often I have little faith in the kinds of reports that come forward. We all hope for immediate action. If I had an opportunity to bring forward a little cause of complaint immediately, then I did that because, with all due respect, I think that report will be quite a long way down the tube in implementation.

The member for Sudbury thought he found all the cute little tricks I avoided in regard to my bill, but most of the areas he mentioned were already covered in my own section 1 (12). All the little points about concerns about community adjustments with subdivisions, health and welfare are all covered in those various subsections. I wasn't trying to sneak anything through. I feel I wasn't caught with my hand in the cookie jar.

Mr. Wildman: Yes, you were.

Mr. Cureatz: As for the comments of the member for Grey, I'm very pleased there is one legislator on the other side who can appreciate the kinds of concerns that are now taking place in rural communities.

Mr. Wildman: He wants to licence farmers.

Mr. Cureatz: I want to bring forward that kind of concern in a letter addressed to me by a farmer gentleman from Norval. I've never met him personally but he wrote a letter to the Toronto Star about reactions to land freezes. His name is Mr. G. B. Branch. He wrote: "Some four years ago a group of us in Halton opposed those who were willing to sacrifice the free enterprise system and farm for land freeze with compensation. The next move by the exponents of land freeze was to throw a scare into the general public by the issue of disappearing farm land and future food shortages. Both issues are pathetic. However, they continue to be brought into the limelight through meetings, conferences and seminars where the stage is all too frequently set by excluding from the list of speakers or panels those of us who support a free enterprise system and who—"

Mr. Martel: How did you get that in?

Mr. Cureatz: "—are ready and willing to give ample proof why farm land freeze will not produce the results which the pro-freeze advocates expect."

I'm surprised that many of the members on the other side have forgotten the true tradition of our common law spirit that has been brought forward from England in regard to property rights. There was a comment by the hon. member for Scarborough West: "What are we doing? Returning to 300 years ago?" He's forgotten, in my estimation, the tradition of our law and the tradition of our land and property rights.

Mr. Lewis: And what is that tradition?

Mr. Cureatz: There should always be a voice in respect of those people who own property to remind other people who are attempting to infringe on those kinds of rights that indeed we still respect them in 1977.

Mr. Lewis: You are bound to feudalism, my friend.

Mr. McClellan: Get out your suit of armour.

Mr. Makarchuk: Call him Squire Cureatz.

Mr. Lewis: That speech is what you call "1066 and All That."

Mr. Martel: Is the Minister of Housing (Mr. Rhodes) going to support this?

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: There are five minutes left before we put the questions to the House.

Mr. Martel: You'd better give us the question right now.

Mr. Lewis: Let's put it anyway.

Mr. Makarchuk: Let's have some Tory speakers in support.

Mr. Lewis: I move we put the question, Mr. Speaker.

We can't do that? This is a shambles. Everything's stopped.

Mr. Speaker: According to the standing order, we can't put the question before 5.50.

Mr. Wildman: I didn't intend to speak on the bill but since we need to fill up some time, I'm willing to make a contribution to this debate. I just wanted to speak briefly on a couple of comments that have been made by the member for Durham East in regard to farmers and the need for more flexibility in obtaining land severances. I think that any rural member in this House recognizes that there is some difficulty, sometimes, in obtaining land severances for farmers and that has to be weighed, along with our desire to preserve prime farm land.

[5:45]

However, I think that the members should recognize that in most municipalities in relation to most plans, farmers who want to obtain one or two severances—especially if it involves a member of their family—can do so.

What we're concerned about is the fact that there is no limit in this bill, or appears to be no limit, on the number of severances or how the divisions will be made. For that reason I can't support the bill, and I hope that the bill will be defeated.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask that you seek the unanimous consent of the House to take the vote now?

Mr. Speaker: I think that we should have unanimous consent to put the question before 5.50. Do we have the unanimous consent of the House to do so?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Lewis: Then get up and support it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, may I rise?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Minister for Correctional Services will speak for two minutes.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill presented by my colleague. I think it is an excellent bill. I think it comes to grips with one of the apparent problems in the planning process, particularly at the level where most people are involved—and that is at the committee of adjustment.

I can understand the reluctance of many to dismantle the bureaucracy, especially when bureaucracy is close to their soul, but I believe an examination of the merits of the bill by my colleague from Durham East will show that it will be beneficial, that it will improve the Planning Act process whereby people can obtain remedial action, and that it does deserve the support of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are several questions to be decided at this time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welsh: May I indicate the order of business for next week.

There are two or three changes next week which have been necessitated in order to accommodate the activities of the newly-formed select committee dealing with the Inco situation.

On Monday in the House we will do the estimates of the Attorney General.

Tuesday's agenda is changed. In the afternoon on Tuesday we will continue with Bill 98. Once it has had second reading we will then go into committee of the whole to complete the work on Bills 99 and 98. Then, as already indicated by a motion earlier today, in the evening at 8 o'clock we will go through the private members' business dealing with the ballot items standing in the names of the members for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan) and Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie).

All day Thursday, afternoon and evening, has been set aside to, hopefully, complete the second reading debate on Bill 70, on which I have the understanding there will be a division bell at about 10:15 p.m.

On Friday, we will continue the estimates of the Attorney General. This is House work in addition, of course, to the committee work which has been posted.

The House recessed at 6:05 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See page 1951)

32. Mr. Ziemba—Inquiry of the ministry: What percentage of all first-time home buyer's grants have been audited to date? What percentage of these audited grants have been found to have been paid in error? What criteria determine which grants are investigated; for example, the location, the age of the buyer, the purchase price, the riding in which the home is located, the down payment, the purchaser's country of origin or is it a random audit? Also, kindly provide a breakdown of the second and third payments of $250 that have been paid out in error. (Tabled November 1, 1977.)

Answer by the Minister of Revenue (Mrs. Scrivener):

As of October 31, 1977, approximately 40 per cent of all grant applications have been subjected to a field audit. Total ineligible recipients discovered is 2.9 per cent of the total number of applicants. Tests and projections of the balance of the applications show a greatly reduced yield, such that the percentage of those grants requiring recovery is expected to drop to 2.5 per cent or even lower. Criteria for the audit are those used in normal audit procedures. With reference to grants now under recovery involving payment of supplementary grants, those situations where a grant was found not to be in order represent a minuscule percentage of the total.

33. Mr. Warner—Inquiry of the ministry: Will the Treasurer table all submissions prepared by each ministry in response to the recommendations of the royal commission on Metropolitan Toronto for presentation to the Treasurer of Ontario, including information prepared by the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs? (Tabled November 3, 1977.)

34. Mr. Warner—Inquiry of the ministry: Will the Treasurer also list those ministries who do not intend to make a response to the Treasurer of Ontario regarding the recommendations of the royal commission on Metropolitan Toronto, and list reasons for there not being a response to the Treasurer of Ontario? (Tabled November 3, 1977.)

Answer to questions 33 and 34 by the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough):

I have canvassed my colleagues in cabinet asking for their views and there is the normal interministerial staff discussion on matters of this kind. The results of cabinet consideration of these important issues will be communicated to the House in due course. No submissions have been received from the ministries, nor are any expected, including the TEIA ministry.

35. Mr. Foulds—Inquiry of the ministry: How much land in or near the vicinity of the Parkdale subdivision area in Thunder Bay has OHC purchased in the past 10 years? How much of this land has been sold at "market" value? What was the original purchase price of the land? What is the expected total revenue from the sale of the land? How much profit, if any, does OHC expect to realize by the sale of this land? (Tabled November 3, 1977.)

Answer by the Minister of Housing (Mr. Rhodes):

Ontario Housing Corporation, in the past 10 years, has purchased 158.4 acres of land in or near the vicinity of the Parkdale subdivision area in Thunder Bay. None of this land has been sold at "market" value. The original purchase price of the land was $269,280.

The planning of this property will not be determined until several critical factors are resolved, for example, location and funding of a trunk sewer extension; acquisition by the city of property for a bridge to provide access to the site and the adjoining properties; and the location of a secondary access. It is therefore not possible to estimate, at this time, the total revenue or profit to be realized from the sale of the land.

36. Mr. Foulds—Inquiry of the ministry: How many OPP security officers were used for the surveillance of the October 14, 1976, day of protest demonstrations against the federal government's AIB program? Were any officers used in cities other than Thunder Bay? If so, in what locations, and how many? Why did the Solicitor General feel it necessary to have these demonstrations monitored by OPP security officers? What information was filed as a result of this surveillance? (Tabled November 3, 1977.)

Answer by the Solicitor General (Mr. MacBeth):

Three security branch members were assigned surveillance duties during the October 14, 1976, day of protest demonstrations against the federal government's AIB program. Two members were stationed at Queen's Park and one was stationed at Thunder Bay. The surveillance activities were directed to those who may breach the peace. There were no incidents and no reports filed.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1977

The House resumed at 8:15 p.m.

BUDGET DEBATE

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk had the floor.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it's certainly a pleasure for me to continue the budget debate tonight; it must be two weeks ago tonight when I began, I believe.

Mr. Ruston: A long time for the hon. member to speak.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I've been ready. They had me up, they had me down, had me on and had me off, but tonight I have the opportunity of finishing the remarks I would like to contribute to this House on behalf of the riding of Haldimand-Norfolk.

Mr. Samis: Just make sure it is worth waiting for.

Mr. G. I. Miller: It is one of the finest areas in Ontario, I must say, Mr. Speaker: It is certainly a pleasure for me to bring these remarks to you tonight and be able to participate in the democratic system.

After 35 years of Conservative domination I think it's time for a change and I'm glad to see our ex-Speaker in the House. I think with the Liberal caucus we have today with a few more additions we could just go over Ontario and do a heck of a good job for the province.

Mr. Samis: It's one of those nights.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I would like to start out tonight by taking us back a little bit to the past election. The Premier of Ontario (Mr. Davis) visited Simcoe and he made promises. We have the towns and development in our area. We have South Cayuga—which along with Pickering and Edwardsburgh contributed to the spending of something like, I don't know, it must be close to $300 million. Pickering, of course was the biggest expenditure—something like $240 million—and the government hasn't utilized that yet. I think it just indicates that the Hon. John White, the Treasurer of the day, misled us on the requirements of the province and perhaps over-extended himself. The fact is he picked over four town sites and two of those happened to be in my riding.

It is an interesting time to be involved in the democratic system, in the political aspect of Ontario, because we are perhaps in the most difficult times. Going back as far as the Thirties—and everybody thinks I may be a young guy but I can well recall the Thirties, when 25 cents was 25 cents. If you had a nickel on Saturday night to go to town with you thought yourself real lucky.

Mr. Maeck: That must have been when the Liberals were in power.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I think we want to make sure we spend our dollars well. I would like to say the Premier promised that we'd get back the Townsend town site. He made a promise back in the election campaign—June 9, in the charter, it all came out. He came into my riding and he made a lot of comments about my potential and the potential of the other candidates—and I think I mentioned the other night that we did have a good campaign. The people spoke. I feel proud to represent the riding and I intend to do that to the best of my ability.

On his visit to Simcoe during the recent election campaign the Premier promised that the 10 existing municipalities in my riding would be allowed to get the growth they needed until this new Townsend town site was initiated. Every day in my riding of Haldimand-Norfolk we have a constant effort on the part of the government and their high-powered public relations people, promoting an early start for the Townsend site.

I would say I'm not against it beginning, if it's needed, but I'm not in favour of it until that point in time.

I think they have a plan, and the initial stages have been finalized.

I might point out, too, the members of that committee include the hon. member for York North (Mr. Hodgson) and I think the former member, the hon. James Allan, for whom I have a lot of respect. It's made up of some five local people including the mayor of Nanticoke. I think it's very important that either my colleague, the hon. member for Brantford-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) or somebody who is a little closer to the people should be on that committee to represent the wishes of the people—so that we have good local input by the people elected from that particular area.

Surveys have been made of the existing municipalities. On a Sunday afternoon there's no finer place in Ontario than Haldimand-Norfolk if you want to take a drive.

Mr. Wildman: Sunday afternoons?

Mr. G. I. Miller: Norfolk county is sandy. We grow tobacco, we grow apples—you name it; we can do it in Norfolk. Haldimand county is not quite so fortunate—

Mr. Makarchuk: Some of them are diversifying into grass.

Mr. G. I. Miller: —but we do have the Grand River which is a real asset. Haldimand county in particular has sat dormant for years.

Mr. Haggerty: Dormant?

Mr. G. I. Miller: It has been dormant, but it's beginning to move now. It will stay dormant, I assure you, unless the government gives us some support. We have to have some assistance.

We have towns like Dunnville with a population of 5,000 people, and I think it has a capacity to grow to 10,000. We have Cayuga, which hasn't been recognized but has been the county town of the former county of Haldimand, now the region of Haldimand-Norfolk, with about 1,000 people. Caledonia, Hagersville and Jarvis.

In Norfolk we have Port Dover, we have Simcoe. We have Waterford, we have Delhi and we have Port Rowan. I think in all those municipalities we have a potential for roughly 25,000 or 30,000 people. I think they've already committed themselves to an expenditure of $12 million to upgrade the services in Dunnville, in Caledonia, in Simcoe, in Port Dover, in Waterford, and in Delhi.

Mr. Haggerty: Not 300,000 like White had it.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I think we wouldn't be doing justice to that particular area if they weren't given the opportunity to grow, to have people come in to help pay for those services, without the beginning of the Towns-end town site.

I think the Premier indicated that it would grow, under the direction of the regional council. And, I think under Keith Richardson, who was elected by the people. He was nominated by the regional council, which I think was one of the first regional councils in Ontario that had an elected chairman. I think that is a step in the right direction. In order to make our regional municipalities work, we have to make sure the democratic system works. Then we will get effective government. I think this applies not only to my region, but also to the province of Ontario.

Of course, we have to sell it to the people and we have to earn that right. And that's not easy.

Mr. Baetz: You can say that again.

Mr. Maeck: You guys have made it hard to sell.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Not really, not when you've got the talent. As I look around my caucus, I think we have the talent.

Mr. Samis: Where is it?

Mr. G. I. Miller: Tonight they're not here, but I'll tell you, they're working someplace. You have to admit that, George.

Mr. Makarchuk: At the old fish market?

Mr. G. I. Miller: They're working. It's been a long day today.

Mr. Wildman: Murray, did you hear what he said? They're not here tonight. The talent's not here tonight.

Mr. Makarchuk: Are they down at the Sheraton with PET?

Mr. Speaker: Will you please allow the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk to continue uninterrupted?

Mr. G. I. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Makarchuk: We would like to accuse him of being provocative.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I do not say that ultimately a new town will not be needed in that area of Ontario, in my riding of Haldimand-Norfolk but let orderly growth proceed in the existing communities, assisting them to absorb, for the present, those who are coming into the area by providing proper water and sewage systems. I think we should spend that money in the area, rather than spending it in advertising to promote existing towns. I think that the province of Ontario should be considered as another developer. They shouldn't be able to take advantage of public funds to promote and take advantage of the existing municipalities. That is a must.

Mr. Makarchuk: You're going to get your hands caught in the cookie jar the way you talk.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Do you think I will, Mac? We'll see about that.

The cost of this would be far less than the cost of development of what will prove to be a ghost town for years to come. That's what I'm concerned about.

Mr. Gaunt: My colleague has always been adept at putting his hands into cookie jars.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Get them into a specific area, rather than spreading them throughout a community. That provides no scope for enrichment or enlargement of their interests, beyond what the present situation offers. The same could be said to be true of the totally industrial-oriented society placed in the centre of an agricultural area.

I would like to point out that this has been an agricultural area; it perhaps still could be. We have an industrial park of 6,500 acres which is owned by Stelco and is being developed by Stelco. We have the Texaco oil company which owns 1,400 acres and they already have their pipeline hooked up.

Mr. Makarchuk: Don't forget about the fish plant, and the fish market.

Mr. G. I. Miller: They're a good outfit, Mac. The member for Brantford utilizes those services down at Port Dover and he has to admit they're pretty good. For a Socialist and a guy who owns a boat, I don't know.

Mr. Makarchuk: Don't forget the herring.

Mr. G. I. Miller: It is a tremendously interesting area and it certainly provides much employment over a period of time, especially now. I think Texaco is employing something like 3,200 people; they've peaked at 3,500. When they come on stream I think it's about 300 that they will employ. Stelco, I think, are employing something over 2,000.

Hydro, of course, are supposed to be completely on stream by 1978. They're topping off now, but again, they're having problems with their equipment as you all know. Last year they had difficulties with some of their generators and some of their material that was provided. I might say it was imported from overseas, Great Britain, perhaps. It has caused considerable problems, however, the potential is there. It will be perhaps the world's largest fossil-fired generating station, producing some four million kilowatts.

Mr. Maeck: What about all that black smoke?

Mr. G. I. Miller: Black smoke? They're certainly going to require coal. They have depended on the American market, but now they are changing over to western coal and they are blending it in.

Mr. Makarchuk: And you have an expert from the United States.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Okay, getting back to the ranch.

New people in this region should be integrated and involved in the existing community. They should become acquainted and involved in the existing community. They should become acquainted with and mellowed to the life of this area, rather than creating an island of immigrants.

Caledonia, Dunnville, Cayuga and Hagersville in the County of Haldimand, Jarvis and Port Dover, the city of Nanticoke and Waterford, Delhi, Port Rowan and Simcoe need encouragement and revitalization. They need new industry to create new jobs for those who are presently unemployed in the area and to provide a better and more evenly balanced tax revenue. Traffic can be kept to a minimum if work is provided in existing towns. This is important once Stelco comes on stream with their—

[8:30]

Mr. Makarchuk: Not if the Liberals cut them off at the pipe.

Mr. G. I. Miller: —industrial park. That's really what they are providing that plant for. It has been geared all along for them to provide the raw materials required for the pipe.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's right and the Arabs are giving that to the Americans.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brantford is about fourth on my list.

Mr. Haggerty: You would never know.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate the industrial park area is zoned heavy industry. It is important we keep heavy industry in that particular area and I would expect and hope the other industries, like commercial and light industrial, would be provided for the existing municipalities. I cannot speak exclusively for my riding but we do have the 10 existing municipalities which need work, which need employment opportunities. They should be, and I think they will be located there under the leadership of the present council. They will provide the industrial areas so necessary to provide that work.

I might point out too, to provide a lifeline to the area especially from Port Colborne—and I think my colleague from Erie will support the idea—we do need a new route from Port Colborne to the industrial park. There is no significant east-west transportation corridor. It is strictly provided in my riding of Haldimand-Norfolk by the region of Haldimand-Norfolk and I don't think we can expect the region to pick up all the expenses of providing transportation. It has to be up to the province to provide an east-west corridor. They provided the QE and of course, where you get an expressway such as that, it attracts the development.

In order to provide the development, say, along the Grand River, up to the town of Dunnville, you have to provide an east-west corridor. Not that old winding, scenic route, beautiful if you want to go for a Sunday afternoon drive. If you want to provide a service, it has to be upgraded and it has to be on the priority list as far as this government is concerned. If the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) is here tonight, and even if he isn't, I hope he gets the message because I think it is a necessity.

These towns are a part of the heritage of this region and they cannot be ignored. We have 10 existing municipalities and they cannot be ignored; I have to speak out on their behalf. The Premier promised Townsend would not go until the people wanted it. It is still very fresh in their mind and I challenge him and his government to keep this promise. The dollars being spent for most of this dream city could be better spent now in updating and improving facilities in existing municipalities.

A new school is being provided in the village of Jarvis and it has long been needed; the contract has just been let. Hopefully the Lions' Club, which has wanted a new project, could see that a swimming pool is connected with this school with input from the community. We would be one of the first in that particular region to have a facility with a swimming pool. Our boys and girls might be able to learn to swim at an early age. I know it's going to be costly.

Mr. Hennessy: How about allowances?

Mr. G. I. Miller: Allowances? I would hope there could be some funding available from Wintario or Community and Social Services, but I would certainly like to see this develop along with the school so that it can be tied in. Many swimming pools provided by many clubs can be utilized only four months of the year, whereas if we had one in connection with the school it could be a community facility. I think this is the philosophy of the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells).

The school is funded by public money, it should be utilized by the community as a whole—not only by the young students but by everyone in the community. I would think it a step in the right direction and I would hope this might be built in my home town of Jarvis.

We have many other schools. We have a good secondary school at Cayuga. We have good secondary schools in Caledonia, in Dunnville, in Simcoe, in Port Dover, and in Valley Heights, at the far end of the Norfolk riding. So we are well equipped with schools.

As we all know, the school population is going down; I don't know what is the matter with our folks, they don't seem to be raising the families we did. There is a time and a place for everything, and you can wait too long.

Mr. Hennessy: They don't have the time.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Too much television? However, they are good, first-class facilities and I would hope the existing municipalities might be utilized so we don't have to bus them all over the riding. The existing municipalities could be expanded and those facilities utilized.

Caledonia, for instance, has a small high school, but it produces some of the finest students in Ontario. They would like to turn that school into a public school and build a new school. They have the site there and everything needed for a new secondary school, but the population doesn't warrant the expense.

Caledonia is on the Grand River, one of the finest streams in southern Ontario—it was the highway 100 years ago, but we can't get up past Dunnville under our present system. I think it has to be—

Mr. Makarchuk: It is a reflection of Tory rule for 35 years.

Mr. G. I. Miller: That is right, 35 years is too long.

Mr. Makarchuk: It took God millions of years to put the river in there and they screwed it up in 35 years.

Mr. G. I. Miller: That's right, so true. I think there is a possibility for development and we have to take these things into consideration.

The grant for educational purposes received in a rural area such as Haldimand-Norfolk does not enable these boards to provide anything in the way of extra facilities or enriched programs such as are enjoyed by large urban centres. Most of the children must be bused to school and the major portion of the school budget must therefore be spent in the cost of transportation. For instance, the Haldimand board of education's 1977 budget for school busing is $797,472, and the Norfolk board of education's budget is $1,071,387. You can see, Mr. Speaker, that it is a significant cost.

I realize that the province subsidizes the busing facilities and I appreciate that. But it still comes out of the members' pockets and my pocket, and I think it has to be a consideration.

The total overall budget for education in Ontario is about 25 per cent of the $13 billion provincial budget. We think it may be free, but actually it isn't free, because we all have to contribute towards it. As a legislator at Queen's Park, it is a concern of mine.

Expansion through growth in population and industrial growth would allow these boards the full use of their facilities through increased tax revenue. Full classrooms would be a more economical use of these existing schools.

There is a need for a water system for the communities in the area surrounding the Nanticoke development. And I must point out Hagersville has the poorest water quality of any municipality in Ontario. It is sulphurous. We have an adequate supply, but it is tremendously hard, and there within 12 miles—I think the pipeline comes two miles into Texaco property, that's about nine miles—they could be hooked into the water intake at the Nanticoke generating station. I give the government credit—when they put in the water intakes to supply water for the generating station they put in an oversized one so that it would supply not only the region of Haldimand-Norfolk, but I think it would even supply water to that good city of Brantford—

Mr. Makarchuk: Not only Brantford, but Kitchener as well.

Mr. G. I. Miller: That's right. I think the potential there is for something like 450 million gallons per day.

Mr. Haggerty: Ten years ago that plan was born.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I can understand why Brantford doesn't want the water. I had an opportunity to take a tour of the Grand River conservation authority area just a month or so ago.

I looked at the water that supplies Brantford and, so help me, before they do anything with it, there's water back some place—I wouldn't want to say it—that doesn't look very good. It's poor quality. After they run it through the fan mill, through the sand and everything, it comes out as A-1 quality. They can produce that water at 22 cents per thousand gallons and it may even go up to 25. The province puts in this water intake and sells it to the region of Haldimand-Norfolk for 85 cents per thousand gallons wholesale. When the region gets done providing it to the community, it's going to cost them about $1.13.

Mr. Makarchuk: The Tories will rip you off even on the water.

Mr. G. I. Miller: You're right and it's free water. Everybody owns that resource. I've also made a resolution in the last House and I intend to put it on the order paper this time that everyone should have the right to a good supply of clean water.

Mr. Ziembra: Even Brampton.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Why should we have water like this in Toronto and why should I in my riding of Haldimand-Norfolk have to drink that old sulphur water when it's right there? You can get your hands on it but you can't put the pipe in because they say it's going to cost 85 cents per thousand gallons, whereas in the rest of Ontario, and I think we've researched it out, it averages about 52 cents per thousand.

I think it has to be an injustice that the region signed a contract with the province to accept this water at 85 cents per thousand gallons at a wholesale rate and will retail it to the municipalities for $1.13. It is a bit of a ripoff and I would like to have that investigated. If I stay here long enough, they'll answer for that.

Mr. Haggerty: You will be here for a long time.

Mr. Ruston: As long as you want to be.

Mr. G. I. Miller: That's Gordon Sinclair's water. What does Gordon Sinclair say they put in that?

Mr. Gaunt: Fluoride.

Mr. G. I. Miller: We won't say what he says but anyway you'll keep your teeth. We have that water intake there. They have the pipeline into Texaco. They put a 17- or 18-inch line into Texaco. The water is already in there now. They could have extended that on to Jarvis down the Hydro right of way to Hagersville but they didn't do that. They said, "No, it can only go there and then we'll have to run another pipeline because the Townsend town site is there." They've spent $30 million on it. "We have to justify that expenditure, so we'll have to run the pipeline in a different direction so that you can use that for leverage."

We met with the Board of Trade from Jarvis last Wednesday night. Jarvis is an existing municipality of about 1,000 people and the business people there would like to see Jarvis have some growth to promote a business section that could be viable. They indicated they should be allowed to grow perhaps to 4,000, and at that time maybe bring Townsend on stream.

They're really concerned with the fact that the Treasurer might take the knife and say the government has no more money. He is the chief planner for Ontario. I think our former leader pointed this out many times that he controls the purse strings. I think it has to be ridiculous that one man can control the purse strings for Ontario. I indicated to that group that in my opinion the Treasurer—and I respect his ability—shouldn't have that power.

It's our money and he shouldn't be able to control it, and control the development in Ontario by his expenditures. He shouldn't have that right. I don't think he will have that right. As I indicated to them, I don't think he will utilize that strength because it's a democratic system. I hope the democratic system will always prevail for the best interest of everyone in Ontario.

The need for a water system for the existing communities in the area surrounding Nanticoke and the Nanticoke development is now. These communities should be allowed to reach their potential but they are hampered by a poor and inadequate supply of water. The ministry has promised these communities will be included when the services are developed for the Townsend town site. It is our contention that for the present time the service for Townsend is not needed but water services for Jarvis and Hagersville and other municipalities are an immediate need.

Mr. Makarchuk: Not in Port Dover. They've found a replacement for water.

[8:45]

Mr. G. I. Miller: I will say, Mac, they have enough water in Port Dover to expand their population from the present 4,000 up to 12,000. They can do it cheaper than any place else in the region of Haldimand-Norfolk. They have an adequate supply of water. They have a sewage disposal system which is adequate to take care of that development. It has already been put in. Dover has a good supply of water.

Mr. Makarchuk: They don't drink too much.

Mr. G. I. Miller: That's questionable, a lot of people do.

I suggest with the water intake presently in existence it is feasible to go ahead with a water system that will ultimately service Townsend but can immediately be used to service these existing communities. If a start must be made on Townsend, then let the water system be started, but delay the town proper until the municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk indicates there is a need for it.

Surely the people of this area deserve some advantage from the industrial complex now in the construction stages. As I indicated, I think the Stelco dock has been completed. They have spent a tremendous amount of money and I am convinced they will come on stream in time, perhaps by 1979 or 1980. They can provide steel for the pipeline which is going to service the northern part of Canada and provide the energy we so desperately need.

It is and has been our understanding that the intake at Nanticoke from Lake Erie and close to the mouth of the Niagara Creek is to be used as a water source for the Townsend site. As I pointed out, it is designed for not only Townsend, and not only for the region of Haldimand-Norfolk, but for the area along the Grand River as far up as Kitchener.

I might just comment, for a moment. I don't think the region of Haldimand-Norfolk should be expected to pay the entire cost for a development of that magnitude. My concern for my riding is the need for water. I am also concerned that the quality of water, be it for Townsend or existing communities, be protected and improved.

Over the past months in Haldimand-Norfolk there has been a hearing of the environmental board with regard to the possibility of locating a toxic waste disposal system on a farm located near the industrial complex and on Nanticoke Creek just up stream of the location of the proposed water intake—well, it is not proposed, it is already there and I have already spoken about this. The effluent from this proposed waste disposal site is to be let off, under ministry supervision, into Niagara Creek and thus into Lake Erie.

Again, Mr. Speaker, this is a real concern of mine. I have discussed it with the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Kerr) and he accuses me of playing politics with this. I assure you, sir, I don't use it politically. I think we have to listen to the people. The other day during a discussion I had with him he said he would like to dump it in my car or in my home or wherever. I will say I think it is a concern. It is a serious problem we have to deal with. I think it is up to the minister to provide leadership. I would like to co-operate with him. I would like to make it known now that I want to co-operate with him so we can protect the environment of Ontario.

Despite the assurance of checks by the ministry, there are no 100 per cent guarantees against the possibility of spills and leaks and problems with flooding. As all members know, we have had a tremendous amount of rain in September. This certainly should create problems. The plan is they would provide a lagoon and a landfill site to take care of our waste. They indicate we can't do it any other way, but I think there are alternatives.

They are putting highly poisonous material into the water system. The landfill site is located within a few hundred feet of the Niagara Creek and the creek enters Lake Erie at a point just a few thousand feet from the mouth of the water system intake. As you know, I have spoken on the fishing industry in Lake Erie many times. This provides over 50 per cent of the freshwater fish for Ontario. I don't think we need another lake from which the fish aren't suitable for human consumption. I think there are now some 130 lakes and streams in Ontario from which it is questionable we can eat the fish. I think that is a precious resource. It is providing a living for many people at Port Dover and Port Maitland—all along the Ontario side of Lake Erie—and has provided a living there for many years. We have to protect that resource, and I know we have the potential to do that.

I can appreciate the ministry's feeling that it must push for this site, having granted a loan of some $500,000 to the firm involved for the building of this proposed plant. However, evidence provided by the various concerned citizens' groups and the region itself indicates many reasons why this proposed site should not be given a go-ahead. It also has left questions in the minds of people in the area as to the credibility of the firm involved in the light of evidence of its parent company's operations in the United States. Again it's an American firm.

In Ontario we have the technology and the education system; and, rather than giving a payoff for that service from the States, I think we could keep our money in Ontario and in Canada and develop our own technology.

As the opposition party in Ontario, we would like to have some constructive input. Hopefully, the minister might listen to our proposals and suggestions and we can come up with a solution to the problem.

The proposed site is presently zoned agricultural and has been a viable farm operation for many years. Concerns have been expressed over the need to keep agricultural land in production, and yet in my riding we have two large parcels of land owned by the government, South Cayuga and Townsend, and now there is a future proposal to turn farm land into a waste disposal site.

We appreciate that this government has seen some of the errors of its ways in parceling up the South Cayuga site and renting it back to farmers of the area. Townsend should remain in the same state for a good period of time unless—and I would like to make this very clear—unless there is a need for it and unless the region itself indicates that they would like to see it developed.

The basic industry in the area has been agriculture. We have the Norfolk Co-op. We have the Haldimand Co-op. We have the farm machinery dealers. They depend on that farming community for their existence. Until there's a need, I think we can blend both rural and urban together and make it a better place to live.

As I see these boys and girls sitting around the Speaker here tonight, I am reminded that there is no finer place to raise a family than in a rural area. When it comes to getting a job, I think any boy or any girl who has been raised on the farm is going to be selected as soon as anybody else; in fact, they might have a little priority because they know how to work and how to get along—and that doesn't hurt any one.

I think it's important that we keep a blend between urban and rural. In terms of our balance of trade, rather than having 80 per cent of our peaches imported and 20 per cent produced in the Niagara Peninsula, we should be encouraging our agricultural industries to produce and to be competitive.

Again I would like to point a finger across the House at the government for not recognizing the problem. When we met the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) in the committee considering his ministry's estimates the other night, our agriculture critic, the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) indicated we have been critical, but that they have turned around. They've got this new pin which will identify anything that's produced in Ontario.

I think it's a step in the right direction to indicate that something has been produced or grown here. But I believe it came about because the opposition has been strong enough to make the government listen. We have a strong agricultural background in our caucus, and we can speak out strongly on behalf of agriculture, which again is the very fibre of Canada and Ontario. We shouldn't allow it to deteriorate; we should encourage it.

We're only spending one and a half per cent of our budget on agriculture, which I think has to be a little bit ridiculous. I realize the farmers do not want to be subsidized; they want to be independent. But we still have to recognize that agriculture is going to be an important factor in feeding the world. The countries that currently produce oil are going to have the money to trade off for agricultural produce, and I think we have to protect that, we have to have those products to sell and I am pleased to see the Minister of Agriculture and Food and the Premier (Mr. Davis) trying to promote sales of agricultural produce around the world. This has taken place under the encouragement of a minority government and we should take some credit for it.

There is also a garbage or a waste disposal crisis around Ontario. They're looking for sites. There's one for Hamilton, just located along our border, at Glanbrook, I believe it is. I think there's one down by Chatham. There's one up by Owen Sound. There's one in the riding of Halton-Burlington. They're having hearings at the present time.

Of course, nobody wants the garbage. It is a problem. It's the Minister of the Environment's responsibility to deal with it and he is trying to deal with it, but hearings are taking place. It is costing the taxpayer a lot of inconvenience, a lot of money.

There is a garbage crisis in Ontario and it is increasing severely. In March 1977, there were 22 applicants for new garbage dump sites filed with the Ministry of the Environment. The issues on new garbage dumps: number one, no one wants a garbage dump nearby but we all create garbage; number two, garbage dumps pollute land; number three, garbage dumps pollute water; number four, garbage dumps degrade the area; number five, garbage dumps devalue the surrounding properties. This devaluation is a significant hidden cost falling on the few individuals forced to subsidize the big city garbage.

The need for new garbage dump sites is increasing because there are more and more disposable products and because of the ban on open burning in the late 1960s. As we all realize, burning was a way of reducing the quantity by perhaps 75 per cent.

Opposition to the new dump sites is being raised by citizens' groups more keenly aware of the impact of garbage dumps. The time involved for application approval increases all the time and costs are very high. By the time applications have gone through the Environmental Hearing Board, there are still the OMB and the appeals to the cabinet ministers and courts to wade through. Experts agree landfill sites are passé, yet the province is letting these disputes grind on and on, avoiding the issue while garbage problems increase throughout Ontario.

The hearing on the dumps around the Owen Sound area has cost the public sector $97,000 and they're only three weeks into the inquiry which is still continuing. When the industrial waste hearing was held in my riding in the past month the local citizens contributed something like $6,000 to oppose. The region had to contribute, as well as the cottage owners ratepayers' association. I don't know what the total cost is, but it will be well in excess of $30,000 no doubt.

Municipalities now doing cost study analyses think landfill is the cheapest method and will fight for landfill so long as they believe there is hope of getting approval.

The provincial government is on the hot seat in making the decisions through the Ministry of the Environment and the OMB as to who will take whose garbage and when. Grants for recycling and incineration are a myth. A provincial program similar to the Ontario Water Resources Commission, wherein the province provides long-term funding for all municipalities to go directly to source separation of garbage, recycling and incineration, is one probable solution. The sterile, inert ash can be reused for road work, clean fill, et cetera.

[9:00]

It represents five to seven per cent of the original volume incinerated. It can also be utilized for energy and recycling of paper, glass and metal. Technology and knowhow exist in North America to set up recycling programs for towns as small as 500 people. As of 1973, over 200 cities in the US were separating garbage. Since almost 50 per cent of garbage is paper fibre, the recycling of this product is a key to a successful recycling program. The province should invite a consortium of paper mills to build a newsprint mill for recycling paper, thus providing a steady outlet for the paper. There are two such mills in the US as of now, in California and Illinois.

Glass already has a market which can be expanded as required, and as we know most mills have markets. Organic and other materials can be composted or incinerated, and the ash can be used as roadbed or clean fill. Heat from the incinerator may be recovered and used for heating government buildings, such as hospitals and office buildings.

I would like to point out that at the present time most of Ontario's liquid industrial waste is hauled by trucks to landfill sites or lagoons for disposal. The volume is 40 million to 45 million gallons per year. Disposal of liquid industrial waste in landfill is at best an interim measure and is not environmentally acceptable when highly toxic chemical wastes are involved. This problem is also complicated by the lack of landfill sites in urban areas. The current difficulties the Ontario Ministry of the Environment is experiencing in Metropolitan Toronto with respect to landfill sites is an example.

There has never been a strong demand for facilities to treat liquid industrial waste because it is much cheaper for private business regulations requiring more stringent disposal regulations requiring more stringent disposal practices. However, the government has been reluctant to regulate the disposal of industrial waste because suitable treatment facilities are not available.

I would like to point out that Tricil of Mississauga is operating only at 40 per cent capacity. Because of the fact not enough waste material is directed there it cannot expand its operations. Perhaps one reason is the need for government legislation. In the meantime, the Ministry of the Environment has instituted a way bill system to document the sources, movement and designation of hauled liquid industrial waste. The benefit of this mandatory reporting system is that it prevents illegal dumping of waste by irresponsible haulers, but it does not solve the problem of waste disposal.

The dilemma facing the government is that the disposal industry is reluctant to build treatment facilities unless there is a guaranteed market through government regulations requiring treatment of liquid industrial waste. At the same time, the government is unwilling to pass regulations when there are insufficient treatment facilities to handle the waste. One possible solution to this dilemma is to have the government regulate the level of treatment or method of disposal of industrial waste, while concurrently working with the disposal industry to develop the needed technology and facilities. This could be a government-industry joint venture at the development stages. As the disposal industry matures, the government should then gradually withdraw from the waste disposal business. This is only one suggestion as to how we might deal with liquid industrial waste which is a serious problem for us all.

I would like to turn for a moment to the agricultural industry in my riding. We produce tobacco. I would like to indicate we have had one of the better crops that has ever been produced. I would like to indicate too that the Minister of Agriculture and Food and the Premier went around a considerable area of the world trying to dispose of it and they were fairly successful. It looks like a very encouraging year.

We have had one of the best wheat crops in our history and we have a tremendous amount of potential. The corn crop had another exceptionally good year, but the price is something like $1.60 a bushel. I would like to point out the fact that between the corn crop and the beef industry they've lost in the last three years, since 1974, something like $300 million. The farmer hasn't created all that much fuss but it has created a real hardship to the farmer.

It's up to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. I realize we have to contend with imports and we have to be competitive, but Ontario, as the largest province, has to show some leadership on behalf of Canada. Considering the difficult times the farmer is facing.

I realize also that Inco is a problem in Sudbury, that many are going to be laid off, but I would point out we didn't have a select committee to deal with the problems of the agricultural industry; and the farmers accepted that. With all due regard to the Inco problem and the jobs involved, I think we are in difficult times and we do have to compete for world markets. It's not going to be easy to resolve it, but I think labour still has to understand that we are in difficult times and we all have to share the responsibility of getting out of these particular times.

Getting back to agriculture, it is a trading resource and with some drive and some leadership by the Minister of Agriculture and Food we can sell our produce. We can encourage the utilization of our land so it can be competitive with industry, with urban development; and then we won't have to have so much planning, we won't need so much protection. I don't think farmers really want to do so, but the fact is if you can't make a dollar off the land then you are going to sell it for development; however, that trend may be turning around.

I would just like to make this point in closing my remarks on the budget debate, that our agricultural industry is still a very important industry for Ontario and for Canada. We want to recognize that and I think the Liberal caucus is in a strong position to put that forth on behalf of everyone in Ontario.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Samis: Merci, monsieur l'orateur, j'aimerais d'abord vous feliciter sur votre election et naturellement j'aimerais vous souhaiter mes vœux personnelles et mes meilleurs vœux dans votre mandat comme le president de ce Chambre.

Mr. Speaker, if—

Mr. Reid: How's your Italian?

Mr. Samis: Not so good.

Mr. Speaker, if one were to briefly consider the following facts, I don't think there's any real wonder or doubt that so many people in Canada and in Ontario are having increasing doubts about Canada's future and our ability to manage that future. All we have to do is consider some of the following facts.

For example, that this winter we will probably surpass the one million mark in terms of unemployed in this country and that most economists are forecasting continuing high levels of unemployment for the remainder of this decade. I specifically cite the report of the Economic Council of Canada and some of their predictions for up until 1987.

I quote from page 11: "Because of this slow recovery, the continued under-utilization of resources in Ontario and the potential for expanding out but without a commensurate increase in employment, the Ontario unemployment rate could rise to 6.8 per cent of the labour force in 1977 and 7.5 per cent in 1978 unless," and I emphasize that, "unless measures are introduced to combat the situation."

If you look at the charts for the various industries which provide the basis for their predictions; if you look at the GNP, for example at the provincial level from 1968 to 1972 the growth rate was 5.7 per cent and from 1973 to 1977 it was 3.8 per cent. They prophesy 4.8 per cent for 1978-1982 and 3.8 per cent for 1983 to 1987.

If you look at personal disposable income in terms of dollars and percentage increase, and again if we compare: from 1968 to 1972 we are talking in terms of 10 per cent; from 1973 to 1977 the figure is 13.8 per cent increase; but for the future, from 1978 to 1982 it is 8.8 per cent and 1983 to 1987 they predict 7.9 per cent.

If we talk about the growth rate in terms of employment and we look at the same periods: again from 1968 to 1972 a 3.2 per cent increase in employment; 1973 to 1977 it is 3.3 per cent; and for the ensuing years from 1978 to 1982 they call for 2.4 per cent and from 1983 to 1987 it is 2.0 per cent. I have outlined the unemployment forecast they are making.

If you look at the inflation rate in this country, we introduced wage and price controls supposedly to bring the inflation rate down, and yet figures have come out showing that the inflation rate this year, 1977, is almost 50 per cent higher than the federal government told us it would be at the beginning of this year. We all remember the forecast of the Minister of Finance at the outset of 1977. If we remember that the Canadian dollar has now plummeted to a value of less than 90 cents in terms of the American dollar; if we remember that our federal government's deficit will probably hit an all-time high, while the Prime Minister keeps telling us that we all need to practise restraint in our personal lives; if we remember that as a country our balance of payments deficit is likely to hit a record high this year; if we remember the economic growth rate for Ontario will only be 2.5 per cent, a figure that the Conference Board of Canada says will be even lower than the growth rate of Quebec—we know the political problems they are facing but Ontario will have an even lower growth rate for 1977 than the province of Quebec; if we remember that everybody is forecasting an eight to 12 per cent rise in municipal taxes for 1978, and that there will be sizable increases in the cost of Hydro, gasoline, home oil, and natural gas for the upcoming year—the list is long.

Mr. Speaker, I don't want to paint a picture of total gloom and doom, but I think as politicians and elected officials we should face the cold, hard facts that the people of this province and this country are losing faith in the future and strength of the economy of our society. One only has to look at Gallup and other polls to realize the rising sense of pessimism that seems to pervade all ages and all classes of our society about the future of our economy. There can be no doubt that this psychological lack of confidence has a lot to do with whether or not we will be able to get out of this economic recession.

As everybody knows, people who are uncertain about their future are certainly far less likely to make any major investments, whether they be large corporations, small business or individual consumers. I believe that is the sum total of the facts that I have mentioned at the outset of my speech. In this growing and pervasive sense of foreboding about the health and the future of our economy, and when I say this I am omitting the political problems that confront our society at the present time, I believe we as members of this provincial Parliament should realize that many of our average citizens are losing faith in the institution of government to cope with and solve some of the problems that confront us.

I emphasize that this criticism applies to my own party as well as to the other two political parties. Too often we become prisoners of our ideological past or our historical roots. We fail to display the flexibility in thinking that will not only tackle the short-term problems; we should not be afraid to tell people the hard facts of life and offer creative, comprehensive solutions on a long-term basis. Whether it be the energy problem, balance of payments, our international competitive situation, our dependence on the United States or the simple finite nature of our society and the seemingly infinite nature of demands of certain sectors of our society for more of everything at someone else's expense, we must realize that we have a duty to provide leadership, to tell the people in plain language the obstacles that face our society and offer meaningful solutions to overcome some of those obstacles.

We in the New Democratic Party are frequently accused of being prisoners of our own ideology, incapable of seeing some of the economic problems in realistic and pragmatic terms. While my partisan instinct may deny the truth of those charges, I must realistically admit that there is a limited amount of truth in that allegation and that we as a party must face the reality of a mixed economy in Ontario, with the bulk of it being and remaining in the private sector; and that represents the basic desire and preference of an overwhelming majority of the citizens of this province.

As a member of this party, I am prepared to discard traditional rhetoric and work within the context of that reality. That does not mean I do not believe in certain very fundamental changes in our taxation system, political structure and resource policy.

It is interesting to note that we are constantly being told by the other side that because we have never managed the store and because they have, they are automatically the only political party in this province capable of administering the province. While it is true the Tories have enjoyed the confidence of the voters of this province for 34 years—although I would point out in the last elections they have not been able to receive the confidence of more than 40 per cent of the voters at best—they themselves are indeed prone to becoming excessively ideological in their approach to some of our problems, especially the economic ones. Like anyone else who claims to be infallible in things mortal, they are eminently capable of committing major blunders and political somersaults that sometimes would make Nadia Comaneci stand back in sheer awe.

[9:15]

We have a Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) who tells us he's wholeheartedly engaged in pursuing the Holy Grail of a balanced budget for this province in the millennial year of 1981. Such an obsessive, inflexible, doctrinaire, dogmatic, ideological pursuit in this day and age is tantamount to driving on Highway 401 in a Bennett buggy.

While there are defensible arguments for getting a tighter grip on public expenditures and for trimming the fat on various government structures, and for telling people they can't have everything they want and that some stringent limitations may be necessary on certain government expenditures, the Treasurer of this province has gone far beyond this. He is embarked on a Herbert Hoover—R. B. Bennett-like crusade for the impossible dream—the reactionary Utopia, the ideological Valhalla, the purest paradise of a balanced budget for this province. I don't intend to go into detail on the cost of the Treasurer's fantasies beyond saying that we've already begun to bear the fruits of those fantasies in the form of rising municipal taxes, a stagnant provincial economy, serious social injustice to the poor and those on fixed incomes and to the thousands of people put on the unemployment rolls to pay the steep price of the Treasurer's economic eroticism.

Those who are presently managing the store frequently accuse us of being a party that simply can't cope with the realities of government, the private sector and basic good government. As one who is condemned to being beyond the pale of the chosen Tory brethren, I look at our economy today and wonder if the annointed 26 high priests opposite know the limitations of their presumed divine calling.

Let me explain, Mr. Speaker. For a government that claims to know best how to govern, I look at some of their recent examples of blunders and ineptitudes. We have wasted almost a quarter of a billion dollars in recent years on such extravagant and virtually worthless acquisitions as the Pickering site, the Edwardsburgh industrial wasteland, and the Townsend-Cayuga "Brasilia" of John White's dreams.

Two hundred and fifty million dollars, Mr. Speaker; hardly chicken feed even for the most hard-bitten ideologue of our party.

Mr. Reid: Who would you name as the most hard-bitten ideologue of your party?

Mr. Samis: I leave it to your fertile imagination, Patrick.

Mr. Reid: Do I get a prize if I guess right?

Mr. Samis: We are now $300 million over cost at the Bruce nuclear project and the end still isn't in sight. Yet we're told by the chosen 26 that only they can rule the fortunes of this province with any certitude of competence. I won't digress to dwell on any of the recent declarations or inanities of the Minister of Energy (Mr. J. A. Taylor) on the Bruce project and the whole fiasco surrounding the contracts, Mr. Speaker.

These same chosen 26 squandered $20 million of the taxpayers' money recently in a provincial election that nobody wanted; nobody in the general public asked for, wanted, or deemed desirable. The only purpose for the election obviously was to satisfy the Tory lust for power, for the simple reason they can't tolerate the restrictions and limitations minority government has put upon them.

We've given away more than $500 million to the corporate sector in the last three years in the form of various tax credits, tax holidays, tax deferrals, depreciation allowances and tax deductions; all in the hope of spurring the economy. Yet look at the stagnant nature of our economy, look at the figures that came out in the press this week: $500 million of the taxpayers' money and what have we gotten in return?

It's interesting to note we've given away so much to the corporate sector that even the Conference Board tells us our economic growth rate for 1977 will be less than that of Quebec; and the Ontario Economic Council concluded in a recent report on the Ontario economy that "in analysing the case for corporate tax cuts, both the financing need for this redistribution and the effects of tax concessions need to be assessed.

"The difficulty with the use of corporate tax cuts as a short-term stimulant to investment is that linkages seem to be weak. Tax incentive policies designed to encourage investment have reduced impact because of the extent of operations of subsidiaries of United States firms. Corporate tax cuts often merely redistribute revenue between Ottawa and Washington, because US multi-nationals are liable for United States taxes on the income of their Canadian subsidiaries."

Yet the Treasurer of this province continues the same old ideology-based policies of continuing the corporate tax giveaways regardless of their lack of proven success. It would almost seem that orthodoxy at any price is the first commandment of this government.

It is interesting to note that at no time does the Treasurer seem willing to change or modify the neo-colonial status of our provincial economy. In fact, he seems to be attempting to outdo C. D. Howe, the old tsar himself, by railing away at the feds, by railing away at the role of FIRA and by decrying the need for yet more American control of our economy, using the euphemisms of investment, initiative or confidence. But whatever one wants to call it, the end result will be an even greater dependence on the American economy, American technology, American capital and ultimately American hegemony of our economy on a scale that will surpass the colonial cultural status of our society today.

It is sad that the excellent proposals of the select committee on economic and cultural nationalism have been assigned a permanent place on the scrap heap of forgotten, unused and unwanted reports in this province. I sometimes wonder how the generations of the next century will judge us for having ignored their recommendations so casually and so consistently.

In addition to the almost $1 billion mispent by our high priest of fiscal orthodoxy, I see looming before us the spectre of a $5-billion investment east of Toronto in the Darlington nuclear station. I don't pretend this is a simple black-or-white issue and that we would have totally rejected the project had we been in government. But I do say that we would certainly have had an independent environmental assessment done on the project prior to any commencement of activities. Even more important, we would have adopted a much tougher, more comprehensive and more stringent conservation policy than that being pursued by Ontario Hydro at the present time in order to reduce the need for such massive consumptions of valuable capital as Darlington.

The recommendations of the select committee on Hydro of last year, if adopted in word and spirit, would have quite conceivably eliminated the need for a Darlington if they had been pursued and implemented vigorously over the next eight to 10 years. But no, we are hell-bent on a massive nuclear expansion, and it is the taxpayers of this province who will eventually cover and pay the full bill for this all-out drive into nuclear power and this failure to launch a cost-saving, energy-saving, job-saving, tough conservation program.

It is rather ironic that we can afford to spend $4 billion to $5 billion on a Darlington, yet we cancel a meagre, mere $5-million home insulation program in order to accommodate the Treasurer on his journey to the promised land of fiscal orthodoxy in 1981—a program that would have saved home owners millions of dollars in the upcoming years; a program that would have demonstrated Ontario's commitment to meaningful conservation; a program that would have reduced

Ontario's need for expensive oil and gas in the 1980s; a program that would have created jobs and been a boon to small business in this province; a program that would have set an example for this country. All this is scrapped to save a measly $5 million while we pursue the grandeur and girth of a nuclear empire in Darlington at a probable eventual cost of more than $5 billion.

We have a Treasurer who pursues a policy of bigness in every sense at the expense of many valuable things which operate at a smaller scale in our society. Whether it is the imposition of regional government upon those who didn't ask for it and don't want it, or whether it is his predilection for giving the biggest handouts to the biggest suppliants at the corporate tax trough, this government has failed to pay adequate attention and adequate heed to the vibrant, largely Canadian-owned, enterprising yet politically neglected and inadequately recognized small business sector of our economy.

In the Treasurer's pursuit of bigness we have overlooked the small business sector in terms of its role in stimulating the economy, creating jobs, providing an indigenous technology for our country's future.

I commend the member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins)—

Mr. Foulds: You are going too far now.

Mr. Samis: —for his initiative in introducing a bill that would assist small business in a meaningful way. I was pleased to support it. I only hope the government will not let the bill die, thwart its passage or attempt to significantly modify it just because it was the member for Victoria-Haliburton who had the enterprise to introduce such a piece of legislation before the government ever got around to doing anything about it.

The Treasurer is so rooted in his R. B. Bennett ideological orthodoxy that he's even behind his counterpart in the province of Quebec, Jacques Parizeau, who is a pretty conservative fellow in his own way in the province of Quebec. His colleagues made it one of their priorities upon assuming power a year ago to introduce programs specifically designed to assist, stimulate and foster small and medium-sized enterprises in that province. Naturally, I regret the fact it wasn't a member of my own party who moved to introduce such a bill earlier in this session, Mr. Speaker, but I cast aside my partisan consideration and pay due credit to my colleague from the fair city of Lindsay for his important contribution in this session of the Legislature.

I began my remarks with a quote from the Ontario Economic Council on what they predict lies ahead for Ontario. I must say I'm inclined to give them far greater credence than I do the Treasurer. I have before me a copy of the Treasurer's statement to the Legislature on June 27 of this year entitled, "Reaffirming Ontario's Budget Strategy for 1977." I'd like to quote from the conclusions of that particular document.

I quote, Mr. Speaker, from page 14: "The government's budget plan for 1977 implements a fiscal policy appropriate to the needs of the Ontario economy and makes wise use of our financial resources. The economic outlook is steadily improving, assisted by the built-in fiscal stimulus in excess of $1 billion that I documented in my budget statement, lower interest rates and recovery of the economy of the United States. I believe that this recovery trend will continue throughout the year and into 1978. I will be monitoring the situation closely and I am prepared to consider supplementary actions to stimulate the economy in selective areas, if necessary."

Mr. Foulds: Who said that?

Mr. Samis: Darcy McKeough. "This government of Ontario's record", he boasts, "of achievement in fiscal and economic policy is second to none. In 1971—an election year—"again in 1975"—an election year—"Ontario led the way in Canada in the early and timely implementation"—and notice this Mr. Speaker—"of expansionary fiscal policies to stimulate economic growth and to create the great number of new job opportunities our people demand. We have shown equally good judgement in recognizing the threat of inflation and in bringing forward policies to protect our high standard of living and enhance our bountiful opportunities."

Comment on the shortcomings and inadequacies of those forecasts and conclusions is almost superfluous. Although I must say I rather enjoyed the comment of the correspondent of the Montreal Star, when he stated "The Davis government first had to rewrite it's April budget so drastically that the new versions bears little more resemblance to the original than the Valley of the Dolls does to Little Women." The same scribe, in the same article, wondered aloud at the Treasurer getting his financial advice from the infamous Bert Lance. If one compares the predictions of the Treasurer with those of the Conference Board as to how our economy would fare in 1977, I'm afraid the Treasurer's stature would approximate that of the Toronto Argonauts alongside the Montreal Alouettes or the Toronto Blue Jays alongside the Kansas City Royals, much less the New York Yankees.

Mr. Haggerty: What about the Brampton charter?

Mr. Samis: We'll leave the charter to itself.

That was the past. Now I'd like to turn my attention to the future and what I feel we should be doing to correct the situation that does exist.

I want to make it clear I regard the stagnant economic situation and the unacceptably high unemployment as the fundamental problems facing our economy. I say that because of the attitude and statements of both the Premier of this province (Mr. Davis) and the Prime Minister of this country. They still regard inflation as a basic problem facing Canada today. They both say they do not want to rekindle the fires of inflation. They're both in bed with the AIB and their incestuous relationship will drag on another five months before they have to get up, get out and face the realities of a post-AIB society. Clearly, rising unemployment and the present almost nine per cent inflation rate have proven the failure of the AIB and Trudeau-Davis policy to really come to grips with our economic problems.

[9:30]

The AIB was supposed to cure us of our inflation woes, yet here we are today with a record full one per cent rise in the inflation rate for the month of October, no clear policies for the post-AIB era and staggering unemployment among our young.

In the short-term, we must give top priority to getting our economy moving again and setting our productive capacity well beyond the existing 80 per cent. We must introduce significant tax cuts, along the lines suggested by a whole host of people, including the Economic Council of Canada, Walter Gordon, a whole series of economic experts and by my federal colleagues in the New Democratic Party in Ottawa.

Most curiously, even the members of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada are advocating tax cuts. I must say I do feel a little uneasy when I hear that they and I are advocating the same thing.

Mr. Foulds: I should hope so.

Mr. Samis: Being anywhere near Sinclair Stevens gives me quivers—

Mr. Foulds: Yes, indeed.

Mr. Samis:—and sensations of a nature I don't exactly feel comfortable with. But the simple fact is that priority must be given to stimulating consumer confidence and consumer buying, as opposed to further corporate tax cuts, in order to reduce our inventories, increase our level of production, strengthen business optimism and reinvigorate some of the ailing domestic-oriented industries in this country.

I want to emphasize I realize that some of these tax cuts may well be somewhat inflationary, but when you have 20 per cent unused productive capacity and a rising cost of unemployment to government, I believe it's a sound investment in the future.

I don't believe we'll ever again achieve levels of high employment and low inflation simultaneously, for a variety of reasons; and I don't believe that personal income tax cuts will be nearly as inflationary as the high priests of fiscal orthodoxy constantly warn us. I think that the ECC proposals of tax cuts in the range of 8.3 per cent across the board, and graduated to 25 per cent for those in the lowest income-tax-paying brackets would be a significant short-term stimulus at the federal level.

To those who immediately decry the loss in federal revenues, I can only say that the strength and performance of the economy in the succeeding years could certainly restore most if not all of those lost revenues in the form of accelerated growth in sales, employment and individual income; all of which would produce revenue for the government coffers in ensuing years.

I was rather interested, Mr. Speaker, to note that the ECC also called for a reduction in the provincial sales tax to stimulate consumer spending. This is certainly a proposal I could support for the province of Ontario.

Oh, I know that the Treasurer would immediately decry the loss of revenue for 1978 and tell us that he could only do so if the feds were to compensate the province. But this is a time for new initiatives and most economists, regardless of their political stripes, readily admit that a one per cent cut in the retail sales tax would certainly not bankrupt any treasury; and most economists say that it would immediately spur consumer spending and give some buoyancy to retail sales of consumer goods. Yet once again the Treasurer refuses to move because of his twin obsessions with a balanced budget and some sort of orthodox fiscal nirvana that he seemingly seeks endlessly.

I'm the first to admit, and I emphasize this, that these tax cuts along with various suggested public works programs are short-term and somewhat traditional Keynesian approaches to the whole economic problem. But I also said at the outset of my speech there are long-term solutions that we as legislators must find to our problems. Some of these problems are structural in nature and they too require our attention if we're ever to get our economy back on track again. I would like to highlight briefly some of these problems, because I believe that if we don't find a solution to the root causes of our economic woes we'll never be able to get a healthy economy in Canada again.

The first basic problem, obviously, is our problem of competing in world markets. Being an exporting nation, we simply must devise new methods and modes of making ourselves more competitive in the world trade scene. I acknowledge the need to improve our overall level of productivity and to restrain wage demands in certain segments of the economy, but I certainly do not ascribe to any simplistic views that the wage earners of this country are solely to blame for the present situation, and that if we'd put a lid on wage increases we'd solve our problems.

Nor do I subscribe to the idea that excessive taxation is the root of our problem. I must say that I was both rather surprised and pleased to hear the Treasurer attack this simplistic approach in a speech in Toronto on October 26 to a joint meeting of the engineering and managerial organizations operating in Ontario. I quote from page 6 of that speech:

"Secondly, we must maintain a competitive tax climate for manufacturing in Ontario. Here, I think it's time to try and lean against the nagging myth"—myth, Darcy McKeough, myth?—"that our industries are simply too-heavily taxed to compete.

"We published our research on this matter last fall and explained the need to exempt from retail sales tax the purchase of production machinery and equipment. We're continuing to watch the situation closely and I would like to say that recent data in fact suggests that the tax burden here is now very competitive.

"Without getting into payroll taxes, which are much heavier in the United States than in Canada, and investment tax credits, which are somewhat more generous for growing firms than in Ontario, we have one of the most competitive corporate tax structures in North America. The net combined corporate tax burden in this province for this year appears to be less than in the case for manufacturing firms in such major states as New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Georgia, Texas and California."

I'd like to quote a little further on in the same speech, where the Treasurer said:

"Also, the competitive position of Canadian producers at home and abroad is no longer deteriorating but is improving significantly. The devaluation of the dollar, which essentially reflects an honest realignment for Canada and the world economy, has gone further than any imaginable tariff policy to enhance our competitive position. It is bringing our costs in line substantially. Both the governments of Canada and Ontario are committed to utilize this fundamental adjustment by enhancing productivity, rather than encouraging nominal and inflationary wage gains as a key to real income growth.

"Finally, along with rising disposable incomes, competitive business taxes and a more competitive Canadian dollar, there is every indication that costs will continue to moderate and are going to move in tandem with our main competitor. Non-labour costs have been declining and are expected to parallel moderating American costs next year. The same has been the case in both wages and in salaries. Next year, wage gains in both countries are expected to be exactly the same."

Those are the words of none other than Darcy McKeough.

A very basic aspect of our problem is how we manage our investment in Canada and the serious weaknesses in our research and development programs in this country. Part of the problem is due to our neo-colonial status and the preponderance of US-based multi-nationals in the manufacturing sectors. I don't believe that this is sufficient to explain our sorry record in this regard. If we compare what percentage of our GNP is spent on research and development in Canada, with other countries in the world, then you get some idea why we're losing some of our competitiveness in some of these fields. The source of this comparison is the OECD.

If you compare the percentage of the GNP spent on research and development the Americans spent 2.35 per cent; in West Germany, it was 2.16 per cent; in the Netherlands it was 2.06 per cent; in Japan it was two per cent even; in France it was 1.86 per cent; in Sweden it was 1.59 per cent and in Canada it was one per cent. Those were 1974 figures and, since then, it's become worse and not better in this country.

In 1975, spending in the manufacturing industry on R and D had declined to 0.58 per cent of the value of manufacturing output. That is a decline from 10 years ago, 1965 when the percentage was 0.80 in the manufacturing sector. This serious situation, even prompted none other than his lordship, the Treasurer, to comment. I quote from his speech of October 25: "It's a national scandal that our R and D activity is only one-third the level of that of the United States, as measured as a proportion of GNP. The shortfall is simply enormous, close to $3 billion per year or 50,000 to 100,000 innovators and what little money we do spend is far too often locked up in the research bureaucracies which may well produce the discoveries we need for the next 100 years, but can't be relied on for those we need to grow in the next decade.

"Unemployment among engineers is at its highest level in 15 years and we have reversed the brain drain only because United States has tightened up on immigration. If we move to close the R and D gap with the US, think of the new products Canadian manufacturers could be designing, constructing and selling to world markets. With another 50,000 innovators at work, two in every plant in Canada—that's all it means—how long would it take before we started closing the import gap for manufactured products?"

"We must provide, along with the basic elements of enterprise strategy that I have discussed, meaningful encouragement for innovations by the manufacturing sector."

This is kind of interesting, Mr. Speaker. In closing, the Duke of Kent—the Treasurer—emphasized, "The form and success of our industrial recovery nevertheless will depend as in the past"—he's speaking to these industrialists—"on your inventiveness and your enterprise," and that is none other than the Duke of Kent telling businessmen.

Before leaving the subject I would like to touch briefly upon the question of wages and wage earners in this country. I regard the minimum wage in this province as an absolute disgrace and shame. I think it's an outright insult to those who do not belong to a union, to those who are not highly skilled, to those who may be born in another country, to tell them that they must work and expect to be paid below the poverty level because any increase in their wage would be inflationary.

If the nine other provinces—and I noticed just yesterday in the newspaper that the Saskatchewan government has announced their minimum wage would be going up to $3.15 per hour as of January 30, 1978—if the nine other provinces plus the federal government can do significantly better than this province, I think it's an outrage that the working poor in this province should be treated in such an abysmal, insensitive, callous, arrogant, inhuman manner in this day and age. The minimum wage should be increased immediately to $3 per hour and should be pegged to the cost of living.

Mr. Gregory: What happened to $4?

Mr. Samis: Mr. Speaker, I know that this—

Mr. Foulds: We will get it up there.

Mr. Makarchuk: In time, in the fullness of time.

Mr. Foulds: How would you like to work for $3 an hour or $4 an hour?

Mr. Samis: I know this is not what my party said in the last election campaign, but it is what I said; it's what I believe in. It's what I believe is necessary and reasonable and I do not intend to smudge any difference with my party's stand on this issue. The people of Cornwall riding know my stand on the issue. They knew where I stood during the election campaign and I don't intend to say one thing in my riding and another thing here in the Legislature merely because of party discipline or any sense of solidarity.

We are a democratic party. We don't agree on every single issue. We shouldn't always pretend to have uniform views on all matters and we should expect to respect these differences and the rights of individual members to express those differences. Fortunately I belong to a party that does respect those differences.

Mr. Breithaupt: We will see what the next convention says.

Mr. Samis: We will see. It will be very interesting, I agree.

I want to point out that in terms of hours lost because of strikes, Canadian wage earners are frequently accused of being the most strike-prone in the world. We read in some newspapers and hear from some journalists that in the first eight months of 1977 there was a dramatic decrease in the amount of time lost due to strikes and lockouts. If one compares the first eight months of this year with 1976, the decline in the amount of time lost because of strikes and lockouts is 65 per cent. In other words, we have gone down 65 per cent in terms of time lost. And I point out that those 1976 figures included all the time lost for that one-day walk-out on October 14, on the day of protest. That should put an end to the lie, the notion, the misnomer, the generalization, the condemnation that Canadian workers in 1977 are strike-prone and irresponsible.

As to wage comparisons, it is frequently said that Canadian workers are overpaid and don't work hard enough.

Mr. Wildman: Claude Bennett.

[9:45]

Mr. Samis: Well, let's compare wages, for example, with the United States, because frequently we hear people, including the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett), tell us that our wages are too high, they are not competitive, and therefore that is the root cause of our problem.

I'd like to call attention to the very important consideration of the whole discussion, and that is how comparative figures are calculated and arrived at. I'd like to quote from an article by Ed Finn, the PR director of the CBRTGW, who wrote a very interesting, and I thought revealing, article in the October 17 edition of the Toronto Star. He says, and I quote:

"What they fail to mention when comparing wages in the United States and Canada is that the two sets of wage settlement figures are calculated by widely divergent methods, and therefore are not legitimately comparable.

"In the US wage gains are figured on the average hourly earnings of all workers in a bargaining unit, whereas in Canada we use the base wage rate, an entirely different index. The US figures also exclude"—and I emphasize exclude—"public sector settlements, which we in Canada include"—and we all know that was the one sector with the highest percentages of wage increases—"Conversely, US data include construction industry contracts which we omit in Canada. Both sets of statistics exclude cost of living adjustment (COLA) clauses, since more than 60 per cent of union members in the United States receive COLA payments compared with only 25 per cent of those in Canada, and since the average American COLA clause provides close to double the Canadian equivalent, this omission produces a lower figure for US earnings than is actually the case.

"Another glaring omission is that of fringe benefits, such as pensions and health insurance. American workers have always taken proportionally more of their total compensation in deferred and indirect payments than are recorded in settlement data."

There is no question that we do have problems in terms of competition in the foreign markets. Our balance of payment problem is without question becoming increasingly critical, especially with the annual migration to Florida, the Caribbean and Mexico by many of our sun-starved compatriots. But I strongly believe that we must analyse all the constituent contributing causes to our problem of competitiveness on the world scene, so we can bring forth solutions that will really come to grips with this serious problem for our economy. If we don't do this, then I believe that our solutions will be half-baked and severely limited in their efficacy.

The second major structural problem that we face in our economy is one that I have already mentioned, and that is unemployment. We have to come to terms with the regional nature of our unemployment in Canada; the chronic nature of our unemployment; the occupational nature of our unemployment and the changing values and attitudes in our society towards work and its role and value in an individual's life.

I think it is extremely important that we come to terms with that latter point, for there is no question that in the younger generation there has been a very substantial change in values and attitudes vis-à-vis the work ethic. I don't think it makes much sense to try to preach the old Puritan work ethic if you don't understand and don't come to terms with their values and their attitudes.

A third basic problem in our economy is our ongoing balance of payments problems. The tremendous drain of dollars outside this country for manufactured goods; for tourism; the ever-increasing amounts of money being spent on foreign oil and the reorientation of capital investment, all require action to restore some semblance of balance in our outflow of dollars.

I might say as an aside, I find it rather curious that recently the Minister of Finance has been lecturing us about staying at home, not spending our dollars in foreign lands, especially the Caribbean. And what did we see about two weeks ago, after all these lectures, the Prime Minister was getting a little weary of the controversy regarding the RCMP. But who else goes down to the Caribbean to do a little skindiving, yet comes back here and has the gall to preach to the average Canadian, "Stay in Canada, set a good example. Don't spend your money outside the country." Sheer hypocrisy.

Mr. Wildman: I wish they'd keep him outside the country.

Mr. Samis: A fourth structural problem we must face in this country is the absence of any coherent, comprehensive, meaningful, industrial strategy for this nation and for this province. We simply must define our goals and intensify our efforts in those sectors most suited to specialization and deserving of assistance. We must work out a far better harmonization of our regional development policies; our manpower policies; our investment policies; and our different forms of incentives. We simply cannot operate in a vacuum and at cross-purposes if we are to develop our strength in those sectors which are best suited to expand and compete on the world scene.

A fifth problem we must resolve in this country is the whole energy field and the tremendous waste that we as a society are still engaged in. We must formulate a clear policy for the development and pricing of our oil and gas reserves in the 1980s and 1990s. We must reassess the whole nuclear option in the light of the soft-hardware, renewable options before us, and we must provide for an industrial policy that will be in tune with the increased costs of energy over the next 10 to 20 years. If we don't, we'll pay for our own failure in economic performance, in the competitiveness of our industries and in the employment opportunities available for our young people.

We simply cannot afford to fool around with the whole question of conservation and the ridiculous waste of our non-renewable resources. We simply must get tough, get serious; and if it means tough medicine for the people who aren't willing to do it on a voluntary basis, let me say that I would support it, because the future of our country is at stake.

A final structural problem, as I see it, is our excessive dependence on the American economy and our failure to develop our own resources with Canadian control. While we cannot isolate ourselves from American capital or the American economy, it's imperative that we achieve greater control of our own resources to ensure that their use and development serves the interests of Canadians above the interests of any other company, any other corporation or any other nation in this world.

That isn't narrow nationalism; that's basic common sense. It's a message that the Arabs and other Third World countries have realized in this era of multi-nationals and super-powers. Being the hewers of wood and the drawers of water is not the future, and should never be the future, that we should want or ever tolerate for this country. Being a colony of any other country means automatically that our technology will be produced and developed in another country. And any country that is totally dependent on another society for its technology is doomed to permanent colonial status.

Before closing, I'd like to mention a few regional concerns. Having listened to the member for Haldimand-Norfolk tell us about the rivers and harbours of his riding, et cetera—

An hon. member: Harbours?

Mr. Samis: Port Dover—may I say that we in eastern Ontario have some very deep-rooted and legitimate concerns about where the economy is going and how it's going to affect us in our particular region of the province.

First of all, we wonder about industrial development and the whole pattern of industrial development. We don't want Queen's Park coming down to us and setting out some wasteland just before an election, telling us it's going to be the shining jewel of industrial development in eastern Ontario or that that industrial park will be the key to our future, with no consultation with any municipal council, no input from the local people, no input from the affected communities.

Mr. Wildman: Or no consultation with the minister.

Mr. Samis: We had such a ridiculous situation that the Minister of Industry and Tourism was touring the communities of eastern Ontario and telling us, "You'd have to be off your nut to support any such idea as Edwardsburgh." He couldn't conceive of any reason for Edwardsburgh, yet three or four months later we had him standing up in the Legislature announcing the birth of the Edwardsburgh industrial wasteland.

We're not prepared to put up with any more of that nonsense in eastern Ontario. We want to be in and we want to have some input into our future. We don't want to be peons of the bureaucrats of Queen's Park or victims of designs of any ambitious Treasurer.

Mr. Wildman: Or the incompetence of the Minister of Industry and Tourism.

Mr. Samis: Right on. In my particular community, where the textile industry has been a very basic feature of the economy of our area, we wonder where Ontario is going. Where does the Treasurer of this province want to lead us? He is making speech after speech these days, saying, "Free trade is the answer. We must reduce the tariff barriers. We must reduce the quota barriers."

But, on the other hand, in the committee considering the estimates of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism and of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, those ministers don't give us that line at all. They talk about the need to protect some of our industries—the agricultural industries, textile industries, footwear industries, et cetera—that have such a difficult time competing.

We want to know who speaks for Ontario. We want to have all the ministers of the cabinet telling us the same thing. I am not a person who says we should shield our whole economy behind a tremendously high wall of tariffs, but on the other hand, when you have over a quarter of a million people working in an industry, who have devoted their lives in some cases to that particular industry, you can't just let it down hook, line and sinker.

I think people in the textile industry are prepared to make plans for the adjustment. I noticed that the province of Quebec has established a five-year time frame for some of its weaker, less efficient, less capital intensive industries to make their adjustment prior to the lowering of tariffs.

I would like to see the Minister of Industry and Tourism and the Treasurer get together to work out a common policy to help the textile industry make that adjustment. Don't just tell them, "You are on your own. If you can't compete, that's it; tough beans," while communities like Cornwall or Cambridge go down the drain.

We want this government to show initiatives and programs to help them make the adjustment. We are prepared to face the competitive scene. We are prepared to adjust to the GATT agreement, but all we want is the government to help us make that adjustment, to make that transition.

Living in a part of the province where we border on the province, la republique, of Quebec, we have some particular problems that I think should be considered by this government. We have the Minister of Industry and Tourism and the Premier trying to tell us—industry starved as we are—that thou shalt not advertise for industry in the province of Quebec because that would contribute to separatism. That would not be in the interests of national unity. I would agree if it is a case where they try to do it, and they haven't done it before, merely to exploit the political situation. But if you have a community that has been doing it consistently, whether it was René Levesque, whether it was Daniel Johnson, whether it was Jean Jacques Bertrand, whether it was Jean Lesage, we in eastern Ontario don't want any politician or bureaucrat trying to tell us where we can advertise if we do it in a reasonable, responsible, non-exploitative manner in papers in Quebec.

We are in competition in eastern Ontario with New York state; we are in competition with Vermont which is offering all sorts of tax incentives, tax discounts, low interest loans and is advertising in the Montreal market. We don't want somebody telling us we can't use our freedom to exercise a normal, reasonable, responsible, non-exploitive manner.

In eastern Ontario, we have the ongoing problem, that I have raised in this Legislature several times, of tradesmen from the province of Quebec crossing the border to work in communities like Cornwall, Hawkesbury, Pembroke and Ottawa, who don't have to have any special licence in particular, have very minimal requirements and do get jobs and do take away the jobs from some of our people. We are prepared to allow them to come in if, and only if, we are given the same freedom, the same opportunities and the same right to compete on the Quebec labour market in the construction field. But we aren't. They refuse.

I emphasize it is not a Parti Quebecois policy because the Liberals followed the same policy. It is not a Liberal or PQ policy because the Union Nationale followed the same policy. All we are saying is we tried negotiations. If negotiations don't produce results, if the Quebec minister says, "That is our policy. We are not prepared to moderate. We are not prepared to make concessions or change it," then all we ask in eastern Ontario is protect the jobs of tradesmen in eastern Ontario by saying to Quebec workers, "If you want to work here, you have to meet the same conditions that Ontario workers have to meet when they want to work in Valleyfield or in Dorion or in Montreal."

All we ask for is equal treatment, not revenge, not special privileges, just equal treatment.

Fourthly, I would hope the government would give consideration to the fact that down in the eastern fringe of the province along the border, we have to compete with Quebec communities for industry.

I recall very vividly the case of Goodyear, which was seriously considering moving into my community and we were in competition with the city of Valleyfield, Quebec, a $56-million industry. We lost that industry for the simple reason that, number one, the provincial government in Quebec was prepared to offer more in terms of tax incentives for them to locate in the province of Quebec, and secondly, because of Quebec provincial laws—which I don't want for Ontario, let me emphasize—under which the municipality of Valleyfield was allowed to give special tax concessions to lure them to Valleyfield. The Premier said, "No, we won't do anything." How can we compete in that situation with a multi-national trying to locate in our community? It's virtually impossible.

We have the situation where the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has designated the entire Metropolitan Montreal area as a depressed or designated area, which means special tax concessions for industries or businesses seeking to locate in the Greater Montreal region. They don't have to compete with that in Toronto. They don't have to compete with that in central Ontario and they don't have to compete with that in south-western Ontario, but we do in eastern Ontario. I think it's time that the economic policies of this province gave special consideration to the problems of communities and counties along the Quebec border that have to face that reality in trying to attract new industry.

We in eastern Ontario believe the only way this province will prosper in a decent honest way is if we decentralize development. The government can spend $2 billion in investments in Townsend, Nanticoke and along Lake Erie, but what do they give eastern Ontario? We get the bread crumbs and south-west Ontario gets the full-course dinner. In 1975 we had the Minister of Industry and Tourism travelling through the area promising the Edwardsburgh jewel as the great contribution for eastern Ontario.

Mr. Wildman: That's enough to depress anyone.

Mr. Samis: Right.

Mr. Foulds: Just like Minaki Lodge for the northwest.

[10:00]

Mr. Samis: That's right. We have our own version of Minaki Lodge. In 1975, the minister was trooping around Belleville and promising some strange but magnificent huge resort hotel complex within 15 miles of Belleville. We haven't heard a single thing about that glorious promise since the election. That was dangled in front of the people in the Quinte region, as the provincial government's contribution to their economic development. Then comes 1977 and the Tories are back to the same old game. This time it is transfer. They announce some transfer in terms of offices in downtown Toronto all the way to the city of Oshawa, and they say, "Look what we're doing for eastern Ontario."

I have nothing against the good people of Oshawa, naturally. They elected a good member and obviously they have a considerable amount of intelligence and foresight. But who in eastern Ontario is ever going to consider the city of Oshawa as being a part of eastern Ontario? What person who lives in eastern Ontario would ever consider that?

Mr. Foulds: That is like calling Barrie part of northern Ontario.

Mr. Samis: That's exactly it. I give the Tories credit. They knew that really wouldn't convince too many people. They wanted to make sure the member for Kingston and the Islands would be elected. He got in by, I think, 150 votes. They were grooming him for great cabinet things and he seemed to have ambitions of his own. They wanted him to get something he could offer the good burghers of that community. So they announce the transfer of OHIP. They say this will be a great boon—500 to 800 employees. Think of it all, Mr. Speaker. Those aren't new jobs. Those are people being transferred. It was promised in 1977 before the election. We were told, just as some magic figure, it was going to take four years to make the transfer.

I asked myself what was the political significance of four years. It suddenly dawned on me. My God, that means another election. I can just see the minister over there with his bouffant hairdo—I think he's got new shoes now by the way—and his suit, cutting the ribbon and saying, "Look what we've done for you people in eastern Ontario."

Mr. Foulds: He's got bouffant shoes too.

Mr. Samis: We are not going to be taken in by that sort of thing. We welcome the fact that they transferred it. But we're not going to play this silly little game where at every election a goodie is dangled. If we behave ourselves in eastern Ontario, if we return the right boys back here, then maybe we'll get a little more. We want to see specific plans, a specific strategy for development in eastern Ontario and not a whole series of Duplessis-style election goodies, pork barrel, patronage and promises. We want a comprehensive industrial strategy for our area. We want a planned, phased commitment towards the decentralization of development and decentralization of opportunities for our people.

It strikes us as ironic when we see what's happening in what my colleague from Port Arthur sarcastically has described as northern Ontario. In the city of Barrie they are taking out prime agricultural land.

Mr. Foulds: Ironically, not sarcastically. I would never refer to Barrie in a sarcastic way.

Mr. Samis: The city of Barrie is being told: "We're going to take this prime agricultural land. We're going to use this for industrial development, and whether you want it, whether you like it, whether you need it, we're going to force-feed 125,000 people into your community, because Darcy McKeough says that's the way, the life and the future of the province of Ontario." Does that really make sense when we have regions like eastern and northern Ontario, in dire need of new industry, new opportunities, and jobs for young people? Obviously, it doesn't, but we don't get the results we need in eastern Ontario.

One particular facet of our sector of the province is the tourist industry, which does provide a certain number of jobs. I'd like to make a few specific proposals as to what I think could be done to improve the tourist industry and create more jobs in our area.

First of all, a fundamental weakness is that along our part of the St. Lawrence River tourists may visit something like Upper Canada Village, they may visit Long Sault Parkway or something of that sort, but there isn't much to keep them beyond a one-day visit. They go back to Montreal or on to Ottawa or back to Toronto. They don't stay. What we need very badly is something that will keep people beyond one day, something that will provide them with an incentive to stay.

A feasibility study has been done as to the idea of developing a summer theatre complex in the Upper Canada Village. It's been studied. It's been said: "Yes, it is feasible." A design has been proposed. Because of certain problems, they've asked the architects to go back to the drawing boards again.

We don't want an endless delay of proposals and ideas. The experts have said it's feasible. We want to see some action to help our tourist industry.

Secondly, I think one thing that should be emphasized about eastern Ontario is the heritage of our area. If you look at the history of this province, my own community was founded in 1783. We have what I would consider the cradle of confederation in this part of the country in Kingston. We have older communities such as Napanee, Smiths Falls and Perth. These are valuable historical communities in the heritage of Ontario. I noticed that the recent study commissioned by the Ministry of Industry and Tourism has suggested that more attention should be paid to the historical heritage of eastern Ontario because that attracts people. That's a specific characteristic that I think we have to that extent, that no other part of this province can claim.

In terms of my own particular community, I would like to suggest that the Ministry of Industry and Tourism play a very active role in seeking to establish some form of major tourist attraction along the lines of some form of safari park or major recreational area. The feasibility study, done by the ministry, did indicate that if we project for the next five years ahead, it is certainly and definitely feasible for private enterprise to establish a major tourist attraction of that nature. I would hope that, even if some of the businessmen in my area are somewhat reluctant, the ministry will continue the consultations and furnish every possible encouragement to businessmen to create something of this nature.

I want to bring to your attention concerning eastern Ontario that many of the tourists we get would come in by Highway 401. If they come from the United States, obviously they would cross either at Gananoque or Cornwall and then get on Highway 401. Immediately, I'm sure, as soon as they cross the river, the Americans are hit by the high cost of tourism in this province, whether it be for food or rooms, but most important of all in terms of what hits them is the cost of gasoline. I know the Highway 401 leases have been renegotiated and I know for a while there was a decrease in prices and it did become somewhat competitive but, just last week, I drove up along Highway 401 and decided to get off at Belleville to get gasoline. The difference between the cheapest gasoline in the city of Belleville compared to the cheapest gasoline that I'm aware of on Highway 401—and I don't claim this is a thorough representation of the gas prices along Highway 401—was as high as 14 cents a gallon.

The tourist doesn't know where to get off to get the bargains. The tourist doesn't know about the bargains. Most frequently he relies on the service centres along Highway 401.

Mr. Wildman: That's right.

Mr. Samis: When he has to pay 14 cents more a gallon, there's nothing else I can think of to describe that but a ripoff. The people who are getting ripped off are the people to whom we're saying, "Why don't you come back to Ontario? Why don't you want to come and see our tourist facilities? Why don't you want to stay?" If we're serious about getting American tourists back we'd better get serious about some of the prices we charge for gas, food, lodging and services.

I notice even Jack Horner, the cactus rancher from Pincher Creek, has attacked some of the operators who are charging prices like that. They're not just the small ones, because if you look at who runs those service stations you find it's the multi-national oil companies.

A fifth suggestion I'd like to make in terms of developing the tourist potential of eastern Ontario is that possibly greater attention could be given to the winter activities available in our area. We have a considerable number of provincial parks and groomed trails of a variety of sorts, whether it's for cross-country skiing or snow-shoeing. We have a whole host of well-organized, well-financed and well-administered snowmobile clubs. Some of those clubs have thousands—not hundreds, but thousands—of miles of well-groomed trails that people in the big cities don't have access to.

Obviously, it's a little farther to drive. But if they want to talk about thousands of miles within a day's drive, surely, it's the responsibility of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism, in their advertising at that time of the year, to make the snowmobile enthusiasts aware what opportunities there are for them in eastern Ontario.

There's a tremendous burgeoning of cross-country trails in eastern Ontario, in the provincial parks and elsewhere, and I suspect most people in the metropolitan area of Toronto aren't even aware of them.

Finally, in terms of eastern Ontario, may I suggest that possibly more publicity should be given to the history of the area. Cornwall, my home town, for example, was founded in 1783. We have the historic Glengarry settlers. We have the unique architectural heritage of such communities as Kingston, Perth, Smiths Falls and Cobourg.

It always amazes me when I drive to the city of Kingston where Sir John A. Macdonald spent his lifetime, where Sir John A. Macdonald is buried, that you can drive along Highway 401, and drive right past the community of Kingston—and not even know that the first Prime Minister of this country, the outstanding Father of Confederation, lived and was buried in the city of Kingston.

Even when you get off Highway 401, it's almost impossible unless you know your way around the city to find out where Sir John A. Macdonald lived, where the Sir John A. Macdonald legend developed. I'm amazed how the provincial government and local authorities almost totally ignore the tremendous heritage of our first Prime Minister.

When I go down to Virginia, Washington or New York State and find out about the heritage of that country, I think the way the Americans mark, publicize and make you aware of their heritage is something that puts us to shame in this province and in this country. We have a hell of a lot that we can learn from the Americans in terms of tourism. It's time we woke up and built our strength upon that heritage.

Mr. Wildman: When they say Macdonald in Kingston they think you mean Flora.

Mr. Samis: Either Flora or Ronald, unfortunately.

Mr. Eakins: You are dead on.

Mr. Samis: I have outlined my concerns and my proposals for eastern Ontario, and for the provincial economy as a whole. I have tried to do so in a constructive sense rather than a partisan sense, because like many Canadians I'm truly concerned about the fate of our economy, the fate of our province and the fate of our country.

I don't consider myself to be a doom-and-gloomster, but I do believe we must confront the serious and basic economic and political problems that face us today. I believe that Canadians care too much for their country to allow these problems to overwhelm us.

I believe that we in this Legislature must provide leadership and make narrow, partisan considerations secondary to the search for solutions to the problems I've outlined tonight.

We certainly have our differences with this government, make no mistake about it. But I believe our primary purpose in being here is to find those solutions and not merely to indulge in petty, partisan, parliamentary pandering or puerile posturing. Thank you. Merci beaucoup.

Mr. Gregory: A Lawlor you're not.

[10:15]

Mr. Baetz: I had intended to direct my comments on this budget debate to that sector which is largely but not exclusively covered by this Legislature's social development policy field. It's an area in which I have been active for many years. I believe it is also that part of government activity where more than elsewhere we operate on slippery slopes and shifting sands.

I am watching the clock. I will not be able, Mr. Speaker, to present the comments that I had prepared for tonight. I do hope I will have an opportunity to do so in subsequent sessions.

Mr. Reid: Sounds like a threat.

Mr. Baetz: It's not a threat, it's a promise. I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Cornwall for having given such an eloquent speech. I couldn't agree with most of it. Some things I would agree with.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I didn't even think it was eloquent.

Mr. Baetz: However, the things I could agree with him on, I suspect he has come by by being such a great disciple of the Duke of Kent, as he calls him—the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough). He's obviously a very avid reader, having read at great length to us tonight from the writings of our esteemed Treasurer, and I am sure that if the hon. member for Cornwall continues his studies of our esteemed Treasurer, he will one nice day cross the floor.

Mr. Samis: Don't count on it.

Mr. Reid: That is how he became an NDP in the first place.

Mr. Baetz: Well, there is progress. There is a sign of progress there. There is hope there.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We are not that desperate.

Mr. Samis: Never turncoats.

Mr. Wildman: Not one of us will be over there. You will be over here.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That will be a long time.

Mr. Baetz: I have prepared for this occasion here. As I said earlier, I want to speak about the social development field. I think sometimes when we criticize inadequate expenditures, there's an all-too-common tendency to compare our current situation with utopia, with some never-never fairy land. We have gone through that exercise again tonight.

I would immediately claim that I have never joined that chorus because I have always felt that to be an exercise in futility. This kind of shotgun criticism is one which can and does lead quickly from uncertainty to frustration, down to pessimism, down further to scepticism and finally sinks into cynicism and we have bordered on that tonight again. There is no utopia and there is little point in comparing ourselves here in Ontario to such platonic states of perfection as we apparently have had painted for us across the floor tonight.

It seems to me to be a far more useful exercise to compare our performance in the social development field with other similar jurisdictions. It is for this reason that about one year ago when I was still executive director of the Canadian Council on Social Development, we began some work in assembling and analysing data comparing expenditures in the social development field to all the Canadian provinces. That work has not yet been published, but in the meantime, for purposes of our debate, I had prepared and would like to provide this Legislature with some first-hand information with a view to helping all of us, both on this side of the House and those opposite, to gain some assessment as to where we in Ontario stand as compared with our sister provinces.

I would like to assure members opposite that the statistics are objective and non-partisan.

Mr. Wildman: Then start with the minimum wage.

Mr. Baetz: I would like to assure them that how these objectives are interpreted will undoubtedly become partisan and value oriented. In presenting these statistics, I hardly need warn the members of some of the pitfalls in comparing statistical data between provinces.

Mr. Reid: The member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) already did that today.

Mr. Baetz: It can be somewhat misleading, partly because of differences in terminology. What may be classified as health service in one province may fall under another department in another province. Even within provinces, an examination of expenditures in one department may be misleading because increased expenditures might simply reflect the transfer of programs to that department from another and therefore leave unchanged the provincial aggregate expenditure in the social development field.

Mr. Wildman: Are you going to compare the populations as well as the expenditures?

Mr. Baetz: Also, increases in expenditure alone do not tell us everything. For example, if much more is spent on medical and hospital care in a province, than was the case 10 years ago, it could mean that the same proportion of a greatly expanded need is being provided for. In this case it could simply mean that the needs are still being met inadequately by the same proportion as previously.

Nevertheless, in spite of the limits and pitfalls, this approach to comparative expenditures among the provinces is, I believe, valid and useful and it has never been done before. This is because patterns of public spending do reveal the policies implicit or explicit which govern the use of our provincial wealth.

Mr. Wildman: Only if you compare the populations.

Mr. Baetz: Many goals and grand purposes may be proclaimed both in this House and in other jurisdictions. But, as a general rule, the percentage of our wealth which we are prepared to divert to social development is the measure of how a society feels about this field.

Mr. Wildman: Per capita, it is.

Mr. Baetz: There is an added advantage in comparing provincial expenditure patterns, because in doing so we avoid the mare's breakfast of trying to sort out federal from provincial expenditures.

By and large, the statistics that I had prepared, and will be sending to this Legislature, will refer to moneys raised and spent by the provinces themselves. The period which I will be covering is from the fiscal year 1970-71 to 196-77 inclusive. It will cover specifically the fields of social welfare, health education, protection of persons and property—which is essentially administration of justice and the law—and fifthly, housing.

Gross general expenditures by all provinces have increased by an average of 160 per cent in the seven-year period, in current dollars, that is during the period 1970-71 to 1976-77. The percentage increase has been greatest in British Columbia, which has gone up 203 per cent, with New Brunswick having the smallest increase at 128 per cent. Ontario, with an increase of 142 per cent, is the third lowest with Nova Scotia being next lowest with an increase of 141 per cent. I am talking about gross provincial expenditures, not just on social development.

In the next five minutes I will just touch on a few statistics, but there are many more here and I would encourage all of the members to take a look at them. They tell a tale.

Mr. Reid: Talk in human terms.

Mr. Baetz: What percentage of gross expenditures—I am assuming that these expenditures were for human well-being—goes for social development? How do these percentages compare in proportion to similar ones in other provinces?

First, the percentage of total provincial expenditures designated for social welfare in Ontario in 1976-77 was 14.3 per cent of our gross provincial expenditures. That is third highest among the provinces, being exceeded only by BC, which directed 17.8 per cent of its total provincial expenditures to social welfare, and Manitoba with 16.8 per cent of its provincial expenditures going to social welfare.

The four Atlantic provinces diverted the lowest percentage of their provincial expenditures to social welfare, ranging from 11.4 per cent for New Brunswick to as low as 8.9 per cent for Nova Scotia, which was the lowest in the country. As the degree of need in the Atlantic provinces is probably greatest, the relatively lower expenditure in those provinces for social welfare suggests that need alone does not determine the degree of expenditure. There is obviously a trade-off somewhere between needs and available resources.

Keeping in mind that Ontario's growth of gross provincial expenditures has been among the lowest, the rate of growth diverted to social welfare is, I believe, significant. This growth rate has been among the highest, namely a 6.2 per cent growth rate. It is exceeded only by Manitoba by a fraction of a point at 6.3 per cent.

Admittedly, part of the relatively rapid growth for social welfare expenditures in Ontario is due to the fact that in the base year, 1970-71, Ontario was among the lowest, with only 8.1 per cent of our provincial expenditures going to social welfare. In other words, we started very low, but we have grown rapidly and now stand in third place.

Mr. Reid: And that's where the cutbacks started.

Mr. Baetz: The percentage of all provincial expenditures going to education across the country averaged 23.9 per cent among the 10 provinces in 1976. In relation to other provinces, Ontario's expenditure in education as a percentage of the total provincial expenditure is third highest at 26.8 per cent and is exceeded only by New Brunswick with 28.4 per cent and Quebec with 27.4 per cent.

These expenditures overall are down from 27.3 per cent in 1970-71, which likely reflects the plateauing off of our student population and a reduction in expenditures on capital equipment and property. Ontario's relative costs for education have declined more slowly than the national average, being down two per cent as compared to the national average of a 3.4 per cent decline.

Quebec's costs for education as part of its total provincial expenditures stand in sharp contrast to other provinces, having increased over the seven-year period by 1.3 per cent. The trend in Quebec is opposite to that in Ontario; it started at a lower rate than Ontario in 1970-71, namely 26.1 per cent, as compared to Ontario's 28.8 per cent, but ended with a higher percentage of 28.4 per cent as compared to ours at 27.4 per cent.

Mr. Wildman: What's the point?

Mr. Baetz: The sharpest decline in the percentage of provincial expenditures going to education took place in Alberta. It dropped from the highest at 31.3 per cent in 1970-71 to among the lowest at 22.9 per cent in 1976-77. The drop of 8.4 per cent in expenditures going to education in Alberta was matched only by Manitoba, where the drop was 7.7 per cent during the same period.

In the next session of the debate on the budget, Mr. Speaker, I hope to continue with these comparative expenditures. In the meantime, they will be available for members of the Legislature. I released them today to the press. Frankly, I feel that they paint for us a very significant picture.

Mr. Haggerty: Yes, that the Tories have got to go.

Mr. Baetz: It is the first time some statistical material and comparative material has been made available and published. I suggest that this kind of an approach, in spite of its limitations, has a great deal more merit than some of the mush we've been listening to in this House for a long time.

Mr. Germa: Mush? What are you talking about?

On motion by Mr. Baetz, the debate was adjourned.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Parrott, the House adjourned at 10:29 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1977

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

OBSERVANCE OF RULES

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Point of privilege.

Mr. Sargent: I had hoped that the Speaker would be here this morning. I wanted to talk to him directly. But now that it's on my mind, I will put it through the Chair to the House.

On the point of privilege, with respect to same, I rise to question the use of the powers delegated to the Speaker of this House by our minority government. It may seem a bit out of character for me, in view of my past confrontations with Speakers, that I should question the Speaker's methods of cracking the whip. I admit I've been ejected three times from the Legislature in 15 years. In every case the ends justified the means and I won my case with the government, amounting to many hundreds of thousands of dollars.

In commending the Speaker on his over-zealousness in his approach to his responsibility, I suggest he has at times been a bit drunk with power. I realize every member of the House has equal rights. Everyone has. I strenuously object to the past three days when I've been on the question period and to the fact that when I got on yesterday, he gave me one minute to have my question answered and then he cut me off in the middle of my question.

Finally, I would say I will try to adhere to the rules of this House. But if I can't be heard I will challenge the Speaker, and he can use the inevitable result of ejecting me. In other words, I think he should start to cool it a bit.

Mr. Nixon: What does Claire Hoy think?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will say to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce that I will see this message is carried to Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: He will reply on Monday, I have no doubt.

VISITORS

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I take great pride this morning in introducing some guests who are visiting the great province of Ontario. They are three gentlemen who have made a great contribution to the agricultural industry of this country. I take pleasure in introducing in the Speaker's gallery Hon. James Hewitt, Minister of Agriculture for the province of British Columbia, Hon. Malcolm MacLeod, Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for the province of New Brunswick, and Mr. Mory King, the associate deputy minister of agriculture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Statements by the ministry.

Mr. Lewis: Is there no significance in the front bench this morning?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to question the Premier if I might this morning. Can the Premier explain what seems to me to be an inordinate delay in replying to a question I asked him on November 1, about setting up a committee to look at Hydro and matters related to that corporation? At that time he said, and I quote: "I hope to have something for the House on November 3." It's now November 18. Is the Premier aware that his House leader has now said it will be only next Thursday or Friday before even draft terms of reference are available? We've been discussing this for six weeks. Can the Premier please explain why the delaying tactics are being used in this particular instance?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I understand the desire on the part of the Leader of the Opposition. My understanding was that this committee would start its activities early in the new year. There has been some suggestion in the past few days that it would be helpful to have the terms of reference and have an opportunity, on the part of the committee, to organize its work and timetable. I believe the House leader mentioned to the other two House leaders this week that we would have draft terms of reference and probably can have the motion put through next week.

There is no inordinate delay. We have had two or three other issues to deal with. The demand on time in terms of the personnel of members of this House is not insignificant. If memory serves me correctly, we did wait for several days to get reactions on the proposed terms of reference with respect to Inco—I'm right in that observation, I think. I am right.

Mr. Reid: Why did you ask if you were so right?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member nodded his head in a negative fashion. He can ask his own House leader. We were delayed somewhat in the establishment of those terms of reference.

Mr. Nixon: Why are you so hesitant?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it's important that we conduct the business in an orderly fashion. We did have that particular committee which I felt had some measure of priority. The Leader of the Opposition may not sense that same degree of priority that I do, but we were anxious to get it under way. However, I can assure the Leader of the Opposition, through his own House leader who had discussions, I believe, yesterday morning at breakfast time—a very cordial meeting—when this was fully explained. I believe his House leader understands it, and perhaps if he'd have a consultation with him he might get all of the relevant information.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of a supplementary, since the Premier seems to be under the misapprehension that there is some agreement that we should wait until the new year, whereas really it's his idea to wait until the new year, is it simply the fact that he hopes that he may have had an opportunity over Christmas to shuffle his cabinet and put a different Energy minister forward for the sake of this committee hearing in the new year?

Interjections.

Mr. Lewis: Send Taylor back to Community and Social Services and Norton back to Corrections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I assume from the questions being asked by the Leader of the Opposition, and the discussions that have been held, and the understandings that came from the previous select committee on Hydro, that it was, by and large, the officials and personnel at Ontario Hydro that the Leader of the Opposition was most anxious to question. If it is just a case of wanting to ask questions of the Minister of Energy (Mr. J. A. Taylor), of course that opportunity is open to the Leader of the Opposition four days a week.

Mr. Nixon: He won't answer the questions in here.

Mr. S. Smith: He told me not to do that.

Mr. Nixon: He says to go ask Hydro.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can assure the hon. Leader of the Opposition that it is my intent, in what will be probably a relatively brief Christmas recess, on the assumption that we do prorogue on December 16, or perhaps 21, that I will be devoting part of that to public responsibility. I also intend, I must confess, to spend a little time in limited preparation for Christmas myself and that preparation will not involve any reorganization of the cabinet of this province. So if the Leader of the Opposition is expecting some significant Christmas Eve message—I am sure he isn't, but in case he is—I have got to tell him that that will not be the occasion.

Mr. S. Smith: I will have my chimney open for you.

Mr. Nixon: Have it enlarged.

Mr. Lewis: You think Jim Taylor is evasive, do you?

Mr. S. Smith: Well, privately I will discuss with the Premier the fact that his Energy minister told me to stop asking him questions in the House.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, they were becoming somewhat redundant.

Mr. Lewis: I have a petition to move him to ComSoc.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Would you place your second question?

INCIDENCE OF RAPE

Mr. S. Smith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, forgive me, forgive me. I would like to ask a question of the Solicitor General. Does he share with us the grave concern which I think a lot of Ontarians have today about the rapid increase in crimes against women, and for that matter against children as well? In particular, I draw his attention to the 36 or 37 per cent increase in reported rape in Metro Toronto alone during the past year.

If he does share our concern about this, what is he doing about it? Has he undertaken such matters as setting up special rape squads, having more women police officers, educating women as to what they can do to avoid rape, doing studies in the settings for rape and trying to think of environmental ways of avoiding it? Has he any plans at all to deal with this very alarming problem which has afflicted Ontario in recent times?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Speaker, of course, we are all concerned about it and I am likewise concerned. I wish that I had some simple and easy answer for some of the ills of today's society. During the estimates we talked about the matter of racial discrimination as though it was the responsibility of the police to clear these things up. Certainly the police are working in matters of discrimination just as they are working in all fields of crime, particularly the crimes the member is talking about, rape and crimes against young people. I suppose child abuse is one of the worst of those things.

I sometimes say, as I said in the estimates, it is a little unfair to expect the police to cure the ills of society, and goodness knows there are many of them. By the time these things are happening it's almost too late to expect the police to do it, but certainly that doesn't mean they do not have a responsibility to do their best.

The member asks what in particular we are doing in regard to this. The other day I noticed Chief Adamson of the Metropolitan Toronto police force said he thought little could be gained by special squads of one sort or another; that it had to be done by counselling of one sort or another and by encouraging—I shouldn't say encouraging, but by placing more women police officers into this field. This is being done.

Most of these problems are in the large municipalities, dealing with the municipal police forces across the province rather than with the OPP; not exclusively of course, but more particularly in the larger municipalities.

I can't relate anything definite that I have done in regard to it, other than encouraging the local police forces of one sort or another to carry on the work, but I will have a conference with some of the police people. I think the suggestion is a good one to see whether there is anything more that we can be doing other than what the local police forces are presently doing. The suggestion is good.

[10:15]

Mr. S. Smith: I want to thank the minister for his constructive answer, although I do feel more could have been done. In his conference with these police officers, would he try to find whatever studies are available regarding the matters I did raise, such as teaching an education program, teaching women how to avoid rape, how to avoid settings where rape occurs, encouragement of self-defence programs and encouragement of people to report rape and to report it more quickly, so that there can be greater police work done in the area?

Can he try, in this time of restraint, to find some funds to assist those metropolitan areas—not just Toronto—where this is a problem, to make the whole problem better known to the community and at least to change some of the attitudes among people who regrettably seem to think, at least in some quarters, that rape is a minor matter, a sexual matter, when in point of fact it is a very serious life-threatening aggression against half the human race basically?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I don't want to leave the impression the police themselves are not doing anything about this because many of the forces are. In the matter of rape, the police are now showing films of one sort or another in various community programs. Some of them are controversial films. I have seen one of them myself and I know these films are available and are being shown. They do conduct various classes in various communities.

The whole matter of what a woman should do in this circumstance is very controversial. One says "submit" and somebody else says "no, don't submit." As I say, the whole question is very controversial, but the police are doing what they can.

The specific question the Leader of the Opposition asked me is what I have done as Solicitor General. I must admit that I myself have not called any conference. That is the sort of thing I will do and try to co-ordinate some of these efforts and put together the programs the various forces do have to see if we can't have a provincial campaign to improve the situation.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask one short supplementary? Why is it not possible to respond in a very specific way to some very compelling and specific requests for funding of the crisis centres, particularly the Rape Crisis Centre—and those in other parts of Ontario as well as Metropolitan Toronto—which has such difficulty and does such first-rate work? Is that not one of the obvious and compelling responses in terms of education and assistance? I don't pretend it will solve it, but it doesn't put all the reliance on the police.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I think these rape crisis centres do a great deal in coming to the aid of women.

Mr. Lewis: Then why cut back?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: We have not regarded that as one of the police functions to date. There has not been any provision for such in the Solicitor General's budget. Most of these would be dealt with in the police budgets and the municipal budgets as such. More likely, I think they would be in one of the social welfare budgets either at the municipal or provincial level. That is certainly one of the avenues we will undertake to investigate in the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition.

Ms. Gigantes: They are getting cut in half.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: Would it be possible for the Solicitor General to discuss this problem with the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton)? Why should it be left to the municipalities to fund? Why should not the province at least take some initiatives in this area? Would the minister be prepared to have a discussion with the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) and with the Minister of Community and Social Services to try to ensure that at least in one field in this province there is a real desire to protect women, rather than creating discrimination by the government's practices against them.

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: I really don't follow the purport of that question. Certainly nothing we are doing is trying to discriminate in the way the member has suggested. I am trying to take a very positive approach to the problem. I have admitted that the question the Leader of the Opposition raised is a good question, and I may be at fault in not trying to co-ordinate this serious problem earlier.

But as I said, it doesn't mean that people in the various ministries and the various authorities at both provincial and municipal levels are not concerned with it. They are doing things with it. In so far as financing is concerned, I'll be glad to consult with the ministers whom she has suggested and take those various ministries into the conference that I have suggested I would convene.

Mr. Breagh: Supplementary: I'd like to ask the minister if he would consider utilizing the personnel who are currently working in the rape crisis centres to make an attempt to humanize the investigation and the reporting of rape by the police.

It strikes me that there are people working in the crisis centres who could be of great assistance to a police force that's having difficulty in its investigation process. That awkwardness and that inhumaneness that goes into the investigation very often slows up the reporting system that's there.

That might also be one way that the minister could certainly justify the use of funds from the police force, because he would be using people from the crisis centre as a resource for the policing system. Would he be prepared to consider that?

Hon. Mr. MacBeth: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I'd be glad to take into consideration anybody who has any helpful suggestions to make. I would think the people who operate these crisis centres would be some of the first we would consult.

But in that regard, I think the police system of dealing with sexual assaults has been improved very considerably in the last few years, and this is where women in the police force have been of great assistance to us in having a sympathetic approach to women who have suffered these attacks. The police-woman is able to deal with them in a way that a man cannot. So yes, we will certainly take these people into our consultation.

USE OF MEDICAL DATA

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Minister of Health: How do we reconcile the minister's reassurances in the House, with the observation of the president of the Ontario Medical Association, Dr. Loeb, from Ottawa, that hospital laboratory medical records are as vulnerable to "indiscriminate inspection by unauthorized parties" as any records in the province? How do we satisfy ourselves about the confidentiality of such matters when the president of the Ontario Medical Association expresses this kind of assertion? He relates it to the computer data.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I read the article this morning. I think what Dr. Loeb was doing was emphasizing, as I and previous Ministers of Health have, that security of information, whether it be an x-ray file in a medical or hospital laboratory or a file in the computer at OHIP, is something which requires the vigilance of everybody from the initial practitioner through to the person who finally punches the information into the computer system.

Undoubtedly, it's a problem. Undoubtedly, the greatest problem we have is the fact that various individuals do come into contact with the information. We are, therefore, always reliant on oaths of confidentiality, oaths of secrecy and, finally, the trustworthiness of individual people.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: What concerns me is the categorical assertion by the head of the Ontario Medical Association that there is indiscriminate inspection by unauthorized parties. He goes on to say that it is commonplace for insurance companies, lawyers, law enforcement agencies, et cetera, to request information generally from hospital files without the knowledge of the patient or the physician. Is the minister prepared to ask the Ontario Medical Association to give him some proof of these sweeping assertions?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member may know, I meet once a month with the Ontario Medical Association as well as with the College of Physicians and Surgeons. If they haven't already put it on the agenda for our next meeting, which I think is in about 10 days' time, then we will.

I am aware that there are all kinds of requests that come in to hospitals—public and psychiatric and so forth—but there are not all kinds of pieces of information that go out.

Mr. Reid: Can the Minister of Health table in the House, a resumé of the security of information that exists within his ministry in regard to OHIP and those kinds of things—I presume when he makes a report on the information that somehow got out in regard to people who supposedly had some medical problems we have read about in the press in the last few weeks?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Which one? Sotto voce.

Yes, this is being discussed in estimates committee at the present time. Hopefully it would satisfy the member's interest if I do it there and therefore it is on the record. We have already discussed it to a certain extent. In fact, as I recall, we are on the OHIP item right now.

Mr. Deans: Supplementary: Can the minister indicate whether, in the case of psychiatric hospitals in particular, there is a record kept by each hospital of each occasion when a file is requisitioned by any police force, and whether or not the purpose of the requisitioning or requesting of the file is recorded? If so, is it possible, with the appropriate safeguards with regard to the individuals involved, for us to have a record made available to the House of the numbers of occasions when files were requisitioned by police forces across the country from psychiatric hospitals in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think, Mr. Speaker, it is probably best if I take that as notice to include with the answer I have yet to give to the hon. member's earlier question of yesterday, I think, in a similar vein. I would just repeat what I said yesterday: To the best of my knowledge and recollection of the statutes, there is no such thing as requisitioning a file.

Mr. Deans: It may be a bad choice of words.

An hon. member: How about pilfering?

Mr. Deans: I don't know what you would call it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: How about leaving it on your desk for the press?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: But I will take that as notice and include it with my response to the member's earlier questions.

Mr. Deans: Supplementary question: I want to be sure the minister understands. I want to know whether or not each psychiatric hospital maintains a record in a logbook of each occasion when there are files taken from that hospital with regard to patients or former patients, and whether or not in that logbook there is a clear indication of the purpose for the file having been required and what documentation was produced in order to acquire it?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I understood the question and will reply.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. Did the minister notice—I am sure he must have, he is such a perceptive fellow—that his associate deputy minister, Judge Thomson, indicated that he felt the minister didn't understand the extent and scope of the activities of the minister's committee looking into the placement of children in the province of Ontario? Why is there, generously speaking, such a shambles within the children's services division of his ministry that he, as minister, doesn't understand crucial matters about it and that crucial decisions are not communicated to the judges involved?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I would agree with all the assumptions that were expressed in that question.

Mr. Lewis: But most of them, I am sure.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I must admit that whether it was my verbosity or lack of verbosity yesterday, I didn't get a chance to fully expound upon, or respond to, the question that had been asked. Some confusion may have arisen as a result of my reference to a committee which is operating in Metropolitan Toronto known as Impact, in which people from our ministry participate—several of the senior people in the ministry—and also, as a result, my reference to the committee. I don't think I made any distinction when I was talking about committees.

[10:30]

There is also a senior planning committee within the children's services division composed of the most senior people there, who also receive from time to time requests from

Impact, in the case of Metropolitan Toronto, from a variety of other sources about the province, for special assistance in the placement of difficult-to-place children. This, as I tried to indicate yesterday, would apply particularly to children where the courts have experienced difficulty in finding an appropriate placement or where they may have tried a variety of placements which have not worked, and in some cases results in our ministry participating in the establishment of a special placement for that child.

I know personally of one case where after a variety of efforts, there appeared to be no appropriate placement available; so, through a family who were friends of the family of the child, and with the active, almost full-time support of three professional people working within that family, a special placement was created for that child. That is the kind of intervention that we have tried to make available in very special cases of difficult-to-place children.

Apparently, according to comments in the newspaper this morning, not all judges have been aware of that. It is my understanding that the people in my ministry assumed that if this kind of problem were encountered, it would be logical that they would contact and make inquiries of the ministry for their assistance. Unfortunately, not all judges apparently have been aware of that.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, why would the minister expect judges to do that since there don't seem to be any obvious additional places available in Ontario, despite the consolidation within his ministry? Or to put it another way very briefly, isn't it a terribly disappointing business that after Norma Dean, after the consolidation, after the removal of section 8 from the Training Schools Act, we still do not seem to have achieved, in any way, a measurable, additional number of treatment spaces?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I think it is important that the hon. member bear in mind that the amalgamation of children's services has been in effect only since July 1 of this year. A great deal of effort has been put into planning for the development of further services for children in the province. I admit that in that period of time we have not been able to create miraculously across the province—

Mr. Lewis: That was promised us.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Listen, that was not promised. I made very clear statements in this House, prior to July 1 and on July 1, in terms of the objectives that we had set for this year and for into next year. At no time did I pretend that we had the capacity within a matter of a few months to create new placements across this province.

Mr. Lewis: When we removed section 8, we were told alternatives would be available.

Hon. Mr. Norton: In fact, in cases of section 8 children, we continue to maintain a special fund, again with the kind of involvement I have indicated, to assist those children. Where the placements that have been made within existing facilities or in communities across this province are not successful, then we participate in assisting to find or to create an appropriate placement for that child.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: Could the minister explain to this House which committee the chief judge of the family court sits on?

Hon. Mr. Norton: He is a member of Impact.

Mr. McClellan: Supplementary: Could the minister explain why it is that judges are reporting that they are still forced to send children in need of mental health care to training schools, despite all of the promises that were made before and since the removal of section 8 of the Training Schools Act? Secondly, what facilities does the ministry plan to build to meet the obvious urgent need for mental health treatment facilities?

Mrs. Campbell: We need the guidelines first.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am not sure I can explain why judges are saying what they are saying. I can assure the hon. member that it troubles me very much that it is being said on the assumption that it is happening, in fact. I am not sure the statements I have seen indicate that they say they are forced. I think they admit there are times when the courts do place children—

Mr. McClellan: There are no options.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —who may suffer from mental disorders in training schools. I assure the hon. member that troubles me very much.

With respect to what do we propose to do, our plans for the most immediate future are to provide expanded facilities for juveniles, or in some cases, services where they didn't exist in particular deficient areas of the province; that is, where there is a deficiency of services in the locality. One of our top priorities is to improve the service to children in northern Ontario. Particular groups include native groups and francophone children in the province, for whom there hasn't been adequate service.

We have a whole range of priorities that we are working on; in terms of the first priorities, those will be the two we will direct our attention to.

Mr. Haggerty: Just table it and we will know.

Mr. Foulds: Can the minister tell us how soon we may expect any kind of facility for disturbed children in Thunder Bay, which now has to put children into either an adult ward at a psychiatric hospital, into the lockup in the jail or into a general hospital?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I cannot be more specific at this point than to indicate that it is my hope, and it is our plan, that we would be able to move ahead in northern Ontario and northeastern Ontario in the next fiscal year.

DEATH OF FORMER MEMBER

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would like to interrupt, with the permission of the House. I unfortunately have a rather urgent meeting and I thought the members would wish to know that I've just been informed that a former colleague of ours, ~~Mr. Alex Carruthers~~, passed away this morning. I'd like to publicly address our regrets to his family. I don't have any details for members of the House about the time of the service. I expect it will be on Monday and suitable arrangements, I'm sure, will be made. We will inform your office, Mr. Speaker, as to the arrangements. I wanted the hon. members to know this information I just received.

BERNICE BATTIE

Mr. Riddell: A question for the Minister of Health regarding the expenses of a Mrs. Bernice Battie, former patient of the London Psychiatric Hospital, now residing at Meadowcrest Home. Will the minister inform the House as to what action he has taken to assume Mrs. Battie's expenses, as he was asked to do by the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) a month ago? This is a matter which has now been going on for over two years.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will take that as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary: The minister might remind the Attorney General that I have corresponded with him more than once about this matter. May I remind the minister that both the Ministry of Correctional Services and the Ministry of the Attorney General have said payment of the account is not within their powers. It surely cannot be up to Mrs. Battie to pay when she is being held under a Lieutenant Governor's warrant.

The Attorney General says it is within the power of the Minister of Health. Why wait for it? Why won't the minister pay it before Meadowcrest Home has to stop operating?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it may surprise the member to know that I have a lot of correspondence with most members about a great many cases.

I must say it sickens me to see a member try to march along in power on the backs of the ill in this fashion. It really does sicken me.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will get you the information just as soon as it is possible.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: To suggest that I am marching along on the backs—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Final supplementary, and would you end with a question shortly?

Mr. Riddell: Is the minister aware of the fact that unless this bill is paid within the very near future, the group home approved by the ministry will no longer be able to stay in operation, and that it's necessary that this bill be paid right away?

ASSISTANCE FOR ISOLATED COMMUNITIES

Mr. Wildman: I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs. In view of the fact that it is about 11 months since the Isolated Communities' Assistance Fund was first announced by the government last December, and seven or eight months since the first group of grants for fire protection to northern communities was made, including Montreal River Harbour and Searchmont in the Sault north area in my riding, and further, in view of the fact that similar communities in the same area were denied funds and members of the minister's staff asked me if I know the reason, when are we finally going to have definitive criteria set by the ministry for determining what types of communities are qualified and which aren't and for what various types of assistance?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As the hon. member has correctly pointed out, this is a new program dealing with the unique problems of unorganized communities in northern Ontario, and I would point out to him that in the first part of the program, which came into being a year ago, we gave out $238,000 in grants.

Mr. Wildman: That was Natural Resources.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes. Since then, applications have been flowing into the new Ministry of Northern Affairs and these are being dealt with on a very regular basis. In fact, we're looking at ways we can expedite those particular requests within our own ministry, possibly removing it from the NORT committee. As the member knows, they're dealt with on a monthly basis there. We thought if we changed the direction maybe we could handle it on a weekly basis in our own departmental structure.

I would say to the hon. member that the whole aspect of the ICAF fund is being reviewed. I expect a report from my staff within a matter of the next few days. We intend to go very carefully because we know there are ways that we can improve the program. In fact, just last week I met with UCANO West and UCANO East in Thunder Bay to go over a number of the points they had brought forward and to review them in detail with them. We'll continue that discussion and hope we can improve it some more.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: When will the fire protection committees in communities that have been granted funds under the program be advised by the Ministry of Northern Affairs or the fire marshal's office how they should spend those funds? Why has it taken so long for us to get the report the minister speaks about, when I was first told it was going to be ready in September and now we're told that perhaps it will not be until the end of November?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We're working very closely with the Solicitor General's office, particularly the fire marshal's office. I can say we're getting the utmost co-operation from that particular group. There are a number of requests before us and, with the minimum amount of staff that's available to cover that huge area of northern Ontario, it is causing us some problems. But I'm confident with the discussions we've had in the last two weeks that things will be speeded up from both ends.

THUNDER BAY COURTHOUSE

Hon. Mr. McCague: Earlier this week the member for Port Arthur asked various questions about the Thunder Bay courthouse. As he probably knows, the building was erected under a lease-back by John H. McCormick Limited, and we occupied it in June 1974. Since that date, there have been a number of problems, as the member has pointed out. There has been a lack of action on the part of the lessor, who has failed to rectify the problems as they occur.

Currently, rental payments are being withheld and will continue to be withheld until the developer is prepared to correct the problem. I should mention that since September 1976 we have deducted $4,500 per month from previous rents to offset expenditures we have had to make. He also asked what the monthly payment was. It is $9,286.15.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Has the ministry done an estimate of the costs that it would take to rehabilitate the building or whether the building is salvageable? Is the minister aware that the current figure being used in Thunder Bay, for example, is $250,000 and there is a structural fault in which one side of the building seems to have slipped off the piling so that the building tilts somewhat like the leaning tower of Pisa?

Mr. S. Smith: Like the scales of justice.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: One of the seven wonders?

Mr. Foulds: Does he know whether or not that is rectifiable? If it is not, would it not be better to abandon the building and find facilities elsewhere.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's a good comparison—the leaning tower of Thunder Bay.

Hon. Mr. McCague: It is the opinion of my staff that the building is salvageable.

[10:45]

Mr. Breagh: But will it sink?

Mr. McClellan: Or will it float?

Mr. S. Smith: Which salvage company is going to do it?

Hon. Mr. McCague: The hon. member pointed out that it might float. I understand we have some water problems. However, I'm not aware of what the costs would be. If the hon. member would like that information I will attempt to get it. It is the opinion of the staff that the building should not be abandoned.

Mr. Foulds: Could the minister, in his further investigations, find out whether or not soil tests were done on that site, which is currently known as Jessiman's Folly, when the previous minister had refused to locate the building at an Intercity location because he said, at that time, the soil tests at Intercity were not adequate? How is it that the soil tests at this site were so adequate when there was an artesian well running, over which they built the building?

Hon. Mr. McCague: If I went to the registry office would I be able to locate this property under the title of Jessiman's Folly? What is the location? Could the member inform me?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I'm sorry, I'm afraid the questioning is going the wrong way here.

Would the minister answer the question?

Mr. Foulds: On a matter of personal privilege, I would be glad to inform the minister of what's going on in his ministry and what is wrong with the site.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: The minister didn't sit here with Jim Jessiman. The whole thing was a folly.

WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr. G. I. Miller: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Is the minister aware that near Woodstock, Ontario, there are approximately seven homes that have had no fresh water since April 1976, since a nearby landfill site has contaminated their wells? Could the minister please tell me what his ministry is doing about this situation?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes. The landfill site has been closed as a result of our investigation. The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Parrott) contacted me about this earlier in the year. We're now attempting either to restore the existing wells or to arrange for piped water to the seven homes affected.

Mr. Reed: Supplementary: Since this matter is a problem which affects every landfill site in the province of Ontario, when is the ministry finally going to set goals for resource recovery systems and set them up as a provincial goal and get us out of the garbage dump mentality once and for all?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, this is a privately-operated dump that has been in existence for a number of years. It is not a sanitary landfill site in any way, shape or form. There apparently have been a number of long-term contracts with the municipality and, as has been said earlier this year, it was found that it was contaminating a number of wells in that area. We are closing the site. The site should really have been closed by the municipality some time ago.

As far as resource recovery is concerned, the hon. member knows that we are moving into that area. We are building resource recovery plants. We have arrangements with municipalities to get into that type of disposal, but we'll always have some need for sanitary landfill sites. Sanitary landfill sites can be very safe if they're properly operated, properly located and properly monitored.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: Notwithstanding the fact that this is a private landfill site, and notwithstanding the fact that there will always be some need for landfill sites across the province, is the minister prepared to review the total commitment which the ministry has to landfill sites at this point in coping with municipal garbage?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The problem, as the hon. member knows, is that to build resource recovery plants, or a front-end plant, or to get into the type of reclamation plants that the hon. member has been looking at in the last couple of years, and I have as well. We're talking about $12 and $15 a ton to the municipality to dispose of garbage rather than $7 to $8. So in some way we have to sweeten the pot, increase the incentive to municipalities so that they will get into resource recovery and rely less on landfill.

EPILEPSY

Mr. Mackenzie: To the Minister of Labour: Is the minister aware of the rather tragic story in yesterday's Globe and Mail about one Henry Michalec, epileptic, under Barbara Yaffe's byline? Is she aware of the comments of her colleague, the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch), who indicates that the recommendation of the Human Rights Commission that handicapped people be included under the code is one that is, if the quote is right, receiving a lot of attention but where she refuses to be specific as to when we may expect this action? Could the minister tell us when we might get some action on this? It has been raised with her time and again in the estimates, as she knows, by myself and others in connection with the cases of a number of epileptics. It is a very small step that's being asked for here.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the recommendation of the review committee of the Human Rights Commission that those with disabilities, including epilepsy, be included under the code is one which I think could receive unanimous support within the House in very short order. The decision regarding whether we must have an all-encompassing piece of legislation regarding the Human Rights Code revision or whether we should attack this in a piecemeal manner is one which is in the process of being made. I shall be happy to report to the House as soon as it is finalized.

Mr. Mackenzie: That recommendation was made back in July. Whether it's a piecemeal approach or not, it's something that would really be of help to these people, as small a step as it is. I can't see what money is involved. Would the minister say what time we are talking about in terms of when we might expect some action on this?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I am not sure that it does not have some money involvement in certain areas, but that is not the concern which is impeding anything right at the moment. I would hope that within the very near future we will be able to report to this House on the decision regarding that specific matter.

Mr. S. Smith: In view of the necessity and urgency to get on with a good many of the aspects of the proposed new human rights code, and in view of the obviously controversial nature of certain of the recommendations, would the minister undertake to enter discussions with representatives of all three parties to see whether, in a non-partisan way, we can find some acceptable means of proceeding, so that all the matters may be debated in some way and those which are acceptable may be proceeded with more rapidly in some way, realizing the thorny political nature of this problem? Would the minister undertake to call together representatives of all three parties on this particular issue?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to consider very seriously, the suggestion of the hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, is the minister now backing away from any commitment to have revisions to the Human Rights Code next year? Can she give a commitment that there will be legislation or at the very least that there is a strong possibility or probability the legislation will come forward?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not backing away from anything. I am just not prepared to give a specific date, which is what the hon. member asked for.

Mr. Lewis: Because you are slow, tardy, unimaginative and inert.

Hon. B. Stephenson: All of those adjectives apply only to those who perceive that kind of behaviour in themselves.

Mr. Lewis: You just can't look forward in that ministry. You can't do anything except look backwards.

Hon. B. Stephenson: The behaviour of the leader of the third party puzzles me. He is never concerned with facts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

PIPE PRODUCTION

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have directed this question to the Premier (Mr. Davis) or to the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett). It is with some hesitation I direct it to the Minister of Energy.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Don't hesitate.

Mr. Breaugh: Now is the hour, Jim, and you are it.

An hon. member: Third choice, Jim.

Mr. Kerrio: Is the minister aware of a press release from the Hon. Allan J. MacEachen on the northern pipeline, in which he refers to a particular area and makes this comment: "I might add that we have maintained close contact with interested provincial governments. They have been kept fully informed during the course of negotiations."

If such a statement is correct, was the minister aware at that time that no guarantee of Canadian content of pipe was within the agreements that were reached between Canada and the US on that over $10 billion pipeline?

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I am always sceptical when I hear that there are guarantees; and, frankly, I did not take that for granted. In our ministry, as soon as we got word as to what was happening on the pipeline, we made contact with our own industry—I am thinking of heavy equipment, those types of operators—to get right in there and get bidding on the work. So we have our ear to the ground and are very aggressive in an area such as that.

Mr. Lewis: The minister has his ear to the ground, does he?

Mr. Foulds: You know where that leaves his rear end.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. A supplementary question.

Mr. Kerrio: Is the minister aware that it is that very thing which concerns many of us in this House? And that he hasn't specifically answered the question. If he was aware at the time and was kept fully informed there was no real commitment to Canadian content, why did he not at that time make the feelings of the government known, and insist on some kind of a—a commitment if he doesn't like to use the word guarantee?

I am asking the minister now, does he think it is too late to get going to see if we can't still do something before the contract is let? I keep appealing day after day, asking the same questions—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The question has been asked.

Mr. Kerrio: I would like to ask it again.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kerrio: Would the minister try to do something?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The question has been asked.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I think you will agree that you have to be very attentive on these matters, and we are. I think the member well knows that Ontario as such was not involved in the negotiations in connection with the pipeline agreement.

Interjections.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It has made strong representations.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: I can only speak for my ministry, but we follow these matters very closely, and are ever-mindful of Ontario industry in connection with projects of this nature. I can only speak, as I have, in regard to our interests and the contact that we have made with industry.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister take it for granted from now on—knowing full well how the federal Liberals operate—that every time they negotiate a resource deal or anything related to that the Canadians are taken to the cleaners? Can the minister bear that fact in mind from now on, and whenever any deals are being negotiated would he move in before the deal is consummated?

Mr. Lewis: Exactly, that's right; do something about it.

Hon. J. A. Taylor: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I think we are becoming more aggressive in connection with these matters. And I would like to see Ontario more aggressive.

Mr. Lewis: You are right.

Hon. B. Stephenson: And it is happening.

Mr. Lewis: You know what your problem is, don't you? You are a bunch of pettifogging, slow-witted bumbler.

Interjections.

Hon. W. Newman: Don't take it out on the Legislature.

Mr. Lewis: I am not even impatient this morning.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. A new question from the member for Port Arthur.

AMBULANCE SERVICE

Mr. Foulds: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Minister of Health: Can the Minister of Health explain the state of paralysis that seems to have seized his ministry in awarding the ambulance service contract for the Thunder Bay region, for which tenders were called in March and closed in April? Many of the bidders have not yet even had an acknowledgement of their submission.

Also, is he aware that unless the contract is finalized soon there will be a continuing deterioration of ambulance services in the Thunder Bay region, because many of the qualified drivers for the current ambulance services are leaving the service?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, we reviewed that contract about two weeks ago. I am surprised that word hasn't gone out, because we certainly decided who is the successful applicant. I'm surprised that we haven't announced it in the area. I'll make sure we do so as quickly as possible.

[11:00]

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Why is it then that as late as Monday of this week many of the applicants did not know that? Was the successful applicant the applicant from within the ministry who could very well have had a conflict of interest while working for the ministry and making an application for the service?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'm not aware of any connection with the ministry and I don't know why they didn't know of it the first of this week. As I say, it was discussed several weeks ago and we'll get the notice out as soon as possible.

PSI MIND DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

Mr. Sweeney: A question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker; it's about Psi again. Can the minister confirm that he has a report from Dr. Craig Powell that definitely links the experience of the three young people from Kitchener with Psi and their ending up in the psychiatric hospital in London?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I can't confirm that. I have a report which I just got this week and which, with the pressure of everything else, I haven't even had time to read. I hope to do so on the weekend. But what's in it, I don't know.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Given that the Psi organization is now getting together weekend retreats for young children, if that report says what I suggest it says, will the minister prevent Psi from doing this?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I won't break the law and I can't make a law without approval here. But let me read the report and see whether any further action is recommended on the part of the investigators.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: Has the minister as yet raised with the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) the question I asked about the alleged use of hypnosis by Psi? If not, when will he do so?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That has, as the hon. member very well knows, or should know, formed part of the investigation as to whether or not there is any possible infraction of the Hypnosis Act.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: Could we understand why it is that the Attorney General himself states that he is not pursuing that line? And why is the Minister of Health so reluctant to perform his own function as it pertains to the use of hypnosis, or the alleged use of hypnosis?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, with respect, the member is twisting it around. What I said was that the investigation, which as she knows was launched some months ago, includes the question of whether there is any possible infraction of the Hypnosis Act.

POLLUTION BY PULP AND PAPER COMPANIES

Ms. Bryden: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. In a press release issued two days ago, the minister stated that his ministry had reviewed the pollution control programs of all pulp and paper mills in the province, and now has 16 control orders—or I should perhaps call them “Kerrtrol” orders, as Pollution Probe does—in effect covering 16 mills.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask, since there are about 31 pulp and paper mills in Ontario discharging directly into our surface waters, what action is the minister taking against the other 15 mills, since none of the mills at the moment is meeting the 1965 cleanup standards for suspended solids.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, we don't have control orders on all mills. There are some mills that are under a program and are meeting the provisions of that program. They are meeting our criteria and standards, therefore we don't have them under a specific control order. There are about 10 mills in that category. Some of them are newer, but our monitoring and our checking of their program has satisfied us to the extent that a specific control order is not necessary.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: Is the minister saying that the ones that are not under a control order are meeting the 15-milligram level, which is the objective for suspended solids set in 1965 for the entire industry?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: In some cases that is true, Mr. Speaker. But at the same time, if they are on a program and the objective is to meet that criterion, and they are doing so, we don't require a control order.

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has expired.

REPORT

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Davidson, on behalf of Mr. Philip of the standing administration of justice committee, presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

On vote 1301, item 5, royal commissions:

Mr. Lawlor: I have to get this question in somehow—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Could I ask the member his indulgence for a moment? Could I ask for order in the House, please? The member for Lakeshore is now dealing with estimates of the Attorney General.

Mr. Lawlor: As I stated, Mr. Chairman, I have to get this question in somehow, so I'll use the royal commissions: Do we have to appoint a royal commission for me to receive certain information I requested by letter from the office of the Attorney General a month ago, and which request I renewed a week ago last Monday, as to what the court situation is, what the loads are throughout the province? Is that too much to ask? If you wish a royal commission to do it—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We have prepared additional notes. The document is entitled, “Notes on Estimates for the Fiscal Year 1977-78, Statistical Supplement.” This is a 13-page document. There will be a copy of this delivered to the member for Lakeshore within the next 15 or 20 seconds. This would indicate a pretty comprehensive response to his concerns, as the document does provide a complete statistical breakdown of the case-load in our courts.

Mr. Lawlor: I thank the Attorney General very much. No royal commission will be necessary then, and I shall have a very pleasant weekend.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could ask your indulgence, because when we carry item 5 we will be finished with the first vote, I presume. I just had a matter I wanted to discuss very briefly with the Attorney General, something I have discussed with him in private before. That is the matter of restitution arising out of vandalism or robberies or break-ins, both as it relates to those who are over the juvenile age and those who are under.

In my area of Rainy River we have had a great increase in the number of crimes of vandalism and break and enter. There seems to be a fair proportion of those who are under the age of responsibility, juveniles, but there is a fair proportion of those over that age and a lot of people are suffering property damage and destruction of goods and property—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: This is in no way related to the vote that we are taking now.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I realize it is not directly related to royal commissions but I thought perhaps you would—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: It is not even indirectly related.

Mr. Reid: That's true, but I thought perhaps you would allow me some leniency and allow me to discuss this under vote 1301 generally.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hearing no objection, I will allow you to continue.

Mr. Reid: I will be very brief. I thought the Attorney General had indicated that he was going to give direction to his Crown attorneys to ask for restitution as well as the other penalties that would be imposed, but it doesn't seem to sort of have filtered down yet. At least the judges do not seem to be imposing restitution for people who, in fact, are suffering these losses.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The member is quite right, Mr. Chairman. We have discussed this in the past. At least a year and a half ago I sent out a memorandum to all Crown attorneys in Ontario instructing them to make greater use of the restitution sections of the Criminal Code, and it may be that these instructions are being followed more closely in some areas of the province than in others.

I might say that the issue of restitution in the Criminal Code is a matter that is coming before the Supreme Court of Canada before the end of year in a case by the name of Regina and Zelensky, which emanates from Manitoba. The Manitoba Court of Appeal has ruled those sections of the Criminal Code be ultra vires the federal parliament on the basis that the substance of the legislation is really property and civil rights, which, as you know, is within the jurisdiction of the provinces, as opposed to a criminal sentence. The government of Manitoba is seeking to uphold the legislation on the basis of the fact that it really is related to sentencing and only incidentally to property and civil rights.

This issue, as I say, will be determined before the end of the year, and if the Supreme Court of Canada gives an adverse ruling in relation to the constitutional validity of the present sections, then in my view the provinces should bring in legislation forthwith to fill the vacuum. That will be my recommendation to the executive council of this province if those sections are struck down.

I think that until this matter is resolved by the Supreme Court of Canada it is difficult for me to accomplish much more than we have, but once that matter is clarified—well, I should also say, Mr. Chairman, in the meantime my instructions to make use of that section stand. Part of the problem perhaps may be that there isn't sufficient communication in some areas of the province between not only Crown attorneys' offices but also individual police officers and the victims, because these sections cannot be utilized effectively unless the complaint, the victim of the vandalism, brings to court proof of the damage.

It is something I am quite prepared to discuss further with the Solicitor General (Mr. MacBeth) in order to improve the communication, because as you know in provincial court in most of these vandalism cases the bringing of witnesses to court and presenting evidence to court is largely in the hands of the police officer who happens to be in charge of the case. I think there has been a communication problem that we will hope to rectify, but I don't want to do much more than I have until the legality of this section has been determined; and in view of the fact that it will be determined before the end of the year, I'm told, we'll have more guidance at that time.

[11:15]

Mr. Deputy Chairman: This matter really comes under vote 1304, which deals with Crown attorneys. You've had your question, and I would ask you to hold anything further on this matter until we get to vote 1304.

Mr. Gaunt: I have a very brief question, if I may, Mr. Chairman. I just want to ask the Attorney General if he has reviewed the matter I talked about. I asked a question about it in the House and I discussed the matter with the Attorney General in respect to a summons being issued to a constituent of mine. I just wonder if that matter has been checked out.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The hon member can correct me if I'm wrong, but I believe it was just earlier this week that the actual summons was delivered to me. I immediately gave it to my director of Crown attorneys to communicate with the local Crown attorney to ascertain just what has happened. Quite frankly, I haven't got a report back as yet and I really didn't expect to have a report before next week. But we'll push it along as quickly as we can.

Mr. Gaunt: I appreciate that, and I don't want the Attorney General to get the feeling I'm pushing him unduly. But I don't want a month to elapse because the hearing has been set for December 22, and I hope we can get the matter resolved long before that.

Mrs. Campbell: I suppose to comply with the way in which we are proceeding in the vote, I will preface my remarks by asking a question. I wonder whether the Attorney General of this province, being concerned with the administration of justice, would be inclined to consider appointing a royal commission to study the whole matter of the problems of women in the province before the courts and in all areas of the law, including legal education.

We heard earlier this morning the discussion with the Solicitor General, who apparently quite readily confirms the statements of Chief Adamson of the Metro police as to the increase in the incidence of rape in Metropolitan Toronto. We know there is no provision for this province to deal with the matter of rape crisis centres; there is no money for that service.

We know that this province has no money to deal with the matters of battered wives; and there is apparently no way in the law that lawyers are interested in moving these cases before the courts in a somewhat speedy fashion so women are not living under siege in their own homes awaiting some kind of disposition of a problem of battering. We see women powerless because the husbands in some cases, or former husbands, have been kidnapping children; and women are left absolutely powerless in these situations.

Then we have the outstanding contribution of the law professors to the whole situation of women in the law. I trust that the Attorney General has read Mr. Outerbridge's interesting lecture to legal secretaries, and I wonder if he is not now concerned with the effect of this kind of publicity, the effect of this kind of adolescent thinking on the part of people teaching members of the profession who will shortly become lawyers, Crown attorneys, and maybe will grow up some day to be judges. Are we not going to look at this matter from the broad overview? Would it not be conceivable that this might be an important issue to at least half the population of this province?

I have mentioned before the Attorney General's concerns about hockey violence. Why is there no commitment anywhere to a real study, by way of a commission or otherwise, of this total picture of the growing problems of women in our society? Why is there not? How can the Attorney General be a part of a society, a governing society, which permits this kind of thinking in the legal educational system?

It's interesting; some years ago I refused to belong to the Canadian Bar Association on the basis that I did not belong to discriminatory bodies. I have refused to join other organizations where discrimination is shown. I would have hoped the Attorney General of this province, speaking not of administration of law but of administration of justice, would be concerned with the lack of it for, as I say half the population of this province.

Much more realistically, I know the Attorney General is most anxious to proceed with the family law legislation, and I have throughout expressed my support of his thrusts. In fact, I have even said I would try to help to see it moved along, but I'm going to tell you, Mr. Chairman, with this kind of thing before us women are more convinced than ever that the Attorney General is not going to talk "discretion of the courts" to them, he's not going to discuss "discretion" to those who appear to have gone through this system. I wonder if the Attorney General has realized just how sick we see this problem to be in Ontario today.

It was interesting to me that when we had lawyers before us discussing this particular legislation, when the women lawyers appeared the Attorney General couldn't be there. That is understandable, but what they had to say, in reflecting their circumstances and their experiences, was rather disregarded while three men came and were listened to very carefully by the Attorney General—and the men were the "experts," the men were the "experts."

I am rather saddened that when these issues are raised in this House we have the cackle of backroom jokes. This is the mentality prevailing today in circles which ought to be leading us against this kind of thing.

It applies too, to the lack of interest, for some time at least, in the alleged attack on a principal of a school and other women. Perhaps it was nothing more nor less than a Hallowe'en prank or some overzealous boys. The fact is that these were women who were frightened. There isn't any question they were frightened. I cannot prove the allegations one way or the other, but they were frightened by something. If a gun is pointed at a person, can it be done as a joke in this province? Or is it only a joke if it is pointed to a woman? Those are questions that we have to face up to.

I thought there was a law that stated one cannot point a gun. I also thought there was a law that said one doesn't pull the trigger. But apparently in our time in this province there isn't any law; it's a game. We leave it to those who apparently have no real interest in the matter, since they have no real interest in finding out where the incidents—and allegedly there were three of them, not one—took place. There is no interest whatsoever in discussing the matter with those who have claimed to have been victimized. It was only yesterday, I believe, that we began to think that there just might be some reason for the Crown attorney and/or the police to look at this as something serious in our society.

If we can't view these things seriously then there is no wonder that there is a lack of confidence, a very serious lack of confidence, among many women in this province as to the quality of justice. I suggest that perhaps the only way we can regain some kind of real confidence is to have all of these issues discussed publicly. We cannot go on any longer shoving responsibility hither, thither and yon. There have to be answers, and I suggest that perhaps a royal commission is not the worst way to approach it. We have considered other matters of a far less soul-searing nature than this one.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think the member for St. George really is suggesting a royal commission to deal with a very large percentage of the ills in our society today.

Mrs. Campbell: Only within your jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: With respect, I think she perhaps has more confidence than I have in what can be accomplished by royal commissions in such a broad area.

I have enough confidence in this Legislature to believe that this is the most appropriate forum of all to discuss pressing social issues, whether they relate to the administration of justice directly or indirectly, because of the issues that have been raised by the hon. member really do represent a very broad spectrum of social problems in the community. I will try and respond specifically to some of the concerns expressed by the hon. member.

[11:30]

In relation to the increase in the incidence of rape, or at least the reporting of rape, I should like simply to indicate to the members what the role of the Ministry of the Attorney General has been. We are not in a position to fund any community services. But in relation to the rape crisis centre in Metropolitan Toronto, which we believe is performing a useful service, I have met with representatives of this centre. I personally established a very close liaison between that crisis centre and the local Crown attorney's office. I am advised by the women in charge of the rape crisis centre that the liaison is an excellent one and has worked out very well.

I have also indicated—

Mrs. Campbell: Provided it is still there to liaise with.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have also indicated to the Crown attorney's office in Toronto that sexual assault cases must be expedited through the courts. I am well aware of the enormous emotional strain that any victim of such an assault is faced with, and I am well aware of the fact that any undue delay in relation to the trying of these cases can only add to the emotional burden.

I have discussed this matter not only with the Crown attorney's office but with the chief judge of the provincial court and the chief justice of the high court in relation to expediting preliminary inquiries. I've also discussed the matter with the chief judge of the judicial district of York in order to see that county court trials proceed.

I have also met with senior police officials in relation to police attitudes towards victims of rape. In doing so I realize that I may be treading in an area that's more properly the responsibility of the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General is well aware of my close association with the Metropolitan Toronto Police Department by reason of my professional association with them as a practising lawyer, so he welcomes any of my initiatives in this regard.

I am sure the hon. member is well aware of a study that was done by—I forget the woman's name, a professor—in relation to the treatment of rape victims. It is some time ago that I read her report, but she was very complimentary, generally speaking, as I recall, of the handling of this very sensitive type of case by the Metropolitan Toronto Police Department. She had some very positive things to say, and I think there again it indicated a sensitivity in relation to the handling of these very serious cases—very difficult cases from an emotional standpoint—by the members of the Metro force who are given this responsibility.

A view has been expressed that these initiatives that have been taken have resulted in the increase in reporting of incidents of rape or serious sexual assaults. We don't know yet, but I put it forward as a possibility. There may be more victims reporting these incidents than had been the case in the past, because perhaps there is some recognition on the part of the victim that these cases will be treated sensitively by Metropolitan Toronto police officers who are assigned to these cases, who have some degree of expertise, and that they will be treated more sensitively than it was believed they would be by the courts.

As the hon. member knows, there was a recent amendment to the Criminal Code of Canada dealing with the right to cross-examine a complainant on any of her prior history. It is perhaps a little early to attempt to make a value judgement as to the effectiveness of this amendment, but again that was directed towards according fairer treatment to complainants in rape cases.

It just may be that the combination of these initiatives has encouraged a greater percentage of victims to report this. That certainly is the belief of many senior members of the Metropolitan Toronto police department, but again it obviously can't be proven. All I can do is express the hope that this is the case and that there is not an overall increase. Again, one cannot know. I hope these initiatives will continue.

I am not in a position, in these estimates, to comment one way or the other in relation to public resources for community resource centres such as the rape crisis centre. I certainly have made it very clear that I am very supportive of the work that is being done by this centre. I think there should be such a centre in every community of any size, and I would hope that resources can be found to fund these very important social services.

The member probably knows as well, if not better than I, the strains and the demands that are made on our social service system. I have particular priorities in my own mind, of course, and I know the member for St. George has very laudable priorities in her mind. I would hope that if there isn't sufficient funding from the provincial level—and there are enormous demands made on our resources. Having arrived here only two years ago, when I look at the increase in the social service budget just over the last five years—I believe it has more than tripled—I believe it is an illustration of the demands that are being made.

I would hope that funds will be found locally for rape crisis centres. Public-spirited citizens like the member opposite and myself, I am sure, may even be prepared to make personal contributions in that respect. I think we should also not neglect in these discussions—although we may be going far afield—the very valuable volunteer component that is available.

I must admit, having been very much involved with volunteer agencies in recent years, I don't think nearly enough is made of the volunteer resources. There is always a difficulty with some resources in that there is always a pressure to develop a higher degree of expertise, and therefore to be looking for social workers that are well trained, which certainly is desirable. But when these funds aren't available to hire this type of trained personnel, I would like to think that the community as a whole can—as I know it can—provide most of these resources on a volunteer basis.

I personally know many women who may not be trained social workers but who would be able to man and provide a very valuable and useful service in working and assisting victims of rape cases. I just regret—and again I am going a little far afield—that there hasn't been a greater recognition of this fact. I am not talking specifically in relation to this one rape crisis centre, because my understanding is that they do make great use of volunteer help.

In any event, I don't personally believe that centre will be allowed to fold. I have indicated to them that any assistance they will require from the Ministry of the Attorney General, although we're not a funding ministry, any other assistance will continue to be forthcoming.

In relation to the matter dealing with legal education, I like to think that the incident that was reported earlier this week and that was discussed by the hon. member is not representative of legal education in this province.

Mrs. Campbell: Have you read that report?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, I read the documents the hon. member forwarded to me and as I undertook to do, with her personally, I wrote yesterday to the treasurer of the Law Society indicating your concern about the possibility of a sexist-oriented legal education, which as I explained, repeating your concerns, could lead on the one hand to a lack of sensitivity, in dealing with female clients or lack of sensitivity on the part of Crown attorneys in dealing with complainants in sexual assault cases, and, of course, the lack of sensitivity in dealing with female lawyer colleagues, or secretarial help, or any other women who do play such a vital part in the operation of any law office.

I will perhaps be seeing him later today and will discuss it with him in person, but the letter has gone to him, as I assured the member for St. George would happen.

I personally have visited most of the law schools in this province on at least one occasion and I'm impressed by the large number of women who are involved and are being trained in law school and receiving a legal education. As I indicated in the Legislature, when I was in law school I think there were less than a dozen women out of 250. It's now close to a third and although—

Mrs. Campbell: Were you impressed by the number instructing?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I really don't have those figures. Of course, I think one has to recognize that women in large numbers taking a law degree is a relatively recent phenomenon. The instructors, teachers and what not are normally people who have had a few years' experience practising law, and of course a large percentage of the women practising law today would probably have been called to the bar five years or less. I would think and I would expect that there would be a dramatic increase in the participation of women in legal education at all levels as we develop these greater resources.

I can say that in this whole area of family law I personally have witnessed the phenomenon of the fact that we are developing a whole new generation of lawyers who are motivated to practising in this area. For example, I attended a dinner that was sponsored, by the Law Society as I recall or it may have been the family law section of the Criminal Bar Association in Ontario; it doesn't really matter who it was. It was in the middle of the week and it was a dinner at a local hotel; some 800 lawyers attended this evening seminar on family law. I have to admit that 10 years ago, if you could have got a corporal's guard out, 10 per cent of that number would have been remarkable. I do think that is a positive development, that there are so many lawyers who are obviously interested in practising in this very important field. I do think this really does, or should bode well for the treatment of women in the legal system because with the enormous number of lawyers involved, I think it cannot help but do that. We have discussed the family law reform bill and we will be discussing it as it goes before the justice committee of this Legislature.

I think the unified family court is, of course, going to benefit women to a great extent because it is going to make the whole process more accessible. The member for St. George, having served as a judge in the family and juvenile court, knows the importance of that court, knows the potential of that court to serve the community in a very meaningful way in providing greater accessibility in relation to the average citizen. We hope that will be developed.

The hon. member for St. George is also pretty much aware of the make-up of the family court in Metropolitan Toronto, and perhaps throughout the province. I am more familiar, of course, with the judges, all of whom I know in Metropolitan Toronto, and I am cultivating a greater knowledge of the judges outside Metro around the province. I have been very impressed by the quality of the lawyer prepared to serve in the family court. I think we have attracted a clever, intelligent, but above all a sensitive brand of lawyer to that particular court, which again is a positive step, I think, in dealing with these very serious problems.

One of my own appointments in the last year was an outstanding woman lawyer, Judge Abella. I have to tell the member opposite that when I seek people out, not necessarily just for the family court but for various boards which require legal expertise, I have been turned down. I am not speaking specifically of the family court in this area, because I don't want to suggest that anybody who has accepted has been a second choice; Judge Rose Abella, for example, was very much a first choice. But I have been surprised by the number of women lawyers who have simply turned me down in relation to these appointments because of success with their own practices and the fact they just aren't interested in the salaries that we can offer or because it doesn't fit in with their own professional development; they are not prepared to serve on boards such as the Ontario Municipal Board, Land Compensation Board and what not. So I have to say that I am perhaps more optimistic than the member for St. George as to what is going to transpire in the future, and indeed what has happened in the past.

The member for St. George is familiar with my family. She knows that my eldest child, a daughter, is presently working in a law office and hopes to pursue a legal career. I am not as pessimistic as the member is in some of her statements. But I appreciate that we all resort to a certain amount of poetic licence from time to time.

Mrs. Campbell: There is also a certain amount of truth.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Obviously I am optimistic for my daughter's future, and that is not to suggest that the concerns that have been expressed are not legitimate concerns.

Mrs. Campbell: Is there a difference between Montreal and Toronto?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It is true. I mentioned to the member earlier in the week that my eldest daughter, whom the member for St. George knows, is working in Montreal, although she intends to pursue a legal education and a career in Ontario. There are a number of reasons she is working in Montreal, not the least of which is to improve her facility in the French language. So I have to be optimistic.

I should also mention that the battered wife syndrome, which is a very serious problem, together with the battered child syndrome, is increasingly occupying the time of social scientists. The member for St. George and myself, and other members, are well aware of the increasing number of seminars that take place in order to try and arrive at solutions to this problem. As I read the reports that come out of some of these meetings I must admit I don't see many specific solutions being proposed. Initiatives yes, and I am not criticizing the social scientists, but I think it is only indicative of the enormous complexity of this area.

The Family Law Reform Act does of course allow a wife, I believe for the first time, to sue her husband civilly for assault. To use an old expression, "get them in their pocketbooks if you want to make progress" might have some application.

Mrs. Campbell: We'll have to wait and see.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: But we'll have to wait and see.

In relation to the Moss Park incident, I was very disturbed when I read in the press reports that an unnamed member of the Crown attorney's office had allegedly told the police that the matter should be left to the military. I am now advised that this was inaccurate and no such instructions had been given from any representative of our office.

I am further advised—I don't have a complete report yet, I have mainly just a verbal report from the police—that there was some considerable degree of reluctance on the part of some of the women who were involved in this incident to proceed with the charges themselves. They did not encourage the charges to be laid at all. They themselves, I am told—and this is only from the police—were of the view, initially at least, that the military authorities should be involved rather than the courts. There may be some change in this attitude, but one of my senior Crown attorneys is meeting with the police again today, the director of our city of Toronto office, Mr. McGee, is meeting with the police. I'll have some further report in relation to that.

Ms. Gigantes: I would just like to ask a followup question leading out of suggestions made by the member for St. George. I would like to ask the Attorney General what is essentially different about the request by the member for St. George for a commission to inquire into violence against women in this province and the setting up of the commission on racial incidents and racism in Ontario? When the commission on racism was set up it received approval by all members of this House. It was widely acclaimed by the public and by the press in this province. The need for the commission was well understood and well supported by everyone of good will in this province. It was a recognition that the problem existed. It was a recognition that the problem needed study, needed public examination—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: On a point of information—if you could assist me by telling me what commission you are referring to?

Ms. Gigantes: I am referring to the commission headed by a former member of this House, Walter Pitman, which is studying racism in Metro Toronto. It seems to me that we are dealing here with the same kind of problem. We're dealing in our society with the notion that there are suitable victims. In one case the suitable victim can be identified by colour of skin, physical traits or language traits. In another case the suitable victims apparently happen to be 50 per cent of this society.

It seems to me that over the years the kind of attitude we've had towards violence to that 50 per cent of society has been such that the Attorney General can stand here today and say it's an enormously complicated problem, a problem that has to be treated with great sensitivity by officials. This is true also of racism. Yet we see fit in Ontario, and I think rightly, to create a commission to inquire into the causes of racism, to see what steps can be taken in society to deal with it and to encourage those members of what some people in society obviously consider suitable victim groups to think of themselves with dignity and as having rights in society—legal and social rights—that they can ask this society to defend as a normal course of events.

It seems to me we really got a typical response from the Attorney General to the suggestion from the member for St. George for a commission inquiring into the causes of and the possible solutions, however slowly they may be developed, to the problem of violence against women. It's a totally typical kind of attitude: It's an historic fact; it's somehow in human nature that these acts of violence should be perpetrated against women; this is really much too complicated for academics to deal with. The Attorney General tells us that seminars held on the subject don't produce many solutions.

I suggest to the Attorney General that this very same kind of attitude used to prevail about the status of women. There used to be all kinds of claims on the part of a large number of elected representatives and officials of various sorts that in fact the status of women was too complicated a question to be dealt with.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That is just so much nonsense.

Mr. Mackenzie: It certainly isn't.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Ms. Gigantes: Finally, when we came to the creation of the federal royal commission inquiry into the status of women in Canada, we found that indeed it was possible to identify all kinds of areas in which the status of women was under fire and undermined in this country, and to develop very specific remedial ways for helping to promote the status of women as equal citizens in this country.

I suggest to the Attorney General that it is a perfectly reasonable, normal request that is made by the member for St. George, that there should be a commission on this subject. I consider it really quite typical of the attitudes towards women that the proposal should be treated by the Attorney General as something which is dealing with an area far too complicated to be usefully studied, examined and suggested remedies brought forward through the activity of a commission of inquiry.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would like to say, having witnessed the hon. member's performance in this House for over two years, that I'm quite confident I have a greater understanding and a greater sensitivity to the problems of women in this province than has come from any of the statements I've heard from her in this particular House.

Ms. Gigantes: Is this divide and rule?

Mr. Nixon: It is just the Friday morning putdown.

Mr. Reid: If he was Margaret Birch, he'd understand it much more clearly.

Mr. Lawlor: The minister knows more about women than she does?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: To suggest that the lack of immediate enthusiasm for a royal commission or a commission to study violence in society generally indicates any sort of lack of ongoing concern about the problem is just a very foolish remark, but as I say, I've come to expect not much better.

The Walter Pitman commission—

[12:00]

Mr. McClellan: We're bilious this morning, aren't we?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —was a commission that was established by the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto to look at the issue—

Mr. Mackenzie: He must have watched a particularly bad hockey game last night or something.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —of violent activity in Metropolitan Toronto in respect to the south Asian community. Mr. Pitman has informally, by a series of informal meetings with various groups representing the south Asian community and other groups in the society, is preparing, I think, a very worthwhile report. I've had some preview of the report. I think he's made a very valuable contribution.

Indeed, when we deal with any issue such as this, which involves a very serious form of disease in the community, the broader community, and when we talk about violence in relation to children, violence related to women, or just violence generally, we're obviously dealing with a very core problem in relation to human activity.

I just simply express the view that this is a matter that requires ongoing study at all levels of the community, and the suggestion that any specific commission with broad terms of reference is going to add anything more than what is added by our social scientists in their ongoing study is very unrealistic.

I should point out, too, that the Ontario Law Reform Commission, in making the various reports that it has in relation to family law has indicated very much the concern of this province in relation to the status of women in society generally. I must admit I find it very offensive, simply because the hon. member opposite happens to be a female, to play the old game of saying, "Of course, because you're a man, you don't understand."

You don't have any sensitivity to these things."

Ms. Gigantes: Did I say that?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That was very implicit in your remarks.

Mr. McClellan: You must be overly sensitive.

Mr. Lawlor: Unduly sensitive.

Mr. McClellan: She must have struck a sore point.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I find that sort of sanctimonious nonsense—aggravating on a Friday. I really do.

Mr. McClellan: You have a monopoly on sanctimony today.

Ms. Gigantes: Only on Friday?

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, I'm quite prepared—

Ms. Gigantes: Should I try you on a Tuesday?

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'm quite prepared to recognize that fact. The member for St. George and I, we have disagreements. She beat me in an election, but we can have a useful interchange—

Mr. Mackenzie: Do you have more disagreements on a Friday than you do on a Monday?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —because she directs her mind to matters in a rational fashion, not sort of on this business of male versus female. You make it very difficult to pursue a similar sort of interchange.

Mr. McClellan: Poor fellow.

Mr. Mackenzie: Don't be so sensitive.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: But that is really the member's problem more than it is mine, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Mackenzie: I think it is your problem.

Mr. Nixon: I don't want to get involved in this controversy—

Mrs. Campbell: Oh come on, come on; do.

Mr. Nixon: —but as sort of an innocent bystander here I felt that the Attorney General was perhaps a little insensitive to the comments made by the hon. member for Carleton East. I don't often support her, for some reason, but I thought in this instance that maybe the Attorney General was under the influence of Friday morning blues or something like that.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I had such a lovely time with the member for St. George.

Ms. Gigantes: You said she was being poetic.

Mr. Nixon: Of course, I know precisely how you feel when you talk to the member for St. George, because she's always rational and always takes a broadminded approach to the problems of the day, and we've known that for a good long time.

Ms. Gigantes: You accused her of taking poetic licence.

Mr. Nixon: It's certainly great that the Attorney General now appreciates the same thing.

However, we are talking about the royal commissions vote and I wanted to express an opinion which the Attorney General may not agree with as well, and this will be twice in a morning.

I really find, Mr. Chairman, that the criteria used by the government in the establishment of royal commissions is appalling, wasteful and used almost entirely for political purposes. There are all sorts of occasions when it might very well be that a problem facing the community should be handed to a judge with a royal commission. But instead of that, we have had instances where, in many respects, a royal commission is not necessary and is used simply as a convenient shelf upon which the government can deposit matters that are somewhat embarrassing; and there they put them to rest for a while.

I would say, in the case of the commission looking into violence on TV, that the Premier (Mr. Davis) took a positive initiative. He decided not to deposit on that shelf something that was embarrassing, not to put it out of the way. Instead, he tried in the most cynical way, I thought, to make what I considered to be rather cheap political capital out of a matter that was of some concern to the community. The appointment of a royal commissioner to study violence on TV was a waste of money. It was an unwarranted expense. It was, I think, a crass political initiative taken at the time.

The report is something worse than useless and I regret that a friend of mine—Judy LaMarsh in whom I have a good deal of respect—got involved in the thing. I really think that it is one of the most regrettable decisions taken by the Premier in his political career. It was just a silly mistake.

The second one that occurs to me is the Ronto royal commission, which was also a mistake. Since we're not in question period, we can have a better exchange on a matter like this. The Attorney General may think there were no allegations or innuendos—the words that the government uses—or charges from the opposition or anybody else that there had been any political malfeasance in this Ronto business; there was, however, a very strong indication—and you can call it a charge or any other word you want to use—that the government's decision in this regard was completely wrong. It should not have allowed Ronto to get away with their tremendous capital gains without paying the land speculation tax.

We were working with this in the public accounts committee. It became obvious that it was too involved and time-consuming for that committee. We would have had to come to the House for powers to get legal assistance and accounting assistance and spend many weeks, if not months, of our committee's time—and we only meet about two hours in a week—in order to pursue that Ronto business to some kind of a conclusion.

We came to the House and asked that a special committee be appointed with terms of reference dealing exclusively with the Ronto matter. The government decided, under the circumstances, to give it to a royal commission with terms of reference indicating there were allegations of political malfeasance.

Whatever the Attorney General thinks, my opinion is that this was simply a way to give that matter to a commissioner, get it out of the forum where it should have been discussed—which was here—get it away from a committee that, with the evidence that was already available to the public accounts committee, might very well make a recommendation that the government should reverse its position. The ruling or the report of the commissioner was obvious from the first when we saw the terms of reference. I thought that the NDP, in going along with the Conservatives in the reference of the royal commission, were patsies. They were sucked in by the government in that regard. We should have had a committee dealing with Ronto here so that at least the terms of reference would have permitted us to make a recommendation that would have been meaningful and not just political baloney.

Mr. Lawlor: His testiness is rubbing off on you, Robert.

Mr. Nixon: The other thing that occurs to me is this matter about the granting of some garbage licence in Maple. Do you remember, during the election or just before the election, there were some allegations that some company down in Washington, after making a substantial contribution to the Tory slush fund before the 1975 campaign, was awarded this licence. I think of the defence taken by the Premier at the time when Fidinam (Canada) Ltd. gave a $50,000 donation to Mr. Kelly; the matter was not even denied by the representatives of the government or the Premier himself. There was a clear communication between Fidinam (Canada), which had a little hole-in-the-wall office in some building down town, and Fidinam in Europe about the disposition of the $50,000. That was a case of very high political impact that wasn't sent to a royal commission. We had the law officers of the Crown give us some kind of comments about that.

Then all of a sudden in somewhat similar circumstances, when the political heat was on, there was some indication that maybe a garbage licence was the result of a political payoff. A royal commissioner was appointed months ago, but we haven't heard a thing about it since. There's no doubt that, if we are waiting for anything of interest to come out of that, we may wait a long time indeed.

So I return to what I said to begin with, that there we have an amount of $1.25 million for royal commissions—

Mrs. Campbell: What about the Pickering one?

Mr. Nixon: My hon. friend who comes to the heart of these matters very effectively is right again. We have this great confrontation between the Ombudsman and the Minister of Housing (Mr. Rhodes), and that thing goes to a royal commission with all of the ancillary problems and costs; the thing sinks into the slough of something or other—not Despond, but I suppose the internal politics of the Conservative Party, with all the thrashing and so on that has been taking place—disappears, and we don't hear anything about it at all.

Personally I resent the criteria used by the government for the establishment of royal commissions. I feel this is something that has been substantially discredited by the decisions taken by the government in recent months and years, and I wanted to put my views before you, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: In relation to the several commissions, they seem to fall into about three categories. The LaMarsh commission, we have heard a great deal about in this House. I rather regret to hear the hon. member opposite describe the report that involved so much of his distinguished colleague's time as being a useless report. I hope he has communicated that fact to her.

Mr. Reid: He said that at the time it was set up.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Even though she may not have always exercised sound political judgement, certainly in relation to the political party she chose to become affiliated with, I think Miss LaMarsh, in the recognition of most thinking people, has been a distinguished public servant and made a very valuable contribution in relation to this report.

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order, is the Attorney General suggesting in any way that I was criticizing Miss LaMarsh? The criticism was directed against the minister and his colleagues.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The hon. member just said her report was useless. If that's not criticism, I don't know what is.

Mr. Kerrio: That is fair.

Mr. Reid: It couldn't help but be useless. It was useless before she started.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'll tell Judy—

Mr. Lawlor: Take her out for lunch and tell her.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —that you didn't criticize her; you just said her report was useless. I guess when somebody spends as much time as she spent on this report and came up with what I thought was a very thoughtful reasoned report—

Mr. Nixon: That is certainly an indication of the minister's capacities then. Why shouldn't she spend a lot of time? What were we paying her every day?

Mr. Reid: It was $250 a day plus.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Again, it is very insulting to a distinguished public servant—

Mr. Nixon: Maybe it is insulting. The terms of reference were ridiculous. It is a waste of money.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —to suggest that she prolonged this royal commission simply because of her per diem.

Mr. Nixon: You were the one who said she spent a long time on it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: If that's not being critical of Miss LaMarsh, then I must admit I have difficulty with what the member means to say. I would hate him to be critical of anybody, if it isn't criticism to talk about a useless report and prolonging the report because of a modest per diem—

Mr. Nixon: It was modest from the standpoint of a lawyer.

Mr. Lawlor: Don't take unfair advantage of him Roy.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have heard about problems caused by certain tensions and battles within the ranks of the federal Tory party, but what I am witnessing at first hand in the ranks of the Liberal Party in Ontario just makes me positively gasp. I mean, how two such distinguished members of the Liberal Party in this province—namely how the former leader of the Liberal Party in this province could launch such a very serious, and I think almost a vicious, attack on one of his political colleagues, a former minister of the federal Crown—

Mr. Reid: What a bunch of baloney this is. Did someone order a baloney sandwich?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It is almost worth getting elected just to have a ringside seat to such an event. It makes all these hours eminently worthwhile. I have witnessed some of these struggles in the federal Conservative Party, but what a wonderful diversion for those of us on this side of the House!

Mr. Kerrio: When are you going to stop stickhandling and shoot the puck?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The member for Niagara Falls almost shares ridings with—they are neighbours—

Mr. Chairman: Will the hon. minister get back to item 5 of the vote?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —to sit quietly by and hear a friend and neighbour, a supporter, castigated in such a fashion? Talk about Friday morning blues, this comes pretty close to violence in the Legislature.

Mr. Nixon: Come on, make sense of something sensible.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I was just reminded, it was just suggested to me and for that I should be very grateful, that as a result of the former leader's contribution, he's just made Friday a happy day again for me, and one must express one's gratitude in whatever way one can.

The LaMarsh commission obviously falls into one category. It did not come into being as a result of any allegations in relation to any suggestion of malfeasance on the part of the government.

I think when we get into matters such as the Ronto and waste management royal commissions, these decisions, of course, are made by the executive council of this government, of which I am a member. Those commissions are administered by the Attorney General in so far as providing the resources is concerned.

Now I think when an opposition party, which of course has a fundamental role to oppose, goes beyond that and makes allegations that's another matter. Certainly by reason of statements that are made in the House certain innuendoes arise which really suggest that it is not merely a matter of mismanagement or mistaken judgement on the part of the government. Some of the statements that I have heard in relation to these two royal commissions really go beyond that. Without attributing them to anyone in particular, certainly I heard statements which, really, I think struck at the integrity of the government; not a matter of lack of judgement or mismanagement, as I mentioned a moment ago, but suggesting impropriety of a very great nature.

I think if an opposition party indulges in that type of tactic, then no government has much alternative but to allow an independent judicial inquiry into this allegation.

Mr. Nixon: You didn't do it with Moog, you didn't do it with Goodman; you are very selective.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The terms of reference were directed towards that issue, and they were supported by the New Democratic Party for that reason.

So when you criticize the government for unnecessary expenditure of public funds in this area, I think you really should remind yourselves of your own responsibility in making these allegations or making statements that give rise to this kind of innuendo, which I personally believe makes it almost mandatory for any leader of government to respond in order to maintain the integrity of the system.

I know all members of this Legislature, regardless of our differences in political partisanship, basically believe very strongly in the integrity of the system or we wouldn't be here. When that integrity is placed in doubt, I don't think any government has much alternative but to seriously consider an independent judiciary inquiry.

In relation to Pickering, as I recall the events, first of all the Select Committee on the Ombudsman, I think, was very reluctant to pursue the report in so far as making any determination as to whether any greater compensation should be made to those landowners. What led as much as anything else to the commission into Pickering was the reluctance of the committee; and for reasons similar to those which the hon. member opposite just expressed in relation to Ronto, the complexity of the matter and the fact that the committee perhaps thought it could have been tied up on nothing else for months and months.

So the select committee dealing with the Ombudsman and Pickering welcomed the decision that was reached between the Minister of Housing and the Ombudsman in relation to the constitution of that commission. It's unfortunate that it has been delayed, but I think any delays are for reasons far beyond the powers of this government.

Again, I should remind the members, in relation to the waste management commission, this was scheduled to commence in September. It's only because representatives of various community groups challenged the decision of the commission in relation to their status that that has been delayed. That's a matter that has gone into the courts.

In relation to this whole issue of royal commissions, and particularly commissions thought to be useful to study social issues such as violence to women, I suggest to the member for St. George that again this is an area in which I have great confidence in the makeup of this House. If we think something useful can be accomplished by another study, in view of all the ongoing studies, there's no reason we can't consider establishing a select committee with terms of reference to investigate this problem, inasmuch as the problem might be resolved by changes to provincial legislation. I would welcome any such initiative. I want to make that very clear that I have sufficient confidence in this House that working together, if there were some areas which could be usefully explored with a view to bringing in amendments to provincial legislation, this is the forum. Perhaps we place too much faith in the idea of setting up, as has been suggested, yet another royal commission to study a problem that I think we ourselves are quite capable of looking at and pursuing with all seriousness. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, in case the Attorney General thought I was in any way ambivalent about my views about the royal commission on violence, I made a political promise that my first responsibility had I been elected Premier would have been to discontinue the commission forthwith. I would like to ask him what the final cost for that commission was?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That question was asked during the estimates and I've already given that information, but I'm quite happy to repeat it.

Mr. Nixon: As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, this is item 5, entitled royal commissions. Clearly the minister was out of order if he's been answering it on another item.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I've been responding to a number of—

Mr. Nixon: You are not suggesting it is out of order?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —questions from across the aisle that might generally be considered to be out of order, but by reason of my basic generosity of spirit I don't make these technical objections.

Mr. Nixon: What are you talking about now?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have it right here, but you keep interrupting me.

Mr. Reid: You are beginning to sound like an NDP member.

Mr. Nixon: Just give us the bottom line.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The total over three fiscal years, starting with the fiscal year 1975-76 to this year, is $2,176,328.

Mr. Nixon: What has happened to that report? Have you got an implementation group in the committee or is one of your policy secretariats dealing with it in some detail?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Every ministry that might have an interest in the matter has been asked to respond.

Mr. Nixon: They all received copies of that report?

Mr. Reid: It is high on the list of priorities.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Certainly to my knowledge, Mr. Chairman, and they have all been asked to respond with respect to suggestions or initiatives that they might be undertaking in their own ministries in relation to the recommendations of the LaMarsh commission.

Mr. Nixon: Would the minister not agree that if there had been some imagination on his side, when it was obvious that Miss LaMarsh was available for one of these important long-term commitments, wouldn't it have been a great thing if the idea that had been put forward by the hon. members for St. George and Carleton East had occurred to you people who are supposed to be so sensitive in the role of the affairs of women before the law and in the community? The minister himself has indicated that he is more forthcoming and more sensitive than the spokesmen from the opposition, who happen to be both women and ladies.

Isn't it a shame that the government hadn't spent that money in using the services of Miss LaMarsh for something that would have been much more timely, and might have had some impact and usefulness, not only to this House but Ontario at large?

I just feel it is a shame that $2.25 million has just gone down the pipe. I would say again that the report is not of significance or use to this House or to the community.

Mr. Reid: It's not even within our jurisdiction.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, I, like the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, am reluctant to encourage the government to set up more royal commissions because, as he described them, many of them are used for very partisan political purposes and coverup. Every once in a while in society violence does occur. The member for Carleton East cited one instance, as did the member for St. George.

I have been trying to get the minister interested in a form of violence in our society, and he just refuses to react positively to any suggestions that I make that something should be done. I am very reluctant to ask for a royal commission into violence in industry, the violence that is caused by negligent managers of industry which causes death and destruction to working class people. Probably the Attorney General is not concerned that over 300 people per day get killed on the North American continent in industrial situations.

Many of these occurrences should lead to criminal charges. Yet I am not aware of one single charge in the province of Ontario ever having been laid against an industrialist or a plant manager as a result of his negligence, even despite the fact I have brought a specific case to the minister's attention over the past year and he refuses to respond. He doesn't even follow up with correspondence that he promises to me. People such as myself then get frustrated.

Certainly the minister has demonstrated that he is interested in curtailing violence on TV, as in the case of the Judy LaMarsh commission. Violence in hockey is his priority. I can understand it, because I think his lifestyle has not been associated with violence in industry, whereas I come from a different end of society. My whole life has been spent in a very violent industry. In the plant where I worked prior to coming here, last year 11 men were killed, and I am sure the Attorney General has heard about the three men who were killed in Froid Mine within a 90-day period within 100 yards of one another when the roof kept falling in, and the company concerned just said, "Oh no, the area is still safe." It was only after pressure on the floor of this House that the government reacted and closed off the drift. Otherwise, men would have just kept going down the drain.

[12:30]

At this time I want to mention one specific case which I have brought to the minister's attention over the past year and in which he has absolutely refused and neglected to respond to my wishes.

On October 26, 1976, three men were killed at the Sudbury Metals plant in Falconbridge. A coroner's inquest was held and the jury reported on February 28, 1977. Certain evidence was revealed, and criminal charges should have been forthcoming, the coroner's jury recommended. One of the recommendations the jury made was that there should be a qualified process engineer or a metallurgical engineer on site or available at all times with authority to make decisions.

It is my opinion that those three men died as a result of negligence on the part of the management of Sudbury Metals. They did not have a qualified process engineer on the site to operate the kiln, with the result that the end of the kiln blew out and smashed three men against a brick wall.

They were operating a kiln in Sudbury, Ontario, from Milwaukee, Wisconsin. I suggest that one cannot operate a dangerous piece of machinery like that from 1,000 miles away on the telephone. There was no one in the plant who understood that hydrogen gases could develop if they poured water on these iron ore pellets—a simple chemical process that even any grade 12 student knows and understands. They didn't even have that kind of expertise on site to protect the lives of those workers. I say that is criminal negligence.

The minister has refused to respond, although I tried to get him interested in the situation. I wrote him a letter on March 8, 1977, and suggested that because this company was negligent in not having a process engineer on hand, he should consider laying charges. On March 30 the minister wrote back to say he had received my letter of March 8 and would provide me with a reply in due course. To this point in time, I have not received a further letter from the Attorney General, which he promised me on March 30, 1977.

To try to interest him again in the subject matter, I rose during question period on July 6, 1977, and I asked him about laying criminal charges against the manager of Sudbury Metals. He said, "I will try to report back to him in the Legislature as soon as possible." He was going to report to me again on July 6, but to this point in time I have received no report from the Attorney General. A month or two later, I rose again during the question period and asked the question. He said, "We are having trouble getting the transcript from the coroner's inquest."

He is just not interested. A year has passed now. It was October 26, 1976, when these three men were killed, and the Attorney General still cannot get a transcript in his office so he can scrutinize the transcript of the coroner's inquest to determine whether criminal charges should be laid against this industrialist.

The man just isn't interested. He doesn't understand what violence there is out there in industry. In France and Great Britain this has taken off; there are managers in jail right now as a result of men getting killed on the job because of their negligence and disregard for life.

The minister purports to be a very sensitive person. But where is his sensitivity as far as industrial workers are concerned? Are we forever going to be expendable? Is that his attitude? Is that the class he belongs to, that those boys out there are just part of the cost of generating profit?

I object to being expendable. I've been lucky. I wasn't expended. But many of my friends have been expendable in these various and assorted dangerous plants. Here was a classic case where this minister could have taken action, but a year has passed and nothing has happened.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, I've had correspondence from both the member for Sudbury and the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) in relation to this matter. I think the last correspondence was with the member for Sudbury East and copies were sent to the member for Sudbury. I'm not going to respond to the allegation that I don't care about the plight of workers, because it's a silly allegation; but the member for Sudbury is well known for making silly statements.

The Crown attorney in Sudbury, Mr. Sauve, reviewed the matter at the time of the inquest and discussed it with a number of experts in the field of mining engineering. At that time he decided that no criminal charges were warranted. Following the inquest, we requested Mr. Sauve to obtain a copy of the transcript so that the matter could be reviewed at the ministry level. This was notwithstanding the fact that the local Crown attorney, who I happen to know to be an excellent Crown attorney, had reviewed the matter with some degree of care and had made that decision. But in view of the concern of the members of this House, we requested a transcript so that it could be reviewed at the Ministry of the Attorney General here in Toronto.

I don't understand why the transcript is not yet ready. The last communication we had with Mr. Sauve was two weeks ago in respect to this very matter, and at that time the transcript was not yet complete. I regret the delay in respect to that. I don't anticipate our decision will likely overrule the decision of a very experienced, competent Crown attorney, but we certainly do intend to review it very carefully.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, how long do we wait to get a transcript made up? It was February 28 when the coroner's jury report came out; and this is October, 1977. It indicates to me that if the minister was interested—

Mr. Mackenzie: November.

Mrs. Campbell: This is November.

Mr. Germa: If the minister was interested in laying these charges, he would take certain steps to get a transcript. It seems to me that is only a mechanical, technical thing that has to be accomplished. I think it substantiates my charge, that he just is not sensitive in this area.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, I think the issue which was raised by my colleague from Sudbury is a serious matter. I don't want to pursue the matter any further because he emphasized and made clear that it's a serious problem, that a high number of workers are dying in the province. I'm more concerned from the statistical point of view, therefore I would like to ask the Attorney General how many cases have been reported by the Minister of Labour to your department in relation to cases in which the Minister of Labour requested that charges should be laid down in the last two years? Do you have figures for the fiscal years of 1975 and 1976?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't have any such figures, Mr. Chairman. If there is evidence to warrant a criminal investigation that may lead to criminal charges we don't need to depend on the Ministry of Labour for that information. Of course there are many prosecutions under the ministry's industrial standards legislation which are not the responsibility of the Ministry of the Attorney General.

Our responsibility is to prosecute Criminal Code offences in this province. Where there is a death, regardless of how it may have arisen, the local police are charged with the responsibility of making an investigation in every instance to determine whether or not there is a possibility of criminality. The nature and scope of the investigation, of course, will depend on the nature of the tragedy. The prime purpose of holding an inquest is to determine the cause of death, but they may also assist any effort to elicit evidence that might be relevant to a criminal prosecution, although the latter is not the prime purpose of an inquest in this province.

Again our local police authorities, with the assistance of our local Crowns, monitor all these cases very carefully, and when there is evidence to warrant a criminal prosecution charges will invariably be laid by the police.

In relation to an industrial accident, it's open to any citizen to appear before a justice of the peace to lay a criminal charge. Many criminal charges have been laid in this manner. Many thousands of criminal charges, I think it's fair to say, are laid in this manner every year. I don't know, so far as the tragedy in Sudbury is concerned, whether or not there was an attempt on behalf of any of the local citizens or representatives of the union or anyone else to lay a criminal charge.

Mr. Germa: It's your responsibility, not mine.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Well you see that is, of course, where the member for Sudbury is unaware of his responsibilities. I've been a member of more than one union, working in industry, working in many different facets of industry, and I know many union people who, if they felt a criminal charge was warranted, would consider that their responsibility and they would make efforts to see a criminal charge had been laid. So I'm somewhat puzzled by the interjection of the member for Sudbury.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, I do appreciate the comment which has been made by the Attorney General. I realize that in relation to industrial violence or certain prosecutions where negligence has been shown on the part of the employer and where workers have been dying as a result of such negligence, it is a criminal offence on the part of the employer. But my particular question is whether or not the Minister of Labour, for example, has been in touch with your ministry, asking you to lay those charges?

Workers have been penalized for following directions. Their pensions or their benefits are sometimes cut off. Surely, the Ministry of Labour should be in touch with your ministry to make certain that employers in the province of Ontario are diligent. And where there is negligence on the part of the employer and a death results from such negligence, it is, in my opinion, a criminal offence. The question is whether or not the Minister of Labour has been in touch with your ministry to lay those charges.

[12:45]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to add to my previous answer in relation to the procedure which is generally followed so far as the laying of criminal charges is concerned.

Item 5 agreed to.

Vote 1301 agreed to.

On vote 1302, administrative services program; item 1, main office:

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I'm not going to belabour my remarks with reference to this entire vote 1302. Notwithstanding my earlier comments, I would like to state that I view with a certain degree of satisfaction the fact that we do seem to be putting more emphasis on the office of the Attorney General. We do seem to be increasing our budget, and in this case I for one have to say that justice merits that kind of increase.

In fairness, I would also like to pay some tribute to the work which the Attorney General has done. I have seen some very interesting thrusts this year. Certainly the conciliation procedures are one, and I hope the Attorney General will be able to iron out with the profession some of the dichotomies which have arisen in that area.

The experiment in Hamilton of the unified court. I would like it if we could get some further reports on that. I haven't had an opportunity to review it, but again, this is a new kind of initiative and I am impressed by that sort of approach.

I don't intend to continue in any detail in so far as the items in this vote are concerned. I still hope that we may see other initiatives which will be more useful as we go along, not more useful than those which have been undertaken but which will be ongoing and progressive. I have nothing further on this vote, Mr. Chairman.

Item 1 agreed to.

Items 2 and 3 agreed to.

On item 4, analysis, research and planning:

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Attorney General could elaborate on this matter. I have to state we received this material just as we started the estimates; our critics have not had a chance to review it. I, of course, not being in the justice area, haven't read the material. Could the minister enlarge somewhat on the work under this function?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mainly what we're attempting to accomplish, and I think it's related to this vote Mr. Chairman, is the combination of the ministry's flow of information in relation to work load and resource levels. There's been a combination of these information flows. What we're trying to do is to more effectively and more objectively assess efficiency in so far as use of the resources generally throughout the system is concerned. They report to Mr. McLoughlin, the general manager of the ministry, who is on my immediate right.

This process involves overall planning, which relates to the development of future resource requirements that will be needed to continue to meet the basic objectives. It gets very technical, as far as I'm concerned at least, when we get into work load forecasts, work load per man, et cetera.

This is an attempt to monitor the basic expenditures of the ministry, hopefully to assure ourselves, or otherwise, that the money is being well spent. We, being a ministry that has never wallowed in resources, are obviously most anxious to get the best use of our resources because we do require additional resources to what we have and, therefore, it is absolutely essential to make the most effective use of those that we do have.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, the cow has got out of the barn and I am going to ask for some indulgence all the way around the House. We obviously went past the Legal Aid thing rather expeditiously, while I was speaking to a colleague of mine here about a legal problem, and I would ask for your indulgence. I suspect it won't be too prolonged. Nevertheless, on an item of $25 million which has always been a major bone of contention in this House, I think it's worthy of at least a few words.

That being the case, I would ask to proceed. Towards the end of last week we had placed on our desks the 10th annual report of the Law Society of Upper Canada on Legal Aid, and it goes through its usual recitation. I had hoped that the whole Legal Aid spectrum in its various manifestations would begin to level off. There were indications earlier last year that that phenomenon was taking place.

If that was one of the facets, it would relieve the Attorney General enormously vis-à-vis his colleague, Mr. McKeough, along the way. It would stabilize and consolidate a plan that has been growing steadily for 10 years, and would be able then to give the fulcrum for new directions, not necessarily with greater expenditures of money but having reached a solid base and seen what the lie of the land was.

My defence of the continued surveillance and maintenance by the Law Society of Upper Canada of this particular plan, against the feelings of many of my colleagues, and against certainly a certain rumbling out there in this particular regard, has been largely based upon the yeoman service performed to this date, as I believe it to be, and as indicated in the report and in one of your recent speeches contained in the Gazette of the society.

This is an address at the 10th anniversary seminar at the Royal York Hotel on May 26 of this year. It was pointed out that close to $30 million has been, in effect, contributed by practising lawyers. They have instituted a 25 per cent reduction from what is considered as a fairly meagre, or at least conservative, tariff on which they work. When they take an action on criminal negligence in the courts they would not, in normal circumstances, accept a lower fee to conduct the case; they would want a good deal more.

Taking the relatively low legal tariff, and taking 25 per cent off that, the contribution of the society has been very enormous, and blast it it should be recognized. It isn't giving much accord to numerous individuals out there.

Secondly, the chief need and emphasis of this scheme obviously, initially at least, lay primarily in criminal justice. There were accused people whose lives and liberties were at stake, who were coming, through generations, before the courts without adequate or any defence whatsoever being presented by capable people; and they were going to jail unnecessarily. That kind of thing stigmatizes, and has stigmatized for centuries, the British legal system and the operations of the courts. That had to be rectified as we became—I hope—slightly more civilized. And that's what the whole thing was about.

The first instance, of necessity and centrally, in order to alleviate this sore thumb law, which had reeked for a long time, the lawyers, who are the defenders in this particular area, recognized they would be central to the whole operation and therefore it would devolve upon them.

From the point of view they would, of course, necessarily be the chief beneficiaries also. You can't have it both ways. You can't have them coming before the courts and representing people and being stigmatized, criticized at the same time for doing so because there's a rip-off of some kind.

Before I sit down, and before we wind up today—and I am going to keep this debate going a little while longer—those lawyers, and and they are becoming a more numerous tribe, sitting in pontification over their fellows and holding up the legal aid scheme as some form of munificent cornucopia, saying they are not going to participate and they are withdrawing; they will undermine the scheme.

There is a profound irresponsibility on the part of such people. We know who they are, they were in the paper two weeks ago. Faces large and blooming, and making all these slighting attacks; how it was going to all these second-rate, mediocre lawyers who are just coming out of law school, whereas I have practised for 25 years and I know all the judges and I know all the tricks in the book, and I am not going to participate any more. Not only because you don't pay me enough but because the whole thing is being riddled by incompetents.

If they want a public defender system with the numerous inequities and iniquities written into that system as it is practised in the United States, so be it; we'll have it, and it will be a lot cheaper.

I heard you say somewhere that it was not going to be cheaper probably, if we move to that other plan. I am of the opinion that it would be substantially cheaper, it would cost a quarter as much to run that scheme. But the price paid, in terms of human representation and defence, is much too great in the area of criminal justice.

Shall I continue or shall I move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: No, I think a member of the government will move the appropriate motion.

Mr. Lawlor: I'll listen to my friend for a few minutes and get a rest.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I didn't want to interrupt my distinguished colleague from Lakeshore. In view of the fact that we appear to have run out of time, he may wish to continue on Monday, or I will continue on Monday. But I think in view of the time it would be appropriate for me to move that the committee rise and report.

On motion by Hon. Mr. McMurtry the committee of supply reported progress and asked for leave to sit again.

On motion by the Hon. Mr. McMurtry, the House adjourned at 1 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1977

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: If I can have the attention of the hon. members for one moment, I feel that I should advise the House that I have asked each caucus to consider the advisability of continuing past procedures concerning access to parts of the chamber and its lobbies by members of the press and other strangers. I expect to hear through the usual channels from each caucus within the next day or two, so I would ask people to bear with us until such time as we get a clarification of the standing orders from the members of this House whose servant I am.

In my absence on Friday, the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) suggested that I was being heavy-handed and arbitrary in the way in which I was handling the question period.

I want to refresh the memories of hon. members as to what took place on Thursday after 59 minutes of the question period had expired. I had to make the decision as to whether I inform hon. members that the question period had expired or give the next member, who happened to be the member for Grey-Bruce, the opportunity to place his question.

I said, and it's recorded in Instant Hansard, 1530-2:

"Mr. Speaker: We've got one minute left. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce with a short question to one minute.

"Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, you should be watching the Ottawa proceedings. The Speaker down there gives lots of laxity on questions. Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Transportation and Communications. The minister, over the years . . .

". . . I'd like you to tell me why every deal that Mr. Goodman brings to sell a bill of goods to cabinet they invariably buy it. It's an insulting thing to me as a taxpayer, sir, that the Greyhound Corporation deal is a fait accompli, when you still say it's coming before cabinet before it goes back to the Highway Transport Board . . ."

That was the sum and substance of the question put to the Minister of Transportation and Communications on that occasion. I had cautioned the member that there was one minute left in the question period and I take it that it's my responsibility to abide by the rules of the House which say, "Oral question period will be limited to one hour." I cautioned the member for Grey-Bruce and hoped that he would have had an opportunity to place his question within the one minute that was available to us. He failed to put a question in that time. I merely drew the attention of the House and the hon. member for Grey-Bruce that the oral question period had expired.

I want to assure the hon. member and all members of this House that I wasn't attempting to be arbitrary. I was simply allowing him an opportunity to place his question in the time allotted. He wasn't able to do it so I declared oral question period to be over. I think that I gave him every opportunity to place his question within the one minute. Unless I get some further direction from the House, I will continue to operate the question period within the time allocation provided by provisional orders.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

NURSING HOMES

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, to ensure that the needs of the elderly in nursing homes are met, my ministry recognized some time ago a requirement to modify the Nursing Homes Act and the regulations under that Act. To reflect our concern, my ministry recently conducted a detailed review of existing legislative provisions relating to nursing home care, as well as proposals made by the 1974 task force to review nursing home legislation. This ministry review was assisted by the Ontario Nursing Home Association and consultants in medicine, nursing, pharmacology, environmental health, reactivation, fire and general safety.

I have recently received that report and I have ordered a review by my senior ministry personnel. We will discuss this matter again with the Ontario Nursing Home Association, and I expect that by early next year I will be in a position to propose changes to the Nursing Homes Act and regulations. I am concerned about this area, and invite input in response to these recommendations from all interested individuals, be they professionals or members of the general public.

I am tabling three copies of that report with the Clerk of the House today.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. Conway: Where are the ministers?

Mr. Riddell: Whom do you ask the questions of?

CHILD ABUSE

Mr. S. Smith: I will ask a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services: Is the minister aware of the anticipated approximately 40 per cent or even more increase in reported cases of child abuse this year? If so, is he prepared now to tell us what his ministry is going to do about this, whether in fact we can expect to see the children's services legislation brought before us this session, and how he expects to provide the funding for the source of personnel, the source of special teams and various committees to deal with child abuse in the various localities of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I can't confirm the specific percentage cited by the hon. member, but I am aware of the increase in reported cases of child abuse. With respect, first, to the legislation that was referred to. I hope that within a matter of days we will be making available to the members of the Legislature and to the public generally for discussion our proposed package of law reforms for child welfare legislation. I do not believe it would be possible for us to present that to the House during this session but it is our intention to proceed in the spring. I think the member will see when the proposed amendments are available for discussion that in total there are in excess of 100 proposed interim amendments. We will be proceeding in the spring.

With respect to the current problem of child abuse, we have for some time been both concerned and actively involved in developing a capacity to respond in the case of child abuse. We have within our ministry a group engaged primarily in developing and assisting to develop this capacity across the province. We have held seminars in all areas of the province. I can't give the member the precise number; I believe it's in excess of 35 locations where such seminars have been held, involving persons from various disciplines who have direct involvement with children where they might be in a position for example to detect child abuse: Police officers, school teachers, hospital personnel, child care workers, and so on.

In many of those communities we have also assisted in the establishment of a child abuse task force, or child abuse planning team that is developing resources within the communities for, first of all, the further training in the detection of child abuse and for the development of preventive and treatment programs.

Whether or not that response will have an impact before the end of this year, I can't be certain. But I am sure that it already is having a significant impact on the recognition and detection of child abuse which may well be reflected in the increased figures that the member cited.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary and giving credit for the program to the minister and his ministry, it may well be, as he says, that the work being done is resulting in more reports of child abuse occurring. However, that does mean more work; therefore, I have to ask the minister how the Children's Aid Societies, which are expected, after all, to channel a lot of this work and to be the front line, are expected to handle this increase in work, given the ministry's guidelines and restrictions on their staff and budget increases for this year. And, furthermore, how is it that even the demonstration projects will continue to be funded, given the rather low budget in the ministry's estimates of, I think, $140,790?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Of course, not only the Children's Aid Societies are involved in this. But insofar as the Children's Aid Societies' case work load may increase—in terms of their being required in some instances to take children into care—in that respect our approved level of funding is not restricted to what is approved. Through the supplementary estimate process, at the end of the societies' fiscal year they are invited to submit to us supplementary budgets to pick up the growth that takes place, growth that wasn't anticipated at the time they struck their original budgets. So in terms of that growth aspect, a significant portion of that would qualify under the supplementary process.

Mr. Cooke: With regard to Children's Aid Societies, and since they are the agency that has to handle child abuse and the legal process in this province, and since it is recognized—I think we had a fairly lengthy discussion in estimates—that the employees or the social workers in these agencies are really not expert enough in the area of child abuse, what is the ministry doing to ensure that there is adequate in-service training in Children's Aid Societies so that the workers will be able to handle child abuse cases?

Hon. Mr. Norton: If by "requiring" the member means making it mandatory that all child care workers receive such in-service training, we have no mandatory requirement as such. But I can assure the member that as these seminars and training programs that I've indicated have been held across the province, there has been heavy involvement on the part of child care workers from Children's Aid Societies along with other professionals. As a matter of policy, we certainly encourage the involvement of child care workers in that training process.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: The minister has referred to the staff members working in this field. Is it a fact that he has three staff members working on the child abuse problem, that one has been on vacation, that another is a secretary, and that in fact there has been one person in the ministry working in this field?

Hon. Mr. Norton: It is correct that we have one director of the program. I cannot at this point give you details as to the breakdown that the hon. member has just related, whether it is accurate or not or whether someone happens at the moment to be on vacation. I certainly will try to get that specific information for the member.

I think if one looks at the very active role that group in my ministry has been playing and the impact it has had across this province, looking at whether one of the staff happens to be a secretary or not is not the most important factor. I think if the member looks at what has been done it is nothing less than very impressive.

Mr. McClellan: Is Chick Hendry in that program?

Mr. S. Smith: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to reserve my question in the event that the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) returns. I'll take my place in the rotation later, if that meets with your approval, sir.

ADVERTISING

Mr. Lewis: May I address a question initially to the Minister of Industry and Tourism? Is there a public policy in his ministry which allocates specific public moneys to the underwriting of or participating in advertisements placed by private companies generally?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: No, Mr. Speaker, there is not.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: How does he arrive then at the kind of ad hoc contribution which his ministry made and of which he as minister was not aware, apparently, towards the Eaton's ad, and I assume other advertisements of that kind? What does the minister exact in return?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, so that we have a full understanding of the participation that my ministry has had with the T. Eaton Company over the last three or four years in the field of both industrial and tourism promotion, we have participated with the Eaton company in what has been called Ontario Alive, which has been a tourism program that it has conducted—

Mr. Lewis: Better alive than dead, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Well, I'll tell the member, it's a great deal more alive than sometimes I think the party he happens to be leading is, sir.

The fact remains that we have had the participation with Eaton's for the last three or four years where we've had kiosks in all of their stores across the province of Ontario. We've had training programs as well as employing students in those kiosks to distribute information relating to tourism. In the initial years they worked for a six-week period per year, and in the current year of 1977 we've participated in 19 stores with a total of 38 student employees for a period of eight weeks.

We have had co-operation with Eaton's—you might say it is fantastic. Let me say that it is one of the retail chains in this country that has at least come forward to offer student employment and an opportunity to promote the province of Ontario to the visitors who are with us in those retail operations.

Eaton's, sir, has run ads over that three-year period promoting the province of Ontario and its tourism. I will admit that the ad which ran yesterday in the New York Times, which has a circulation of 1.5 million, is the first time that we as a province have participated, for which we take no back seat because we think it's interesting to find out what the response will be. I might say that to my understanding we are not the only party, other than Eaton's, that participated in the ad.

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary: What was the province of Ontario's contribution and how effective has this been in the past?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Our contribution to the ad that appeared in the New York Times yesterday would be approximately $2,000; about 10 per cent of the cost of the ad and the make-up of the advertisement itself. We have advertised in the New York Times before on various occasions and have found it very profitable. This is the first time this type of an experiment has been tried by my ministry or, indeed, by a retail operation in the province of Ontario.

They are exploiting, and I use the word exploiting, the fact that the Canadian dollar has sunk somewhat in value to 91 cents. We are going to use that as the leverage in trying to bring Americans this way to do their retail purchasing for the Christmas season. Indeed if members read the ad they will notice that they support more than just the retail industry. They support pretty well all of the entertainment factors in this great community of Toronto. They go into the areas of hotels, meals and so on.

I think the ad in itself is a very general one. It is one which I believe will be good for us. I'll know better within the next week or two because they are asked to communicate with the Canadian Government Office of Travel in New York City; they are working with American Airlines and various other organizations that they would likely be in touch with. We think the ad will likely have some very direct beneficial economic factors to this community. I hope that I will be able to report at a later date what the actual results have been.

Mr. Lewis: They even promote the Santa Claus parade. There is nothing but perfection in the ad.

Can I ask the minister, would Eaton's have placed the advertisement without the money from the province?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, that is a question which I am not able to answer at this point. I will say that Eaton's more than likely would have gone ahead with it.

Eaton's had asked more than just the province of Ontario to participate. I understand others have participated with them in this particular ad. I understand that the local convention bureau was asked to participate. I cannot report to this House whether they did or did not. I understand that American Airlines participated in the ad with them.

I think it will have a very direct beneficial effect. Seven per cent sales tax is not what you call an indirect receipt for this government and the people of this province.

As I said, we have tried this on an experimental basis. If it is successful we could very well decide that in the long run it is advantageous for the province to participate on a hooker ad deal with other commercial organizations—

Mr. Reid: On a what?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: It is not the type of hooker the hon. member is thinking of, so he can just sit down and take life easy.

Mr. Breithaupt: Are those goods or services?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: We could very well find ourselves participating in this type of an advertising program.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, may I ask if the minister would consider using that same principle and assist the Downtown Windsor Business Association in their advertising at the Renaissance Centre in Detroit? This could be done either by regular newspaper advertising or by the distribution of information—

Mr. Lewis: This is the problem. What happens when Simpsons comes to you?

Mr. B. Newman: —so that our American visitors there could come into Windsor, and in this way get a taste of Ontario and go further into the community.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: As I have already said what we are doing at this point is an experiment. Once we have had a chance to analyse it and see its effect we could very well want to participate with other organizations in advertising in the United States.

Mr. Lewis: Why?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I say to this House very clearly that we think our participation in the ad and the selling of Ontario, and more specifically Metropolitan Toronto, in the New York market for $2,000 with a circulation of 1.5 million copies is a fairly reasonable cost per issue.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The minister mentioned there would be seven per cent sales tax collected from purchases. But is it not correct that foreign purchasers can have the sales tax remitted if they mention that they are from another country, or if they have it shipped out of the province?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I believe that there are some considerations taken into account. But I must remind the hon. member that if one eats a meal in the province or one happens to stay for a night's lodging, that tax paid on those particular items is not redeemable.

Mr. Reid: Supplementary: Was the minister aware that this had happened? Would this not be a matter of policy within the ministry and should the minister not have given the direction rather than reading about it in the Globe and Mail with the rest of us?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I must say first of all I didn't read about it in the Globe and Mail. I had a telephone call yesterday evening about 10.30 to tell me it might be in the Globe and Mail this morning. So I'd rather say I had an advance copy of what was going to be released in that particular newspaper.

No, I was not informed of the participation; but it would be an administrative problem. Surely in a ministry where we are spending upwards of $9 million to $10 million in advertising in this country and around the world, there are people who I feel are competent to make those decisions in the interest of what is going to help the economy of the province of Ontario.

LEARNING-DISABLED CHILDREN

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to place a question with the Minister of Education if I may. The time continues to pass, and no statement issues from the minister about the resolution of the problem regarding children with learning disabilities in the province of Ontario. Can he indicate to the House when it is likely that a statement will be made?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, the kind of statement that I will be making will be in direction to school boards about the kind of courses and kind of programs that they should have available.

The impression should not be left that the absence of a statement means that nothing is happening in this particular area. Special education is going on. It is delivered by the staff of the school board. What we are trying to do is put together some additional help for those people that will emphasize the needs of children, particularly with learning disabilities, and will perhaps give some additional criteria and so forth that will help them. It may take us a little while longer to get that together. We have been working with the association on it and so forth. That, of course, is intertwined with the program of my friend, the Minister of Community and Social Services—

Mr. Lewis: That is not a program. That is the battleground.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —and his particular involvement in this area. At some point in time I expect the school boards of this province will have programs that they will offer; there is a difference.

Mr. Foulds: No money.

Hon. Mr. Wells: A lot of people in this province, for a variety of reasons, send their children to private schools and they pay for them. In this particular case, for a particular situation, the province of Ontario is paying to send these children to a private school; some of them in this province and some outside. I hope no one is under the impression that in this policy we are going to be establishing residential schools for children with learning disabilities, because that is not the kind of policy statement that we are in the process of developing.

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary: Will there at least in this policy be some financial contribution from the province of a specific kind which would make it possible for local boards to offer beyond that which is now available, which doesn't meet the needs of many of these kids with difficult problems, many of whose parents are now paying—does the minister not recognize this—from $7,000 to $10,000 a year, even in the city of Toronto, for education for which they receive no support from the Ministry of Community and Social Services because our school boards can't handle it?

Hon. Mr. Wells: That, of course, Mr. Speaker, is part of the development of the 1978 grant regulations for the boards. There is now, of course provision for boards that offer increased services to get increased money and at a fair rate—more likely than their rate of grant would be.

In other words, the special education weighting factor creates additional money now for boards like Metro and other boards that have a high level of service. That is part of the general consideration that is going on for next year's grants to allow boards to be able to offer even more extensive services. I just emphasize that our direction is to help the school boards in the delivery of the services in this area, and the programs will still be the responsibility of local school boards in this province.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Does the minister have an agreement from the Association for Children with Learning Disabilities that the school boards, except in the very populous areas, could possibly present a program that would meet the needs of the children who are under discussion, particularly when the professional assessment of most of these individuals calls specifically for a residential type of schooling?

Hon. Mr. Wells: At this point in time, the basic thrust of the school boards in this province is not towards the establishment of more institutional care, and if institutional care is desired I think that some other vehicle for handling it should be found. The educational programs are the responsibility of the school boards. As my friend knows, school boards now send teachers into many of the group homes and institutions in this province, but they are responsible for the delivery of the educational service. The residential component falls within someone else's area.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: If I understand the minister correctly, it is not going to be ministry policy to make it mandatory to have special education for children with learning disabilities. If that is so, does the minister not find it contradictory, ironic and discriminatory that it is the responsibility of parents to send their children of compulsory school age to school, but it is not the responsibility of the ministry or of the school boards to educate all children of compulsory school age?

[2:30]

Mr. Lewis: That's what's happening.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly my feeling and the feeling of most of the school boards of this province that they will develop a program for all the children that are brought to them.

Mr. Lewis: That's not so. They do not think that. They have said they can't do it.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Really, at some times, perhaps we think there are many, many people out there who are not being served.

Mr. Foulds: There are too many.

Mr. Warner: Far too many.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I suggest to the member that the number is not that great. The school boards have within their capabilities the potential to serve all the people and this they will do.

I might point out to the member, if he will take the trouble to look, that in the American jurisdictions where mandatory special education, or mandatory education for the handicapped, as I think they entitle it, has been put into effect, the level of service available is perhaps in some cases even less than what is available in the province of Ontario. It hasn't solved the problem. We're looking at solving the problem, not taking some cosmetic step that will lead people to believe it's been solved.

Mr. Lewis: Cosmetic? You are just washing your hands.

Mr. Foulds: How about quoting my bill?

Mr. Sweeney: Given the fact that we now have three of the largest school boards in the province on record in writing declaring that they cannot provide this service, and given the fact that the minister led us to understand in the estimates that he had a committee of his ministry investigating the possibility—not the confirmation, the possibility—of setting up residential schools here, where is the minister in that particular situation?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I don't recall ever saying that we had a committee that was looking into our setting up residential schools in this province. I have never said that—never in any talks that I have given or in any answers to any questions. I've said that we are looking at a total policy to assist boards to better deliver this service. Let's get that clear, we want to see every child in this province have a program that's best suited for him.

Mrs. Campbell: Or her.

Hon. Mr. Wells: All I'm saying is we can aim towards that by helping the boards get at it and develop the services. Passing a law here saying, "Every board has to do it," and then just saying, "That's fine, you have to do it, now go and do it" is not going to make the situation any better than it is today. What we've got to do is develop the resources and the help for the boards to develop these programs.

What I said was that we are developing, my colleague and myself, a policy that can put forward the way residential accommodation will be handled if it is needed in these particular areas. But I draw to my friend's attention that we are now starting to get over into the whole area of support for private schools and that particular policy decision has to be looked at very squarely. The member may feel one way towards that and we feel another, and they're honest policy differences. But it's not the policy of this government to offer financial support to private schools.

Mr. Lewis: That is not what we're asking. Nobody in this House is asking that.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, let's be practical for a minute. I'd like to know from the minister, because I'm sure he knows school boards are not going to provide these types of programs unless there are financial incentives, what new financial incentives is he contemplating over and above the present grant structure?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, my friend will see that when the 1978 legislative grants regulations are issued.

Mr. Stong: In the light of the fact that not every student who suffers from a learning disability must reside in a residential area under that type of an educational program, why does the minister not accept the necessity of requiring school boards to provide special education programs? If the minister does not, is he prepared to accept the responsibility in his ministry of financing those children who do require such special education?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Setting aside those who need residential accommodation, I'd like my friend to bring to me examples of children who feel they are not being served by the school board that has jurisdiction in the area where they live. I would be just as interested as he is in that.

If he's saying that the York county board of education cannot take care of the needs of his constituents in York county, show me some examples; I'd like to see this, because the sad and tragic part of this whole matter is, and I recognize this, that there are honest differences of opinion about what the program should be. That's part of the problem and I'm sure my friend recognizes that school boards with their professional staff, psychiatrists, psychologists and so forth—

Mr. Foulds: They just cut them out in Thunder Bay and other centres because of restraints.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —will set out certain programs and the parents' wish for a program for their child will be different to that which the school board wishes to offer, and there will be honest differences of opinion. I've seen them; the hon. member has seen them; they've been brought to him. The resolution of those matters is sometimes very difficult; it rests with different professional advice and so forth. That's one part of the problem.

Setting aside the residential part of the problem, I think that school boards can handle the education of most children with learning disabilities and other handicaps. We now have about 12 per cent of the school population in this province having some kind of special program above and beyond the normal program in the schools. That's something over 200,000 young people in those programs. So, obviously, school boards are capable of doing this. Believe me, we're here to try to help them do the job better, and we hope to make some changes in the 1978 grant regulations that can do it.

But all I'm saying is that simply saying it's going to be mandatory is not going to solve the problem. We've still got to pitch in and help them develop even better programs.

Mr. Stong: One final supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: We've had enough supplementaries on that.

USE OF INFLUENCE

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker; a question for the Attorney General: Has the Attorney General reviewed the opinion of the law officers of the Crown concerning the laying of criminal charges against Arthur S. Armstrong, as he promised to do a week ago? If so, will he advise the House on what grounds the decision was taken that no charges be laid?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated personally to the Leader of the Opposition, at the end of last week, I think, I had a preliminary opinion that I reviewed with the law officers of the Crown. I felt that in view of the interest in this matter—particularly because there were a number of questions asked in relation to this particular section of the Criminal Code during the estimates—that I wanted to have a fairly comprehensive opinion, not just in relation to this case but because of the interest indicated from the members of the House, to indicate the criteria generally used by Crown law officers in this section.

The former leader of the Liberal Party was very interested in this matter and, quite frankly, I felt we required something fairly comprehensive, and I indicated to the Leader of the Opposition at the end of the week that it would be early this week before I would have that response. I can't guarantee tomorrow, but I hope it will be ready tomorrow. I think it will be Thursday at the latest.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary: Is the Attorney General basically saying that when his predecessor decided not to lay charges, the weighty opinions of learned members of his department—opinions which, he told us, he was certain existed—were in fact not so intensively and definitively put that he could actually present them to the House, and that he now has to tell his officers to get busy and work out a better one? If that is not so, why can't we get the reason why he didn't lay charges in the first place?

Mr. Nixon: That's what it sounds like.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I wanted, quite frankly, to get a response. I have seen the opinions given to my predecessor and I think they're quite intelligible to any lawyer experienced in the criminal law, but judging by the nature of some of the questions I've been getting during the estimates I could appreciate—seriously, Mr. Speaker—appreciate the concerns that have been expressed by some of the non-lawyer members of the Legislature as to the criteria in respect to some of these questions. Quite frankly, with all due respect to the Leader of the Opposition, who is very knowledgeable in many areas, I would not put the administration of justice at the top of the list, with all due respect.

Mr. Kerrio: A lot of lawyers wouldn't understand it either.

Mr. S. Smith: It is too complicated.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, there was considerable interest expressed in relation to this section, not in relation to this matter but in relation to others, during estimates. That is why I want a comprehensive response because, as the former leader of the Liberal Party stated the other day, there were a number of occasions in which he felt that this section should have been considered by law officers of the Crown. He was somewhat puzzled by the fact that, in his words, "there weren't more charges laid in more cases." For that reason I tried to take some care in having my law officers prepare an opinion that will be of guidance to those members who are interested in this question.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: What the minister is saying is that the opinions his predecessor had, and what he has on file, won't wash in this House and, therefore, he's telling them to go back and do better and that I wouldn't understand it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That's nonsense. That's absolute nonsense.

Mr. Nixon: But would the minister not agree that there is a certain condescension in the Attorney General when he indicates that there are many people in this House who are not perhaps acute enough to understand the opinions put forward by the law officers? Why doesn't he just table them and then, perhaps, if we are critical the hon. Attorney General could defend them? That's surely what we're here for.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: When dealing with the hon. member I feel I have to be a little condescending.

Mr. Lewis: Maybe he's cute rather than acute.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans) have a supplementary?

Mr. S. Smith: I have one, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: We'll have one final supplementary. I want to draw the hon. members' attention to the fact that we have spent 33 minutes on the first four questions.

Mr. S. Smith: With complete respect, perhaps we could in general cut down on the supplementaries to leaders' questions. Certainly, I wouldn't object to that.

If I might on this occasion, however, momentarily go beyond the bounds of psychiatry to which I'm apparently going to be limited by the hon. Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We just want to give the member as much help as we can. We're just trying to be helpful.

Mr. S. Smith: Understanding that the matter to which I'm referring is one of those complex legal matters, and I'll just do my best with it—

Mr. Reid: Like the hospital closures.

Mr. S. Smith: —but given the Toronto Star's Saturday report of statements by Judge Stortini, Mr. Noel Bates, Mr. Ross Wilson and by Inspector Lou Pelissero, all involved with the aborted judicial inquiry into allegations of corruption in Mississauga, that further investigation is warranted, will the Attorney General now agree to recommend such inquiry to the government under the Public Inquiries Act rather than under the Municipal Act where a lot of technicalities were pointed out by the divisional court and could impede the inquiry?

Mr. Breithaupt: If the Star understands it surely we can.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Again, some of the members opposite are having some difficulty in appreciating the role of the Attorney General in this matter. My interest in the matter is directed to whether or not there is evidence of criminality warranting criminal charges or further investigation.

I should say, that insofar as any investigation into municipalities' affairs based on allegations that relate to ethical considerations or lack of morality is concerned, that in my view is a question that should be more properly directed to the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) in relation to his responsibilities vis-à-vis municipalities. If there is some inability of a municipality to properly handle their affairs—some inability that falls short of criminality—that in my view is not a matter that should be of concern to the Attorney General any more than it would be to any other member of the Legislature.

I want to indicate in relation to this also that at the time that these documents were reviewed by the Ontario Provincial Police and a report was given to the senior law officers with respect to whether or not any criminal charges should be laid, we did not leave the matter at that point. At the request of the municipality we returned all the documents to Mississauga and at the same time my office indicated to the municipal solicitor that in view of the public interest in this matter they would do well to retain the services, as an example, of a retired judge or somebody very senior in the legal profession to give them an independent review because of the questions being asked.

[2:45]

We were satisfied that criminal charges were not warranted but in view of the interest, the suggestion was made to them to take advantage of having some independent body review it. Now, whether or not this recommendation was pursued or not, I have no knowledge.

Mr. Nixon: The mayor said he locked it up and nobody looked at it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: But all of these documents are again in the possession of the Mississauga council.

HYDRO OBSERVERS IN HOUSE

Hon. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, on November 17, the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson) asked whether Ontario Hydro has a chartered accountant attending all meetings in the House—for example, the public accounts meetings—when nothing to do with Hydro is being discussed. He further asked: “Are they monitoring all other procedures of this Legislature?”

In response, I am advised that a chartered accountant on the staff of Ontario Hydro’s financial and information systems division did attend a meeting of the public accounts committee on November 10 and again on November 17. In his role as a Hydro accountant, he was specifically concerned with the intentions in regard to Bill 43 dealing with proposed revisions to the Audit Act.

Neither Ontario Hydro nor my ministry are aware of any chartered accountant of Ontario Hydro attending all meetings in this House or monitoring procedures of this Legislature.

HOSPITAL CUTBACKS

Mr. Conway: My question is to the Minister of Health: Following my leader’s question of November 3 about the Lakeshore psychiatric hospital, can the minister explain the rationale for hiring 12 new psychiatric nursing assistants in August of this year and then putting five of them on part-time contract until March 1978 and laying off six as of tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, that answer is being prepared. I thought it would have been ready by now but as I recall the initial information I had the majority of them were in fact hired on a short-term basis to serve specific needs for specific aspects of the program; other layoffs of them relate to restraint on the budgets, but of course we are talking about a facility with many hundreds of staff. As a percentage, this is not a major cutback.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: Having regard to the fact that since November 3 there has been at least one serious outbreak of violence at the Lakeshore psychiatric hospital among inmates and that as a result of that particular altercation several staff members have been injured and in fact some hospitalized, can the minister justify tomorrow’s layoffs when the existing staff is recognized as being inadequate, as evidenced by repeated demands for them to work double shifts and that many of the staff members now fear very much for their personal safety?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I think quite frankly that the member is overstating it. I wish that he had as much concern, say 18 months or two years ago, for the safety of our staff.

It is unfortunate but true that from time to time staff are attacked and sometimes quite seriously injured. After all we are dealing with some people who are in many cases extremely disturbed and I think it’s fair to say that no matter what the staffing levels these incidents are going to occur, unless the member is suggesting that everybody be restrained, which I certainly hope is not the case. I think that he is overstating the problem considerably when one considers that better than two-thirds of the 12,500 staff in the Ministry of Health are in the psychiatric hospitals area and we are talking about fewer than 100 layoffs, most of those in the areas of dietary services and so forth. Admittedly there are some in nursing areas which is requiring the merging of some wards and that sort of thing, but I think it really is overstating it.

I am aware of one particular incident that occurred recently which was extremely unfortunate, and I hope that the initial diagnosis I have heard of the gentleman’s condition is not true. But these attacks are, unfortunately, a fact of life of a psychiatric institution.

Mr. Lawlor: By the way, the member for Renfrew North is stepping on to my presence. I hope he realizes that?

Interjections.

Mr. Lawlor: A supplementary in two parts: Has the minister seen the petitioning letter written by permanent members of the staff with respect to this, which spells out the problem in pretty good depth? Secondly, in that letter and arising out of it, particularly in the second paragraph, is he aware of the counter-productivity of his move with respect to these nurses—to the $60,000 that is required to educate them and to releasing them onto a very short market?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If I followed that line of logic, I suppose we would double the budget of the Ministry of Health and hire everybody who is available.

Mr. Lawlor: That's a smart aleck response.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, really. I suggest to the member that is a logical conclusion of that kind of an argument.

I haven't seen the particular petition that the hon. member refers to. But we are taking great pains to ensure that we, along with other ministries in the government, meet the restraints due to dropoffs in revenue. We're also trying to hold the line on the increase in government spending for the next fiscal year, so we are trying to ensure as much as is possible that the area which is least affected in our ministry's program is the area which deals with direct patient care. This is so whether we are talking about the psychiatric hospitals or whether we are talking about the ambulance services branch.

Mr. Conway: Can the minister advise, or report later, whether or not it is true that the core staff is being requested to work double shifts? If this is so what, if any, manpower requirements will that mean for the future? It seems that if the present group are being asked to work double shifts, then further manpower is necessary.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have learned in recent days that one should not put much stock in rumours. I have seen a circular distributed by OPSEU in Owen Sound that said that Dr. MacKinnon Phillips Hospital was going to close and that the patients were going to go to Penetanguishene. That was the very day that cabinet approved in principle the merger of Dr. MacKinnon Phillips with the Owen Sound General and Marine.

I have heard rumours started, or aided along, by a member of the third party that OHIP wasn't going to go to Kingston, that it was going to go to Brockville. It wasn't true—

Mr. Speaker: That is really not a part of the question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will check into that rumour. I don't believe it has any substance.

TRIAL DELAY

Mr. Deans: A question for the Attorney General: Will the Attorney General review again the administrative operations of the court system in Hamilton to determine why it would have taken 14 months for a charge laid in September of last year—which amounted I think probably to public mischief but which was racially motivated—to come to trial? Then by the time it got to trial it was dismissed out of hand? Why would it take 14 months for it to get to trial?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There may be any number of reasons why it would have taken 14 months, quite apart from any backlog in the courts. It would be of assistance to me if the member would identify the case for me. The acting director of Crown attorneys in my ministry was the Crown attorney in the Hamilton area for some period of time. If the member for Wentworth could do that, I will be happy to obtain whatever information I can in relation to that case.

Mr. Deans: One supplementary question: On cases which are not those which capture the public's attention most often, wouldn't it seem to the Attorney General that the undue delay reduces the importance of the case and the importance of the charge? Also would he not think the fact that it was simply dismissed was evidence that a review of the charge might well have been undertaken during the 14-month period to determine whether or not it was likely to proceed at all?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would certainly agree with the member, Mr. Speaker, that we should do everything we can to shorten the period between arrest and trial. I also agree that if there was an undue delay in relation to trial of a matter, the public might very well have the perception that the case isn't important. So I certainly agree with the general principle that first of all it's desirable to proceed as quickly as possible with all criminal charges and with those in which there is a particular public interest, it's all the more desirable. No question about it.

DISPOSAL OF PCBs

Mr. B. Newman: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Has the ministry compiled an inventory of PCBs being held for disposal by utilities commissions and also an inventory of the PCBs that are imported from other jurisdictions for disposal?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, as a result of some inquiries in the last month or so, we are now proceeding to attempt to categorize and catalogue the amount of PCB material that is being handled in the province. We are starting, as a matter of fact, in the Windsor area.

It is difficult because some of this material is hauled through Ontario, particularly in the hon. member's area where they go in and out of the United States. However, there is a substantial amount generated in this province. We're attempting, through our new waybill system and our regulations regarding reporting shipments of contaminated material, to have an accurate inventory in time.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: In view of the comment by a local utilities commissioner—"Who is telling us we can't use it on road surfaces?"—will the minister provide the municipalities of Ontario with guidelines or regulations on the holding and/or disposal procedures for PCBs?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, I'd be happy to do that. But I might point out to the hon. member that in no way should the municipality use material that's contaminated with PCBs in road surfacing or road repairing.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: Could the minister assure the House that PCBs are not being imported into Ontario for industrial use, particularly in view of the fact that between 1964 and 1974 approximately 35 million pounds of PCBs were imported into Canada?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, PCB material is used in transformers, for example, and in equipment used by Hydro. The material is only manufactured, I believe, by Monsanto in the United States. Until we find an acceptable alternative to this type of material for Hydro equipment, for example, there will have to be some importation.

The federal government, through their Environmental Contaminants Act, have indicated to the industry that there will be a deadline on the importation of this material. Hopefully, there will be an alternative for the material being used in Hydro transformers and by our utilities in equipment of that kind because it's very valuable.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: Did I understand the minister to say that there are now provincial regulations governing the transport of PCB-contaminated material? I remember that the Minister of Transportation and Communications indicated that these were still under consideration. Are there regulations now in effect?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It's my understanding that the Ministry of Transportation and Communications has passed regulations which are subject to the approval of the federal government. The minister has been in consultation with the federal Minister of Transport, and just as soon as they act these regulations will be effective.

Mr. Gaunt: Could the minister indicate how many pounds of PCBs were imported into Ontario last year? Would that information be available?

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, I'll get that information for the hon. member. At the same time, I must point out that most of the PCB material generated in Ontario has been exported.

There are those instances where PCB-contaminated materials are used for fuel—they need a certain quantity to carry out, for example, burning in a cement kiln or something of that nature—so I couldn't say that at no time will there be any importation of PCB-contaminated material if it is going to be used for such a purpose as the manufacture of cement and will undergo safe disposal in a manner of that kind.

HOME BUYER GRANTS

Mr. Ziemba: I have a question of the Minister of Revenue. Given that her answer to question 32 on last week's order paper regarding illegal first-time home buyer's grants indicated an audit rate of 2.9 per cent, is she prepared to stand by this 2.9 per cent figure?

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Of course, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ziemba: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: How does she reconcile the 2.9 per cent with one of her ministry's auditors who admitted to an Ottawa journalist that the real figure is 10 per cent? Which one is cooking the books?

Mr. Speaker: I think that is kind of a crude way of putting it. I would hope the member would withdraw that "cooking the books."

Mr. Ziemba: I would like her to square the 2.9 with the 10 per cent that her auditors are telling the journalists.

Mr. Speaker: I think the member should withdraw the comment. "Cooking the books" is tantamount to calling somebody a liar, and I hope the member would withdraw the "cooking" part.

Mr. Ziemba: I will withdraw the "cooking" bit, but I would still like to get an answer to my question.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary, the hon. member for Scarborough-Ellesmere.

Mr. Warner: Thank you. I would like to know when the minister is going to stop punishing those people in my riding because of the mistake that her government made over this home buyer's grant.

Hon. Mrs. Scrivener: Mr. Speaker, I would refer the member to the recently published Hansard of the debate on estimates on this subject in which he participated.

DIABETIC TRUCK DRIVERS

Mr. Bradley: A question for the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister approve of the policy of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications which says that a truck driver who becomes diabetic before January 1977 and has driven for a long time may continue to drive and have a class A licence while a person who has driven a truck for 15 or 20 years, or whatever number of years, who becomes diabetic after January 1977 is not allowed to be granted a class A licence? As the Labour minister, does she approve of this?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, if there were valid medical reason for making that kind of distinction, then I most certainly would approve of it. I would have to read the regulation carefully to understand whether that valid medical basis is there.

Mr. Bradley: A supplementary: Would the minister not agree that this actually discriminates against those who become diabetic after January 1977? What would be the difference between being diabetic before and after January 1977 if you are already a truck driver?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, not necessarily. But, as I said, I would have to read the regulation in order to determine whether indeed there is valid medical reason for doing this.

ALUMINUM WIRING

Mr. Warner: I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations—I certainly wouldn't call it "consumer protection." What is he going to do about Mr. Bill Liber, the legal counsel for the commission of inquiry into aluminum wiring, who is flagrantly violating the terms of reference of the inquiry which the minister set out by objecting to evidence which is given?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have no details of that in front of me and I will find out what it is that the member is objecting to. If he would like to send me something specific—I am sure he has specifics to justify his statement that they are flagrantly violating them —if he sends me those specifics I will look at them and report back to him.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary: Is the minister aware that Mr. Liber, based on what he has been doing to date, would likely have ruled out my own personal testimony as a person who has had aluminum wiring—

Hon. B. Stephenson: That's reasonable.

Interjections.

Mr. Warner: —that speaks to your own inadequacies, not mine—as a person who has had aluminum wiring problems of sparking and burning in my own house, on the basis that I am "not qualified to give anything more than a personal opinion," entirely contrary to the spirit of the minister's own terms of reference which he handed out to us earlier this year?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I heard a question in that statement.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, the minister in his first response asked if I had specifics, and I am asking if he is aware that my own personal testimony would not be accepted because, to quote Mr. Liber, it is a personal kind of statement, which is completely contrary to the terms of reference which this government drew up back in April of 1977. Is the minister aware of that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of Mr. Liber's reaction nor the submission made by the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere, although it causes me to think I had better reflect very carefully on the member's first question as the reaction he has described might have eliminated his own testimony. It leads me to believe that maybe the counsel is showing some very careful and good judgement.

However, I can assure the member he can rest easy, because I will not report back to the House as to the member's testimony in front of the commission. I will report back on the activities of counsel.

Hon. Mr. Norton: How do you feel about the inquiry?

Mr. Davison: Supplementary: While the minister is doing that will he also take a look at the overly rigid fashion in which the commission is dealing with people before it, other than my colleague from Scarborough-Ellesmere, particularly one Mr. Phil Edmonston, who is having a great deal of trouble getting before the commission with a second submission in regard to a recent study done in the United States, which was a survey that showed that wiring was responsible for 50 per cent of home fires?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the member would like to drop me a note or call me on that and give me the specifics, perhaps together with the transcript of what happened on the day that he is concerned about, then I will be pleased to take it up with the commission. I wouldn't want there to be any suggestion at any time that everyone did not have an opportunity to present a full and complete case in front of the commission. I would appreciate the member doing that right away, so that when the commission reports back there is no suggestion that it wasn't a full and complete report or hearing. If he would send that along to me I will look into it right away.

REPORT

COMMISSIONERS OF ESTATE BILLS

Clerk of the House: I have received a letter addressed to me as Clerk of the House: "Re Bill Pr16—County of Middlesex.

"The undersigned, as commissioners of estate bills as provided by the Legislative Assembly Act, RSO 1970, c.240, having had the above-noted bill referred to us as commissioners now beg to report thereon.

"We have investigated the desirability of the proposed legislation and have had a hearing which was attended by the following: Mr. Andrew Wright, solicitor for the county of Middlesex; Mr. Ron Eddy, clerk administrator for the county of Middlesex; Mr. Ford Dapueto, deputy solicitor for the city of London; Mr. David Peterson, provincial member for London Centre; Mr. Ron Van Horne, provincial member for London North; Mr. Ivan Hearn, chairman, county property committee; Mr. William Galbraith, warden, county of Middlesex; Mr. Robert Eaton, provincial member for Middlesex; and Mr. Gordon Walker, provincial member for London South.

"We are of the opinion that it is not reasonable that the said bill should pass into law. Our reasons for that opinion are two.

"1. There is a serious question as to whether, as a matter of law and having regard to the second recital in the preamble to the bill, ownership of the lands described in the bill remains in the corporation of the county of Middlesex subject to the trusts contained in the letters patent or has reverted to the Crown in the right of Ontario on a resulting trust.

"2. In any event, we think it is premature to enact the bill until a firm agreement has been reached between the county, the city and the provincial and federal governments as to the uses to which the lands will be put.

"We enclose a copy of the bill which we have duly initialled.

"Yours truly, A. R. Jessup, JA, and Bertha Wilson, JA."

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

On vote 1302, administrative services program:

Mr. Chairman: When the committee was previously sitting, vote 1302, items 1, 2 and 3 had been approved. However, I believe the committee did give approval to the member for Lakeshore to discuss item 1 briefly.

On item 1, main office:

Mr. Lawlor: I object on the basis of the question of order. It is true that these items slipped through nonchalantly, Mr. Chairman, and as it would be adverse to the interest of this House it was agreed on all sides at the time that it not be permitted to do so. As I understood the situation, we reverted to the Legal Aid situation.

It's true that I haven't got a great deal to say about the balance of the vote except regarding one or two small points, but I would ask that the matter be left open. We have only 10 hours left on the estimates, but this is a matter of salient significance in the overall picture and some minor thing may arise in the course of it. I would ask for your indulgence in this regard.

As the House rose I was speaking about the Legal Aid picture in Ontario, I sat down and let the Attorney General answer, but I'll continue at this time as I feel a little rested.

The first point that was being made—and I'll make it very succinctly—was that there is a great deal of carping out there among people who should know better about the operations of the scheme. They say they are going to withdraw, that they are no longer participating, that it's some kind of parasitical scheme.

I think there's a mixture of motives for this reaction, one of them being that younger lawyers are inundating the field, as would be anticipated. That's all to the good, I thought that in the criminal bar, which was a very restrictive bar when the present Attorney General practised, the bulk of the work is being done by junior lawyers. In the past, a nice little cabal of lawyers ran the show for quite large fees, of course.

When this scheme first got started, a man of the stature of George Martin, now judge of the Court of Appeal of Ontario and probably the finest criminal lawyer in the country, participated quite open-handedly in the scheme. A great many senior and experienced criminal lawyers did so. To have that attacked or pulled back by people of this stature is going to undermine the scheme and will bring it into disrepute. Apparently there's a deliberate move afoot to do so.

[3:15]

I was saying that it's my feeling that Legal Aid is levelling out and that the figures go a long way to bear that out. I would like to know the Attorney General's response to this.

Getting back to previous years, in 1974-75, for instance, the informal applications were 67,000 in round figures and in 1975-76, they were 94,000. This year, 1976-77, they were 96,000. The jump was very small indeed.

In the next item that is set forth with the applications for certificates, for the first time it has actually fallen compared to the previous year, from 107,000 to 103,000. In the previous period it had increased 26 per cent. If you look back it was probably jumping about 26 per cent per annum for the previous eight years.

The figures reflect this on the criminal certificates actually issued. This year, it was 41,000. Last year, it was 46,000. The year before that, it was 38,000. So it's jumped 53.7 per cent in the two previous years, but has declined in this past year. The number of people assisted by duty counsel has gone up slightly but that assistance, both on the criminal and civil side, is summary advice given, largely off the cuff, to individuals who are eligible for that kind of advice. The figures are not monumental at all.

Overall, there just could be a holding of the line or a decrease. I think we'll all agree that if that's the case, consolidation in the scheme is to be expected and welcomed, so that we get a breather as to what our future directions in the scheme are, as to those large areas in which individuals cannot or will not be represented by duly established lawyers, those areas in which their life, liberty or property are not at stake in the course of the hearing—when the summary process would not be available to them. Either that, or a greater emphasis should be put upon the community law services to which, in this party at least, we give much attention.

I want to give a great deal of credit to the Attorney General. I know he's had to run into the teeth of opposition in his own cabinet, particularly from his Treasurer, in maintaining and expanding this scheme. It's not been easy. I'm personally convinced that he believes in its validity and its efficacy and that it is a necessary thing in justice, and particularly in criminal justice, that this particular matter be not only supported but forwarded and given an extra role.

Secondly, on one Saturday morning, he had either the gall or the simple bravery to attend a meeting of many people in the non-legal end of the community law services—all these store-front offices, et cetera. I hadn't anticipated that he would show up on that particular day, because the air was very much against him. The feeling in that crowd was negative when he came in, blessedly a little late, and went immediately to the platform. By the time he had finished he had won over the hearts of pretty well everyone in that auditorium. I said, "This man is a superb politician, if nothing else." I bowed my head to the real force of gravity. It was a remarkable performance.

As I've come to learn from conversations et cetera, it was valid. It was thoroughly, heart-feltly meant. You get credit from this side of the House, as far as I'm concerned, for taking that position and for standing up against a number of factions, not so much the Law Society in this particular thing—although, God knows, the resistance is there and has to be eroded and gradually overcome with respect to community services—but within your own party and dimensions.

You have increased by $4 million or $5 million the amounts of money available. I would point out to you, on the other hand, that over $6 million is being contributed within the ambit of your estimates through the federal government for its contribution in the criminal area. That should be taken at that expense, and that expense commensurately somewhat more on a proportion, I think, than with your own scheme. It certainly somewhat takes the edge off your approaches to Management Board.

I want to place on the record some of the facts of the scheme; as I say, it's finished its tenth anniversary. I'm reading from the Law Society of Upper Canada's annual report for 1977 which just arrived on our desks:

"Between the Legal Aid Plan's beginning and March 31, 1977, 2,183,388 persons in Ontario have received assistance at an average cost to the provincial government over the past decade of $56.46 per person.

"A total of 199,233 persons attended at the 46 Area Directors offices across the province during the tenth fiscal year. Of those, 103,177 made formal applications for Legal Aid certificates. When compared with the previous 12-month period, these figures represent decreases of 1.4 per cent and 3.8 per cent respectively.

"Of the 103,177 formal applications, 76,649 were issued certificates of eligibility, a decrease of 11.4 per cent over the previous year. Of these, 41,467, or 54.1 per cent were for criminal cases and the remaining 35,182, or 45.9 per cent, were issued in civil matters."

The pretty well even division between these two branches is also a persisting feature of the plan: "Thirty-one per cent of the formal applications were refused, which is an increase of four per cent over the previous year." There do seem to be somewhat more refusals than previously. Whether that's part of this overall constrictive, restrictive or whatever kind of strangulation program it is that we're presently engaged in, I'm not sure.

Mr. Nixon: Strangling! They are choking on money.

Mr. Lawlor: Perhaps the Attorney General would advise me on that particular point.

The amount of money coming in from the federal government is $6,248,250. That's reflected in the last year's figures of $23,554,000. That's the basic picture as presented to date by the Legal Aid scheme.

I would just like to read into the record one sentence delivered by the present Attorney General on May 26, 1977, and contained in the Law Society Gazette for September of this year. It reads:

"As Ontario's Attorney General, I have the historical, constitutional responsibility to ensure that civil liberties are protected in this province. Legal Aid is perhaps the single most important mechanism we have to turn the dream of equal rights into a reality."

As I promised I would not go on at great length about Legal Aid this year, I simply abjure and request that the Attorney General continue to place his emphasis where it belongs, that he protect and foster the community law offices as they are. The time is not yet right in my poor opinion to take the whole administration of the scheme out of the hands of the Law Society. Those who insist upon that particular aspect seem to me to be caught in some form of Nietzschean resentment—if I may use the French—it's the right word in this instance—the kind of feeling of carping or envy or some quality. It's almost as though they would like to take the scheme out of the hands of the lawyers completely.

Being administered in the general way that it is, before I sit down I want to give enormous credit to the area committees—to those numerous citizens, non-lawyers, who sit on these groups and hear appeals and who contribute their time free of charge. If ever these costs were all added into the scheme under some independent body, the cost would be truly atrocious indeed. They would go very easily to $50 million in any particular year and if all these gratuitous and highly beneficial acts were excluded from the scheme and it was placed on a pure monetary basis, then indeed it would be under fire and probably would collapse of its own weight.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I know that you want to proceed with other matters but I have been stimulated by the hon. member's comments particularly his reference to Nietzschean resentment. To add a few comments, because I don't know when I have heard such a self-serving statement made in this House than we have just heard from the member for Lakeshore, who is a lawyer himself—

Mr. Lawlor: Where is your critic?

Mr. Nixon: —and is simply telling us that if it weren't for the tremendous and overwhelming generosity of the legal system and the individual lawyers in this province that instead of being milked out of $25 million today—

Mr. Lawlor: Milked!

Mr. Nixon: —that it would cost us at least $50 million.

There was a time, although I don't know whether the hon. member for Lakeshore can recall it, when it was a professional responsibility of lawyers, whether they were in the luxurious suites in the tops of the bank buildings or whether they worked out of some kind of a political office in their own riding, to at least think about contributing their undoubted valuable services to the individuals who would come into their offices and ask for it.

Mr. Lawlor: People were ignored. Hundreds went to jail unnecessarily. Don't you even know that? What do you know about this subject?

Mr. Nixon: Now the hon. member, having got his fits on $25 million along with the other lawyers of this province, has the nerve to say to us that if we paid for their undoubted valuable services it would be $50 million. That just makes me sick.

I will tell you, Mr. Chairman, when I read the list of lawyers who were participating in the Ontario Municipal Board hearings around Barrie, I was told by the hon. member for the area that the legal services would cost the poor and hard-pressed taxpayers of that area alone $1 million, just to diddle around with the boundaries of the town of Barrie and the areas in that particular part of the province of Ontario.

Obviously, I strongly and personally support the concept of Legal Aid, but I think the lawyers in this province are just getting so greedy and grasping that when we read in the Star, as we read today, of these two examples of the legal profession crowing about their charges of $1,200 a day to argue over something having to do with the planning future of the province, you just wonder where the AIB is, whether there is any concept at all about—

Mr. Lawlor: That isn't Legal Aid.

Mr. Nixon: You were talking about Legal Aid completely out of order anyway. We passed that on Friday and you wanted to come back with this gratuitous back-slapping stuff about how generous and public-spirited all the lawyers are.

But I really believe that the lawyers as a profession, and I can't point the finger at any one of them, are simply ripping off the community. What stimulates me to make these comments was the sort of gratuitous approach by the Attorney General in question period that nobody except the initiated, the people who have had the laying on of hands by the Law Society of Upper Canada, who have gone through all the tortuous proceedings—
[3:30]

Mr. Lawlor: Listening to you, I have to agree with them.

Mr. Nixon: —of the bar admission course, that they are the only people who can understand truth and justice and simple English. It's like a secret society. And after they have got their arms around each other for long enough, they award each other a QC and that stimulates them to raise their pay even more.

I used to have a lot of confidence that the member for Lakeshore had some kind of a populist feeling, a little bit of blood in his veins and not just liquid gold or something.

Mr. Lawlor: Cow dung on his boots.

Mr. Nixon: I really am appalled that there seems to be almost a conspiracy of lawyers in this House to further their own careers and their own incomes. I just find it appalling. I can remember when we started Legal Aid, we were able to pay for it with only $9 million.

Mr. Lawlor: That was for a third of the year.

Mr. Nixon: I can remember the government of the day being very much concerned about that as a new cost. I don't know, I suppose there are more actions in the courts, but it seems to me that the amount of money we are shovelling into the lawyers' pockets is just appalling.

Mr. Lawlor: A third of the year, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We have witnessed the reincarnation of Mitchell Hepburn.

Mr. Foulds: That's right.

Mr. Nixon: And I hardly ever drink.

Mr. Lawlor: Talking about this conspiracy of lawyers, I sure miss some of the Liberal ones, if I may say so. And by the way, where does the Liberal Party stand on this issue? I attended the 10th annual meeting about the whole thing, and stated my party's stand immediately before the election. Mr. Stong was there. His position was that they were opposed to the maintenance of Legal Aid within the Law Society itself. But I understand Mr. Roy's position is quite diverse. I thought, how typical, how commonplace that the two Liberal members are the chief spokesmen in this cause.

Mr. Nixon: Well, your position is just more money for lawyers and telling us just how lucky we are it isn't costing us more.

Mr. Lawlor: We seldom have to listen to such a farrago coming from the lone wolf on the front bench at the present time who is really not very well acquainted with this whole area.

Mr. Nixon: Ah, I have watched it balloon all these years.

Mr. Lawlor: Where does the Liberal Party stand on the issue? I would love to hear.

Mr. Foulds: Straddling both sides of the fence.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I must admit I am rather curious as to where the official opposition stands on the issue of Legal Aid in relation to the administration of the plan. I have urged the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy), my good friend and Justice critic,—

Mr. Foulds: Who happens to be absent during these estimates.

Mr. Nixon: He's busy in the courts.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —and the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong) to get together to just see where they stand on this issue. It would be helpful if they would consult with one another on occasion.

I should like to thank the member for Lakeshore for his kind reflection on the beleaguered Attorney General in relation to the matter of Legal Aid. I think it is very refreshing that he as Justice critic in a socialist party which is not generally altogether supportive of the legal profession would recognize, to the extent that he has, the very valuable contribution made by the lawyers in this province who provide services through the Legal Aid Plan.

I have no brief for the lawyers referred to in today's press by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk and the matter of $1,250 a day. That represents about a month's salary around here, I guess. But that I think places in focus the contribution—

Mr. Nixon: You can never miss a chance to be condescending on these matters. You just never miss a chance.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —that is made by the lawyers of this province who practise in the Legal Aid Plan and really recover for their daily efforts a minute fraction of—

Mr. Nixon: Of what they're worth.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —fees charged that were just referred to—

Mr. Nixon: The highest paid single group in society.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —by the former leader of the Liberal Party.

I can assure you, Mr. Chairman and the member for Lakeshore, that I will continue to be a very strong defender of the Legal Aid Plan and not through any selfish reason, but simply because I believe that it meets the needs of many thousands of Ontario citizens.

If I may quote briefly from a speech that I made on the occasion of the 10th anniversary of the Legal Aid Plan as follows: "It must be brought home to the public that our freedoms are at best fragile and that they depend on the ability of every citizen to assert in a court or a tribunal his rights under law and to receive sound legal advice as to his rights and obligations. Our laws and freedoms will only be as strong as the protection that they afford to the most vulnerable members of our community. In affording this protection, Legal Aid does make a deep and essential contribution to our social fabric and indeed to our very way of life."

Mr. Nixon: Are you really quoting your own speech? Do you think this is a good thing to do?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I go on to say: "I think it is important to realize that the government is deeply committed to the concept of Legal Aid as a means of preserving individual rights and ensuring our system of liberty under law." Those are the remarks that I made on March 29 of this year on the occasion of the 10th anniversary of Legal Aid and I would like to indicate that I feel every bit as strong today as I did on that occasion some six months or so ago.

My view is, with respect, Mr. Chairman, that the amount that is expended on Legal Aid, representing as it does such a tiny fraction of the provincial budget—for example, I suppose it would pay for probably a couple of miles of highway—when one measures the assistance that it provides to the least fortunate members of our community in particular, it is money, taxpayers' money that is, very well spent. As far as I am concerned the provincial budget should if anything be increased in this very vital area, affecting as it does the fundamental rights of so many of our citizens.

There has been no increase in the tariff for Legal Aid, I think, since 1973 and there is no question but that the lawyers who are prepared to accept Legal Aid certificates are really making a significant contribution for the most part to the community as a whole. Because the financial returns that can be obtained from other sources of business are obviously of a much more lucrative nature. There has been no increase in the Legal Aid fee for a period of time and I'm certainly unable to give the legal profession any assurance at this time that there will be any increase in the immediate future.

There are two committees of the Law Society, Mr. Chairman, reviewing the Legal Aid tariffs, both in criminal and in civil matters, and those reviews are again being carried on not with simply a view to increasing the tariffs, but with a view to providing the most effective service to the public in the context of the money that is spent in this very important plan.

I cannot assist the member of Lakeshore at this point in time as to why there is the levelling out. But before I turn to this question of the levelling out or the apparent levelling out of the demands that are made on the Legal Aid Plan I would like to make one other comment in relation to some remarks that were made by the member for Lakeshore on Friday—and I think he repeated them very briefly this afternoon—and that is the participation of the members of the legal profession in this plan.

The member for Lakeshore made mention on Friday of some newspaper reports which indicated that the more senior members of the profession were reluctant to participate in the Legal Aid Plan, particularly in the criminal law aspect of the plan, because of the very modest returns. I would like to say to you, Mr. Chairman, to the members of the Legislature and to the members of the legal profession that if the legal profession ever forgets its fundamental responsibility to serve the least fortunate of the community then in my view the legal profession will be turning its back on one of the most important aspects, and I would like to think one of the nobler, if not the noblest, aspects of the traditions of the legal profession in this province.

It does distress me to read that certain members of the profession are turning their backs on criminal cases simply because of the relatively modest tariff now available to them through Legal Aid. The member for Lakeshore and I both practised law for some years when the senior members of the legal profession, senior counsel, gave their time for no charge at all to some of the least fortunate members of their community who were faced with serious criminal charges.

Although I am not advocating a return to this free Legal Aid Plan, which wasn't satisfactory in many ways, I would just say that I hope that the legal profession, and particularly the senior members of the profession, do not fail to recognize the responsibilities in relation to serving the broader community and that they do not become pre-occupied with serving vested interests, simply because those vested interests are able to pay large retainers and large fees.

With respect to the apparent levelling out of the demands that are made on the Legal Aid system, I would say that it's too early to make any value judgement, Mr. Chairman, as to why there is this levelling off. There are a number of possible reasons, but I think it would be necessary for us to have some greater experience before guessing at the causes.

I should say to the members that we are in this ministry developing a new and hopefully better statistical system to analyse in a comprehensive fashion the statistics available in relation to the use of the plan in order to assist us to appreciate what is the cause of this levelling out. Certainly, in some ways, particularly in a time of budgetary restraints, I can say that the levelling off is certainly not an unwelcome happening. But at the same time we are concerned that the plan continue to serve the broadest, most apparent needs in the community and we will be monitoring it very carefully in this respect.

Mr. Nixon: I would like just to congratulate the Attorney General on his comments directed towards the senior members of the profession and his strong wishes that they not regulate the Legal Aid practice to those who perhaps might not have access to some of the more lucrative retainers. I think one of the most serious criticisms is that with the system we have, the senior members of the practice may very well say: "This group in society is looked after by a program that is financed from public funds. Therefore I, as a senior member of the legal profession, need not concern myself as was once my professional and ethical requirement."

I think it's really a shame that has come about. We know that, as in many professions, there are probably enough lawyers and it is getting more and more a problem for young people attempting to enter the profession to do so. Comments have already been made in the House by my colleagues and others along these lines.

I would simply draw to the attention of the minister to perhaps the uninformed view of at least one citizen of this province that legal fees are becoming inordinately high and demanding. The lawyers do not have to suffer the same restrictions as the doctors who have found over the last few years that their incomes have been completely circumscribed and controlled by decisions and regulations of this House. I am not proposing we do that, but if it goes on as it has in the last two years, there will be an increasing demand from the community that some sort of rein or control on the level of legal fees be at least considered by this House.

Most of the people we are talking about do not have access to the Legal Aid program. They have the responsibility to pay their own bills. It is these people, not the ones who are paying over $1,000 a day—that's usually left for the major municipal corporations, if not at least a few of the share capital corporations—who are paying the ordinary bills who have certainly found that this is an increasing and difficult situation for them.

I am not talking about the kind of bill that can go to taxation and be perhaps reduced because it is way out of line. The ones that are in line are the ones, I suppose, that are causing concern and leading people to feel that the lawyers are biting off too large a share of the provincial income and economy. I am expressing this as a view that I feel myself and that has been expressed to me by my constituents.

The practice of law in some of the smaller communities is very different than it is, let's say, in the heart of the capital here or in the other major centres. There are a lot of complaints about this and I wanted to bring them forward. I share very strongly the Attorney General's comments. We hope the senior members of the profession will not disregard their time-honoured responsibility to represent all aspects of the community but will continue to accept those responsibilities.

Mr. Chairman: If there are no more comments on Legal Aid, I would remind the committee that they have already passed items 1, 2 and 3. Are there further questions now on item 4?

Item 4 agreed to.

On item 5, audit services:

Mr. Lawlor: This is the area where we find the defaulted fines and licence suspensions somewhat curiously handled by the Attorney General's department and by this administrative vote. It falls under here. There has been a tightening up and a collection of many millions of dollars in the last little while under this particular scheme.

I just want to rise to bring to the Attorney General's knowledge—he may have an intimation of it already—that this is done very often quite arbitrarily. The axe falls. Somebody gets picked up on a driving offence. They check through on the computers. They find there are unpaid fines. The whole bundle has to be paid on the spot. The person is in very serious difficulty and can even be put in jail in that situation. In any event, in the second step, even when he pays the fine, the speed with which the restitution of his licence is carried out has been a bone of contention and something of a running sore with a lot of people who came to see me.

What are you doing to tighten that up? If a fellow has a few parking offences that he hasn't paid for and he gets picked up on something else, how speedily may he now have his licence restored? Does it require his attendances down here at the Queen's Park complex in order to go from office to office, in order to bring that about?

Your computing situation wasn't working very well either, as between the office at which the fine is paid and the office at which restoration of licences is made. In other words, you wanted the money at all costs, but you were willing to put, to some degree, the victimized citizen to some trouble and expense. I know you're aware of the issue from last year, but what has been done over this last period of time?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think some of the member for Lakeshore's concerns are quite justified. We are very seriously reviewing the whole concept of a central computerized system, which, of course, will involve the Ministry of Transportation and Communications in a very substantial manner. Right now, Mr. Chairman, we're going through a process of not only rationalization but computerization of the system in order to avoid these delays and avoid these administrative hangups which do lead to some difficulty.

Certainly, what we've been able to accomplish so far on the defaulted fines licence suspension system would indicate that the money that has to be spent in order to establish a central computer in relation to this would be money well spent. We think that the actual returns will pay for the initial cost many times over in a very short period of time. I can assure the member that this is being very carefully reviewed right at this present time.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, the member for Lakeshore has raised an interesting subject that I'd like to pursue just a bit. In the select committee on highway safety, on which I had the honour to serve, there was some indication that because of this situation there are residents of the province who are driving with as many as 30 or 40 fines that have been levied against them that have never been paid. The penalty of losing a driver's licence doesn't seem to be an effective one, since we are also told that at any one time in the province there are 60,000 people driving their cars without valid licences.

What is the answer to that? Even if the minister were to carry out the plan to correlate this situation with the rather elaborate computerized information that the Ministry of Transportation and Communications has, it might not, in fact, return as much as the minister expects.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: A number of proposals have been made and I'm not in a position to assess the accuracy of these proposals, having certain very serious limitations myself, particularly when it comes to matters of accounting.

Mr. Nixon: Not by way of lost points.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Part of the problem is not so much the disdain or the lack of concern by individuals in relation to their driving privileges, but the difficulty of enforcing the suspensions, and if we had a more effective enforcement system, then I think this would help resolve the problem about which the member has just spoken. For example, we are seriously reviewing the whole concept of a plate-to-owner system, whereby the plate stays with the owner.

Mr. Nixon: Like a tattoo.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, you might say like a tattoo. I can just see the headlines now: "Attorney General Recommends Tattoos On All Drivers of the Province." But that would make it more visible insofar as the enforcement of driving while under suspension cases is concerned. Part of the whole system is a central computer system into which the information will be fed from the courts system and from MTC in order that the information may be fed out very quickly.

I think a plate-to-owner system would be of assistance. In the final analysis, a disregard of driving while under suspension penalties will have to be dealt with pretty severely, particularly if the suspension is a court-ordered one. A lot can be accomplished by the rationalization of the whole system by some central computer system and perhaps by instituting a plate-to-owner system.

Mr. Nixon: If we use the plate-to-owner system, would the Attorney General think it might be possible to register charges for moving vehicle infractions without stopping the vehicle?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That's a pretty difficult one. Obviously, with respect to municipal bylaws you have that now with parking fines. I would be very leery of any system that would deprive an individual from being in a position to make a full answer in defence of any charge against him.

Mr. Nixon: It wouldn't be a conviction. It would be a charge.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The question is you have to identify the incident in the motorist's mind? If you had some system whereby it was simply recorded by a police officer the driver of a certain automobile bearing licence plate such-and-such had committed an offence and then—

Mr. Nixon: But that would be the individual's licence number, not the car's licence.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That's right. But it may be a week or two later before that individual is aware of the fact he's being charged, for example, with going through a stop sign on such-and-such a date. It would make it very difficult for most individuals to honestly recall what happened. That's why I personally am somewhat sceptical about any system that would not involve identifying to the owner at least the allegation he has offended a provision of the Highway Traffic Act or is alleged to have committed some other offence.

Mr. Lawlor: How much money was brought in during the fiscal year under consideration?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I might have that in a moment, Mr. Chairman.

[4:00]

Mr. Lawlor: In the Attorney General's report he mentioned that the control centre has been relocated in larger quarters. While those figures are being looked up, I would like to know where it has been relocated and why it was relocated. The final question is who is the best person to contact quickly if you are called by a constituent who is a truck driver who has been taken off the road and whose livelihood is dependent upon truck driving? Who would one phone quickly in your department? Could you also give me his telephone number, please?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, in response to the member for Lakeshore's questions, the defaulting fine control centre, which I thought had been visited by the member for Lakeshore, but perhaps not, has moved from the 14th floor to the fifth floor at 18 King Street East.

Mr. Lawlor: I have never gone down that far, Roy.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We moved, simply, because we needed a little more room. There are a number of people on the fifth floor who are involved in sorting this out, but if the member for Lakeshore or any other colleagues in the Legislature had any particular problems which could not be handled by the staff, Mr. Neundorf is the gentleman who is in charge of the defaulting fine control centre.

Mr. Reid: I want to ask one question. Of what do the audit services consist? Are these internal auditors within the ministry? Is that what it's for?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes.

Item 5 agreed to.

Mr. Lawlor: Did we get the sum of money involved?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I think the minister indicated that he would get that for you at some future date. He didn't have it at the moment.

Item 6 agreed to.

Mr. Lawlor: Of course we expend a great deal of time on systems analysis. I'm sure the clarification of the point to be tremendous—Cyclops and its cousins, so to speak. One of the eyes being out and my eyes being not completely wide open—

Mr. Reid: And the other one looking inward.

Mr. Lawlor: —in the circumstances, we will let it go by.

Was the minister going to say something?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I was going to tell you the preliminary figure. I'm told that since April 1973 when we instituted the defaulting fine control centre and which we carried on very modestly, fortunately, between that date and March or April 1977 we have collected some $4.6 million in outstanding fines.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, that wasn't exactly my question.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, I appreciate that, but I thought this would be some preliminary assistance.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, it was very helpful thank you.

Vote 1302 agreed to.

On vote 1303, guardian and trustee services program; item 1, Official Guardian:

Mr. Reid: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if I could ask one question that would encompass items 1, 2 and 3? The increases in amount are relatively substantial considering the amount of money that's available. Has there been a greater work load provided for the Official Guardian and the Public Trustee and the Supreme Court accountant to explain these increases in these budgetary items?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: While I am waiting for some additional information, I know there have been increased demands made on the Official Guardian's services for the court system, specifically in relation to providing representation for children who are, for example, caught up in custody battles in our court system. To what extent that represents an increase in actual budget, it is hard to ascertain.

I may be able to have some more information for the hon. member for Rainy River in a moment, but in custody actions and in other disputes between husbands and wives where there are children, the traditional assumption was that the parents would naturally be concerned about the interests of their children even though they may disagree as to matters such as custody.

Until the last couple of years, it was very uncommon for a child of a marriage to have separate legal counsel, but there has been a greater recognition within the last two or three years in particular that, notwithstanding what the parents may believe, the interests of the children were not always well served by counsel attempting to represent the interests of the individual spouse. So the courts have been requesting the Official Guardian, with greater frequency in the last year in particular, to provide separate legal counsel for children caught up in this unhappy litigation.

As far as the Official Guardian is concerned, I am told that actually the comparative analysis between this current fiscal year and the last fiscal year represents very little in the way of actual bodies. We are talking about an additional two articling law students and the rest is referable to salary revisions both for regular and unclassified staff. I am sure they would be delighted to have additional legal staff; I know they have made that request, but it hasn't been forthcoming at the present time.

I gather the comments that I have just made with relation to the Official Guardian's office would apply equally to the Public Trustee's office. There is a sum of $250,000 additional in respect to the Public Trustee's office related to the computerization of that office. Any expenditure related to computerization, again in my view, is a very wise investment, because it is one area which does produce a revenue for the taxpayers of this province or their government from the Public Trustee's office having to deal with the administration of estates.

Mr. Reid: Under Supreme Court accountant's services, $113,000. What is that? Is that also computer services, $113,000?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I understand there is a cost of some $60,000, a computerizing cost in relation to the Supreme Court accountant's office.

Mr. Reid: Is this an annual change?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, these are very definitely capital costs.

Mr. Lawlor: I think we will take the vote as a whole, if we may, in an overall way and then come onto particular items. I wonder whether these three offices might not be given some external inspection or oversight. The Law Reform Commission looks at the courts generally, but it is my recollection it didn't particularly dwell upon or make recommendations about the specific operation of the Public Trustee or the Official Guardian or the Supreme Court accountant's office, it comes in incidentally. At this time, you are off onto the mechanical end of the thing, the use of computers in the office to speed up and to keep files. The work loads in each of the offices do significantly increase each year and each term, and you have made projections, for instance with respect to the Official Guardian. They are contained on page 31 of your notes on the estimates, if I may just pause there for a moment.

The new socialism has taken over and penetrated. I guess it is the only area in all of government in which it really does so. We have before us in these notes a three-year plan, a projection of what the work load in that particular office will be and what they are going to have to anticipate in this particular area for the Official Guardian. That really shows the beginning of enlightenment as to the use of governmental operations. It shows 20,650 new matters and cases in the 1977-78 year, and projecting to 1980-81 it shows 24,700 on a shrewd, I take it, appraisal of what you have to face. That kind of projection is necessary in modern life and in contemporary government. It should be done in a far broader way than it has been. I would like to know the basis upon which this was developed.

Apart from that, on the first point I was making, is there in the Attorney General's mind any merit in suggesting with respect to the range of policy matters and with respect to the mechanisms too with which they are handled presently in these three offices, which I am sure have not been looked at intensively and from an external point of view for an awful long time, that it would be worthwhile at this particular time to streamline their own internal procedures?

You know their work load. The Official Guardian has about 61 people in complement and the Public Trustee about 155. That has remained constant. Obviously it is not going to remain so very much longer with the case-load accelerating on the basis of your own projections. I wonder whether it wouldn't be a wise thing to look at it.

Secondly, in the area of the Official Guardian, with the new family law coming into operation quite shortly I suspect—and what is your anticipation?—that the work load is going to be heavier rather than lighter because of the interpretations, and because of the operation of the whole family law package. It is not going to lift too many burdens. It makes things easier for people, which does not necessarily mean that it does so for those doing the administration, sometimes it is quite the opposite.

[4:15]

While people's interrelationships, those between spouses and children and dependants, are straightened out and clarified according to law, in the legal profession certainly, and I would suspect in the Official Guardian's office also, the actual dealing with this cases may expand the work load itself.

Those are two or three questions I would like the Attorney General to speak about.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, we like to think we monitor the operations of these three offices pretty carefully. In so far as any external view is concerned, both the offices of the Public Trustee and the offices of the Supreme Court accountant do have advisory committees. These advisory committees deal largely with matters related to investment, how to obtain the greatest return on moneys that are being maintained and paid into court on the one hand, and with respect to estates that are being administered by the Crown on the other hand. With respect to how we arrive at our projected figures, we are really looking on past experience. I think these increases really represent the upward movement of the graph and nothing more complicated than that.

I don't think there is any doubt but that in relation to the general counsel work or in relation to child representation in custody and access matters, you'll note we predict a fairly significant change there, for a number of reasons. One major reason, the fundamental reason, is the issue of child representation. I brought a committee into being at the beginning of the year in relation to child representation in our provincial courts. The member for Lakeshore will recall that this committee, under the chairmanship of Professor Derek Mendes da Costa, reported in the late spring. The report was widely received as a very useful document.

I have suggested to the committee that it expand its terms of reference and look at child representation in the court system generally insofar as civil matters are concerned. Of course the legal aid system generally looks after the matter of court representation for children over the age of 16, but we're also looking at the issue of child representation with respect to juvenile delinquent matters. So it may be that the figure of 700 over 400 is not a totally realistic figure.

We expect with respect to matrimonial causes that the unified family court and the family law reform legislation will provide greater access to the court on the one hand, and when you bring in needed reform on the other hand it's likely an increasing number of the citizens will wish to assert these new rights. It may be that the increase in matrimonial causes is also a very cautious estimate; I wouldn't be surprised if it was higher.

Mr. Lawlor: Does the Official Guardian bring in any moneys that can be placed in the consolidated revenue fund of the province?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, we don't generate any revenue through the Official Guardian's office. There is money collected with respect to the reports done by the Children's Aid Society, but this money is simply paid out again to the Children's Aid Society preparing these reports concerning children who are involved in matrimonial causes.

Mr. Lawlor: Then in the next vote, with the Public Trustee, he does I think you will agree with me.

What escheats to the Crown have we had in the last year? What is the dollar value, if any?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We are looking for this figure, Mr. Chairman. So far as escheat matters are concerned, these are paid out on an ongoing basis to consolidated revenue. I am trying to find out what separate figures we keep in relation to escheats as opposed to administration of estates.

Mr. Lawlor: It is kind of interesting to take a look at page 34 of the 1975-76 annual report. I suppose I may have a more recent one. Page 34 talks about earnings, expenses, fees and patients' estates as of March 31, 1976. It talks about Crown estates of $394,222, which go into special trusts, cemetery trusts and that sort of thing. I want to dwell around that just for a few moments—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am sorry; in the Public Trustee's report for the year ended March 31, 1977, we have the figure of probable escheats for that fiscal period as $7.6 million—plus. I am sorry; the other question was what, Mr. Chairman? Perhaps the member wouldn't mind repeating it.

Mr. Lawlor: Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, this came onto my desk this morning, the report and financial statement of the Public Trustee. Where is this figure set forth, what page?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Page four.

Mr. Lawlor: Oh yes; it's set apart as a separate and distinct matter over and against your report touching on the Public Trustee. What are Crown estates?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, I am having a little difficulty in my own mind separating out what is represented in Crown estates as opposed to escheats, so it goes without saying it is a very good question. I will try and have the information from our accounting staff that will delineate what falls into one and what falls into the other.

Mr. Lawlor: No doubt you are going to have to do this under this heading too.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Just before I forget, Mr. Chairman, there is a Crown Administration of Estates Act and section 1 states: "Where in the case of a person dying intestate or intestate as to some part of his estate it appears in respect of the interest of Her Majesty administration may be rightfully granted to her nominee, a competent court, upon application of the Public Trustee, may grant administration to the Public Trustee for the use and benefit of Her Majesty."

Mr. Lawlor: In the 1977 fiscal year Her Majesty picked up, I take it, in the consolidated revenue fund of this province, $11 million-plus under this particular heading. Would that be correct?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, that would be correct.

Mr. Lawlor: Why the special trust? What was the range of those trusts? What do they have to do with? In that case we earn, or pick up or steal or whatever it is we do, $9,700,000.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, that is where the Public Trustee is asked to administer an estate by agreement, and I understand that in those cases the role of the Public Trustee is not much different than that of a private trustee or a private trust company.

Mr. Lawlor: That's interesting, isn't it? You mean, that private individuals on occasion, for some reason, rather than go to a trust company go to the Public Trustee's office and he will handle the administration? Is that so?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes. It is really a service provided to the public in cases where the private trust companies simply aren't interested. Usually the amounts may be relatively small and the Public Trustee's office does it, not with enormous enthusiasm because it adds quite a burden, but it does it and does it for a fee.

Mr. Reid: What is the fee?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There is a whole tariff in relation to the fee.

Mr. Lawlor: Just to comment on that, it's interesting, because in the committee in which you are now a member, the corporate law committee, when they were doing work on trust corporations and loan companies, but trust corporations primarily, that was one of the sore points.

It came up time after time that there were any number of rather small estates which the established trust corporations were not prepared nor anxious, to say the least, to touch. As a matter of fact, they set restrictions upon the size of an estate on which they were willing to deal, and the restriction had a pretty high floor. I forget what the figure was so I won't try and quote it.

A number of us, particularly lawyers, of course—that scavenging crowd, in Mr. Nixon's putative bad sense—a number of us thought it would be a very good thing that we should leave this body on some occasion to set up a firm handling that kind of estate exclusively, because the legal fee is out of line, we felt, with respect to the work done.

[4:30]

If you set up some kind of an Americanized factory to handle these, people could be highly trained to do the thing rather expeditiously. It would be an enormous relief for a large number of the population. I'm surprised and even gratified to learn the Public Trustees presently, as you say grudgingly, perform the function. But there's a whole field to be tilled in this particular regard. I'm sure it would be a very lucrative field if you concentrated and became known, got a reputation and did nothing else. So I offer to all the expatriate lawyers sitting around here doing nothing, this might offer them a splendid new opportunity and a lease on life, which lord knows they not only need but deserve.

On the Indian trusts situation, it's not mentioned, again, as a separate item. What is involved in his handling of the Indian trust? Where does the money come from? Is he the investor, this investment committee of which you speak operating in this particular matter, and what is the derivation? Is their interest rate six per cent or as in infant's estate nine per cent; or is there any specific sum earned on the moneys involved?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't have that information right now, Mr. Chairman. It might be a few moments before we can obtain it.

Mr. Lawlor: It's okay, I simply ask because it would gladden the heart of my colleague, Mr. Renwick, who takes a very great interest in all treaty arrangements, reaching right back from the very beginning with respect to trusts affecting the Indian peoples of this province. I don't suppose that item has ever really been looked into in previous years.

I just have a few more remarks, I think, with respect to the accountant of the Supreme Court of Ontario.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: May I ask the member's indulgence? Can we finish these items before we move to item 3? Shall we finish the other items first? There may be some other discussion.

Mr. Lawlor: Except for the answer to the question hanging over I would expect to receive it in due course, thank you.

Items 1 and 2 agreed to.

On item 3, Supreme Court accountant:

Mr. Lawlor: I mentioned a moment ago the rate of interest on the money paid into the Supreme Court in various forms of litigation.

I'd be interested in knowing how much money is at present being held by the court in toto. I mean the interest revenue in your book, here at 29 in the portfolio, increased from $6.7 million to $8.5 million for fiscal year 1975. It must be very considerable now; so I would like to know the interest rate, the amount of money in court, as well as the picture of what has been paid out in the past fiscal year, leaving the balance.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The hon. member knows the rate in respect to infants' funds is nine per cent. With respect to the interest rate generally, I understand it's broken down between permanent funds and temporary funds. The permanent funds would be moneys paid; in relation to infants' funds nine per cent, and for the temporary funds the figure is six per cent, compounded semi-annually on a minimum monthly balance.

Mr. Lawlor: Are the infants' funds the only permanent funds or are there funds for mentally ill people?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I can't think of any other funds at the moment. Mentally ill would be dealt with by the Public Trustee.

Mr. Lawlor: I appreciate what you're saying, but moneys might come in through the court, so wouldn't the same argument apply? For the infants' fund, of course, the Official Guardian would be involved on a permanent basis, and for people in mental hospitals there would be the Public Trustee. They are apparently getting six per cent and not nine per cent, and you say the difference is based on the permanent-temporary distinction. I think it's predictable that there are many people in mental hospitals who will be there rather indefinitely; and while one well understands the condition with respect to infants—I suppose it depends upon their age level; they're obviously infants until they cease to be so, which is a kind of permanent condition I suppose. I don't want to make any jokes about that, but I would like to be straightened out as to what categories people fall into with respect to the nine per cent.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Under the Public Trustee, the interest rate on funds being invested is, I'm told, seven per cent so far as patients' estates are concerned.

Mr. Lawlor: Right.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there anything further on item 3?

Mr. Lawlor: I still haven't got my answer. The Public Trustee is seven per cent; all right, I suppose that takes the whole range; and the nine per cent applies to infants only. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes.

Mr. Lawlor: And anyone else gets six?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes.

Mr. Lawlor: Thank you.

Item 3 agreed to.

Vote 1303 agreed to.

On vote 1304, Crown legal services program; item 1, criminal law division:

Mr. Lawlor: I have no questions, but I think I should say a word about the whole Crown attorney and assistant Crown attorney set-up in the province of Ontario. It's remarkable how little criticism that group gets; because it's handling a wide diversity of cases every day of the week under very obnoxious circumstances. I suppose the Attorney General would prefer that we keep our remarks about the court overloads and the court set-up as things presently stand to the next vote rather than launching upon it here. Perhaps it's not quite as pertinent in this place as in the following vote. Is that his feeling?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'd certainly be just as happy to deal with it under the one heading; but, again, I'm in the committee's hands in this respect, because certain initiatives we are taking with respect to the Crown attorney system are very much related to the handling of the court backlogs.

Mr. Lawlor: I think if that's the case, we should discuss it now and hear what those initiatives are specifically as affecting the Crown attorneys.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: What we are attempting to do is implement policy throughout the Crown attorney system which will be geared to making the most effective use of the court time. What we do in any particular area depends on the particular problems in that area.

As an overall policy of communicating policies to the Crown attorney system more effectively in this area, and in other areas, we have regionalized the province and have a senior Crown attorney in charge of each one of the regions of the province, which involves some eight different regions. This serves a twofold purpose of assisting the communication of policy from the ministry into the field, as it were; and of course giving less experienced or relatively inexperienced Crown attorneys the advantage of the advice of a regional Crown attorney, who has had considerable experience, or he or she would not have been chosen. These regional Crown attorneys meet at least once a month, and often twice a month, in Toronto at the ministry, 18 King Street East. Certain of our policies are related to dealing more effectively with cases in the courts.

As you know, during the past two years in Metropolitan Toronto we have been attempting to decentralize the Crown attorney system to create greater local autonomy in certain of the boroughs, more specifically Scarborough, North York, Etobicoke and the city of Toronto. Up until the present time, and this has changed since we got started in Etobicoke, we have had all the Crown attorneys, really, operating out of University Avenue; this was the situation. There are now some 60 Crown attorneys, as compared to some eight Crown attorneys when I first started to practise in the courts.

What we're trying to do by decentralizing the court system in Metropolitan Toronto, in creating greater local autonomy, is to create a better and more effective access to the courts by members of the public, including police officers. It will mean that individual Crown attorneys will become seized of important cases at an earlier date. If they familiarize themselves with the cases for which they're responsible at an earlier date, we hope that this in many cases will shorten the case. First of all it will give them an opportunity to withdraw charges which are improperly laid or for which there is not a reasonable amount of evidence on which to prosecute. Also, it will help them to better prepare their cases. It's been our experience that better prepared cases take less time in court.

Thirdly, they will be more accessible to the public generally—and that may involve citizens who are key witnesses, and more particularly defence counsel who will wish to discuss a case with a Crown attorney before it's disposed of.

I'm talking here, of course, of the provincial courts. As you know, well over 90 per cent of quasi-criminal cases are disposed of in the provincial courts. I know the member for Lakeshore's own experience and the experience of the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong) will tell them that many Crown attorneys are familiarizing themselves with a particular case for only a few minutes before court commences. We believe this does not lead to a wise utilization of the court's time, so the decentralization of the court system will provide a greater accessibility of defence counsel to Crown counsel who are seized with particular cases; and as a result everybody will benefit from the process.

In certain areas it means there will be pre-trial discussions, which will lead to the shortening of the case and the avoidance of calling unnecessary witnesses. This again will make for better utilization of the courts; as well as better utilization of police resources, avoiding the need to have police officers sitting around, for days on end sometimes, when their evidence really isn't that essential. It will also be just as important for the citizens as a whole who are witnesses in criminal prosecutions.

The regionalization of the Crown attorney system in the province and the decentralization of the very large Crown attorney's office in Metropolitan Toronto by breaking it down into smaller units under the Crown attorney, will provide a better flow of information going both out into the system and from the system to 18 King Street East. In this manner we hope to provide a better and more effective Crown attorney system in the interests of the public.

Mr. Lawlor: The increase in the sums of money involved is from $10.2 million to $12.2 million. I believe, and I want you to confirm this, that there have been 21 new assistant Crown attorneys appointed under this particular vote. That's a question of statistics. As between plea bargaining on the one side, and pre-trial discovery if you want to call it that, or pre-trial conferences on the other, which you are trying to bring in, I hope the emphasis is on the latter and not the former.

I think there is a role and a place for plea bargaining with respect to offences, not just to expedite the system with its backlogs but to work out somewhat quietly what could be possibly the best solution, which can conceivably get lost in the courtroom itself. There should be the pre-understanding that there are points in evidence, character, background and a number of things, which have to be gone into in a courtroom under fairly strict rules. Very often in ticklish situations matters can be brought to the attention of an intelligent Crown as a part of the picture of the best disposition of this particular person's case. While I think it has to be brought before the court and the main points made in the presence of a judge, at the same time it's a question of tone and approach to the matters in question. The pre-trial conference is the new rabbit at the bottom of the hat. We reach in, all of us, reach deep down into the sack and hope to catch it by the ears, but the creature may shat on you in the process too.

Mr. Nixon: Shat?

Hon. B. Stephenson: What tense is that?

Mr. Nixon: Past perfect.

Mr. Lewis: It is not the tense which is important, it is the verb.

Mr. Lawlor: I wonder if you have ever sent anybody down to look at the way they operate pre-trial conferences in the United States, both in civil and criminal. There is some literature I have looked at on the subject that says the pre-conference is just another blockade, just another obstacle, another delaying thing misused by lawyers in order to extract information which they otherwise wouldn't get and use to their advantage at some subsequent stage; in other words to undermine and subvert the whole process on pre-trial.

Mr. Stong: You don't believe that.

Mr. Lawlor: The pre-trial thing has to be very nicely scrutinized; its guiding rules, the criteria, have to be worked out with some finesse, I suspect.

Have you done that? Is it in the works? Do you feel that what I say about it lending itself very easily to misuse is certainly a truth, which I trust doesn't become a truism as it develops?

It is a desperate effort to clear the ground for trial. In many cases they need not go at all; or if they go the main issues are cleared out and pointed, all the secondary stuff is hopefully eliminated. But is that necessarily the case; are we not possibly creating another monster to trip us up? If you look at your statistics that you supplied on Friday, it's gaining all the way along the line, the overburden of cases in the courts. Have you any real reason to believe that pre-trial is going to help you a great deal?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, we certainly believe so. I don't like to use the expression plea bargaining, because I think it tends to suggest that pre-trial discussions are affected by concepts that might be more appropriate to the marketplace than to the courts of justice in this province. So we talk about plea discussions. We are very concerned that any pre-trial discussions that may lead to plea discussions are carried out in a context that serves the public interest at all times.

Several years ago or more, as the hon. member for Lakeshore knows, my predecessor, the Hon. Dalton Bales, sent out a very carefully worked out set of guidelines in relation to these plea discussions. For my part, I added to them and perhaps clarified them to some extent. But fundamental to the guidelines that were sent out by Mr. Bales and myself were a number of things stating that at all times the public interest must be served and that plea discussions are not to be motivated simply to expedite a case by reason of considerations related to heavy work loads. In other words: "My God we have got a lot of cases here; how are we ever going to get through the lists"; so therefore we work out a few pleas just because of the heavy court backlog. Certainly our instructions are that that is not a factor to consider in arriving at a plea discussion.

I think what I attempted to make clear, what I added to the excellent guidelines that had been prepared by Mr. Bales, was that the public was to be informed as to the reasons for accepting a lesser plea. This is often done in murder cases and rape cases; reducing them to manslaughter and indecent assault, for example, in order that the public might know the reasons for accepting a plea to the lesser offence.

It is not always possible to carry on these discussions, of course, in open court. There may be extraneous considerations which have occurred from time to time related to the health of the individual, such as accused persons who may have terminal illness. It may not be in their interests for them to be aware of that themselves. But generally speaking, we are concerned that the public be informed as to why lesser pleas are accepted. I think those guidelines probably have been tabled in this House. They've certainly been referred to on other occasions.

With respect to the number of Crown attorneys, there certainly has been a fairly significant increase in complement in recent years, which of course is very much related to the increase in the case-load. I have some figures that indicate what the increase was in the case-load of criminal code offences between the years 1971 and 1976. It's an incredible increase in many areas.

In some areas the case-load has increased fairly modestly, but in most areas of the province it has increased very dramatically during that period of time. In the county of Peel, for example, the case-load has increased almost 100 per cent in those five years. In Lennox and Addington it has increased 331 per cent. Thunder Bay's has increased, in the five years, 106 per cent. The member for Rainy River (Mr. Reid) would be interested to know that Rainy River's increase has been 145 per cent during those five years. Middlesex is up 146 per cent.

Mr. Lawlor: Is that broken down as to offences?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Just criminal code cases as opposed to provincial statutes. Much of this increase is related to the increase in police personnel. Certainly there are statistics that indicate that every additional police officer is capable of introducing a fairly significant number of cases into the court system in any one year, a very large number.

Mr. Lawlor: He generates them by himself, so to speak.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, that's right. Now case-load is a major factor in determining the need—

Mr. Cassidy: It is like saying the cops need robbers in order to survive.

Mr. Lawlor: Obviously the answer has to be cut down on the number of police. A queer solution.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: While case-load is a significant factor in determining the increase in the complement, we also have to consider facts such as geography, particularly in the large geographical areas of northern Ontario where one Crown attorney may have to cover many thousands of square miles and the various courts.

Mr. Cassidy: You would have no crime at all up there if you pulled out the OPP.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: What we have attempted to do is look at the individual annual criminal case-load for any individual office; we divide the total annual criminal case-load for that office by the number of professional members of the staff. This does give us some guidance, but guidance only. We don't pretend that it gives us a total picture, because we're very concerned about quality of service as well as volume.

It's been necessary for us to resort to a large numbers of part-time assistant Crown attorneys. Quite frankly, I'd like to reverse that trend and go back to more full-time Crown attorneys, because we believe the Crown attorney system is not only a good one but will be best served by individuals who have a full-time commitment to the system.

I'd like to endorse the remarks in that respect that were made by the member for Lakeshore at the opening of this vote, when he commented on the fact there are relatively few complaints about the conduct of Crown attorneys in the province. When one considers the enormous volume of cases for which these Crown attorneys are responsible, that are handled by these Crown attorneys, the actual number of complaints is remarkably few. I think that's to their great credit. They of course are all working on salaries that in most cases represent less than what they could earn in private practice. By and large they are very committed to public service.

[5:00]

Mr. Stong: I have a few questions, but perhaps I can deal with the last item the Attorney General dealt with first, and that is with respect to the increase of cases before the court and the need for more Crown attorneys.

I am wondering how he compiles the statistics to which he referred. Is he referring to the number of charges or is he referring to individual persons appearing before the court? He knows, as well as I do, that often times charges are doubled, tripled, and sometimes there are four charges arising out of the same circumstances, the same occurrence. I asked the Solicitor General (Mr. MacBeth) how these statistics were compiled and he was not able to give me assistance in that regard. I am wondering if the Attorney General can throw any light on this issue. Is he talking about charges before the court or is he talking about persons charged before the court?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: They are related to charges before the courts, Mr. Chairman, and in that respect I would hasten to add that, again, they are not the total picture, because one of our concerns is that of the police laying multiple charges in relation to a particular individual. This is another reason we are trying to communicate more effectively through the Crown attorney system, particularly in Toronto; to make the individual Crown attorneys more accessible to police officers who need guidance from time to time in relation to the laying of these charges, to avoid, where possible, multiplicity of charges, which often results simply because a police officer does not have access to a Crown attorney and doesn't really know quite the right charge to lay in order to protect the public interest and perhaps adopts a bit of a shot-gun approach. It may be that individual police officers from time to time are laying a multiplicity of charges for other reasons, but that allegation has been made and perhaps in certain cases is justified. However, this is another reason why we want to have greater accessibility to Crown attorneys by police officers in order to straighten out some of these matters.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, I find that commendable, because it seems to me that police officers are definitely in need of guidance by qualified lawyers who are particularly familiar with the workings of the Criminal Code.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Your colleague probably doesn't agree with you.

Mr. Stong: I refer to the situation of the impaired driver. I understand there was a directive from your office, I stand to be corrected on this, but I am advised that in each event where an individual is charged or suspected of impaired driving, not only is an impaired driving charge laid but a charge of driving in excess of 0.08; there are two charges. That doubles the statistics, indicates an increase in crime; so there is a fallacy there, in my respectful submission.

Another thing I understand is that a directive came out of the office that in the event a person who refuses to render a breath sample and subsequently comes to court, the Crown attorney must proceed with both charges. In the event the accused is convicted, out of the same set circumstances for driving impaired—and he ought not to be driving impaired, there is no doubt about that—but he is also charged with refusing to render a breath sample, and the consequences visited upon him as a result of that conviction are exactly the same as those under the conviction for impaired driving, exactly the same, only the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, I am advised, looks at the situation and regards it as two independent charges, and therefore the licence suspension, which is mandatory, is doubled.

I am concerned because I am receiving conflicting reports about this. It seems to me that those who have suffered this fate have lost their licences for six months instead of the three months which is usual for a first offender, because if a person is convicted of impaired driving and refusing to render a breath sample his licence is lost on a mandatory basis for three months in each case, and some have lost their licences for six months. That works a severe hardship on a person who drives a truck, and albeit he ought not to have been driving in that condition, that is not part of the argument. We agree he ought not to have been driving, ought not to have been driving in an impaired condition, but it does seem to be duplication and an unnecessary hardship in terms of sentence if that individual, because of the requirements to proceed on two charges pursuant to a directive from your office, undergoes a penalty which is more than another individual who does render a breath sample. I wonder if you could give us some guidance with respect to a directive from your ministry on that issue.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Dealing first with the laying of both impaired driving and over 0.08 charges, I understand that policy is presently under review. There is a greater degree of flexibility now than there was perhaps a year ago.

In relation to the laying of a charge for refusing to take a breathalyser test and impaired driving, the policy does remain, as the member quite correctly points out, to proceed with both charges. It is our view they are two separate and distinct charges.

Obviously the purpose of the compulsory breathalyser test was to discourage people from drinking to excess and driving. There was a great deal of debate in the provincial Parliament as to the wisdom or fairness of imposing this form of what was described during that debate as self-incrimination, but it was the decision of the federal parliamentarians that the interest of highway safety required these mandatory breath tests.

It is our view that if we simply take the position we are not going to proceed with the charge on the refusal to take a breathalyser test, it will become known if you get charged with both you plead guilty to the impaired and they will drop the refusal. It is our view and the view of the police this could only serve to encourage more people to refuse to take the breathalyser test, which would be contrary to the purpose for which that section was passed.

Mr. Stong: I agree with the Attorney General these tests ought to be compulsory. As a matter of fact, I believe the compulsory aspect of these tests should be extended. If your ministry would give directives to the police force to get out there and conduct more spot checks, we probably would not need to raise the drinking age; however, that is another argument. All I am saying is I endorse compulsory tests and do not object to the fact that charge be proceeded with in court with its consequential penalty. However, I asked the minister to direct his attention to mandatory licence suspension, because in those cases a first offender loses his licence for six months, as I understand it, instead of three. It would seem to me the consequence visited upon an individual who is convicted of that charge is probably more oppressive and works a greater hardship on, say a person who drives a truck or a person who lives in the country and has to drive into town for groceries.

The mandatory suspension of a licence does not regard the circumstances of the individual offender. When a person chooses to break the law the consequences must be visited upon him, but those consequences ought not to be unduly harsh. It seems to me for a first offender to lose his licence for six months is undue in these circumstances. Could you give some light on whether that is a policy generally emanating from your ministry with respect to mandatory licence suspension?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: My first response would have some application to the issue of whether it's fair to impose on a first offender convicted of refusal to take a breathalyser test and impaired driving a minimum of six months mandatory suspension when there hasn't been any accident. I think the member knows that if there is an accident it would be a mandatory six months suspension in any event.

I can't really state I'm particularly unhappy about that because of my concern, which I know is shared almost totally by the member for York Centre, about the seriousness of alcohol abuse on the highway.

The debate on the amendment to the Highway Traffic Act, you'll recall, gave our provincial judges the power to increase the minimum period of suspension. When the federal government got out of that business, we got into this debate as a result of the controversy that surrounded intermittent driving privileges. The federal government decided to withdraw from that field and removed the power of provincial court judges to increase the minimum mandatory suspension period.

I know during that debate it was suggested by some members of the Legislature that we consider provincial legislation that would remove some of the harsh results which occurred when people were faced with mandatory driving suspensions, whether they be three months or six months. This may be a matter of debate in the future.

I recognize the fact it's a tougher penalty perhaps, for one person than for his neighbour who doesn't require an automobile to earn a living, but I still am of the view that we have to retain a very tough posture in this area because of the carnage on the highways as a result of alcohol-related driving offences.

It's a matter of what the policy initially is. It's in the Highway Traffic Act, so it should be a policy of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications in so far as these consecutive driving suspensions are concerned. Rather than simply saying this is a question that should be asked of the Minister of Transportation and Communications, I'm expressing my personal view. However, the minimum mandatory suspension really is provided by the Highway Traffic Act and the provincial court judges have no discretion in that respect, as the member for York Centre well knows.

Mr. Stong: I agree the Attorney General should clamp down on those who are driving and drinking. I think it's been needed for a long time and we're finally getting it because of the carnage that we hear about on highway traffic reports. There's absolutely no argument there.

What I am saying is this, that I'm glad to hear you're thinking of greater flexibility in the case of a person who is charged with impaired driving, in excess of 0.08. I assume from what you're saying is that a directive will emanate from your ministry to police officers saying "You do not have to lay both charges; you can lay only one." I haven't seen that in effect yet, but if that's what you're planning, I think that's a good step.

[5:15]

I am referring to a driver who is obviously impaired causing an accident and who is charged with impaired driving and in excess of 0.08 out of the same occurrence. He goes to court. He's convicted of the impaired charge. The in excess charge is ordinarily withdrawn. It's almost as if it's mandatory, although it's not; in practice, it is withdrawn.

He's a transport driver coming home from a wedding and he's driving at a time when he's not even involved in his daily work routine. He ought not to have been driving, no doubt about that. He should have used prudence, he should have known enough not to get behind his wheel; but he did, he made a mistake. He goes to court and he's convicted of impaired driving. He loses his licence for six months because there was an accident. He's a first offender, and the in excess charge is withdrawn.

If that same driver, because of the fact that he is a transport driver, for whatever reason, decides not to give a breath sample; when he goes to court he's tried on both charges. I'm not even saying he shouldn't be tried on both charges, because they are two occurrences and there is a reason for the Criminal Code creating a penalty for not rendering a breath sample, but out of the same set of circumstances that same man loses his licence for one year because of the mandatory provisions of the Highway Traffic Act, which are so imposed that they are consecutive; and these consecutive mandatory suspensions are imposed because of a directive from your ministry saying both these offences must be treated as separate. If there is no accident he loses his licence for six months total when ordinarily he would have lost it only for three months.

I understand your position, but it is in this respect that I take issue; sure he should be tried on both offences and fined, but he should not lose his licence under both offences pursuant to a directive from your ministry. Why can that not be regarded as a continuing or a same-occurrence offence so that the driver will lose his licence for three months rather than six, or for six rather than for one year under the same circumstances?

I am advised that people who have lost their licences on both those offences lose them for a consecutive time as opposed to a concurrent time. Now no one in society is affected by him refusing to blow into the balloon; he's still convicted of the impaired driving charge and loses his licence; why must he lose his licence pursuant to a directive from your office indicating that they are separate offences? Why must they be treated, in relation to loss of licence, as consecutive offences in the event of a first offender? That's my point.

I'm not saying you shouldn't prosecute him on the second offence. All I say, with respect to licence and the licence alone, surely a directive can come out from your ministry communicating with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications and indicating they may treat this as one offence rather than two in a given set of circumstances.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I can't tell the Ministry of Transportation and Communications to treat it as one offence when we're treating it as two offences. If the Ministry of Transportation and Communications wish to review the matter, and I'm quite happy to take it up with the minister; it may be decided in those circumstances the Highway Traffic Act should be amended to provide for only one period of suspension when you're dealing with a same occurrence and then that could be written into the Highway Traffic Act.

I'll certainly be happy to bring your concern to the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow). I'm being quite frank in saying that I'm not sure I agree with it. I think your point is well made and I'm quite happy to discuss it with my colleague, who is fairly close by when he's here.

Mr. Stong: I appreciate very much that you would do that. It seems to me that's an area that can be tightened up, and I appreciate your remarks.

There are a couple of other matters that I would like to—

Mr. Lawlor: Can I say a word on this?

Mr. Stong: I'm not finished. However, rather than go to a new point, I'm prepared to let the member for Lakeshore make his observations.

Mr. Lawlor: I want to back you up on that a bit, and probably go further on it and make a sort of plea from the opposition benches to you precisely to get in touch with the Minister of Transportation and Communications in this particular regard.

I take a slightly different position from that of the member for York Centre on this. How did this thing start historically? Historically, the charge of ability impaired with drug or alcohol was a reasonable charge. They found a number of people were frustrating that particular section by not breathing properly, holding their breath, breathing through their nose and doing any other number of things in order to escape the breathalyser test. Subsequently, the wise people in Ottawa came to the conclusion they had to pass a special section saying—and this is quite a bit subsequently—that if they refused the test, then they were equally liable whether they took it or didn't take it. The very fact of refusing it kind of blocked out that thing.

If you follow it through historically, and I suspect logically, your business of laying two charges and insisting upon both is absurd. It's the simplest thing in the world, with no defence to it whatsoever. However difficult it is to defend impaired, it is totally impossible to defend the fact he didn't take the test. It's a fact. If he said no, or he frustrated the test and evidence is so given, then that's it. The penalty is precisely the same as though he were over the 0.08.

If for some reason he felt he was perhaps on the borderline, or as more of them do felt he was quite safe, but nevertheless didn't want to test the full possibilities of the situation and the path of greatest wisdom was not to take the test; if he felt that was the particular case then he was frustrated in that because of the new section. All right, so he's hit with it.

He may not have been over and his driving may not, and the other tests they give you, finger-to-nose and what not, may be in accord with it; but the fact he didn't take it is final and conclusive. That's the end of the road and he suffers the full consequences.

For a Crown attorney to come along after that and proceed with the impaired strikes me is not the intent of the legislation. It was not what it was designed to do. You are being highly legalistic because you have two sections in the book.

Let me say something very general about all this, this business of laying multiple charges. If you're going to set up plea discussions or the kind of pre-trial conferences of which you speak, that should be all cleared up. There are all kinds of charges, there is every charge in the book within these particular dimensions; it helps to increase the statistics, it raises the pay, increases the force, makes the chief feel like a terribly important potentate—there is a whole host of ramifications there, and it also ties up the courts.

Part of the reason for plea discussion would be to clear out those charges—particularly in the conspiracy area. Is that ever a sweet little charge just to throw in? In a conspiracy you can bring in a very broad band. You can lay charges against 16 people, whereas previously you were only able to charge maybe two or three. With conspiracy it's great stuff, you can cover the whole waterfront and all kinds of people get involved. Sure at trial the charges will be dropped one by one; but there they are, all in the crime statistics. The fact is they can't prove there were actual conspiratorial relations, although it's much easier on the rules of evidence to catch someone in the net of conspiracy than it is individually to be able to stigmatize them with a crime.

Leaving that aside, though, I'm asking you, on your own hook, with respect to the laying of charges and proceeding, that you instruct—well I know you don't like to do that, but send out some kind of advice on what I understood was the practice, to indicate that both charges not be proceeded with and that it should be one or the other.

The second thing, speak through that committee of justice to the responsible minister on what is merely an administrative task as far as he's concerned, to indicate that you don't double the penalty in that particular context.

I think it is quite iniquitous on the part of the Crown to push for a double penalty, extending it to 12 months when in normal circumstances, certainly up until fairly recently, it has only been six.

I mean employment is lost in this province. One doesn't condone drinking and driving, but one also has to be cognizant of the consequences. Those consequences need be no greater than is absolutely necessary to teach a good lesson to the individual involved. Doubling the penalty is twice punishing, or almost double jeopardy in this particular situation as against the benefits.

The lesson is well learned, let me tell you, in the six months in the normal case. It is even well learned in the first 10 days, but this punitive vein runs through this province and even into the bloodstream of the various Attorneys General I have seen in this House—not so much the Attorneys General but I have seen various Ministers of Transportation and Communications who are real clinkers, let me tell you, and who would put the whole province in chains if they had their way, because they think that everyone is incipiently an assassin of some kind.

Anyway, that's the way I look upon these ministers. So do say a word to them and make some human being a little less miserable; not that you are going to make anybody happy.

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Chairman, that's a tough act to follow, and one of those remarks I endorse. I want to raise two points in the estimates right now. One is the inconsistency that I think occurs possibly across the province with regard to the plea bargaining associated with impaired charges and the breathalyser charge itself. I only raise this for your benefit, Mr. Minister, in the hope we will get some consistency across the province.

We only need to look at the penalties that are imposed in places like Brockville, and places like that where it appears that justice is not being applied in a fair and equitable fashion for every citizen in the province. I would hope that it wouldn't make any difference where you live or whom you know in this province, that you would be treated in the same way.

The other point, Mr. Minister, is that recognizing the tremendous number of people who are usually impaired—at least to a degree, whether legally or practically only—when they are involved in automobile accidents, I am wondering if you have given any consideration to the idea of dedicating at least part of the fine or an additional fine to underwrite some of the OHIP costs and maybe possibly assist in the expense involved in the provision of blood.

This is an area which I think is of crucial interest to people involved in the administration and delivery of our health care system and one that deserves consideration by your particular ministry.

Mr. Conway: Tell them about the law of Killaloe, Roy.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't know how helpful it would be, really to take the fines—well actually the fines go to the consolidated revenue fund, and since about a third of the consolidated revenue fund finds its way into the Ministry of Health budget. I think it's fair to say that these fines are at least in part subsidizing health concerns.

[5:30]

In relation to the first part of the hon. member's question, Mr. Chairman, I assume he was referring to certain judges in certain parts of the province who have different views on whether or not there should be incarceration automatically, or almost automatically, almost as a matter of course, for a first offender as opposed to those who do not. As I have said on other occasions when this issue has been raised, we are really dealing with a matter of judicial discretion, and as long as a judge exercises a discretion in each individual case, the judge is carrying out his or her responsibilities.

As the hon. member knows, I cannot and should not issue directives to judges as to the nature of the penalty to be imposed in any particular case. Some judges obviously have stronger views in relation to certain types of offences than do other judges and this is reflected by judicial attitudes in other areas of the law. But I have always assumed one of the responsibilities of a judge in imposing a sentence is to reflect the concern or abhorrence of the community with respect to a particular type of offence. It may be in some areas of the province people feel more strongly about this than in other areas. I am not in a position to speculate.

If this whole question of uniformity of sentences is a difficult one and if the federal parliamentarians who are responsible for the Criminal Code and any amendments thereto would wish to impose a uniform sentence for impaired drivers without any judicial discretion, they would have the power to do that. I personally don't believe that judicial discretion should be removed, but that's the only way you could guarantee obtaining uniformity of penalty.

The fact somebody may not know whether or not they are going to go to jail for a first offence of impaired driving may have some deterrent value in itself, but in relation to any of these sentencing matters the accused always has the right of appeal.

Mr. Cunningham: I could follow, Mr. Minister, by saying the possibility of doing time in one of the institutions administered by the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Drea) may be a deterrent in itself.

Mr. Conway: They sound like the place to go these days.

Mr. Cunningham: I understand people are now asking for two years plus a day. What I am concerned about is that in the minds of the public there be some general appreciation you will be dealt with in the following manner, these are the actual penalties for breaking the law.

In some areas people are getting off too easily and in other areas they are incarcerated. The inconsistency associated with it disturbs me. I am really bothered by it.

If I could offer to you an analogy, sir, I would say this: it is that very discretion that has ruined the possibility for young people in this province to consume alcohol. In some particular jurisdictions they have been incarcerated for under-age drinking and it has in fact been a deterrent; in many other areas it has been treated in the same fashion as jay-walking. That inconsistency has produced some very serious discrepancies in the degree to which the individual in society will obey the law.

I only offer this to you, Mr. Minister, because I hope somehow you may convince our friends in the courts to adopt some idea of consistency, which is important in the minds of the public.

Mr. Stong: One of the other points to which I wanted to refer is the area of plea bargaining. I understand from the Attorney General's answer earlier, that statistics are compiled on the basis of number of charges laid. That is very important and I concur with the observations made by the member for Lakeshore concerning the consequences which follow the fact crime statistics can be completely distorted when multiple charges are laid stemming from the same set of circumstances, the same occurrence.

I know one instance where seven separate charges were laid arising from one driving occurrence. If that's the basis upon which crime statistics are based then no wonder our crime is on the increase.

Mr. Lawlor: It happens all the time.

Mr. Stong: I do endorse the member for Lakeshore when he chastises you and the ministry's attitude towards that type of procedure.

However, let us direct our attention towards plea bargaining. I think plea bargaining is very useful and very helpful and essential to the administration of our courts and to the administration of justice. The laying of multiple charges renders plea bargaining almost a hollow, futile mechanism. When a defence counsel appears before a Crown attorney in order to ascertain facts and figures and he is met with a whole slew of charges facing him, arising out of the same circumstances and those charges are used as a lever there has to be give and take.

I see plea bargaining as a very useful aspect of our court system because properly used, it can avoid the attendance of witnesses. I disagree with the member for Lakeshore when he says it's abused. On the whole

I believe the defence counsel welcomes the chance of plea bargaining. I believe it would be of great assistance to legal aid in cutting down the costs incurred and the fees expended by virtue of the fact it aids avoiding long trials, and long court cases. It avoids expenditures from the public purse for the attendance of witnesses in court.

Plea bargaining is the type of situation that must be explored fully and implemented more. I do not like to see it hampered by virtue of the fact an accused faces multiple charges arising out of the same set of circumstances. Honest plea bargaining, an honest approach to the situation, is then frustrated because of the levers at the disposal of the Crown attorney.

Likewise, it appears to me that in the matter of obtaining adjournments in our courts there is a weapon in the hands of the Crown attorney that is not available to defence counsel. That is the ability of a Crown attorney to withdraw charges. I've seen this happen time and time again. It perhaps does not happen as often as defence counsel requests adjournments. On many occasions a defence counsel or an accused could be forced on to trial when not fully prepared. It is incumbent upon him, having set the trial date, and he's forewarned by the judge, that he must proceed to trial.

That accused goes to court on that day and he is forced to proceed to trial, whereas a Crown attorney has the weapon of the withdrawal of the charge if he's not prepared to proceed to trial, and oftentimes that is employed. The charge is withdrawn in order to avoid the embarrassment of incurring the wrath of a judge by being able to avoid being required to proceed to trial.

The real problem is that having withdrawn the charge, the Crown attorney can re-lay the charge. This is done on occasion, not frequently but on occasion. That procedure is not available to an accused person; the accused person is definitely prejudiced by that type of behaviour.

In my submission to the Attorney General, in the event a Crown attorney withdraws a charge, for no matter what reason, I think he should be instructed not to re-lay, unless of course information comes to his attention that was not available to him prior to the withdrawal. It works a hardship, and albeit it doesn't happen often it does happen; and a similar procedure is not available to the accused and therefore the accused is prejudiced.

In the event a Crown attorney is not prepared to proceed to trial and he withdraws the charge, he should be directed by your ministry not to re-lay that charge and not to bring the matter before the courts again.

There is another area on which I would like to address the minister. That is the question of the decentralization of the Crown attorneys and the program as it is being implemented in the principle is commendable, that a Crown attorney be allowed to remain in a court and be associated with that court and its surrounding police divisions so that there can be proper follow-up and follow-through of the cases. I think it is incumbent on the court system that a Crown attorney be allowed to follow through a case from low court through to high court and before a jury, because he is the most familiar of all the court officers with the particular case and facts.

However, I am interested to know how many areas of decentralization there are, how many blocks of Crown attorneys have been created in this program before I go on with my other question.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The decentralization program is for the judicial district of York and as I mentioned earlier the four areas of Toronto, Scarborough, North York and Etobicoke. Part of the problem has been caused by the fact that we quite frankly have run into some rather frustrating delays in having accommodation ready in these four areas. Staff accommodation is in place, more or less in Etobicoke, but in North York and Scarborough it will probably be early March before the facilities and new courtrooms are available. Do you want the precise number of Crown attorneys who are going to each location?

Mr. Stong: Yes.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would have to get someone to give me that.

Mr. Stong: I asked you earlier last week about, as it has been described to me the discontent that has arisen as a result of some of the changes that have been implemented and changes in the programs after the initial implementation had taken place.

I would like to direct some questions along those lines, but in order to do that, I have to be sure of my facts and be sure we are talking about the same type of thing. So, initially, what I would like to know is who is in charge of each of these four areas and how were they chosen?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There are four deputy Crown attorneys. They were chosen—

Mr. Stong: Can you tell me who they are?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There was a competition in the ministry. It was made known by the director of Crown attorneys, a year and a half or more ago, that deputy Crown attorneys were to be appointed to be in charge of each of these particular borough offices. The Crown attorney, of course, remained in overall charge.

A number of Crown attorneys applied. They were interviewed by senior members of my staff, including the director of Crown attorneys, and the assistant deputy minister, John Greenwood, who is no longer with us. It was a question of making recommendations to me on whom they felt were the best people to fulfil these particular jobs.

I concurred with their recommendations, because I was familiar with most of the senior Crown attorneys; most of the Crown attorneys have been in the judicial district of York for more than seven or eight years. I believe there were up to a dozen applicants, I cannot recall the number. As you know, Mr. Norman Matusiak is in Etobicoke. Michael Lynch is in Scarborough and Mr. Steve Leggett is in North York. Mr. Robert McGee is in the city of Toronto.

Some changes were made in the system. I have no doubt but that certain complaints have reached the ear of the hon. member, because certainly I received a certain amount of anonymous mail. I know a number of the Crown attorneys in this area personally, because like the member opposite I have had considerable experience practicing in the provincial courts.

Now maybe people aren't always totally frank with the minister, but I have met with a lot of enthusiasm about this whole program. As a matter of fact, I attended a working dinner of the downtown office recently where there was almost 100 per cent turnout. Twenty-five or more assistant Crown attorneys got together for a working dinner, and I must admit I was very encouraged by the obvious morale. I am very encouraged by the fact Peter Rickaby, the Crown attorney, is working at 18 King Street East, where he is in daily contact with the deputy minister and assistant deputy minister. I had breakfast with him this morning and he is very much involved in the whole process.

This is very important for the development of the office of the judicial district of York, because with the pressures of everybody's time, even a matter of a few city blocks separation between University Avenue and 18 King Street East, make it difficult to have the sort of interaction I want as Attorney General, between our ministry and an office that represents pretty close to 50 per cent of the system.

I am very enthusiastic about the potential. When we appointed the deputy Crown attorneys, I would have been surprised if there weren't several people disappointed they didn't get the job. They wouldn't be professional, highly motivated people if they weren't disappointed. When you have these competitions and recommendations are made, decisions have to be made and it's always difficult, particularly when you have more than four people who could serve in that capacity.

So I am aware of some of the concerns expressed. I am really very enthusiastic and very optimistic about what this can accomplish for the Crown attorney system in this area and in motivating each of the members to have a more important role.

For example, the accommodation for the Crown attorneys will improve as we develop this additional office space together with the court space.

Certainly I haven't been very happy with the accommodation of the court house on University Avenue, where you have so many Crown attorneys crowded into one location. So notwithstanding our restraints, we have been able to accomplish something very worthwhile for the Crown attorney system in this area.

Mr. Stong: The principle of decentralization is commendable and I began my remarks by saying that. It is very important we have Crown attorneys who are able, by virtue of their position, to follow a case through from the beginning to the end. Whether it goes to judge and jury or provincial judge alone, you have the same Crown attorney following it through so there is some kind of consistency. That is commendable and needed.

I suppose the minister could be closer to the situation than I am—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I can assure you I am.

Mr. Stong: That is good to know, because others have approached me with respect to the situation and I don't think I am too remote or too far removed.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I didn't say you were.

Mr. Stong: I am interested in the phraseology you used, "ministry competition." I would like to know the criteria by which that competition was conducted. In selecting these four borough Crowns, how much weight was put—in particular, how much weight was put on years of service, competence and the ability of the person as a career Crown attorney? It seems to me that's important.

Also, I'd like to know if the following information given to me is accurate: that initially four borough chiefs or borough Crowns were appointed and then changes were made.

If my information is correct, maybe only one, but I believe two, had been set up, prepared to go, and then were removed from that office and the office was filled by someone else.

I'm given to understand that these people who were initially given that job had expected they would be able to follow through. However, it seems discontent arises out of this type of situation and it has not been handled properly in terms of personnel by the ministry. It would seem that the only thing lacking is the ability to communicate and have people who are career Crowns, professional Crowns, understand exactly what the policy of this ministry is in appointing individuals to these very important posts.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Certainly experience, years of service, competence and general administrative ability were obvious criteria.

I should correct myself in one area, though. I mentioned four offices. Actually, the initial competition was for three posts and not four. The hon. member may be confused a little bit between some internal matters related to so-called bureau chiefs at the old City Hall, as opposed to deputy Crown attorneys in the borough offices. There were no changes. The three people who were selected initially all have had a considerable amount of experience in the Crown attorney system, as I'm sure you know.

There were some internal changes in relation to the bureau set-up at the old City Hall, but there are no changes, which would be an internal matter, vis-à-vis the downtown city of Toronto office. In other words they would not be dictated by the ministry. There weren't any changes in relation to the borough offices.

As I said, my frustration has been caused by the fact that it's taken as long as it has to create the additional courtroom space and the additional offices in order to get those offices functioning effectively as semi-autonomous units.

There was no competition. I'm not aware of any competition for any sort of bureau chiefs within the downtown office, because that is an internal matter as far as that office is concerned. My concerns are related to the borough offices and the competition in relation to those people. I would be very surprised if anybody could seriously quarrel with the decisions to choose Messrs. Lynch, McGee and Matusiak as a result of that competition. I must admit, the responses I've had from the practicing bar have been very favourable and I've heard no negative comment.

Mr. Stong: Again, I am not concerned about the number of courtrooms. We are in need of courtrooms. The people who have expressed their concern to me were not worried about courtrooms. They all recognized the necessity of courtrooms; and least of all consideration is whether the practising bar consents to the changes, that's the least consideration.

The most important consideration for your ministry in my respectful submission to you is your own personnel and the people who work under you and for you. If I understand correctly what you have just said, you indicated there was competition for three of the borough chiefs—not bureau chiefs, but borough chiefs or borough Crowns or deputy Crowns as I understand it—and there were four placements. I'm given then to assume from your answer, if I'm correct, that there was no ministry competition for the fourth placement.

If I understand you correctly, that's as I have noted it here.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The fourth position is held by a gentleman who's already a deputy Crown attorney for the judicial district of York. At the time of the decentralization, we had one Crown attorney and one deputy Crown attorney. We in effect created three new deputy Crown attorneys and the competition was for those three new jobs. The fourth person, Mr. Leggett, was a deputy Crown attorney and remains a deputy Crown attorney.

Mr. Lawlor: The member for York Centre is floundering around pretty badly at the moment. You'd better hang up your hat on this one.

Mr. Stong: I'm concerned, just so the matter goes into Hansard for those who are interested in reading it, about the explanation of the Attorney General. Just so there's no mistake about it, I have asked the questions and the answers are forthcoming from the other side of the House. So that the sequence is understood, there were four positions, four borough offices created. There was competition for three and the one held by Mr. Leggett required no competition.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, he was already a deputy Crown attorney and so-designated by an order in council of this government.

Mr. Stong: I know that it's getting close to the hour, but I do have a couple of other questions.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I just wanted to add that the decision on the three was the result, from what I can gather, of virtually a unanimous recommendation by the senior Crown law officers in the ministry who have responsibility in relation to criminal law.

I'm not saying it was an easy or an obvious choice, because there were several others who were very highly qualified and might well have served, but when it got down to making a decision there was no difficulty. I want to make it very clear that if I had disagreed, if I had felt there was another individual who was better qualified by reason of my own knowledge of the office than these gentlemen, I wouldn't have hesitated, with all due reluctance and with great respect for my colleagues here, to have said, "No, I'm going to recommend somebody else."

But in order to put this matter to rest, to some extent at least, I want to make it very clear that it wasn't a question of the Attorney General imposing his will on his senior staff on the choice of any of these individuals, although as the buck stops here, if I felt that it was in the public interest to do so I would have. But in this particular case, there was a very high degree of unanimity.

Mr. Stong: I think we'll let that issue rest. Anyone who wants to know your reasons, they can read about it.

In February of this year, I understand you set up a special panel of seven Crown attorneys to prosecute rape charges. I'm wondering what the progress of that select group is; what they're doing, what they've achieved, how closely they're working with the police and how that special squad is working?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: What I've asked the Crown attorney to do in about February—I think that's about the time—was to put someone, under his direction, in charge of rape prosecution in order to expedite the progress of these cases through the courts. I had had some correspondence, a brief had been presented to me, from the Rape Crisis Centre in Toronto.

One of the issues they raised, and one of concern to me, is the additional emotional strain that is borne by complainants when these cases are unnecessarily delayed. While every accused person must have the reasonable opportunity to make a full defence to the charges, it's important to expedite these cases through the courts for two reasons. First of all, it's in the public interest, obviously, to have serious matters tried as quickly and as fairly as possible. Secondly, it was suspected that a number of complainants or victims in rape cases might not be complaining to the police because of the long delays attributed to the courts. So I wanted to have somebody to expedite these cases.

Mr. Gerry Wiley was given that responsibility. I can't tell you who is working with him on it, because I haven't met him. I've met with Mr. Wiley and I can say he established a very excellent liaison with the Rape Crisis Centre. I've had letters from the Rape Crisis Centre indicating their support of what's been accomplished and the fact Crown attorneys expedite the cases through the courts.

One of the complaints was that the victims, who are often, naturally, distressed by the frightful experience, in the past have been faced with the situation where they might meet one Crown attorney who was going to take the preliminary inquiry, and then perhaps at the last minute another Crown attorney would show up; and then when it came for trial another Crown attorney would take the trial in the county or Supreme Court. I indicated I wanted some continuity with the handling of these cases. The complainants would obviously feel less emotional if they were dealing with the same Crown attorney throughout.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1977

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

On vote 1304, Crown legal services program; item 1, criminal law division:

Mr. Lawlor: Before I get into another area under this vote, what are these provincial prosecutors, of whom there are 35, doing? What's their job?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The provincial prosecutors are the lay personnel who prosecute offences under provincial statutes. It has been repeatedly pointed out that it isn't appropriate for police officers to prosecute cases, for example, under the Highway Traffic Act. Some time ago the government announced the intention of appointing a number of provincial prosecutors, people who could be trained to prosecute offences under provincial legislation.

I regret that budgetary restraints have not permitted us to appoint more than the 35 or 36 who have been appointed because I think it's an important program. Hopefully, some day the complement will be found to increase the number of provincial prosecutors. I reiterate that it's more desirable for prosecution to retain at least some sense of detachment from the law enforcement bodies. I, therefore, think it's desirable to have provincial prosecutors in relation to this type of offence who do not have to be graduates of law schools.

Mr. Lawlor: There are 11 in York county in Toronto, four in Carleton and two in Peel, which is altogether commendable. I remember some years ago when during these estimates we used to press the Attorney General of the day very much to take the policeman out of the court because he was in a double capacity and usually in uniform. The move is altogether commendable. Have they any legal training at all and to what extent?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There is a course of training. I am sorry I can't give you too many details about the course. They are trained in relation to the statutes that they are likely to prosecute. We do have a provincial prosecutor's handbook as well. The Crown Attorneys Association conducts the annual training and refresher courses for our provincial prosecutors.

Mr. Lawlor: Perhaps I could get a little more information on that after this as to when, what sessions and to what extent they are clued in. I would also like to know the scale of salaries in that particular job.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The scale of salary is $15,000 to $17,000.

Mr. Lawlor: Do you think you'll apply?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Lawlor: There is another area I wanted to explore a bit. It's the area I mentioned to the Deputy Attorney General just as we broke for dinner. It has to do with custody of children, kidnapping and surrounding problems of that kind. The case in question which I gave to the deputy was one in which there were three or four children whose father had got full custody through the court. I believe a Judge Campbell—is that the same Judge Campbell I know?—was involved in the matter at some point. In any event, the wife seized the children and went off to Pennsylvania, and that's where they are at present.

I want to spend a moment or two discussing two somewhat distinct problems. One is the problem of custody and the seizure of children within Canada, where I believe there are reciprocal agreements, and outside of Canada when the children are taken to Great Britain, let's say, or in this specific instance to the United States. Someone has told me there is a reciprocal agreement between Ontario and Michigan and possibly between Ontario and other states of the union in the United States. I would like that to be confirmed.

That would have simply to do with the custody issue, the civil issue. In the case in question, the solicitors on behalf of the husband have obtained an order, I think probably from the surrogate court—you have the papers now—and there is a citation for contempt involved. If the wife were apprehended, she could be brought before the court for contempt and jailed.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Could I ask the hon. member, as we are discussing the criminal law division of the Crown legal services program, has this to do with the Crown attorneys in the criminal law service? Are you leading up to something connected with this particular vote?

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, it is a bundle of wax like a lot of things in law. I could discuss the kidnapping end of it, but I am sure the Attorney General would be somewhat more magnanimous than the Chair appears to be tonight with respect to this matter. He knows that the issue is all tied together.

Mr. B. Newman: He will field it anyway.

Mr. Lawlor: You can lay either one kind of charge or another. The business of laying kidnapping charges is pretty serious. That is done federally and it would be a question of reciprocal agreements between the Dominion of Canada and a foreign jurisdiction, which operationally concerns us as to the Attorney General having his Crown laying charges in one way or another in this particular regard.

With your indulgence I would like, if possible, to take this in a broad way, particularly the next vote having to do with the civil law. What's the answer to all these problems?

Hon. McMurtry: I would be delighted to have the answer to all these problems. There's an international conference scheduled for 1980 with a view to obtaining international agreements with as many nations as possible in relation to the problem of childnapping, as it is sometimes referred to. We don't have any reciprocal agreements with the states, the United States, or anywhere in relation to this problem.

Mr. Lawlor: None with Michigan?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No. We have agreements with a number of states on the reciprocal enforcement of maintenance orders and I enter into an agreement with another state every couple of months. I can't tell you the number of states at the moment.

Some provinces have passed uniform legislation in relation to this problem of childnapping. I have asked our policy development people to look at similar legislation for Ontario. It doesn't seem to have accomplished a great deal, to my knowledge, within our own national borders, but it's something that is being reviewed at the moment.

Mr. Lawlor: My colleague from Windsor claims that automobile workers, particularly in the Windsor area, who are at loggerheads with their wives just make arrangements between the plants there to move across the river. When the time is opportune, they seize the children and move across.

He claims that there is some ongoing relationship. His complaint, curiously enough, was that it took a year to bring the matter to a hearing on the Michigan side, but that you had reciprocal agreements and you were lax in not pushing on behalf of Canadian citizens.

You're telling me that's all hogwash, or eyewash, or some kind of wash?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't think that your colleague has brought this to my attention in the past and I'd be very happy to discuss it with him.

In relation to border cities, I understand a fair degree of co-operation has grown up with respect to the officials in the courts of both sides of the border. This is a common problem, and of course it cuts both ways. My understanding is that the administrators of the courts who have jurisdiction on both sides of the border do co-operate with one another in relation to the processes that are issued from the respective courts.

But there is no agreement. It may be the co-operation that has grown up is more effective than any agreement, but I can't recall anybody suggesting to me in the past couple of years that this matter could be more effectively dealt with by reason of an agreement between Ontario and Michigan, for example. I'm not excluding that possibility, of course, for a moment. It's something I'd be quite happy to pursue.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Anything further on item 1?

Mr. Lawlor: Just one other thing, the part-time Crowns. There are only three areas in Ontario where the part-time Crown is operative, or is that incorrect? Prescott and Russell, Haldimand and Dufferin?

[8:15]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We're talking about the contract Crown attorneys. We have many part-time Crown attorneys who work on a per diem throughout the province. The contract Crown attorneys, I believe, are a diminishing breed. Yes, in those three areas we are dealing with part-time Crown attorneys, each of whom is the only Crown attorney in the judicial district. They are paid, I am told, an annual retainer, and by reason of the work load, which is relatively slight, it just does not merit the employment of a full-time Crown attorney. I believe they are the only judicial districts in the province which don't have at least one full-time Crown attorney.

Mr. Lawlor: I have noticed they are assistant Crowns, not Crowns.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I can try to clarify that, but they are the Crown attorneys in those judicial districts. The hon. member is quite correct. They are listed as assistant Crown attorneys. I must admit I am puzzled by that because they are the only Crown attorneys in those particular areas.

Mr. Lawlor: When I read it, I thought that they were probably under the general supervision of the next nearest Crown attorney's office—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No. They are under the supervision of the ministry, but—

Mr. Lawlor: All right, the final question. Apart from that type of contractual relationship, is your office using any extra lawyers with respect to Crown prosecutions?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We have large numbers of part-time assistant Crown attorneys throughout the system.

Mr. Lawlor: I mean the changing counsel from outside your system from those already on staff to conduct prosecutions.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am not sure that I understand the question. We have a large number of part-time assistant Crown attorneys throughout the system, but we don't resort to lawyers for special prosecutions.

Mr. Lawlor: You don't?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No.

Mr. Lawlor: Under no circumstances?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As you know, we appoint part-time assistant Crown attorneys in various areas, usually the urban centres of the province, in order to assist. These Crown attorneys are not retained on a per case basis. The assistant or local Crown attorney will ask, "Look, next Wednesday can you take the court in such and such a place?" So, they are retained to that extent on a per diem basis, but not to handle special prosecutions.

I recall when the hon. member for Lakeshore and I were first practising law there was a system by which practising members of the bar were retained to take murder cases in particular areas of the province or other special prosecutions. We don't do that any more.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I regret that I have not been here for these estimates all the way through. If I am asking questions which have been covered, I trust that the Attorney General will so advise me because I have not even read the Hansard as yet.

In the matter of the Crown attorneys as they relate to the family court, has there been a review of their operation? As I am sure the Attorney General may know, we did run into problems in the court in Toronto, which is somewhat unique because it has a large number of judges as opposed to other areas where you may have a single judge. But when we were dealing with proceedings in that court, when you had a Crown attorney attached to the court on an ongoing basis, it seemed to me that there was a greater possibility of trying to assign cases and of the Crown having some more complete idea of the case, the numbers of witnesses involved and so forth, so the scheduling could be done on a rational basis.

However, when we had a Crown who was only there one day a week this did not really allow that kind of preparation. I believe the time of the court, the time of witnesses and the time of persons before the court was often wasted because of that. Has there been any further consideration given to some form of ongoing Crown service in the family court? I would also like to know how it functions in Hamilton with the unified court there.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Part of the problem has been to staff the juvenile and family courts with Crown attorneys on every occasion. We attempt to do it. And from my meetings with provincial court judges in this area I gather they are reasonably satisfied with the situation. There is no question but that they would like to have a larger complement to make sure that a Crown attorney is provided for every court all the time.

Perhaps one of my associates here would be able to assist me as to what is the situation with respect to the unified family court in Hamilton in relation to Crown attorneys. I haven't any indication other than that it is staffed full-time by the local Crown attorney's office. That's my information. I will certainly follow it up to make sure that my information is correct. If it is otherwise, I will so advise the hon. member.

I am reminded that the unified family court is the responsibility of the former Crown attorney for the Hamilton-Wentworth area, a gentleman who acted as Crown attorney for York; the unified family court in Hamilton is the full-time responsibility of Mr. Harvey McCulloch.

Mr. McCulloch had reached the age of retirement, but he is a very active, knowledgeable gentleman in that full-time capacity.

Mrs. Campbell: Thank you. I understand that you, Mr. Attorney General, appointed a special panel of seven Crown attorneys to prosecute rape trials as of February of this year. Could you advise us as to how this panel has worked and could you give us a progress report on that function?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't know whether I would use the expression "panel", but it is probably as good an expression as any. It arose as a result of some communication and meeting that I had with the Toronto Rape Crisis Centre. One of the major problems they communicated to me was the delay in proceeding to trial. One of course, can appreciate the enormous emotional strain on any victim of this type of offence and the enormous emotional strain placed on any person when the trial is unduly delayed over a period of many months.

There is another area of concern to do with the fact they would meet a Crown attorney just immediately prior to the preliminary hearing. They would be dealing with a total stranger who would be asking them questions about matters of a highly personal nature. This, of course, only adds unnecessarily in their view, and in my view, to the emotional strain. Furthermore, the Crown attorney who would be questioning them at the trial of the action would often be yet another Crown attorney.

The Rape Crisis Centre expressed to me that these people, the complainants, didn't feel they had their own lawyer there. Although I explained to them of course the Crown attorney wasn't their lawyer but was representing the public, I appreciated their concern. I felt it was totally understandable and a very legitimate concern.

So I instructed the local Crown attorney's office to assign Crown attorneys, one to co-ordinate the program, but to accomplish two things. I also met with the chief judges and justices of the various courts to help expedite the cases through the courts.

I was concerned in ensuring that a Crown attorney—one Crown attorney—be assigned to the case at a relatively early stage so there could be some degree of reasonable confidence build-up between the complainant and the Crown attorney in relation to the presentation of the case. Of course, one has to be very careful about this because the Crown attorney is representing the public interest as well as the complainant's interest. But it seemed to me to be in everybody's interest—particularly in fairness to the complainant—to have some continuity with respect to the presentation of the case. So my instructions were to have the Crown attorney who sees the case carry the case through the court.

Also, I urged the local Crown attorney's office to assign Crown attorneys who seemed to possess a particular degree of sensitivity towards this type of case and towards the complainant in this type of a case. From what I've heard it's worked out fairly well. The communications I've had with the Rape Crisis Centre have been of a very positive nature. Mr. Jerry Wiley of the local Crown attorney's office is our key liaison between both the Crown attorney's office and the Rape Crisis Centre.

Any communication I have had with the centre would indicate they're very satisfied with what has occurred. I've had some very favourable comments about the handling of these cases by the Crown attorneys, even when the cases don't result in convictions. That pleased me—not that they didn't result in a conviction but that the complainant still felt the case on behalf of the Crown had been presented effectively, and she had been treated very sensitively.

Last week the member for St. George and I discussed the fact I'd indicated my similar concerns to the Metro police department. From what I've been able to learn the relationship with the Metro police department seemed to be of a highly satisfactory nature. [8:30]

Now I don't have any statistics at this moment to indicate just what the progress has been in relation to the actual expedition of these cases through the courts. I've asked for this information because I'd like to be able to demonstrate to the public as a whole these cases are proceeding through the courts despite the backlogs. They are being given special priority, because I think they should be given special priority, and the time between the arrest of the accused and the final trial has been shortened considerably.

I don't have the details but I'd be happy to share those with the member when I do have them because I think this is very important. It's not only a question of presenting the Crown's case more effectively and ensuring that the complainant is treated with the utmost decency in a very sensitive emotional situation, but also if the public as a whole knows that these cases are being given special priority. I may be a little naive but I'm hopeful this may have a deterrent effect on would-be rapists or other people who might be tempted to engage in a sexual assault, if they know their cases are going to be treated effectively and expeditiously and the appropriate sentence handed out when convictions are registered.

Mrs. Campbell: I appreciate the reply. Could the Attorney General advise me as to whether there has been any consideration given, for example, to the Israel experiment insofar as the rape of children is concerned? I think this is one of the very brutalizing things that happens particularly if there is a lengthy delay.

Secondly, has the Attorney General been able to discover any further evidence to that which I tried to adduce at the last estimates of those sorts of cases where women complain to me—and I must confess when I went back to them they just didn't want to have their names given—of the difficulty in trying to lay a charge or an information in such cases?

The Attorney General at that time, I believe, stated he would like to look into the matter and see if there were people being discouraged in such cases. Was he able to do so? I regret I can't be more helpful to him.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: In relation to sexual assaults or rape cases as opposed to cases involving children?

Mrs. Campbell: Yes.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: After I discussed the matter with the member for St. George at the last estimates, I discussed this with the police officials and indicated this concern had been brought to my attention. It may be that since that time there is even greater sensitivity being demonstrated.

The police response generally was that they did have to deal from time to time with cases that did not appear really to be criminal cases. By reason of certain relationships of people who were not strangers, complaints were made that were not necessarily suspect but in which there was a little scepticism. The police have indicated they wanted to communicate to the complainant or would-be complainant the seriousness of the allegation and the fact that this is not an allegation that should be made frivolously or through any short-term feeling of revenge for someone who felt that she had been badly treated by someone who had really not assaulted her.

I appreciate, and I'm satisfied that the police appreciate, that this is a very difficult line to tread. One must indicate to the complainant what is involved in order to ensure seriousness about the allegation, the very serious allegation to discourage frivolous complaints and yet not discourage legitimate complaints.

Mr. Foulds: Where are the Tory back-benchers tonight?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I was satisfied, as a result of the member for St. George's concerns, which as I say led to this meeting, that the local police in this community were very sensitive to the problem and attempted to balance all these concerns. In respect to the Israel experience, I am embarrassed, Mr. Chairman, because at this moment I have discussed it briefly with the member for St. George and with others, and I must admit I can't honestly recall what the Israel experiment is in relation to sexual offences involving children, which are family offences, as I recall. Perhaps the hon. member could enlighten me. Obviously I can't say we have pursued anything in that area or I would have recalled it. But perhaps the hon. member could enlighten me as to the details of that.

Mrs. Campbell: I haven't been close to it for quite some time and I had thought since we saw such lovely paintings of the Attorney General on his visit to Israel, while he was there, he might have engaged in a pursuit of learning. However, they are, or were, treated as a family situation. There was no delay except that which was necessary to gather evidence. The child was at all times fully protected by all sorts of social workers and psychiatrists, psychologists or whatever as might be indicated necessary to the well-being of the child. So a traumatic experience didn't have to be retained in the mind of the child for a year or more, as has been the case here. The child was not examined, as I understand it, by a trained counsel in the adversarial situation.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The child didn't appear in court?

Mrs. Campbell: No, the child was examined outside the court by persons other than lawyers to adduce the evidence, but the child was not brought before the courts. Now, I haven't examined it in detail, not having been there, but I wondered if we had given it any consideration. If so, what consideration has been given to that sort of examination apart from the courts and has it been effective, in our view? The criticism is it makes it very difficult for the accused. However, it seems to me for the most part here, with the kinds of evidence so often available, perhaps one doesn't need the child before the courts personally. But I don't know how it is working.

I had invited you to look at it to see if we can do more to protect the child from the traumatic experience, quite apart from the incident itself, of the long delays, the adversarial approach and the whole question of the problems of retaining in one's mind, by constant reminder, a deliberate reminder of the events so the child is prepared to give evidence in those cases where it can. Nothing, I take it, has been done. I would again invite the Attorney General to—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I do recall it now. It came to my mind fairly spontaneously. The key to it was the fact that the child did not appear in court and that identified it.

Mrs. Campbell: That's right.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have asked my policy development branch to look into that. More specifically, I want them to take that up with the Mendes da Costa committee on child representation. Although this isn't directly within their terms of reference, it's an issue they might consider.

I am concerned about something quite apart from this serious issue as to whether the child is in court and is placed in that kind of adversarial context, that adversarial forum which could obviously scar a child emotionally for life just by reason of the experience of being questioned on either side, even in the most gentle, humane manner. In the broader context of just how children are treated generally—I am thinking of children who are involved in sexual assaults outside of the family context—I am very concerned about how they are treated in the courtroom. Even though it doesn't involve a parent it is obviously a highly emotional experience when some adult is charged with assaulting them.

I have asked the committee to look at it in that general context of assaults involving children, whether it is in or out of the family context, because I think most of the concerns are common. Obviously, when it is a family situation, it is particularly serious.

It is fair to say that our social service agencies, strained as they are, give very high priority to the case of a child who is abused sexually by a parent. I hope that I will have something to share with the member for St. George with respect to this matter.

Mrs. Campbell: I just would like to point out that it is another reason why it is important to have a good Crown in your court. Where you have a good Crown who has the opportunity to look at the evidence—in the family court, at least—and you are dealing with a perceived case of contributing, usually the Crown is very careful to prepare a case around the child and very often can do so, the child is not visible in the court at all. That does lead to the problem that I have also stressed before and to which we haven't addressed ourselves, and that is when the child is invisible in the court, then one tends to forget the child altogether and any kind of further attention that that child should have is very difficult to arrange. So that adds another dimension to the problem.

However, if you do have a good Crown—and we certainly did at Jarvis Street when I was there, an excellent, sensitive, feeling young man—the cases are disposed of quite often without the necessity for the child being there at all. I found this to be a very useful kind of procedure where the offence was an assault of this sort.

Perhaps the Attorney General is now telling us that he is moving a step forward in a bill of rights for children, particularly as they appear in the courts. I know he has said he doesn't think it's necessary, but perhaps we will see that coming from this report.

I hope the Attorney General will give very careful consideration to it.

[8:45]

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any further discussion on item 1?

Mr. Roy: I'd hate very much to let this item go by without saying something about Crown attorneys, a profession which I have, as the years go by, less and less familiarity with. But then, having for some—

Hon. Mr. Snow: You can always go back.

Mr. Roy: Somebody mentioned I should go back.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Not me.

Mr. Roy: Probably if I had felt—Not you?

Mr. Foulds: There's no point now, Albert. Now that the AG's office knows what you're capable of, you'll never get another appointment.

Mr. Roy: I can recall on one particular occasion, I was discussing these estimates, and the Attorney General at the time, Mr. Dalton Bales, questioned why I knew so much about Crown attorneys. I had only left them a couple of years back and he mentioned, after we were giving him a bad time during estimates, that maybe I should have never left.

But I must admit to the present Attorney General that my leaving helped in a very small measure improve the lot of those who stayed. At that time, I can recall, we had differences of opinion as to the remuneration of Crown attorneys. After two years there I think we were getting something like $10,000 a year, which was not the remuneration that kept your better Crowns for a period of time.

I must say that since that time there has been a trend to stay longer. I don't know whether it's the fact, as well, that jobs are more difficult to get on the part of young lawyers, but they are staying for longer periods of time at the Crown attorney's office. I can recall a few years ago that it was just like a sabbatical; you'd spend a couple of years there and you were off someplace else.

It's unfortunate, as well, when you're talking about competent Crown attorneys, that in the past years you've lost some pretty good ones from the upper echelon of your ministry. I'm talking about Powell and Manning and a few others who've left who were certainly competent people.

Mr. Chairman, I do want to zero in, rather than get into a general discussion. I just want to beg your indulgence on this. When I walked in my colleague from Lakeshore was discussing the question of special prosecutors or something. I was just wondering whether he got into the subject of the prosecutions that have taken place here in the city of Toronto pertaining to the so-called padlock law. I think the legislation involved was under some provincial statute. I don't recall the name.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The Disorderly Houses Act.

Mr. Roy: The Disorderly Houses Act. I just wondered if there was any discussion on this item because I want to ask the Attorney General why Metro Toronto, or was it the city of Toronto, had to hire a special prosecutor, Mr. Manning, for prosecutions under that section. Normally, aren't provincial prosecutions matters for your Crown attorneys? Am I not right on that? Usually the bylaws and stuff like this are by the solicitor attached to the various municipalities. But when you get into your provincial statutes, I always thought that it was within the jurisdiction of the Crown attorney's office. I never quite understood why it was that Mr. Manning or a special Crown had to be hired for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No Crown attorney was hired by the municipality or Metropolitan Toronto. As I recall, Mr. Manning was to bring proceedings for injunctions and it wasn't a special Crown attorney. It was somebody representing an interested party. Under the Disorderly Houses Act—I don't have the legislation in front of me—it says that an application to declare a house as a disorderly house can be brought by any person. It can be brought by a representative of the Attorney General or any person. Metropolitan Toronto wanted to proceed under this legislation and they retained their own counsel. The person did not appear as a Crown attorney. I think he was described in the press as a special prosecutor.

Of course, municipalities do have special prosecutors in relation to provincial offences.

Mr. Roy: I did not realize the municipalities have special prosecutors in relation to provincial offences.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: They are related to bylaw offences as opposed to criminal. I suppose it would be better to call them municipal offences because they and the municipality are creatures of the province.

Mr. Roy: Was Mr. Manning retained for the specific purpose of obtaining injunctions under that statute, and not to prosecute any breach of that statute? Is that what you are saying?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: To obtain a closing order as it was described under that statute.

Mr. Roy: I see.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I suppose it is conceivable under certain circumstances the Ministry of the Attorney General might initiate such proceedings, but in this case it was the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Roy: What is the statute called?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The Disorderly Houses Act.

Mr. Roy: And when was that passed?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It is chapter 130 of the RSOs of 1970. It was in the 1960 RSOs. I cannot tell you if it predates 1960 or not. I suspect that it does.

Mr. Roy: I was advised that it dates back to 1934 or something.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes. It may even go back beyond that. I think it originated in the 1920s or the 1930s, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Roy: Yes, some time I would like to look at that legislation. I suspect there are all sorts of powers given that maybe we might frown on today.

The other point I wanted to raise with you is the situation raised by my colleague to my left, the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) in relation to a charge laid under the Criminal Code. I think he supplied you with the summons of this. It surprised me when he recounted the story and I did not quite believe it. The local Crown attorney, in fact, had decided not to proceed with any criminal prosecution.

This was a situation, Mr. Chairman, where apparently the owner of the trailer park felt he was not getting paid and had money owing to him. So what he did to this individual who was on the site, was cut off the water and electricity. He was charged under the Criminal Code. The local Crown attorney apparently decided not to proceed with any prosecution, which in my opinion was a fair approach to take; it appeared to me basically a civil dispute between two parties. Apparently the local Crown attorney was overruled by somebody within the administration of your ministry. I don't know if it was the director of Crown attorneys but whoever it was, charges were laid under the Criminal Code.

Possibly the Attorney General has some explanation before I get wound up on this. I have to tell you, we should try to avoid getting involved into criminal prosecutions when it basically appears to be a civil matter. Possibly you have some explanation.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As I indicated last week, we wanted to get as much of the background from the local Crown attorney's office as possible before responding. We are in the process of doing that. I don't have the information; I do know the local Crown attorney did seek an opinion from the ministry and the ministry did give an opinion on the basis of which this charge was laid. It is a matter under the Landlord and Tenant Act. It initially involved, as I recall—although I don't have a copy of the summons in front of me—a breach of the Landlord and Tenant Act.

The interesting thing is I might very well hear a question from the member for St. George, who has a number of tenants as constituents and is very sensitive to tenants' concerns. I might be hearing from her on another occasion as to why a Crown attorney didn't lay similar charges when the breach of the Landlord and Tenant Act could amount to a breach of the Criminal Code. So I guess it is a question to some extent as to whose ox is being gored.

Mr. Foulds: Whose ox is being gored?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That's right, whether it's your friendly landlord constituent or tenant constituent.

Mr. Foulds: Are you referring to your constituents as oxen?

Mrs. Campbell: Only if they are landlords.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: In any event, I have undertaken to provide a response in relation to this and such a response will be forthcoming before the end of these estimates.

Mr. Roy: What you are saying basically is you don't have the information to provide a full explanation at this time. But I do want to put on the record that I have serious concerns. The facts as I see them certainly indicate a dispute between two parties and one that can be resolved by way of civil courts or civil law, and are certainly not matters for criminal prosecution.

The great danger in these things is if somebody has a bit of weight, gets in touch with his local MPP, or gets in touch with some Crown attorney or is an important individual in a community, there is some perception on the part of the public those who have a bit of status can further their personal aims by way of criminal prosecution. It reflects on the whole system. And it is certainly not something that will enhance the criminal process.

I am saying basically the criminal process was intended to be a method whereby crimes against the community at large, crimes that per se appeared to be an offence or something the community could not tolerate, are deemed to be criminal offences. Over the years there have been attempts by a variety of companies and organizations to use the criminal courts to further their civil remedy. I can think of auto leasing firms who rent cars out and if the car wasn't returned according to the terms of the contract, and returned within the period of time, they would try to get the police to lay criminal charges pertaining to the theft of the car. In relation to cheques as well, I never knew the boundary, the line of demarcation between whether a cheque that bounces is an offence under the Criminal Code or an offence whereby you use your civil remedy and sue on the cheque. That is again a fine line it is difficult to draw.

Certainly on the facts given by my colleague from Huron-Bruce, I could not see it was a criminal offence. If that is the case I will be very, very surprised. Normally, one who has not been paid his rent further to an agreement takes whatever civil remedy is available to him. The most effective way I suppose is to cut off the water and lights or electricity. The individual then turns around and criminal charges are laid.

Mr. Lawlor: I think it is perfectly legitimate. That is what it was put into the statute for.

Mr. Roy: Oh, you are bubbling again. Surely you can't be serious.

Mr. Lawlor: And you voted for it.

Mr. Roy: My colleague to my left, the defender of so-called good.

Mr. Lawlor: You are talking nonsense tonight.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order. Could I ask the member for Lakeshore please not to interrupt and the member for Ottawa East to ignore the interjections?

Mr. Lawlor: You can ask me if you want but it won't help.

Mr. Roy: Especially when he is talking such nonsense. I can't believe one who is a Justice critic would really feel this is a matter of criminal jurisdiction.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Roy: My God, this man—well, I don't think we will ever see the day when he occupies that chair over there anyway, but in any event—

Mr. Lawlor: God help us if you do. Saying things like that.

Mr. Roy: —it would be a matter of grave concern for the whole province if he did. My God, if you feel that is in the realm of criminal law—

Mr. Lawlor: I am saying ditto.

Mr. Roy: —he'd have the police forces of the whole province running.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Could I ask the member for Ottawa East to return to the matter in hand and to ignore the interjections?

Mr. Roy: That is what I was talking about, using the criminal process to further civil remedies. Strange sense of priority they have there to my left, I tell you.

[9:00]

Mr. Lawlor: Nonsense.

Mr. Roy: There is another matter I wanted to discuss within that field of when it's a civil remedy or when it's a criminal remedy. We're still getting complaints from certain individuals in our communities about this difficult situation when a court order has been made in relation to the custody of children. If the custody is either with the mother or the father and the father or the mother, in most instances it's in fact the father who comes along and takes the children in breach of a court order.

Mr. Lawlor: Where were you when we discussed this earlier?

Mr. Roy: My God, what's—

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, where were you? We've been over this.

Mr. Roy: Don't be such a pompous ass.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Roy: We tolerated you, we rode you for two days when you weren't here. So don't come around here and try to tell us what to do.

Mr. Lawlor: You come in here late and use up valuable time.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Roy: You've been drinking only water tonight?

Mr. Chairman: Does the member for Ottawa East consider that parliamentary language?

Mr. Roy: In looking at that member I consider it very parliamentary, very parliamentary.

Mr. Chairman: I think the member should withdraw that.

Mr. Roy: I'm not going to withdraw it. I just called him a pompous ass. I thought that was very parliamentary.

Mr. Lawlor: Coming from him that doesn't bother me. I called him a negligent nincompoop.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Ottawa East has the floor. Would he continue?

Mr. Roy: The point I was trying to make with the Attorney General was, is there any discussion taking place with various Attorneys General about solving this very difficult situation? We're into a situation where a lot of people think they can lay charges on their kidnapping or otherwise. Is it in fact a breach of the provisions—maybe it's contempt of court in relation to a court order.

Mrs. Campbell: I think it is.

Mr. Roy: If it is in fact contempt of court I say to the member for St. George in some circumstances that's a breach of the Criminal Code. I'd just like a few comments. I apologize if the matter was raised before but I just want to say to my colleague from Lakeshore we spent three days on these estimates earlier on when you weren't here and I'm sure that you haven't read every word in Hansard.

Mr. Lawlor: You know where I was.

Mr. Roy: I don't care where you were. You know where I was.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Roy: The sanctimonious bunch to my left here feel that they have easy access, easy reasons for being here and not being here. We'll carry you. We'll continue to carry you and get involved decently in these estimates.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the case that was raised by the member for Ottawa East's colleague in respect to the landlord and tenant matter that ended up in a prosecution under the Criminal Code. I'd be prepared to concede that is an unusual matter and I've given my undertaking to his colleague that I will review it very carefully. I've already indicated that an opinion is forthcoming from my ministry to that effect.

I certainly do intend to review it. Without yet having the opportunity of conferring with the individual who gave the opinion, I would be the first to agree that the criminal process should never be used to remedy what is basically a civil wrong, or serve a civil right.

I'm concerned about the matter and I've already indicated that I asked my staff a week or so ago to review it. I think it was just last week I was given particulars of the matter in the form of a copy of the summons that had been served on your colleague's constituent. I want to make it clear I support the general concern of the member for Ottawa East about possible abuse in employing the criminal process for what is essentially a matter of a civil dispute between two individuals. If it was wrongly exercised in this case, the Attorney General will exercise his prerogative and withdraw the case. If it's correct we will proceed. Again, the issue that is raised is a legitimate one and we will consider it very carefully.

In relation to the problem of childnapping, as it's often referred to, the kidnapping of children, we did discuss this earlier. I indicated that a number of provinces had passed uniform legislation which we were reviewing and which we think, quite frankly, can be improved upon. There is no legislation or international agreements between Canada or Ontario and any other jurisdiction in relation to this matter. It's a matter of enormous international concern. It's on the agenda of The Hague conference scheduled for 1980 in relation to matters of private international law.

There's no question but that it has serious international dimensions. The problems are more acute as they relate between nations as opposed to between states within one nation.

We are reviewing legislation that has been passed by the provinces. It's a matter that is of continuing interest to all of the Attorneys General in Canada and, as I've already indicated, of international concern.

Mrs. Campbell: Is the member for Ottawa East finished?

Mr. Roy: As a matter of fact, no.

As a matter of practicality I appreciate your looking at legislation between countries or between provinces, but even enforcement within one province is a problem. Sometimes one moves from Ottawa to Toronto or Windsor and the enforcement becomes a problem because the police, by and large, even though one has a court order, will not act on it. That makes it a relatively difficult situation. You have to go through the process again.

For the purposes of jurisdiction within the province, I wonder whether it wouldn't be possible to enact guidelines or provincial legislation about the enforcement of these court orders dealing with children. If I have a court order from Ottawa and the person moves to Toronto and I advise the police of this, they will not assist the individual who has the court order to find the parent absconding with the children. And even though the absconding parent is found, you have to proceed by way of civil remedy to enforce it, even though there is a breach of a court order.

I wonder whether you as the chief officer and your Crown attorneys would not feel that in some way when one is clearly in breach of a court order that that isn't bordering on some type of contempt of court and a matter then for criminal prosecution.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It can be a matter for criminal prosecution and from time to time it is a matter for criminal prosecution. The police are very reluctant to enter into what appears to them at least to be domestic issues. For the police to be actively involved in enforcing court orders of this kind would detract from the role of the police department.

It may be that at some point in time the court system, in relation to this type of problem, should have sheriff's officers, for example, who might be empowered to enforce court orders. I am using an analogy between the court orders that may be enforced in some limited way by sheriff's officers. One has to be very cautious about treating it as a criminal matter.

Our experience to date has been a great reluctance on the part of police officers to enforce these orders which are really outside their jurisdiction, being essentially a civil matter. At some point in time, breach of an order can give rise to criminal contempt proceedings. I haven't looked at the criminal contempt provisions of the Code in relation to this type of order recently, but I have difficulty in acknowledging that is the appropriate remedy, in what is often a dispute between a husband and wife who both believe they are acting in the interests of the child.

Mr. Roy: We still have the strangest set of priorities in this country. If a court, having looked at all the facts, makes a decision based on the best interests of the children that they reside with one of the two partners and one of the partners purposely defies the court order and does something which a court feels is not in the best interests of the children, we do not consider it to be something society will frown on or to be a matter of criminal prosecution. But if somebody is smoking a piece of hash down the street, he's committing a criminal offence. I can think of other criminal charges laid in relation to something much less deliberate than this.

Thinking out loud, I consider it to be a real problem and something with which Crown attorneys are forever wrestling. When do you move in and when don't you move in? I leave that for your consideration. We are going to have to look at it, because many instances of what you call childnapping are in my view more serious than many, many offences which are in fact under the Criminal Code or other quasi-criminal statutes. The police will not intervene and other law enforcement officers will not intervene, but do intervene for something which appears to be less of a threat to society or less an offence against society. You commented about the decriminalizing of certain offences under the Narcotic Control Act, Food and Drugs Act and things of this nature. We are going to have to look at some of our priorities—what is really a crime or an offence against society, as compared to something else.

Mrs. Campbell: Most of the discussion surrounding this matter tonight has dealt with the criminal aspect of these cases. I have an on-going and increasing concern as I meet with more and more mothers and it's usually mothers, but there are cases where fathers have had the same concern—who have had children taken from them and they seem to be powerless to restore them.

Reference has been made earlier to the reciprocal provisions in the family court situation and it is difficult. My friend from Lakeshore spoke about the problems between Windsor and Detroit. If he thinks it's a problem, perhaps he would look at the problem between Ottawa and Hull, which is just about as difficult a situation for someone in Ottawa. But where there is reciprocity, is this the area in which you are investigating some sort of arrangement which would not have the criminal connotation referred to but which would be effective, or at least possibly effective, in re-establishing the interests of the child? To me that is the key to the matter—not the parent but the interests of the child.

[9:15]

If the Attorney General is adding states to the reciprocal agreement every day, I trust he is at least giving the courts here the opportunity to have the necessary textbooks and case law, where that is relevant, so that they may come to some conclusions. There is not much sense in having reciprocity if you don't know what the law is that you are dealing with at the other end of the day.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There is no question that in dealing with child custody cases there is an enormous problem and we are reviewing it very carefully. I think the member for St. George does touch on one of the basic problems—that is whether to view it as a criminal matter as opposed to a civil matter. There has been great reluctance to treat it as a criminal matter. It has been the consensus of most of the Attorneys General, if not all of them, in the two years that I have been attending these meetings to treat it as a civil matter as opposed to a criminal matter.

What amounts to a civil contempt as opposed to criminal contempt has always been a bit of a grey area, namely, at what point does the contempt or disobedience get into the area where you can clearly say the administration of justice is being brought into disrepute so as to make it a criminal contempt as opposed to a civil contempt?

One of the difficulties—and there are no clear answers in relation to the child custody orders—is that the traditional role of the courts in any jurisdiction in respect to a child within their jurisdiction is to satisfy themselves as to the order they are making is in the best interests of the child, or just simply to rubber-stamp an order of another jurisdiction. Quite frankly, there is a reluctance on the part of some courts and the judiciary to be used as a rubber stamp when dealing with the welfare of a child within their jurisdiction.

All I can say is we are reviewing it. The concerns of the members are totally justified, and we would be very happy to have any suggestions they might like to offer.

Mr. Roy: In the light of the fact you are proceeding, and hopefully will continue to proceed with the establishment of French-language courts across this province, are you encountering any problems in the recruitment of French-speaking Crowns or bilingual Crowns?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think it's fair to say that we welcome additional applications from bilingual lawyers within the jurisdiction who would like to serve as Crown attorneys. It is a problem.

Item 1 agreed to.

On item 2, civil law division:

Mr. Lawlor: I suppose it would be a great shame, without dwelling on it too long, I trust, not to mention the Dow Chemical case. It got some attention over the last weekend. It's still around, I believe, and will be. Would the Attorney General care to bring us up to date on that matter?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I was out of town for part of the weekend and regrettably missed the learned article that was published in the Toronto Daily Star on Saturday past in relation to this particular matter. Very little is mentioned in the article about the upwards of $40 million being spent by the Dow Chemical Company in relation to pollution abatement equipment since the institution of this action.

Mr. Conway: What does that have to do with it?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As a matter of fact—
Mr. Conway: Should charge all of them.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry:—I think it was just prior to the last election I was about to give the legislative assembly the benefit of a very lengthy statement in the wake of a rather provocative statement from the leader of the New Democratic Party with respect to some of the unkind things he had to say about the motives—

Mr. Conway: No, I don't believe it.

Mr. Lewis: My statement was understated, it turns out.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry:—and the success of the government in relation to prosecuting this matter.

I am somewhat hamstrung by the fact there are very serious settlement negotiations currently under way in relation to this matter and I am reluctant to go into any detail. I'm advised, for example, all the fishermen affected by the pollution are parties to the settlement discussions through their counsel. In view of the fact I have recently communicated with our counsel, a very distinguished lawyer, Mr. Robinette, in relation to this matter and as he might at this very moment be sitting down with counsel on the other side, I'm reluctant to say very much about the lawsuit, other than I have had a number of discussions with Mr. Robinette since I assumed my present responsibilities, indicating to him our interest in proceeding with the case and not just letting it sit or be stuck in the mud as was suggested by the Star headline writer.

Mr. Conway: In the fullness of time.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, I think it's very probable I'll have something specific to say within the next several weeks about settlement discussions under way at present.

Mr. Mancini: It's only taken five years.

Mr. Lewis: It is more than that—seven.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As I indicated there is the amount of upwards of approximately $40 million invested by the Dow Chemical Company in pollution abatement equipment. The lawsuit has encouraged many other industries to invest money in pollution abatement equipment.

Mr. Lewis: So that was the reason.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Furthermore, the research being done into this particular area of pollution has been quite considerable. Part of the problem has been caused by evolving scientific evidence; the fact the scientific base in relation to this type of problem is constantly changing. But a great deal has been learned about the problem as a result of this lawsuit.

Mr. Roy: You missed your vocation. You should be Minister of the Environment.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: So despite the fact we seem to be burdened with a great amount of scepticism in respect to this lawsuit and although it is true I inherited it several years or more after its commencement, I am prepared to state I am satisfied the litigation has been very worthwhile.

Mr. Lewis: It is too much.

Mr. Warner: Who wrote it, the chairman of the board?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I will have more to say about it in a very few week's time. Hopefully less.

Mr. Lewis: Bravo. A superb performance. Now as the curtain falls, let's get to the point.

Mr. Conway: Now we can turn to the wall.

Mr. Chairman: Order! The member for Essex South.

Interjections.

Mr. Mancini: Thank you, Mr. Conway. I appreciate that.

Mr. Warner: Two out of three isn't bad.

Mr. Mancini: I believe the minister stated most of the affected parties had now received settlements from the company?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: They are all—

Mr. Mancini: Negotiating?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The counsel is participating in serious settlement discussions.

Mr. Mancini: I want to ask the minister if this includes the fishermen from the ports of Kingsville and Wheatley from the riding of Essex South? As the minister may or may not know, those two ports were almost closed down because of the pollution in the pickerel. It was all due to the mercury contaminants. They have not received a penny from anybody.

Mr. Conway: All the Attorney General has to do is to read the charter. It is all spelled out magnificently there.

Mr. Chairman: Shall item 2 carry?

Mr. Lewis: No.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: I came in here intending to be passive—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Promise?

Mr. Lewis: —but I have been provoked beyond endurance. I wanted to make one tiny, microscopic, uncharitable point.

Through the Chair, Mr. Attorney General, if I may point it out to you, you don't need a case of extravagant litigation in order to get a company to apply appropriate environmental controls. We have in this province, something called legislation. And if the Ministry of the Environment had any muscle at all, it could have persuaded the Dow Chemical Company to conform to the standards which we have established, whether it is the Ontario Water Resources Act or the Environmental Protection Act, without having to go through this grandiose, pre-election gesture of a suit against Dow which you have now inherited and in your own splendid and mellifluous way are dealing with in the Legislature tonight.

However, because I like you and because I don't see any great need to prolong this for another seven years, God knows—

Mr. Conway: As much as you like Frank?

Mr. Lewis: —I wanted to ask you to identify a little more the revelation of tonight because this is really interesting. This is the first time in six and a half years anything specific has been said about the Dow Chemical suit other than "waiting for the rejoinder to the reply to the rejoinder to the rebuttal." The suit was launched in March or April of 1971, am I right?

It had to be 1971. That was the election year and I think it was March or April.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Thereabouts.

Mr. Lewis: Thereabouts. And now it is, I guess, six and a half years later. Are you saying, Mr. Attorney General, if I can just get it clear in my mind, you think there is now a chance of an out-of-court settlement at least equivalent to the prolongation of the suit? Are we to believe, if you are balancing the two, there may indeed be an out of court settlement in the Dow affair?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't quite understand the question in relation to balancing the two—the prolongation of the law suit on the one hand and the possible settlement on the other. If there is a settlement it will only be, for example, if the fishermen who are represented by various counsel are prepared to accept such a settlement, quite apart from the position of the government. I just want to make it clear—

Mr. Mancini: What about the people who want to use the lakes?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —we do not have total control over the matter insofar as the interests of individual fishermen are concerned. They are represented by separate counsel outside the government.

[9:30]

The review, made up of thousands, tens of thousands of documents, has been completed. The counsel for the government, Mr. Robinette—and I think he is a pretty good judge of this matter—indicated it was the most complicated case ever to come before the courts of this country. All I can say, perhaps this is not much in addition to what I have already said, is serious settlement negotiations are under way and have been under way in the past few weeks.

Mr. Lewis: No, no.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I appreciate the legitimacy of the member for Scarborough West, the leader of the New Democratic Party's interest in settlement negotiations. This is a very sensitive area and I think you can appreciate I really can't be very specific about settlement negotiations other than to state I am advised they are ongoing at the present moment.

Mr. Lewis: No, no, perish the thought I would ask you for specifics lest you not have an answer. I know you can plead sub judice or whatever the Latin pronunciation is because God knows it has been going on forever, hasn't it? This is one of the great cases behind which one can hide. But you see, I suffer the same problem as the leader of the official opposition. Alas, I only had two bouts of legal training. As you know, I was bounced out of both law schools. As a matter of fact, one of them I even left voluntarily. So I have utterly no capacity to handle this subject. I don't even have in front of me an eloquent and a distinguished satrap to turn to.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: If it will make you feel any better, you have got more capacity than the others.

Mr. Lewis: But I want to understand exactly what you are saying. As I recall, there was a sum of $35 million and it was divided. How I wish I had that inflammatory document I issued in advance of the campaign which you didn't get a chance to reply to. As I recall, there was a $25-million sum and a $10-million sum. The $25 million was what the government effectively was suing for. Now, are you saying to me there might be an out-of-court settlement for the fishermen, assuming their legal counsel are able to arrange it? I understand that is a privileged matter and not to be discussed. Even if there is an out-of-court settlement, will you as the Attorney General through Mr. Robinette continue to pursue Ontario's case against Dow for the remainder of the suit, whatever a judge may one day determine our rights to be, if the case is won? Is that what you are saying?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That is a possibility, yes.

Mr. Lewis: So you are not. So there isn't a settlement on the sort of government hand as well as the court?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, that is very much a part of the settlement discussions because the government, of course, has to be sensitive to the rights of the fishermen. Of course there is the issue, a rather interesting issue, as to damages so far as the public are concerned as opposed to damages suffered by the individual fisherman.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, as I recall when it was announced, you talked of the broad damage to the environment and that the public might claim generally, as well as the specific financial loss suffered by the affected fishermen. I want to draw it from you, are you saying there is a possibility of a settlement on both scores?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: Ah ha! Now that is what I meant in my own desperately frantic, amateurish way.

Mr. Reid: You are not a lawyer.

Mr. Lewis: Well, I am trying.

Mr. Reid: You are not allowed.

Mr. Lewis: You know, I have the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) on one hand and the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) on the other, and I am leaning more and more to the left as I go. Help me.

Mr. Roy: Then you will go senile.

Mr. Conway: Oh, but for the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick).

Mr. Lewis: That is what I meant, Mr. Attorney General, when I asked will it be settled out of court or will the suit continue? Will there be a prolongation? What I am trying to assess here tonight is what must be considered a breakthrough in the saga of the Dow Chemical Company.

You see, for you it is nothing. You are a mere novice in this Legislature. You are just a young fellow who popped into the Attorney General's portfolio and you have only been around a couple of years. Some of us were here when it was initiated, man.

Mr. Reid: The suit is older than you are.

Mr. Lewis: We watched it for six and a half painful years. You have to be an equestrian to handle it. I just want to remind you, therefore, whereas you can frivolously—well it's not frivolously—toss it aside comfortably and say there may be a settlement, that's like thunder pealing from the heavens. That's the kind of thing that has not happened.

Mr. Reid: We have heard that before too.

Mr. Lewis: He said an out-of-court settlement. He actually implied the possibility.

Mr. Reid: How many times was it going before the courts? He is a dreamer.

Mr. Lewis: That was within the process of litigation; this is out of court. I want to hear you say it once again because it's nurturing me. I'm truly enjoying it. Just say once again for those of us in the House that there is a possibility, both for the fishermen and for the claims of the province of Ontario, there will be a settlement, and add that sweet little addendum of yours, that you expect to make a statement on it within the next few weeks. I heard you say that, did I not?

Mr. Conway: Here comes trouble.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Kerr) is coming in and he looks more exercised than I've seen him in a very long time, which is to say he's vertical and hastening. I'll leave it there but I wish Hansard to note the energetic nodding of the Attorney General's head as I put the proposition that a settlement was in prospect.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I want to respond just briefly and say our prime concern at the present time is the interest of the fishermen who have been affected. That is a major concern. I think it's public knowledge now that the potential for recovery of the river system is infinitely more optimistic than it was several years ago. I think it's fair to say our paramount concern is the rights of the individual fishermen who were affected by this pollution.

Mr. Reid: Could I just have a second? I just want to add to Hansard, following the leader of the NDP, that for Hansard's sake it should show that when the Minister of the Environment came in, the look he gave the Attorney General was "What are you saying now, Roy, because that ain't the way it is?"

Mr. Roy: I have just a few comments on this case. It was mentioned by that very eminent counsel that this is one of the more complex cases that he's had before the court.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The most complicated ever to come before the Canadian courts.

Mr. Lewis: The most complicated?

Mr. Roy: I think that gentleman has handled cases of that complexity. I can recall when I was going through my bar admission course here he was on a 100-day trial involving Texas Gulf. I think the trial went on for close to 200 days.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I recall when I failed my exams the first year.

Mr. Roy: The other thing I found interesting is that the Attorney General should say the government's main interest or high priority is the welfare of the fisherman. That appears to be somewhat cynical in the sense that the case has been going on for six and a half years. I would have thought, in view of its high priority about the fishermen, somehow we could have had something more expeditious in six years. As I understand from the last report I heard, you weren't even at the discovery stage. I wasn't sure whether you ever got to the discovery stage. I am looking at the Minister of the Environment. Did you ever get to the discovery stage of this case?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I am sure they have. Ask him.

Mr. Roy: I'd better ask him. Okay, I will.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Stay around for his estimates.

Mr. Roy: We have a case in which a writ was issued back in March or April 1971 and, as I say, I don't know if it has ever got to the discovery stage. That is a stage, generally speaking, on an ordinary case one would get to after three, six months, or a year at the most after the writ was issued. In this case, it is six and a half years, and you're still not there. Clearly on the part of the public there must be some indication of two things. Either there's something terribly wrong with our rules of practice which will allow a defendant to escape an issue and escape his day in court for that period of time, or there's a lack of diligence on the other side, on the party that's pushing the action.

As much as we're pleased to hear about the possibility of settlement, I would hope that the settlement would not be one out of desperation or out of frustration on the part of the government—which has had not much success in arriving at a stage of having the issues heard before the court—that out of this frustration concessions are made which appear not to be the type of concession made at the time the action was originally initiated.

I really think that it's a worthwhile point we're bringing forward. We're pleased to hear the comments of the Attorney General and we will be following the terms. I take it as well, considering this is a matter of great public concern, that as in many civil cases, you will advise this House of the terms of settlement. Very often in civil cases the terms are not made public but in this case it would be important, in view of the great interest, not only on the part of the members here but, I'm sure, of the public of this province.

Following on from the great speech made by the minister back in 1971 about "the polluter shall pay," the public of this province are certainly entitled to know what, in fact, the terms of the settlement are. I only say this because very often a litigant to avoid bad publicity or otherwise will insist that part of the terms of settlement is that the terms themselves not be made public.

Item 2 agreed to.

On item 3; common legal services:

Mr. Lawlor: This is John Hilton's vote. I want to say hello to John and congratulate him for his numerous services. He's certainly one of the more splendid people we have to deal with in the Attorney General's estimates.

You've increased the number of complement in this area by five people. Where did you do that?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, may I take a moment or two to dig up this information as to where these four additional lawyers were assigned in the government service?

Mr. Lawlor: It's five.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Is it five?

Mr. Lawlor: While they're looking it up, this is the vote in which—

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It was four lawyers, Mr. Chairman, and one administrative secretary.

Mr. Lawlor: Do you know where they have been located?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We're looking for that information right now. It may take a moment or two.

Mr. Lawlor: This is the vote in which in the last few years it's been decided that all the lawyers advising any particular ministry of the government would all fall within the pool of common legal services and the Attorney General, so they are primarily attached, I take it, to your office and seconded out to the various other ministries. You're paying their salaries and not the other ministries. But the other ministries reimburse you, do they not, for the services involved in this particular area? I don't think because of the shortage of time I should spend any more time on this.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The comments of the member for Lakeshore are correct in relation to the payments. The four lawyers are replacing—I'm sorry I don't have this right away, Mr. Chairman, but they're not additional people, they're replacing people who have either left or retired. I'm sorry that the member for St. George isn't here, but I'm pleased that the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden) is because of the four lawyers that replaced those who retired three are women and one is male.

Mr. Lewis: Ah, ha. Out of the total complement of 219, three are women.

[9:45]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, the total complement to date is 92 men, 25 women, which is a much larger percentage of women than are practising on a relative basis in the profession. I only like to make that comment in passing.

The four lawyers are one to Consumer and Commercial Relations, one to Environment, one to the Solicitor General and one to Health.

Item 3 agreed to.

Vote 1304 agreed to.

On vote 1305, legislative counsel service:

Mr. Chairman: Any questions or comments?

Mr. Lawlor: I can't let Art Stone go by without being given some mention.

Mr. Lewis: He is one of the finest, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Lawlor: He certainly is.

Mr. Lewis: I think Art Stone rivals John Hilton for sheer nobility. You are, as a matter of fact, a very lucky fellow.

Mr. Lawlor: I particularly want to thank David Phillips of the department in his assistance given over the past little while drafting private bills. I think that should be mentioned.

We are slowing down, though. We have to admit to a certain senility or some kind of general debility that's taking place in this area. I was looking at the report from last year. The monumental year was 1971 when we passed 2,002 pages of legislation. You will note that in your record of more recent date, that's quite a come-down against that.

The total number of pages on the statute book in 1973 were 1,750. It went down the next year to 1,650; next year, 1975, to 1,100. In 1976 a mere, measly 895 pages. As a matter of fact, in each of these years the regulations drafted double the amount of the legislation itself. That, of course, is ironically commendable too. It comes out in the Ontario Gazette but otherwise it is hidden from view. That's just as much law as the law on the books itself and is contained in doublefold what we put through the House itself.

So, the enormous amount of drafting and work that these people do is really quite astonishing. No one around this building at least works harder and has a more demanding task to perform than legislative counsel in its task. I notice you are not increasing its complement very much one way or another at all.

I will just say before I sit down that in connection with that Court of Appeal case having to do with legislative privileges, one of the arguments used by counsel in order to knock down the case was that this Legislature, this assembly, possesses no privileges or prerogatives at all and that it is not, strictly speaking, a parliament. It was kind of an amazing argument. It took my breath away at the beginning anyhow.

He said, "Where can you put your finger on any legislation that indicates that when Ontario became part of Confederation in 1867, there was carry-over from the previous body to continue the privileges granted, as in the case of Nova Scotia through the British imperial statutes of the 19th century and going back to the 18th?" So you couldn't put your finger on any element of determinate status; whatever might have existed prior to that time, under what are called the Colonial Validity Acts was no longer applicable after that date; it became absorbed into the British North America Act. The British North America Act covered the federal House, the Senate and House of Commons; section 18 confirmed the whole line and the whole panoply of privileges that were formerly enjoyed by the British House of Commons, this was done explicitly. But nowhere is it explicitly stated that this House possesses powers of contempt proceedings, powers of summoning individuals; free speech of this House, the whole thing, was called into question.

In the lunch hour I rushed up to the library and got hold of an old O'Connor, and O'Connor says we have the powers but they are all implicit. I am suggesting tonight that the legislative counsel, would perhaps do a little historical work for us. When they do the 1980 reformulation of the statutes and bring them up to date, they will embody whatever happens to exist back when, to establish where legislatively and legally this body stands; and what the range of our powers might be. I think it's just a little up in the air and not established.

There is certainly nothing that you can reach for immediately to give that solidity. It's a pretty vague piece of business, and quite astonishing when you come to think of it, that we are proceeding under all kinds of presumptions that may not very well have any roots.

If such statutes exist that apply to us, I think they should be embodied in the Revised Statutes of Ontario 1980, which they presently aren't. There's a whole host of legislation that sits out there, outside of those four bound volumes, which is governing law in this province. I would suggest to you that they be bound and encompassed in the statutes.

Mr. Roy: I want to concur with the comments made by the member for Lakeshore about our gratitude to legislative counsel for their excellent assistance. I think I can speak for all of my colleagues on the tremendous help he and his staff have always been in the drafting of legislation.

Possibly you could answer a question for me. Is it legislative counsel in fact who drafts the regulations as well?

Hon. M. McMurtry: I am sorry. What was that last one?

Mr. Roy: Are you not paying attention to what I am saying?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It's not that, but I missed that last half sentence. Yes, legislative counsel does.

Mr. Roy: Draft the regulations as well?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes. With respect to what the member for Lakeshore had to say, hopefully the Court of Appeal may give us some guidance in relation to what are the inherent privileges, constitutional or otherwise, of this particular Legislature. Once we have had the benefit of their wisdom, we can consider whether or not anyone else might explore this very fascinating region.

Mr. Conway: I think the member for Lakeshore has already hoisted the white flag of surrender.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would just like to say a word or two about legislative counsel. I indeed would concur about what has been said about the excellence of legislative counsel; the excellence that I have witnessed in the past two years. One thing that has impressed me as Attorney General is the manner in which they deal, not only with government legislation but legislation presented by private members.

Quite unwittingly, and I perhaps shouldn't confess this but I will, in the context of the problem to which the member for Lakeshore was just referring and which is of concern to the member for High Park, namely the reference to the Court of Appeal: In the height of the concern over one very long weekend which I recall spending wrestling with this problem, I blurted out to legislative counsel one night on the phone—I think it was on the phone; maybe it wasn't—"I guess maybe the opposition are looking at legislation as well."

I was met with a total and very cool silence. In my relative inexperience, I had blundered into—it was sort of an offhand inquiry, I had just sort of assumed that. But I was very impressed by the manner in which legislative counsel, led by Mr. Arthur Stone, Q.C., considered any communication between opposition members and his office as totally privileged and it was not a subject of further conversation. In his own quiet way he made it very clear to me what his responsibilities were.

I just think that the services performed by these gentlemen—are there any women on the legislative counsel's staff? Not at the moment, I'm advised.

Mrs. Campbell: Don't ask those embarrassing questions.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think their services are sometimes underestimated. We take this sort of service for granted, and I must admit I may have been vulnerable to that myself. I did have an opportunity to spend a few days at the Commonwealth law conference in Edinburgh this summer, and I was in a number of discussions with law officers of the Crown from other parts of the Commonwealth. I was very impressed with their concern about the difficulty they have in obtaining legislative counsel.

This is a talent that is relatively rare and very difficult to come by. One of the great problems facing the emerging nations of the Third World in developing their legislative system is the dearth of legislative counsel talent. Unfortunately, we don't have a very organized way of producing this talent in this country. I think the University of Ottawa can train half a dozen people a year, and offices such as our own office really are responsible for training counsel who join the staff in this highly specialized task.

I think all of us with legislative responsibilities have to reflect on the fact that we should issue directives to all of these people to sort of fly separately—"Don't fly together"—because if anything happened to our legislative counsel office, we would be in a very desperate position.

I only mention that, Mr. Chairman, to join in the very deserved accolades that have been passed towards this office from members opposite and to indicate how impressed I have been in my exposure to this very important office in the past two years.

Mr. Lewis: A footnote, Mr. Chairman. As my colleague from Lakeshore said sotto voce, it's such a deadly job. As a matter of fact, it is a greater occupational hazard than radiation and asbestos. The fact that legal counsel could survive the dint of dealing with legislation day in and day out, and always so quickly, so speedily and so willingly, is just astonishing.

We too are met with silence when attempting to—I don't pretend to have the guile of the Attorney General. We don't stumble into it. We try to probe and ask and push and bully and intimidate. It never works. But I have noticed that if you say to legislative counsel in the morning, "If we could possibly have this bill by tomorrow; if we get it quickly, it will embarrass the government," it's usually on our desk that afternoon.

Mr. Lawlor: Just one other question: I take it that legislative counsel doesn't draft legislation; that the tax legislation coming out of the Ministry of Revenue, or some of it at least, is drafted over there, and perhaps perused—I'm not sure of this—and looked at by legislative counsel here. That's even more technical than the stuff they normally do; how does that work?

[10:00]

Mr. Roy: If they think they've got problems now, wait until they start drafting in French.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes; I'm advised that the understanding of the member for Lakeshore is correct, that is one type of legislation that is done mostly within the Ministry of Revenue and then polished up by legislative counsel in Mr. Stone's office.

Ms. Bryden: I'd just like to take the opportunity, under this vote when we're talking about personnel, to commend the minister—he may be surprised at receiving praise—for the affirmative action program which the ministry has undertaken. The report of the director of the Women Crown Employees Office gives fairly high marks to the Attorney General. On the other hand, just so he doesn't sit back and bask in the glory of this praise, I would like to point out that there's still much to be done, because the segregation index which I've mentioned before—

Mr. Lewis: That's what I'm doing just now here; writing a letter.

Ms. Bryden:—and which is supposed to measure the degree to which there's equal opportunity for men and women in the ministry taking account of their percentage proportion in the public service—the segregation index for his ministry between 1975 and 1976, and that's the latest figures we have, increased from 52.8 to 55.4. A perfect segregation index would be 38 per cent because that's the percentage of women in the public service, that would be equal opportunity.

Also, the salary gap between male and female increased. The earnings gap was $7,500 between male and female; women's average salaries as a percentage of the average of males dropped from 59.5 per cent to 57.1 per cent. I think the minister should continue his efforts within the ministry to open up all the positions to women, but I do feel he has made considerable progress.

Mr. Lewis: I am just writing the Attorney General a letter about a QC, if he could just keep it in mind.

Mrs. Campbell: For you?

Mr. Lewis: Not for me; I would make a good legal clerk.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What letterhead are you using? Not the orange stuff?

Vote 1305 agreed to.

On vote 1306, courts administration program; item 1, program administration:

Mr. Roy: I thought the first item would be a good place to discuss with the Attorney General and his ministry the progress we're making in getting additional courtroom space in Ottawa. Possibly this should be the area to discuss it in view of the fact that the courthouse that we're talking about—heck, did I use the word “courthouse”; we've been talking about a courthouse for 10 years, I hate to use that word when the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) is talking about fiscal responsibility, but that's basically what we've been promised for all these years. I don't want to be unduly lengthy, especially in view of the fact that the member for Ottawa South (Mr. Bennett) may want to say something on the question of the courthouse facilities in Ottawa. He likely will support my comments.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I met with your friends on Friday, Albert.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: He wants some empty buildings on the hill.

Mr. Roy: If he will not support my comments, possibly we could deal later on with the question of small claims court clerks. We could deal with them at a later time during these estimates.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Great; is he doing a good job?

Mr. Roy: You got a great haircut, I know that.

I would like the Attorney General to bring us up to date on where we are going to have some facilities. Is the question of a courthouse in Ottawa out of the question completely? Where are we going with that?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Nothing is ever out of the question completely so far as the administration of justice is concerned. The member for Ottawa South, as a matter of fact, met with representatives of the Ottawa bar as recently as Friday to discuss the needed court facilities in Ottawa. Mr. Graham Scott, director of courts administration, has met with the courthouse committee in Ottawa in recent weeks.

There is some difficulty with respect to the building of a courthouse to accommodate all of the court facilities which would be the most desirable result from the standpoint of the profession in Ottawa and the public, and as far as the Attorney General is concerned too; but there aren't the funds within the government's capital budget at the moment, as the member for Ottawa East can appreciate.

What we are trying to do at the moment is to locate provincial court facilities, which is the court which serves the greatest number of people in the Ottawa area. As the member for Ottawa East is well aware, there has been a great deal of controversy surrounding the location of these court facilities. There was a location recommended by Government Services which was out of the downtown area and which provoked a lot of controversy and opposition. It was suggested that this was too far out from the downtown core to serve effectively the citizens and the legal profession in Ottawa. What we have asked the profession to do is to indicate to us what would be a satisfactory area or areas in relation to these provincial court facilities.

I can fully appreciate the desire on the part of many of the practitioners in Ottawa, to hold out, as it were, for a courthouse. There can be no doubt this is a badly needed facility and there is no question but that there is no area in the province that is more in need of a courthouse than Ottawa. I think downtown Toronto is a very critical situation with respect to the location of the provincial courts, but St. Catharines and Ottawa share the top priority insofar as courthouses are concerned. Nobody would be any happier than myself in this Legislature or anywhere else, if we had the funds to proceed with a courthouse in Ottawa.

In the meantime, I would hope we will be able to find a location, at least for the provincial courts, which will serve the citizens of Ottawa in a much better fashion than the manner in which they are served by the present facilities, which I have never attempted to defend—

Mr. Foulds: Don't give them a courthouse like they have got in Thunder Bay.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —and which I have always indicated were quite unsatisfactory. I know the Minister of Government Services (Mr. McCague) has been very concerned about this and is as anxious as anyone to find the proper facilities. The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett) in exercising his local responsibilities, had a very useful discussion with representatives of the Ottawa bar association, as I mentioned on Friday. At this present time we are waiting for a response, because we feel their advice in this area is worthwhile. We welcome it and are presently awaiting their further advice.

Mr. Roy: I appreciate your giving your colleague behind you a few accolades about getting involved and I appreciate he is getting involved. But unfortunately, we would have had a courthouse in Ottawa had more of his predecessors been involved. God knows the Ottawa area has sent enough Tories back here to Queen's Park to say the word and to plead on behalf of the electorate. If these people had done their jobs, we would not always end up being the last area of the province to get roads, hospital facilities or court-houses.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Come on! You don't really mean that.

Mr. Roy: It's got to be said, and the members opposite know it's got to be said. The Ottawa Tories were being out-hustled by the Tories from London, Hamilton, Windsor, Burlington and so on.

I appreciate that the Attorney General has only been in that particular position for two years and in fact I think he welcomes pressure to get facilities so we can get through to his colleague, the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough). I hope the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett) gets to the Treasurer, because I think he has certainly got the support of the Attorney General. Possibly this is what it will take.

I don't blame the lawyers in Ottawa for not wanting to accept some temporary facilities, because the facilities at 1 Nicholas were supposed to be slightly temporary but we've been having courts in those facilities now for 10 years.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Just like under the Liberals in Ottawa—everything has been temporary since the beginning of the war.

Mr. Roy: I don't understand what the minister's colleague is saying behind him; it's obviously irrelevant.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: You very seldom understand—

Mr. Roy: I just want to say that if people like the member for Ottawa South had been doing his job in the past, and not being hustled by his colleagues from other areas of the province, then we would have court facilities. In fact, if he had put more emphasis on things like courthouses instead of getting jobs for his friends, then we would have better things in the administration of justice. He never misses out on that; he's great for that sort of thing.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Bring him to order.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I'll tell you one thing:

It's helped in terms of hospitals and a few other things.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, we've got to keep saying these things. What I'm concerned about is we'll get some major tragedy in Ottawa. I say again that when the Chief Justice of the province comes down and the only place he can sit is in the basement of the Holiday Inn on Dalhousie Street, it's totally unsatisfactory.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: What's the matter with the Chateau Laurier?

Mr. Lewis: It puts him in contact with the proletariat.

Mr. Roy: And when we have a situation where people who are charged with serious criminal offences are using the same elevator as the judges—

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Terrible, terrible.

Mr. Roy: The minister says its terrible. If he feels it is terrible, why doesn't he do something about it then? He's part of the government.

Interjections.

Mr. Roy: As a result, the inadequate facilities have put pressure on other ministries. The Attorney General is very fortunate that the member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Drea) was not Minister for Correctional Services in the days when everybody was escaping from the local jail in Ottawa, because he would have been the one to speak up. We are putting severe pressure on that institution because we don't have the facilities to properly process the criminal cases in the Ottawa area.

The Attorney General has repeated one of the long discussions we've had; and I know he's trying to do his thing, but that's not good enough. I'd like to know what stage we are at now in relation to renting facilities. For instance, would a place like the new Rideau Centre not be a good place to have facilities? Has that been considered? That's right downtown; that would be renting facilities from the federal government. Possibly we should look at that facility.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We are.

Mr. Roy: Good. That is a step forward. I would suggest, if that works out, that perhaps we could look at some temporary facilities for two or three or maybe more courts which we could use on a temporary basis until the Rideau Centre is built.

I've got to say that the intransigence of the local bar is understandable. They feel that if they accept a half measure now, they'll never get their courthouse. It's unfortunate, but one really can't blame them for the stand they're taking. The situation in Ottawa has been called intolerable, not only by people who are politically biased like myself, but every judge who has come down to Ottawa, including every Chief Justice who has visited the Ottawa area. The Attorney General, of course, says he's aware of it; he's embarrassed every time he comes down there. But I think these things have to be said.

I would hope that when we're looking at priorities—and I said this at the opening of the estimates, by the way.

[10:15]

I read over the weekend that in fact the percentage of spending in your ministry has come down, so I was right at the opening of the estimates. When you first became Attorney General you spent five per cent, and you're now down to 4.2 per cent; I read that some place, a report by somebody over the weekend. So in fact, Mr. Chairman, through you to the minister, anytime somebody says, "We have other priorities," well there are a very few priorities which should take precedence when the facilities are such that they in fact impair and undermine the whole administration of justice in that area.

I'm not only talking about Ottawa. I'm quite aware that the provincial court facilities in Toronto are atrocious. I'm not that familiar with the situation in St. Catharines, as the minister has mentioned.

Mr. Bradley: They're bad as well, Albert.

Mr. Roy: Are they pretty bad there as well?

So I say, Mr. Chairman, these are not luxuries, these items we're asking for now, they are absolute necessities on which we'll continue to press the minister.

I'm only sorry we don't get an occasion to go after the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough), because I don't think we have to convince the Attorney General.

Hopefully the member for Ottawa South can put pressure on the Treasurer and on the Premier (Mr. Davis) so we can get some of these facilities.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: They're priorities.

Mr. Roy: They are indeed.

Mr. Conway: We need a heavyweight, Albert.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: It certainly wouldn't be Albert.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions, since we're on the theme of courthouses. I certainly concur with the comments of the member for Ottawa

East. Can you tell us how long that Scarborough courthouse is going to remain on the shelf? Do you have any idea?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We don't, Mr. Chairman. Hopefully not long, but I wish I had the answer to that question.

Mr. Warner: As has been pointed out, pressure is on the court system in Metro Toronto; and as you have done with the jail system in diversifying, in putting jails in Scarborough and Etobicoke, obviously a similar system is needed for the courts and we could use a courthouse in Scarborough. It would be nice to know when it's going to come about.

One other item that relates to the administration of the courts; you are likely in receipt of a letter, dated November 16 of this year, referring to the incident which occurred on November 14, which was raised by the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) and followed up by myself, in respect to one Albert Strauss, an instructor at Osgoode Hall, and his comments in instructing a class.

The question was raised as to the use of bar admission material dealing with law office administration and the offensive comments made by that instructor, Albert Strauss. I'm wondering what is going to be done. It's been a week since that incident occurred. I'm wondering if the Attorney General has actually perused the material that is being used in the textbooks and if he finds that material to be offensive?

First, what is he going to do about Albert Strauss? Second, what kind of criteria do you establish when you hire instructors to work at Osgoode Hall to instruct our students whom we hope some day will be lawyers, and perhaps judges?

Mrs. Campbell: And Crown attorneys.

Mr. Warner: The letter, which you are in receipt of from the women in the faculty of law at the University of Windsor, dated November 16, says:

"As prospective students of the bar admission course and future members of the legal profession, we demand that positive action be taken to ensure that such incidents do not occur in the future." What are you going to do to make sure such incidents as the one which occurred on November 14 are not repeated?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Dealing with the Scarborough facility, I indicated that I unfortunately can't state when that facility will be taken off the shelf. The picture isn't totally gloomy as far as provincial courts are concerned. With our decentralization of the provincial courts, we are in the process of opening up, or will have opened up by March, 11 additional provincial courts in the Scarborough area in rented space. There will be three they are replacing, so there's a fairly substantial increase there.

As for the unfortunate incident involving the instructor at the bar admission course, I indicated my concern by letter to the treasurer of the Law Society on Thursday last, as I indicated I would to the member for St. George. I followed up that letter with a discussion personally with the treasurer of the Law Society on Friday. He indicated it had been a subject matter of some discussion with the benchers of the Law Society because they regretted very much the incident.

I would like to remind the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere we are not responsible for hiring instructors in the bar admission course any more than the Ministry of Health is responsible for the hiring of instructors in the faculty of medicine, et cetera, down the road. These faculties or courses are independent of the government. The administration of the bar admission course is the responsibility of the Law Society of Upper Canada as part of the self-governing setup.

This doesn't mean the Attorney General or anybody else in the government should turn his back on the problem when it arises, because if any self-governing professional body can't keep its own house in order, then of course the government has an ultimate responsibility to intervene. There is certainly nothing to indicate at this moment that the Law Society and the administrators of the bar admission course aren't quite capable of dealing with that unhappy problem.

As for the material that was considered to be offensive, the material that was handed out or used by the bar admission court, I have not read it. I repeat I have indicated my concern to the treasurer of the Law Society. I communicated the concern of members of the Legislature to the Law Society and I am fully confident any problem that has arisen will be resolved.

Mr. Warner: Perhaps, then, the Attorney General could shed a little light on this particular line that's in the letter which I have referred to, dated November 16 from the faculty of law, University of Windsor? "Incidents of this type," —I am referring to what I have cited—"which go unchecked and unchallenged by the Law Society of Upper Canada derogate from the standards of conduct and propriety required by the members of legal profession. What has happened to the code of professional conduct which prescribes that a lawyer must discharge his duties to members of the public and his fellow members of the profession with integrity?"

Perhaps you could shed some light on their comment that an incident of this type is not being dealt with by the Law Society of Upper Canada. Is that the case; and if so then what steps will you have to take to rectify the situation?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I haven't seen the letter. It may have arrived in my office, I just don't know at this point in time.

I think it's incumbent upon the individuals who have expressed their concern to be a little more specific as to what their area of concern is in relation to any other specific incidents. We are all quite aware of the unhappy event or occurrence in relation to the bar admission course and the one instructor last week. But there's responsibility on those who would state that the Law Society is not performing its responsibilities in this respect to indicate specifically, apart from the incident about which we are all familiar, as to what other incidents may be of concern to them. If there are other incidents, then again I am quite prepared to communicate the concern of the members of this Legislature to the Law Society; but I really do have some difficulty in dealing with a generalization of that nature.

Mr. Warner: What concerned me, aside from the incident, were the comments in the paper by the students about the textbook material. The textbook material then, obviously, based on your comments, has been approved by the Law Society of Upper Canada for uses in the courses.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Not necessarily.

Mr. Warner: Okay; it has been approved by some other body at Osgoode Hall then; somebody up there has approved that material.

Mrs. Campbell: It is down there.

Mr. Warner: Down there; well if you are in this place long enough you lose your sense of direction, that's for sure; I mean that's what happened to them over 34 years.

Mr. Gregory: Only on your side of the House.

Mr. Warner: I am sorry to have awakened the member from Mississauga; I apologize, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lewis: Better say which one.

Mr. Warner: Someone at Osgoode Hall has approved that material. I find that very disturbing, because that says to me that there are embodied in that group of people who are helping to organize the educational system for lawyers, some inappropriate approaches to our world today.

Surely the ideas expressed by Mr. Strauss, and which apparently are embodied in the textbooks, are from a bygone age but haven't been buried yet.

That bothers me very much. It is not just the single incident, in other words, it's broader than that. If the textbook material is offensive, it was approved by those people up there giving the courses, and that says something about the attitudes of a great number of people who are instructing the younger students who are coming along hoping to be lawyers and judges in our system some day. That surely has to change.

Mrs. Campbell: Perhaps the Attorney General would answer to a specific: Has he ascertained what the Law Society did about the Outerbridge articles in 1974, which were addressed to legal secretaries and not to lawyers. What did they do about that? As far as I know, nothing.

It was a protest from people like me and others which removed it from the library, or so I am informed; but the Law Society didn't do anything about it so far as I know. Perhaps you would look into that too, in answering.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I gather the material that dates back to 1974, to which the member for St. George is referring, was removed. On whose initiative I don't know. If that is not the case I will pursue that as well.

I think in matters such as this, that an incident may have involved some complicity on the part of a few instructors who were giving a course to the bar admission students. I think complicity isn't perhaps the appropriate word, perhaps lack of sensitivity would be more appropriate.

Mr. Lewis: Complicity is not bad.

Mrs. Campbell: It's human nature, you might start there.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think it's perhaps more of an unconscious lack of sensitivity rather than any deliberate discrimination.

Mr. Foulds: By the glint in your eye 90 seconds ago, you might have thought it was a conspiracy.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think incidents such as the one that has caused so much concern perhaps do serve a useful purpose, because I think the likely result of this incident is to create a much greater awareness, a much greater level of sensitivity among other individuals who are responsible for preparing course material. I'm confident people who are really well motivated and well intended—and I'm talking about the people who are responsible for the course material in the bar admission course—will be more sensitive in the future.

I can understand that a great deal of concern has been expressed about this. There are a number of us in the Legislature who do have growing daughters. Whether we are male or whether we are female, we must of necessity share these concerns. At the same time, it would be unfair to ascribe any malicious motive to anybody responsible for this branch of our legal education. As I have already indicated, I'm awaiting a response from the Law Society. When I have the response I will advise the members accordingly.

Mr. Chairman: Will there be further discussion on item 1? If so, this would be the appropriate time for a motion to rise and report. Just before the motion, I'd like to inform the committee there are four hours and 58 minutes left for discussion of the estimates of the Attorney General.

On motion by Hon. Mr. McMurtry, the committee of supply reported progress.

On motion by Hon. Mr. McMurtry, the House adjourned at 10:32 p.m.
